phanius to John Biſhop of Jeruſalem, tranſlated by St. Jerom, where ſpeaking of his Paſſage through Anablatha, a Village of Paleſtine, he ſays, "He found there a Veil hanging before "the Doors of the Church, wherein was paint-"ed [e] the Image of Chriſt, or ſome Saint; "for he did not well remember whether it was: "But ſeeing however the Image of a Man hanging "in the Church, againſt the Authority of Scrip-"ture, he tore it in pieces, and adviſed the Guar-"dians of the Church rather to make a Wind-"ing-ſheet of it, to bury ſome poor Man in." Some ſtorm againſt this Paſſage as an Interpolation of ſome modern Greek Iconoclaſt; which is the common Evaſion of Bellarmin [f], and Baronius [g] and the reſt that follow them. But Petavius [h], owns it to be genuine, and ſays, "Images were not allowed in the time of Epi-"phanius, in the Cyprian Churches:" Which is certainly the Truth of the Matter, when Men have uſed all their Arts and Shifts to perſwade the contrary. The common Writers of the Romiſh Church are as uneaſy about the Council of Eliberis. Baronius flies to the old Refuge of Impoſture in that ſingle Canon; others ſay, "They "are all of the ſame Stamp." Others, who think this a little too crude and bold, ſoften the matter by ſaying, "Images were only pro-"hibited for fear the Gentiles ſhould think Chri-"ſtians worſhiped Stocks and Stones; or it was "only Images painted upon the Walls that "were prohibited, becauſe theſe were liable to "be abuſed by the Perſecutors, which others, "that might be removed, were not liable to. So Sylvius in his Notes upon this Canon. Others fly to the new Notion of Diſciplina Arcani, and tell us, "It was only the Images of God and "the Trinity that are here prohibited (not the "Images of Saints and Martyrs) and that only "for fear the Catechumens and Gentiles ſhould "be led into the Secrets of their Religion, and "underſtand the Myſtery of the Trinity before "their Time. Which pleaſant Notion was firſt invented by Mendoza [i], approved by Cardinal Bona [k], and highly magnified by Schelſtrate [l], and Pagi [m], as a clear Solution to the Proteſtants Argument againſt the Worſhip of Images, drawn from this Canon. But yet this does not ſatisfy either Albaſpiny, or Petavius. For Albaſpiny thinks the Images [n] of God and the Trinity were prohibited, for fear the Catechumens, and new Converts ſhould entertain wrong Notions, and diſhonourable Thoughts of the Majeſty of God, when they ſaw him, whom they were firſt taught to believe Inviſible, and Immaterial, and Incomprehenſible, afterward circumſcribed in viſible Lines and Colours. Which is a Reaſon that will always hold againſt making Images of the Deity, tho' it does not give the full Senſe of this Canon, which certainly prohibits the Uſe of Images in general, and not only thoſe of the Trinity in Churches. And therefore Petavius [o] gives a more general Reaſon for the Prohibition of all Images whatſoever at that Time, becauſe the Remembrance of Idolatry was yet freſh in Mens Minds, and therefore it was not expedient to ſet up Images in the Oratories and Temples of Chriſtians. So that in fact, now the caſe is clear, that Chriſtians for near four hundred Years did not allow of Images in Churches. Tertullian [p] indeed once mentions the Picture of a Shepherd bringing home his loſt Sheep, upon a Communion-cup, in ſome of the Catholick Churches. But as this is a ſingular Inſtance only of a Symbolical Repreſentation, or Emblem, ſo it is the only Inſtance Petavius pretends to find in all the three firſt Ages. In the middle of the fourth Age, the Chriſtians of Paneas, or Cæſarea-Philippi, ſhewed a little Reſpect to the Statue of Chriſt, which the Syrophœnician Woman, who had been cured of an Iſſue of Blood, was ſuppoſed to have erected in Honour of our Saviour. For when Julian had removed it, to ſet his own in the Room, and the Heathen out of Hatred to Chriſt had uſed it contumelioufly, and broken it in Pieces by dragging it about the Streets; Sozomen [q] tells us, "The Chriſtians gathered the Frag-"ments together, and laid them up in the "Church, where they were kept to his own "Time. Philoſtorgius [r] in telling the ſame Story, adds one Circumſtance, which well explains Sozomen's Meaning: For he ſays, "They "were laid up in the Diaconicum, or Veſtry of "the Church, and there carefully kept indeed, "but by no means worſhiped or adored. So that it was not a Statue ſet up in a Church, but only the Fragments of it laid up in the Repoſitory of the Church, and there not to be worſhiped, but only to be kept from Violence, and that the Heathen might offer no more ſuch barbarous Indignities to it. Which was ſo far a commendable Act, but yet no Proof of Images being ſet up publickly in Churches.

SECT. VII. First brought in by Paulinus, and his Cotemporaries, privately and by Degrees, in the latter End of the Fourth Century.

YET it is not denied, but that in ſome Places, about the latter End of the Fourth Century, Pictures of Saints and Martyrs began to creep into Churches. Paulinus, Biſhop of Nola, to keep the Country People employed, and prevent their running into Riot and Exceſs, when they met together to celebrate the Anniverſary Feſtival of the Dedication of the Church of St. Felix, ordered the Church to be painted with the Images of Saints and Scripture-Hiſtories, ſuch as thoſe of Eſther, and Job, and Tobit, and Judith, as he himſelf [s] acquaints us in his Writings. And ſome Intimations are given of the Beginnings of the ſame Practice in other Places by St. Auſtin, who often ſpeaks of the Pictures [t] of Abraham ſacrificing his Son, and of the Pictures [u] of Peter and Paul, and of ſome Worſhippers of Pictures [w] too, but they have not his Approbation. Nor had they the Approbation of the Catholick Church: For he ſays, "The Church condemned them, as Ig-"norant and Superſtitious, and Self-will'd Per-"ſons, and daily endeavoured to correct them "as untoward Children.

SECT. VIII. The Pictures of Kings and Biſhops brought into the Church about the ſame Time.

FROM which any Rational and Unprejudiced Perſon will eaſily conclude, That the firſt Deſign of bringing Pictures into Churches, was only for Ornament, or Hiſtory, and not for Worſhip and Adoration, as St. Auſtin and Philoſtorgius have declared. And this may be farther confirmed from what Paulinus himſelf and other Writers aſſure us of, "That at firſt the Pi-"ctures of the Living had their Place in the "Church, as well as the Dead, and Bi-"ſhops and Kings were joined with the Saints "and Martyrs. Paulinus his own Picture was ſet with St. Martin's, in the Baptiſtery of the Church built by Severus, and Paulinus himſelf [x] wrote two Epigrams by way of Inſcription to be ſet by them, to teach Men not to worſhip, but to imitate them, the one as a Saint, the other as a Penitent Sinner. Baronius thinks [y] Acacius, Biſhop of Conſtantinople, was the firſt that had this Honour done him, Anno 488. But Valeſius [z] judiciouſly corrects his Error, and obſerves it to have been cuſtomary long before. And the Inſtance I have given in Paulinus ſufficiently confirms his Obſervation. Theodorus Lector [a] ſpeaks of the ſame Honour done to Macedonius, Biſhop of Conſtantinople, in the Remark that he makes upon Timotheus his Succeſſor, "That whatever Church he went in-"to, he would never begin Divine Service, 'till "the Images of Macedonius were firſt pulled "down. Suidas takes notice of the Picture of Gennadius, Patriarch of Conſtantinople, being joined with that of Chriſt [b], and Chriſt ſpeaking to him in theſe Words, Deſtroy this Temple, and in thy Succeſſors Days I will raiſe it up again. Damaſcen, a great Advocate for Images [c], pretends to carry this Practice as high as Conſtantine, telling us from Socrates, That Conſtantine ordered his own Images to be ſet up in Temples: But as Mr. Spanheim [d] has obſerved, there is ſomething of Fraud in the Relation: For Socrates ſpeaks not of Chriſtian Churches, but of Heathen [e] Temples, in which having demoliſhed their Idols, he cauſed his own Images to be placed in their Room. But admitting it had been as Damaſcen pretends, it makes nothing to the purpoſe for which he alledges it, which was to prove the Worſhip of Images in Churches.

SECT. IX. But neither Pictures of the Living or Dead deſigned for Worſhip.

FOR now I preſume, no one will ſuſpect, that the Pictures of Biſhops and Kings were ſet up in Churches to be worſhiped, while they were living among other Men, but only deſigned to be an Ornament to the Church, or a Civil Honour to the Perſons. And the ſame muſt be concluded of the Pictures of the Dead, ſince the firſt Introducers of them intermixed their own Pictures with them. But it muſt be owned that this Superſtition preſently followed upon the ſetting up of Pictures in Churches: Yet it was never approved; 'till the Second Council of Nice, An. 787, made a Decree in favour of it. Serenus, Biſhop of Marſeilles, ordered all Images to be defaced, and caſt out of all the Churches of his Dioceſe: And though Gregory the Great blamed him for this, and defended the Uſe of Pictures in Churches as innocent, and uſeful for Inſtruction of the Vulgar [f], yet he equally condemns the Worſhip and Adoration of them. And when the Council of Nice had eſtabliſhed it, in Oppoſition to the Council of Conſtantinople of 338 Biſhops, held An. 754, who had before condemn'd it, the Decrees of Nice were rejected by all the Weſtern World, the Popes of Rome only excepted. The Council of Frankford in Germany, the Council of Paris in France, and ſome other Councils in Britain, agreed unanimouſly to condemn them, and for ſome hundred Years after, the Worſhip of Images was not received in any of the Three aforeſaid Nations. But it is as much beyond my Deſign to purſue this Hiſtory any farther, as it is needleſs, there being ſo many excellent Diſcourſes on this particular Subject, eſpecially thoſe of Mr. Daille [g], Biſhop Stillingfleet [h], and Spanheim [i], who have omitted nothing on this Head that was neceſſary to anſwer the Cavils of their Romiſh Antagoniſts, or give Satisfaction to a curious Reader.

SECT. X.
No Images of God, or the Trinity, allowed in Churches, 'till after the Second Nicene Council.

ALL I ſhall add farther therefore upon this Subject is only two Obſervations, which Petavius himſelf [k] has made for us. The firſt is, That the Antients never allowed any Pictures of God the Father, or the Trinity, to be ſet up in their Churches. For this he produces the Teſtimonies of Origen [l], St. Ambroſe [m], and St. Auſtin [n], who particularly pronounces it to be an impious Thing for any Chriſtian to ſet up any ſuch Image in the Church, and much more to do it in his Heart. Nay, Pope Gregory II. who was otherwiſe a great Stickler for Images, in that [o] very Epiſtle which he wrote to the Emperor Leo, to defend the Worſhip of them, denies it to be lawful to make any Image of the Divine Nature. And the Second Council of Nice it ſelf was againſt it, as is evident from the Epiſtles of Germanus, Biſhop of Conſtantinople [p], and John, Biſhop of Theſſalonica, which are recited with Approbation in the Acts of that Council. And Damaſcen following the Doctrine of the ſame Council, ſays, "It is as great Impiety "[q] as it is Folly, to make any Image of the "Divine Nature, which is Inviſible, Incorporeal, Incircumſcriptible, and not to be figur'd by the Art of Man. And therefore in all antient Hiſtory, we never meet with any one Inſtance of Picturing God the Father, becauſe it was ſuppoſed, he never appeared in any viſible Shape, but only by a Voice from Heaven. Upon this Account, Paulinus, where he deſcribes a Symbolical Repreſentation of the Three Divine Perſons, made in the Painting of a Church, makes a Lamb to be the Symbol of Chriſt, and a Dove the Symbol of the Holy Ghoſt, but for God the Father [r] nothing but a Voice from Heaven. And this they did in Compliance with that Text in Deuteronomy iv. 12. The Lord ſpake unto you out of the midſt of the Fire: Ye heard the Voice of his Words, but ſaw no Similitude, only ye heard a Voice. By which we ſee how much the preſent Church of Rome has out-gone the firſt Patrons even of Image Worſhip it ſelf, by allowing Pictures of the Deity commonly in their Temples, which the Ancients reckoned to be Impious and Abſurd, and is acknowledged to be an Abuſe fit to be corrected, by Caſſander [s], though Petavius, after all his Conceſſions and Acknowledgments of the Novelty of the Thing, and its Contrariety to antient Cuſtom, endeavours to find out ſome Colour for the preſent Practice.

SECT. XI.
Nor uſually Statues, or maſſy Images, but only Paintings and Pictures, and thoſe Symbolical rather than any other.

HIS other Acknowledgment of a Difference between the Practice of the antient Church, and that of his own at this Day, is, That the Ancients did not approve of Maſſy Images, or Statues of Wood, or Metal, or Stone, but only Pictures or Paintings to be uſed in Churches. This he proves from the Teſtimonies of Germanus, Biſhop of Conſtantinople [t], and Stephanus Boſtrenſis, both alledged in the Acts of the Second Council of Nice: which ſhews, that maſſy Images, or Statues, were thought to look too much like Idols, even by that worſt of Councils. But ſome plead the Authority of Gregory Nazianzen [u] for Statues in Churches, to whom Petavius anſwers, "That he ſpeaks not of Statues "in Temples, but of Prophane Statues in other "places. Which is a very juſt and true Obſervation. For it is moſt certain from the Writings of St. Auſtin [w] and Optatus [x], that there were no Statues, in that Age, in their Churches, or upon their Altars, becauſe they reckon both thoſe to be meer Heatheniſh Cuſtoms. And Caſſander obſerves [y] the ſame out of the Writings of Gregory the Great. He alſo notes, that 'till the Time of the Sixth General Council, the Images of Chriſt were not uſually in the Effigies, or Figure of a Man, but only Symbolically repreſented under the Type of a Lamb; and ſo the Holy Ghoſt was repreſented under the Type, or Symbol of a Dove: But that Council forbad [z] the Picturing of Chriſt any more in the Symbol of a Lamb, and ordered it only to be drawn in the Effigies of a Man. I preſume, by this time the Worſhip of Images was begun, An. 692. And it was now thought indecent to pay their Devotions to the Picture of a Lamb, and therefore they would no longer endure it to be ſeen in the Church. I have been the more particular in recounting and explaining theſe Things diſtinctly, that the Reader might have in one ſhort View the Riſe and Progreſs of that grand Superſtition, which has

ſo overſpread the Church, and defaced its Worſhip in the matter of Images, which were introduced at firſt only for Hiſtorical Uſe, to be Laymens Books, and a ſort of Ornaments for the Church, though as the Event proved, the moſt dangerous of any other.

SECT. XII. Of Adorning the Church with Flowers and Branches.

THERE was one Way more of Adorning Churches, which I ſhould not have thought worth mentioning, but for its Innocency and Natural Simplicity, that is, the Cuſtom of Garniſhing and Decking them with Flowers and Branches. Which was not done at any certain Times for any pretended Myſtery, but only to make them more decent and fit for a Body of Men to meet in. St. Auſtin takes notice of the Cuſtom, ſpeaking of one [a] who carried away with him ſome Flowers from off the Altar. And Paulinus in his Poetical way refers to it [b] likewiſe. But St. Jerom does it the greateſt Honour to give it a place in his Panegyrick upon his Friend Nepotian, making it a part [c] of his commendable Character, that he took care to have every thing neat and clean about the Church, the Altar bright, the Walls whited, the Pavement ſwept, the Gates veiled, the Veſtry clean, and the Veſſels ſhining; and ſo far did his pious Sollicitude about theſe matters extend, that he made Flowers, and Leaves, and Branches of Trees contribute to the Beauty and Ornament of the Churches. Theſe were but ſmall things in themſelves, St. Jerom ſays, but a pious Mind devoted to Chriſt is intent upon things great and ſmall, and neglects nothing that may deſerve the Name of the very meaneſt Office in the Church. And it is plain St. Jerom had a greater Value for ſuch ſort of Natural Beauty and Comelineſs in Churches, than for rich Ornaments of coſtly Pictures, and Paintings, and Silver, and Gold, and precious Stones. And therefore, as I obſerved before [*], he rather adviſed his rich Friends to lay out their Wealth upon the living Temples of God, the Backs and Bellies of the Poor, and commended the rich Lady Paula [d] for ſo doing, rather than for hanging up needleſs and ſuperfluous Gifts, as others did, upon the Pillars of the Temple. And it is no wonder then he ſhould commend Nepotian's frugal Care, who had diveſted himſelf of all his Eſtate to relieve the Poor, and left himſelf no Ability to adorn the Church any other way, but that which was moſt to St. Jerom's Liking and Approbation.

CHAP. IX.

Of the Conſecration of Churches.

ANTIENTLY, when Churches were finiſhed and adorned, it was then uſual to proceed to a Dedication, or Conſecration of them; which was a Thing that was ſometimes performed with a great deal of pious Solemnity, and therefore it will be proper in the next place to make a little Enquiry into the Nature and Circumſtances of it. Now I muſt obſerve firſt of all, that by the Conſecration of a Church the Ancients always mean the devoting, or ſetting it apart peculiarly for Divine Service: But the Manner and Ceremony of doing this, was not always exactly one and the ſame; therefore we are chiefly to regard the Subſtance of the Thing, which was the Separation of any Building from common Uſe to a Religious Service. Whatever Ceremony this was performed with, the firſt Act of Initiating and Appropriating it to a Divine Uſe was its Conſecration. And therefore in Alluſion to this, the firſt Beginning of any Thing is many times called its Dedication. As when Cyprian, ſpeaking of Aurelius the Confeſſor, whom he had ordained a Reader, ſays, He dedicated [a] his Reading, he means no more but that he performed the firſt Act of his Office in the Church, which in his Phraſe was its Dedication. Whether Churches had any other Ceremony beſides this in their Dedication for the three firſt Ages, is not certain; though it is highly probable they might have a ſolemn Thankſgiving and Prayer for a ſanctified Uſe of them alſo, over and beſides the uſual Liturgy of the Church, becauſe this was in Uſe among the Jews; who thus dedicated not only their Temple, 1 Kings viii. but alſo their private Houſes, and Walls of their Cities, when they were finiſhed, as appears from the Title of the 30th Pſalm, which is inſcribed, A Pſalm or Song at the Dedication of the Houſe of David; and from the Account which is given by Nehemiah, xii. 27. of the Dedication of the Walls of Jeruſalem. It is farther probable from the conſtant Practice of Chriſtians, in conſecrating their ordinary Meat by Thankſgiving and Prayer, before they begin to uſe it; and from the manner of conſecrating Churches in the following Ages, after the Time of Conſtantine: All which make it highly probable, that the Christians of the three first Ages used the same Ceremony of particular Prayers and Thanksgiving to God, in the Dedication of their Churches. But having no express Testimonies for this, I will not pretend positively to assert it. Durantus [b] and Bona [c] are indeed very confident, it was always so from the Time of the Apostles: But they build upon no better Foundation than the feigned Epistles of Clemens Romanus, Evaristus, and Hyginus, and the Acts of St. Cæcilia in Simeon Metaphrastes, which are Writings of no Authority, when the Question is about Matters of Fact in the First and Apostolical Ages.

SECT. II. The first Authentick Accounts of this to be fetched from the Fourth Century.

THEREFORE leaving this Matter, for want of better Evidence, as a Thing only probable, but not certain, I proceed to consider it as practised in the next Age, when in the peaceable Reign of Constantine Churches were rebuilt over all the World, and dedicated with great Solemnity. Then it was a desirable Sight, as Eusebius [d] words it, to behold how the Consecrations of the new-built Churches, and the Feasts of the Dedications were solemnized in every City. That which made these Solemnities the more august and venerable, was, that commonly a whole Synod of the Neighbouring, or Provincial Bishops met at the Dedication. The Church of Jerusalem, which Constantine built over our Saviour's Sepulchre, was consecrated in a full Synod of all the Bishops of the East, whom Constantine called first to Tyre, and then to Jerusalem, An. 335, for this very Purpose, as Eusebius [e] and all the other Historians inform us. In like Manner Socrates [f] observes, that the Council of Antioch, An. 341, was summoned on purpose to dedicate the famous Church there, called Dominicum Aureum, which was begun by Constantine, and finished by Constantius. And there are many Examples of the like nature to be met with in antient History. Now the Solemnity was usually begun with a Panegyrical Oration, or Sermon, consisting chiefly of Praise and Thanksgiving to God, and sometimes expatiating upon the Commendation of the Founder, or the Glory of the new-built Church. Such as that Oration in Eusebius [g], made at the Dedication of the Church of Paulinus at Tyre, and others [h] in Gaudentius and St. Ambrose, upon the like Occasion. Sometimes they had more than one Discourse upon it: For Eusebius, speaking of the Dedication of Churches in the Time of Constantine, says, "Every Bishop that was present [i] made a Speech in Praise of the Convention; so that the Panegyrick, which he there records, was but one of many that were spoken. In another place, describing the Dedication of the Church of Jerusalem, he says, "Some made Speeches by way of Panegyrick [k] upon the Emperor, and the Magnificence of his Building; others handled a common-place in Divinity adapted to the present Occasion; and others discoursed upon the Lessons of Scripture that were read, expounding the Mystical Sense of them; and he bore a Part in each of these himself, being present at that Solemnity. When this part of the Ceremony was over, they then proceeded to the Mystical Service, or the Offering of the Unbloody Sacrifice, as he there terms it, to God; Praying for the Peace of the World, the Prosperity of the Church, and a Blessing upon the Emperor and his Children. Among these Prayers they seem to have had a particular Prayer for the Church then Dedicated, as some understand St. Ambrose, who is thought [l] to have a Form upon such an Occasion; which, because we have not many such in the Writings of the Ancients, I will here insert in his own Words: "I beseech thee now, O Lord, let thine Eye be continually upon this House, upon this Altar, which is now dedicated unto thee, upon these spiritual Stones, in every one of which a sensible Temple is consecrated unto thee: Let the Prayers of thy Servants, which are poured out in this Place, be always accepted of thy Divine Mercy. Let every Sacrifice, that is offered in this Temple with a pure Faith and a pious Zeal, be unto thee a sweet-smelling Savour of Sanctification. And when thou lookest upon that Sacrifice of Salvation, which taketh away the Sins of the World, have Respect to these Oblations of Chastity, and defend them by thy continual Help, that they may be sweet and acceptable Offerings unto thee, and pleasing unto Christ the Lord: Vouchsafe to keep their whole Spirit, Soul and Body, without blame unto the Day of thy Son Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen." I do not deny, but that this Prayer in some Parts of it may seem to look more like a Consecration of Virgins, than a Consecration of Churches: Perhaps it might serve for both, the Spiritual and the Material Temples of God together; but if any thinks it means only the former, I will not contend about it, seeing it is already proved out of Eusebius, that at least Panegyrical Orations, and Praises of God, and Prayers for the Church were always part of the Solemnity and Ceremony of these Dedications. And 'till a solemn Day was appointed for the Performance of these, it was not according to Rule for any one to use a New-built Church as a Place of Worship, unless a great Necessity compelled him to it. Which is evident from the Apology that Athanasius makes for himself to Constantius, for using the great Church of Alexandria on the Easter-Festival, before it was finished and dedicated by the Emperor its Founder. He says [m], "The Multitude was so "great, that the lesser Churches would not "contain them without Hazard of their Lives, "and therefore they importuned the Bishop that "they might assemble in the great Church, "otherwise threatning that they would meet in "the open Fields: Upon which he consented to have Prayers in this Church. But this did not go for its Dedication; for he tells the Emperor, "They still expected a Day, when he himself "should give the Orders for its Encœnia, or Feast "of Dedication, and then solemnly give his "Thanks to God for the finishing of it, as had "been done in the Time of his Predecessor "Alexander, when the Church of Theonas was "building, and as he had seen it done at Triers, "and Aquileia, and other Places, where Church-"es were sometimes used for Prayer upon such "urgent and pressing Necessities, before they "were finished; but the using them for Divine "Service upon such Occasions was not their "Dedication; but that always came after, and "was a proper and solemn Eucharistical Service "or Thanksgiving to God for the Accomplish-"ment of the Holy Structure. So that this evidently makes out the Observation that has been made out of Eusebius before, "That the Com-"mon Prayers of the Church were not looked "upon as a formal Dedication, without special "Panegyrical Orations, and Forms of Adoration "and Praise more peculiar to that Occasion. And this also confutes the Opinion of those, who think the setting up the Sign of a Cross, or placing a Communion-table in a Church, was its Dedication. For these things might be done without any Dedication. Which appears not only from this Discourse of Athanasius, but from a Case related in Synesius, where some pretended that a certain Place was consecrated into a Church, because it had been used for Prayer and Administration of the Sacrament in a Time of hostile Invasion; against which Synesius positively determines, [n] "That such an Use in time "of Necessity was no Consecration: For other-"wise Mountains and Vallies, and private Hou-"ses would be Churches.

IT is evident, from what has been already said, that these Consecrations being generally performed in a Synod of Bishops, the Bishops were the Ministers always employed in this Service. But it might happen that none but the Bishop of the Diocese could be there, and then it was his Business peculiarly to perform the Office of Consecration, which by some antient Canons is so specially reserved to the Office of Bishops, that Presbyters are not allowed to perform it. The first Council of Bracara, An. 563, makes it Deprivation [o] for any Presbyter to consecrate an Altar, or a Church, and says, The Canons of Old forbad it likewise. Among our British Councils collected by Sir Henry Spelman, there is one under St. Patrick, An. 450, where we have a Canon to this very purpose, "That a Presbyter [p], though "he builds a Church, shall not offer the Obla-"tion in it, before he brings his Bishop to con-"secrate it, because this was regular and decent. And antient History affords no approved Examples to the contrary.

SECT. IV. No Church to be built without the Bishop's Leave.

THIS will receive a little farther Confirmation from our observing two or three other things, which have a near relation to this Matter. As first, that no Church regularly could be builded without the License or Consent of the Bishop in whose Diocese it was erected. This is expresly provided in one of the Canons of the Council of Chalcedon, which subjects both Monasteries and Churches so to the Bishop's Care, that neither of them might [q] be founded without his Consent and Approbation.

SECT. V. Nor 'till the Bishop had first made a solemn Prayer in the Place where it was to be builded.

AND by the Laws of Justinian, no Church was to be begun, before the Bishop had first made a solemn Prayer, and fix'd the Sign of the Cross in the Place where a new Church was to be erected. Which we have over and over again repeated in that Emperor's Novels, both with relation to Monasteries and Churches [r]. And Gothofred, not without Reason, thinks the same Custom was observed in Expiating the Temples of the Heathen, when they were to be consecrated into Christian Churches. For so he understands that Law [s] of Theodosius, which orders the Temples to be expiated by placing in them the Sign of the Christian Religion, that is, the Sign of the Cross. And whereas some Monks, and other Orders of Men would sometimes presume to set up the Sign of the Cross in publick Buildings, and other Places erected for the Divertiſement of the People; which was in effect a pretending to make them Churches without the Biſhop's Leave; therefore the Emperor Leo [t] made a Decree, that nothing of this nature ſhould be done by Uſurpation for the future, but whether it was to erect a Croſs, or bring the Reliques of a Martyr into any Place, both theſe ſhould be done by the Direction of the Biſhops, and not otherwiſe. And hence it is probably conjectured both by Suicerus and Meurſius, that a Biſhop's Dioceſe is ſometimes called σταυροπήγιον, that is the Diſtrict wherein he had power to fix the Croſs within his own Bounds for the building of Churches. So the Word will ſignify both the Act of making a Croſs, and the Limits wherein he had Power to make it.

SECT. VI.
No Biſhop to conſecrate a Church in another's Dioceſe, except Neceſſity required it.

FOR it is to be obſerved farther, that though Biſhops had the Power of conſecrating Churches, yet that was limited to their own Dioceſe, and they might not exceed their own Bounds, unleſs called to aſſiſt another, or to miniſter in the Vacancy of another Biſhoprick. Which is ſo ſtrictly inſiſted on by the Council of Orange, that it forbids a Biſhop, who builds a Church himſelf at his own Expence in another Man's Dioceſe, to aſſume to himſelf the Conſecration [u] of it, but to leave that to the Biſhop in whoſe Territory the Church is erected. The third Council [w] of Orleans, and others have Decrees of the like nature. But in caſe a Church was built in a vacant Dioceſe, then any neighbouring Biſhop might be called to conſecrate it, as Sidonius Apollinaris was called to conſecrate the Church of Ruteni, or Rhodez in France, though he was Biſhop of another Dioceſe: But the reaſon [x] was, as Savaro rightly obſerves, becauſe Rhodez at that Time had no Biſhop of its own to officiate in the Conſecration. Now all theſe Things ſhew, that the Biſhop in every Dioceſe was the proper Miniſter of this Service; for he was to be conſulted before the Work was begun, he was to come alſo, and pray at the Place before the Foundation was laid, and when the Building was finiſhed he was to be called to conſecrate it, or elſe ſome other Biſhop in his ſtead. But if Presbyters could regularly have done it, there had been no need to have ſent for a Biſhop out of another Dioceſe to perform it. But perhaps it will be asked, "What if a Presbyter did take upon him to do "the Thing, did his Act ſtand good, or did "the Biſhop proceed to a new Conſecration? To which I anſwer, this being a Thing reſerved to Biſhops only by Eccleſiaſtical Law and Cuſtom (for the Scripture has nothing about it) we do not find any new Conſecrations practiſed in ſuch caſes; but becauſe it was a Schiſmatical Act in a Presbyter ſo to go againſt Rule and Canon in contempt of his Biſhop, therefore he was to be puniſhed [y] with Depoſition or Degradation, as appears from the forecited Canon of the Council of Bracara. And even a Biſhop that pretended to conſecrate a Church in another Man's Dioceſe, was for his Offence to be ſuſpended a Year from his Office [z], as a Tranſgreſſor of the Canons, in the French Churches.

SECT. VII.
No Neceſſity of a Licence from the Biſhop of Rome for a Biſhop to conſecrate in former Ages.

SOME pretend, that a Biſhop in his own Dioceſe could not, according to antient Canons, conſecrate a Church without the Biſhop of Rome's Licence to authorize him to do it. This is one of Gratian's Doctrines to magnify the Pope's Power [a] in the Canon Law. Which the new Roman Correctors are ſo far from altering, or cenſuring, that they bring Socrates in as a farther Evidence to vouch for it. Socrates indeed ſpeaking of the Council of Antioch, which Conſtantius ſummoned under pretence of dedicating his new Church there (though the true Deſign was to have Athanaſius condemned in a general Council) excepts againſt it upon this ground, "Becauſe "the Biſhop of Rome was not there, whoſe "Conſent was neceſſary, by the Eccleſiaſtical "Canon, to make Laws, or Rules for [b] the "Church. Which was a Privilege equally belonging to all Patriarchs, That no general Council ſhould be held, nor general Rules made for the whole Church, without their Preſence, and Advice firſt taken in ſuch publick Deliberations. But this has nothing to do with the Conſecration of Churches in every private Biſhop's Dioceſe, of which there is no Inſtance in all antient Hiſtory, of any Biſhop's being obliged to ſend to the Biſhop of Rome, for his Licenſe to conſecrate a Church within his own Dioceſe. But that which ſeems to have impoſed upon theſe Cenſors, was their miſunderſtanding thoſe Greek Words, κανονίζειν τὰς ἐκκλησίας, which does not ſignify Dedicating of Churches, (though Muſculus ſo tranſlates it, and Hoſpinian follows him in the ſame Error) but the Church's making Laws, or Canons, for her own Government: In which the Biſhop of Rome was allowed to have a Patriarchal Privilege, but not in the Conſecration of Churches, though that now be inſiſted on by ſome, who would have every thing flow from the immenſe Plenitude of Power in the Biſhops of Rome.

SECT. VIII.
Churches always dedicated to God, and not to Saints, though sometimes distinguished by their Names for a Memorial of them.

NEXT to the Minister Consecrating, it will be proper to say something of the Object to whom Churches were dedicated; which antiently was solely to God and his Service. Of which Custom St. Austin is a most irrefragable Witness, who disputing with Maximinus the Arian Bishop, uses this Argument to prove the Divinity of the Holy Ghost, "That he "must be God, because Temples were builded "and dedicated to him, which it would be Sa"crilege to do to any Creature. If, says he, "we should make a Temple of Wood and Stone "to any Holy Angel, though never so excel"lent, should we not be Anathematized by the "Truth of Christ and the Church of God, for "exhibiting to the Creature that Service which "is only due to the Creator? Since therefore "we should be sacrilegious in building a Tem"ple to any [c] Creature, how can he be other"wise than the true God, to whom we not on"ly build Temples, but are our selves his Tem"ples? In another Place, he rejects with Scorn the false Imputation of Faustus the Manichee, who charged the Catholicks with erecting Temples to their Martyrs, and offering Sacrifice, and other Acts of Worship to them therein. To this he replies, "That they never offer'd Sacrifice to "any Martyr, but only to the God of the Mar"tyrs, though they erected Altars in the Me"morials of the Martyrs [d.] For what Bi"shop, when he stands by the Altar in any Place "where the Holy Bodies lie, ever says, We offer "unto thee, Peter, or Paul, or Cyprian? But "what is offered, is offered unto God (who "crowns the Martyrs) in the Memorials of the "Martyrs who are crowned by him. He often repeats it in other [e] places, "That they did "not so honour their Martyrs, by erecting Tem"ples, or Altars, to them, but only unto God. The same Place indeed was often a Monument or Memorial of a Martyr, and a Temple of God, because Churches were commonly built over the Sepulchres of the Martyrs, or in the Places where they suffered, or else the Reliques of the Martyrs were translated into them: And hence they were called by the Martyrs Name, because they were Memorials of them. The Church and the Altar that was built at Carthage, in the Place where St. Cyprian suffer'd Martyrdom, was upon that account called Mensa Cypriani, Cyprian's Altar, not because it was built, or dedicated to him, or his Worship, (for St. Austin says [f], It was erected only to God and his Service) but because it was a Memorial of his Martyrdom, being built in the Place where Cyprian himself was offered a Sacrifice unto God.

SECT. IX.
Churches sometimes named from their Founders or other Circumstances in their Building.

AND from hence it is very plain, that the naming a Church by the Name of a Saint, or Martyr, was far from dedicating it to that Saint, or Martyr, though it served for a Memorial of him among the Living; and so far was an Honour to his Memory, though dedicated only to God and his Service. And this is farther evident from this Consideration, "That Churches were some"times named from their Founders, who cer"tainly did not intend to dedicate Churches to "themselves. Thus Sirmond [g] has observed three Churches in Carthage to be so denominated from their Founders, Basilica Fausti, Florentii, and Leontii. And Sozomen [h] tells us, "That "the Temple of Serapis, when it was turned into "a Church, was called by the Name of Arcadius. As some in Rome and Antioch bare the Name of Constantine and Justinian. Sometimes they had their Name from a particular Circumstance of Time, or Place, or other Accident in the building of them. The Church of Jerusalem was called Anastasis and Crux, not because it was dedicated to any St. Anastasis, or Cross, but because it was by Constantine built in the place of our Saviour's Crucifixion and Resurrection, as Valesius [i] and others have rightly observed. So the Church of Anastasia at Constantinople was so termed, not from any Saint of the same Name, but because it was the Church where Gregory Nazianzen by his preaching gave a fort of new Life, or Resurrection to the Catholick Doctrine of the Trinity, after it had been long oppressed by the Arian Faction, as he himself [k] accounts for the Reason of the Name in several places of his Writings. And upon the like ground one of the Churches of Carthage was called Basilica Restituta, from its being rescued out of the Hands of the Arians. One of the Churches of Alexandria was commonly called Cæsareum [l], which Valesius [m] thinks was for no other Reason but because the Place before had been called Cæsareum, or the Temple of the Cæsars. As a Church of Antioch was called Palæa, because built in that Part of the City which they termed παλαιὰν, or the old City. So St. Peter's at Rome was antiently called Triumphalis, because it stood in Via Triumphali, or the Triumphal Way leading to the Capitol. And we are assured from St. Jerom [n], that the Lateran Church had its Name from Lateranus the Heathen, who was slain by Nero, because it had formerly been that Nobleman's Palace in Rome. A thousand Observations of the like nature might be made: But these few are sufficient to shew, that there were different Reasons for giving Names to Churches; and that it was no Argument of Churches being dedicated to Saints, because they bare the Names of Saints; it being otherwise apparent, that they were consecrated only to God, and not to any Creature.

SECT. X.
When Altars first began to have a particular Consecration, with new Ceremonies distinct from Churches.

WHAT has been observed of Churches, is equally true of Altars, that they were always dedicated to God alone, and not to any other Being whatever, even after they began to have a particular Consecration with some new Ceremonies distinct from Churches: Which seems to have begun first of all in the sixth Century. For the Council of Agde, An. 506, is the first publick Record that we meet with, giving any Account of a distinct Consecration of Altars: And there we find the new Ceremony of Chrism [o] added to the Sacerdotal Benediction. And not long after we find a like Decree in the Council of Epone, An. 517, "That no Altars but "such as were made of Stone, should be conse- "crated with [p] the Infusion of Chrism upon "them. Which implies, that at least some Altars, if not all, had then the Ceremony of Chrism in their Consecration. But as this Ceremony was new, so was the Consecration of Altars, as distinct from Churches, a new thing also; and much more the Consecration of Communion-cloths, and Cups, and Images, and Crosses, and Paschal Tapers, and Holy Water, and Beads, and Bells, of which the Reader may find a particular Account in Hospinian [q], with all the new Rites of consecrating Churches in the Romish Rituals, which it is none of my Business here farther to pursue.

SECT. XI.
No Church to be built, or consecrated before it was endowed.

CONCERNING the antient Consecrations we have farther to observe, That by the Laws of Justinian, no Man was to begin to build a Church, before he had given Security to the Bishop of a Maintenance for the Ministry [r], and the Repairs of the Church, and whatever was otherwise necessary to uphold Divine Service in it. And by a Rule of one of the Spanish Councils [s], a Bishop was not to consecrate a Church, before the Donation of its Maintenance was deliver'd to him in writing, confirm'd by Law. Which were necessary Rules to preserve Churches from falling to Ruin, and their Ministry and Service from Contempt and Disgrace.

SECT. XII.
Yet Bishops not to demand any thing for Consecration.

BUT beyond this suitable Provision and Settlement for the Service of the Church, the Bishop was not to exact, or demand any thing farther of the Founder; but it being part of his ordinary Office to consecrate Churches, he was obliged to do it without requiring any Reward for his Service; unless the Founder thought fit to make him any voluntary Oblation, in which case he was at Liberty to receive it. So it is determined in the aforesaid Spanish Council of Bracara [t], and for the French Churches in the second Council of Chalons [u], and others in the time of Charles the Great.

SECT. XIII.
Consecrations performed indifferently upon any Day.

AS to the Time of Consecration, they did not antiently confine themselves to perform it only upon Sundays, but all Days were at first indifferent both for this and the Ordinations of the Clergy likewise. Which is an Observation frequently made by the learned Pagi [w] in his critical Remarks upon the Chronology of the Antient Church. Particularly he observes, that Constantine's famous Dedication of the Church of Jerusalem in a full Synod of Bishops, An. 335, must needs have been upon a Saturday: For all Writers agree, that it was upon the Ides of September, that is, upon the 13th Day of September, which according to the exact Rules and Method of the Cycle must fall upon a Saturday that Year. Whence Pagi rightly concludes, "That the Custom had not yet prevail- "ed, which confined Consecration of Churches "to the Lord's-Day.

SECT. XIV.
The Day of Consecration usually celebrated among their Anniversary Festivals.

I have nothing farther to remark upon this Head, save only that the Day of Consecration was in many Churches solemnly kept and observed among their Anniversary Festivals. For Sozomen [x] gives us this Account of the Dedication of the Church of Jeruſalem, "That in Memory of it "they held a yearly Feſtival, which laſted for "eight Days together; during which Time "both they of the Church, and all Strangers, "which flocked thither in abundance, held Ec- "cleſiaſtical Aſſemblies, and met together for "Divine Service. To this Gregory the Great ſeems to have added a new Cuſtom here in England, which was, "That on the Annual Feaſt "of the Dedication, the People might build "themſelves Booths round about the Church, "and there feaſt and entertain themſelves with "eating and drinking, in lieu of their antient "Sacrifices while they were Heathens. Which is related by Bede [y], out of Gregory's Letters to Auſtin, and Mellitus, the firſt Biſhop of the Saxons. And from this Cuſtom, it is more than probable, came our Wakes, which are ſtill obſerved in ſome Places, as the Remains of thoſe Feaſts of Dedication of particular Churches.

CHAP. X.

Of the Reſpect and Reverence which the Primitive Chriſtians paid to their Churches.

SECT. I. Churches never put to any Prophane Uſe, but only Sacred and Religious Service.

NEXT to their Adorning and Conſecration of Churches, it will be proper to examin what Reſpect and Reverence they paid to conſecrated Places, after they were once ſet apart for Divine Service. They then uſed them only as the Houſes of God, for Acts of Devotion and Religion, and did not allow of any thing to be done there, that had not ſome Tendency towards Piety, or immediate Relation to it. They might be uſed for Religious Aſſemblies for the Elections of the Biſhops and Clergy, for the ſitting of Councils for catechetick Schools, for Conferences and Collations about Religion: But not be put to the Uſe of common Houſes, to eat, or drink, or lodge in. And therefore, tho' the Law allow'd Men to take Sanctuary in the Church, as we ſhall ſee in the next Chapter, yet it did not allow them to have their Meat and Lodging there. When ſome abuſed the Catechumenia (which I have ſhewed before to be Places within the Church for Men and Women to hear Divine Service in) and turned them into Rooms to lodge in, the Emperor Leo made a Decree, that all ſuch ſhould be expell'd from their Habitations in the Church. The caſe was different when Men ſpent whole Nights in the Church in Watching and Prayer; as they did frequently both in their publick and private Vigils; ſuch Pernoctations in the Church were allow'd, becauſe they were but neceſſary Circumſtances of divine Service: Only Women were forbidden by the Council of Eliberis [a] to keep private Vigils in the Church, becauſe many times, under pretence of Prayer, ſecret Wickedneſs was committed. And for the like Reaſon their Agapæ, or Feaſts of Charity, which were originally an Apoſtolical Practice, and kept in the Church, were afterwards prohibited, or at leaſt diſcouraged, for the Exceſs and conſequent Prophaneneſs that attended them. The Council of Laodicea [b] peremptorily forbids them under that Name of Charity-Feaſts, and commands that no one ſhould eat, or prepare Beds or Tables for that purpoſe, in the Houſe of God. And the third Council of Carthage forbids all Feaſting in the Church [c] in general to the Clergy, except in caſe of Neceſſity, when they were upon a Journey, and could not otherwiſe be entertained; and orders, that the Cuſtom ſhould be diſcountenanced as much as poſſible alſo in the Laity: For though they were forced to tolerate it for ſome time, yet they did not approve of it, as St. Auſtin tells Fauſtus [d] the Manichee, but endeavoured to correct both the Exceſs that many ran into upon ſuch Occaſions, and the very Cuſtom itſelf of Feaſting in the Church, or at the Graves of the Martyrs, becauſe two Errors crept into the Church by that means, intolerable Exceſs, and an Heatheniſh Superſtition therewith: For Men began, as he [e] complains, in theſe Riots to worſhip Pictures and Tomb-ſtones, and reckon'd their Feaſts a ſort of Sacrifice to the Dead, placing even their Voracities and Drunkenneſs to the account of Religion; ſo that it was high time to lay aſide all manner of Banquettings in the Church, that the Houſe of God might not be prophaned with ſuch Exceſſes of Riot as were not to be endured in private Houſes. And this was their general Rule in all Caſes, to lay aſide all Cuſtoms that were not abſolutely neceſſary, though innocent and uſeful in their Original, rather than ſuffer the Abuſes and Corruptions of them to end in the Prophanation of Churches.

SECT. II. The like Caution obſerved about the Sacred Veſſels and Utenſils of the Church.

THE like Reverence and Reſpect was alſo ſhewed to every ſacred Veſſel and Utenſil belonging to the Adminiſtration of the Sacraments and Divine Service: They might not be employed to any other Uſe, but only what was ſacred, and anſwerable to the Deſignation and Appointment of them. Upon this account they were kept in the Sceuophylacium of the Church, and never removed thence but when the Service of the Altar required them. This Cuſtom was ſo nicely obſerved, that when Athanaſius was accuſed for breaking the myſtical Cup, he clears himſelf of the Accuſation, by ſaying, that in the Place where it was pretended that he had broken it, there was neither Church, nor Miniſter [b], nor was it the time of celebrating the Euchariſt: Therefore ſince the Cup was never in the Cuſtody of any but the Miniſters of the Church, nor ever uſed but in the Church in time of Divine Service, he could not be guilty of the Crime laid againſt him, ſeeing there were none but private Men, in whoſe keeping the Cup could not be, in that Place. The Veſſels were uſually kept by the Deacon; and the Sub-deacons and other inferior Orders are by the Councils of Laodicea [c] and Agde [d] forbidden to touch them. There was but one Caſe in which it was lawful to put theſe Things to common Uſe, and that was the Caſe of abſolute Neceſſity, when no other Method could be found out to redeem Captives, or relieve the Poor in times of extreme Exigenee: Then it was thought that Mercy was to be preferred before Sacrifice, and that the living and ſpiritual Temples of God were to be preſerved at the Expence of the material ones, and they never made any ſcruple to melt down their Communion-plate, or part with their Ornaments upon ſuch Occaſions; of which I have given full Proof heretofore from the Examples of St. Ambroſe, St. Auſtin, Cyril of Jeruſalem, Acacius Biſhop of Amida, Exuperius of Tholouſe, and the Laws [e] of Juſtinian, which need not be repeated in this Place. But excepting this one extraordinary Caſe, it was eſteemed the higheſt Prophanation and Sacrilege, to divert any thing to any other Uſe, which was given to God's Service: And there are ſome Inſtances of very remarkable Judgments that befel ſuch Prophaners, one or two of which it may not be amiſs to mention. Theodoret [f] tells us, Julian the Apoſtate ſent two of his Officers, Felix and his Uncle Julian, to plunder the Church of Antioch, call'd the Golden Church, and bring the rich Veſſels, which Conſtantine and Conſtantius had dedicated, into his own Coffers. But they were not content barely to commit Sacrilege, unleſs they could vent their Spite alſo in ſome unmannerly and prophane Abuſes: Therefore Julian piſs'd upon the holy Table, and Felix ſeeing the holy Veſſels, broke out into this rude Expreſſion, Behold what fine Veſſels Mary's Son is ſerv'd in! But the impious Wretches did not long go unpuniſhed: For Julian was immediately ſeized with an Ulcer, which turned all his Bowels into Putrefaction, and he died voiding his own Excrements at his blaſphemous Mouth; and Felix by the ſame divine Vengeance voided Blood at his Mouth, without Intermiſſion, Day and Night, 'till he died. Victor Uticenſis [g] gives us a like Account of one Proclus, an Agent of one of the Kings of the Vandals, who having ravaged and plunder'd the Catholick Churches, made himſelf a Shirt and Breeches of the Palls or Coverings of the Altar. But not long after he fell into a Phrenzy, which made him eat off his own Tongue, piece by piece, and ſo he breathed out his laſt in a moſt ignominious Death. It is no leſs remarkable, what Optatus reports of ſome Donatiſt Biſhops, who in their mad Zeal againſt the Catholicks, ordered the Euchariſt which the Catholicks had conſecrated, to be thrown to their Dogs; but not without an immediate Sign of Divine [h] Vengeance upon them: For the Dogs, inſtead of devouring the Elements, fell upon their Maſters, as if they had never known them, and tore them to pieces, as Robbers and Prophaners of the Holy Body of Chriſt. Which makes Optatus put them in mind of that Admonition of our Saviour, Mat. 7. 6. Give not that which is Holy unto the Dogs, neither caſt ye your Pearls before Swine, leſt they trample them under their Feet, and turn again and rend you. Other Inſtances might be added of the ſame nature, but I chuſe rather to go on with the Account of their Reverence, than to dwell any longer upon the Puniſhment of the Prophaners.

SECT. III. What Difference made between Churches and private Houſes.

LET us next then obſerve the Difference that was made between Churches and private Houſes. Some Hereticks made very light of this Diſtinction, as the Euſtathians, Maſſalians, and others. Againſt the Euſtathians we have two Canons made in the Council of Gangra, from which we may learn their Errors, and what were the Catholick Tenets in Oppoſition to them. The firſt is, If any one [i] teach, that the Houſe of God, and the Aſſemblies held therein are to be deſpiſed, let him be Anathema. And the other, If any one [k] hold Aſſemblies privately out of the Church, and deſpiſing the Church, chuſes to perform Eccleſiaſtical Offices, where there is no Presbyter appointed by the Biſhop, let him be Anathema. Theſe Hereticks ſeem to have contemned both a regular Miniſtry and the publick Churches, and to have made no difference between the Houſe of God, and other Houſes, but to have taught that Eccleſiaſtical Offices might as well be performed at Home as in the Church. Againſt which Errors this Council riſing up ſo ſeverely, gives us to underſtand, that according to the Sentiments of the Catholick Church, the publick Offices of the Church were to be performed in publick, and not in private Houſes, and that it was a Contempt of the Houſe of God to perform them otherwiſe. At preſent I do not remember any one allowed Inſtance of the contrary Practice in all ancient Hiſtory, except in caſes of Neceſſity, which are above all Laws. And therefore I could not but reckon this Difference, which was ſo univerſally put between the Houſe of God and private Houſes, amongſt the Inſtances of Reſpect and Reverence, which the Ancients paid to their Churches.

and

SECT. IV.
How ſome choſe rather to die than deliver up Churches to be prophaned by Hereticks.

IT will deſerve here alſo to be remembred, particularly to the Praiſe of St. Ambroſe, how he acted with the Courage and Reſolution of a Martyr in Defence of the Churches, that they might not be delivered up to the Prophanation of the Arians. For when the younger Valentinian had, by the Inſtigation of his Mother Juſtina, an Arian Empreſs, firſt publiſhed a Law, now extant in the Theodoſian [l] Code, allowing the Arians Liberty to hold Aſſemblies; and afterwards ſent his Commands to Ambroſe to deliver up to them one of the Churches of Milan; he returned him this brave and generous Anſwer: "If the Emperor asks of me any Thing [m] that is my own, my Eſtate, my Money, I ſhall freely recede from my Right, though all that I have belongs to the Poor. But thoſe Things which are God's, are not ſubject to the Emperor's Power. If my Patrimony is demanded, you may invade it; if my Body, I will offer it of my own accord. Will you carry me into Priſon, or unto Death? I will voluntarily ſubmit to it. I will not guard my ſelf with an Army of my People about me, I will not lay hold of the Altar, and ſupplicate for Life, but more joyfully be ſacrificed my ſelf for the Altar." He thought it abſolutely unlawful for the Emperor to grant to the Arians, the Enemies of Chriſt, thoſe Temples which had been dedicated to the Service of Chriſt; and that it did much leſs become a Biſhop, the Miniſter of Chriſt, to be acceſſary to ſo foul a Diſhonour to his Lord: And therefore he rather reſolved to die at the Altar, if it muſt be ſo, than give his Conſent to ſo great a Profanation. By this one Inſtance we may eaſily judge, what Opinion the Ancients had of the Sacredneſs of Churches, as God's Propriety; and that they would as ſoon deliver up their Bibles to be burnt by the Heathen, as their Churches to be prophaned by Heretical Aſſemblies, where Impiety would be taught for true Religion, and Blaſphemy offered to God inſtead of Adoration.

SECT. V.
The Ceremony of waſhing their Hands when they went into the Church.

AS to the Ceremonies of Reſpect uſed by them when they entered into the Church, we find one of pretty general Obſervation, which was the Cuſtom of Waſhing their Hands and their Face, in token of Innocency and Purity, when they went to worſhip God at the holy Altar. Which ſeems to be taken from that of the Pſalmiſt, I will waſh my Hands in Innocency, and ſo will I compaſs thy Altar. This Cuſtom is frequently mentioned by Chryſoſtom, Euſebius, Tertullian, Syneſius, Paulinus and others, whoſe Teſtimonies have been already alledged in the former Part [n] of this Book, where I had alſo occaſion to ſhew, that Fountains and Ciſterns of Water were commonly ſet in the Atrium or Court before the Church for this very purpoſe.

SECT. VI.
The Ceremony of putting off their Shoes, uſed by ſome, but this no general Cuſtom.

ANOTHER Ceremony uſed by ſome few (for it was no general Cuſtom) was putting off their Shoes, when they went into the Houſe of God. Caſſian obſerves of the Egyptian Monks, that they always wore Sandals inſtead of Shoes, and thoſe they alſo put off whenever they went [o] to celebrate or receive the Holy Myſteries, thinking themſelves obliged to do ſo, by interpreting literally that Intimation of Reverence, which was given to Moſes and Joſhua, Put off thy Shoes from off thy Feet, for the Place whereon thou ſtandeſt is Holy Grouud. But others did not underſtand this as an abſolute Command, obliging all Men preciſely to uſe this Ceremony of Reſpect, but only where the Cuſtom of any Nation had made it an Indication of Reverence, as it was among the Eaſtern Nations in the time of Moſes and Joſhua. Whence we do not find it mentioned as any general Cuſtom prevailing among the Primitive Chriſtians: Unleſs perhaps it may be thought to have been ſo in the Æthiopian or Abyſſin Churches, becauſe, as Mr. Mede has obſerved [p] out of Zaga Zabo's Account of them in Damianus a Goes, the ſame Cuſtom continues ſtill among them at this Day. Which whether it be derived from antient Tradition of their

Churches,

Churches, or be a Practice lately taken up among them, is not now very eaſy to be determined.

SECT. VII. Whether the Ancients uſed the Ceremony of Bowing toward the Altar at their Entrance into the Church.

AND I think the ſame Reſolution muſt be given to the Queſtion about Bowing toward the Altar at their firſt Entrance into Churches. Mr. Mede thinks there is no plain Demonſtration of it in the antient Writers, but ſome Probability of ſuch a Cuſtom derived from the Jews. For he ſays, What reverential Guiſe, Ceremony or Worſhip [q] they uſed at their Ingreſs into God's Houſe in the Ages next to the Apoſtles (and ſome I believe they did) is wholly buried in Silence and Oblivion. The Jews before them, from whom the Chriſtian Religion ſprung, uſed to bow themſelves down towards the Mercy-Seat. The Chriſtians after them in the Greek and Oriental Churches, have time out of Mind, and without any known Beginning thereof, uſed to bow in like manner, with their Poſture toward the Altar, or holy Table, ſaying that of the Publican in the Goſpel, God be merciful to me a Sinner; as appears by the Liturgies of St. Chryſoſtom and St. Baſil, and as they are ſtill known to do at this Day. Which Cuſtom of theirs, not being found to have been ordained or eſtabliſhed by any Decree or Canon of any Council, and being ſo agreeable to the Uſe of God's People of the Old Teſtament, may therefore ſeem to have been derived to them from very remote and antient Tradition. Nothing therefore can be known of the Uſe of thoſe firſt Ages of the Church, farther than it ſhall ſeem probable they might imitate the Jews. This is ſpoken according to the wonted Ingenuity of that learned Perſon, who never advances a Probability into a Demonſtration. I ſhall only add one thing out of Chryſoſtom, to make his Opinion ſeem the more probable, which I note from the Obſervation of Mr. Aubertin [r], who among ſome other Inſtances of Reverence paid to God, at the reading of the Goſpel and reception of Baptiſm, takes notice of this, that when the Candidates of Baptiſm came near the Baptiſtery, which in Chryſoſtom's Language [s] is the Bride-chamber of the Spirit and the Port of Grace, they were then as Captives to fall down before their King, and all to caſt themſelves together upon their Knees. Now if ſuch an Act of Reverence was performed to God at their Entrance into the Baptiſtery, it is not improbable but that ſome ſuch Reverence might alſo be uſed at their Entrance into the Temple. But in Matters which have not a clear Light and Proof, 'tis not prudent to be over-bold in our Determination.

SECT. VIII. Kings laid aſide their Crowns and Guards, when they went into the Houſe of the King of Kings.

IT is moſt certain, that when Kings and Emperors went into the Houſe of God, they paid this Reſpect to the Place, that they left not only their Arms and their Guards, but alſo their Crowns behind them; as thinking it indecent to appear in their Regalia in the preſence of the King of Kings, or to ſeem to want Arms and Guards when they were under the peaceable Roof of the Prince of Peace. St. Chryſoſtom often ſpends his Eloquence [t] upon this Cuſtom, and uſes it as an Argument to perſuade all Inferiors to a profound Reverence, Humility and Peace, when they came into the Courts of God, becauſe they had ſuch Examples of their Kings before them. The Emperor Theodoſius Junior alſo makes uſe of the ſame Topick in one of his Laws [u], which was made to regulate the Abuſes of ſome who fled for Sanctuary in the Church with their Arms about them: Which Prophanation was not to be endured in any, ſince he himſelf always left his Arms without Doors, and firſt laid aſide his Diadem, the Badge of Imperial Majeſty, before he went into the Church. Nay Julian himſelf had regard to this Cuſtom, as Sozomen truly obſerves [x] out of his Epiſtle to Arſacius, High Prieſt of Galatia, where one of the Things he would have them imitate the Chriſtians in, was this, That when they went into the Temples of their Gods, no Man of Arms ſhould appear among them. And I have already [y] noted out of Leo Grammaticus, how Michael the Greek Emperor in latter Ages was cenſured for preſuming to paſs the Beautiful or Royal Gates crowned, at which Gates it had ever been cuſtomary for his Predeceſſors to lay aſide their Crowns, when they went into the Church.

SECT. IX. The Doors and Pillars of the Church and Altar often kiſſed and embraced in Token of Love and Reſpect to them.

ANOTHER very uſual Piece of Reſpect paid to the Altar and the Church, was Mens embracing, ſaluting, and kiſſing them, or any Part of them, the Doors, Threſhold, Pillars, in token of their great Love and Affection for them. St. Ambroſe takes notice of this in the Account he gives of the great Conſternation they were in at Milan, when the Emperor's Orders came for delivering up the Churches to the Arians. The Soldiers were the Men who firſt brought the welcome News into the Church, that the Emperor had revoked his fatal Sentence: And they ſtrove who ſhould firſt get to the Altar [z] and kiſs it, to ſignify, that all things now were in Peace and Safety. He alludes, no doubt, to the Oſculum Pacis, the Solemn Kiſs of Peace, which the Faithful anciently were uſed to give mutually to each other in the Communion-Service, as a Teſtimony of their cordial Love and Affection for one another. And therefore it cannot be ſuppos'd that ſuch Salutations of the Church or Altar were intended as Acts of Religious Worſhip, but only as civil Indications of their Love and Reſpect for them. And by this Rule we are to interpret all other Places of ancient Authors, which frequently ſpeak of this Cuſtom, as Sidonius Apollinaris [a], Paulinus [b], Prudentius [c], Chryſoſtom [d], Anthanaſius [e], Caſſiodore [f], and the Author of the Eccleſiaſtical Hierarchy [g], under the Name of Dionyſius the Areopagite, and ſeveral others, who wrote before the ſuperſtitious Adoration of Images had gain'd any Credit in the Church: The like Reſpect to this having been alſo ſhewed to the Book of the Goſpels, without any ſuſpicion of adoring the Materials of it.

SECT. X. Churches us'd for Private Meditation and Prayer, as well as Publick.

I think it not improper alſo to obſerve under this Head, that Churches were many times choſen as the propereſt Places for private Devotion and Prayer upon extraordinary Occaſions. Theodoret [h] obſerves of Theodoſius the Emperor, that the Night before he was to engage Eugenius the Tyrant, was by him wholly ſpent in an Oratory, which happened to be in the Place where he had pitched his Camp. And in like manner both Athanaſius [i] and Socrates [k], and the other Hiſtorians, tell us of Alexander Biſhop of Conſtantinople, that when the Faction of Euſebius had threatned to oblige him upon a certain Day to receive Arius into Communion, he betook himſelf the Night before to the Church, and there proſtrating himſelf before the Altar, continued all Night in Prayer, begging of God, that if the Faith which he held was Truth, and the Opinion of Arius Falſe, he would puniſh Arius as his Impiety juſtly deſerved. Which was accordingly fulfilled: For the next Day Arius, as he was going triumphantly to Church, having occaſion to turn aſide to go to Stool, voided his Entrails with his Excrements, and ſo periſhed by a moſt ignominious Death. I mention theſe things only to ſhew, that the Ancients paid ſuch a Reſpect to their Churches, that upon ſpecial Occaſions they thought them the propereſt Place as well for Private Devotion as for Publick. And I have already noted [*] that many of their Churches were ſo framed, as to have private Cells or Receſſes for Men to retire to, and exerciſe themſelves at leiſure Times in private reading of the Scriptures, and Meditation and Prayer.

SECT. XI. Their Publick Behaviour in the Church Expreſſive of great Reverence.

As to their publick Behaviour in the Church, it was generally ſuch as expreſſed great Reverence for it, as the Sanctuary of God, and the Place of his immediate Preſence. They entered it as the Palace of the Great King, where the Angels attended, and Heaven opened it ſelf, and Chriſt ſat upon his Throne, and all was filled with Incorporeal Powers, as Chryſoſtom words it [l] in ſome of his elegant Deſcriptions. 'Tis particularly remarked by Gregory Nazianzen [m] of his own Mother Nonna, that the Zeal of her Devotion was always ſo flaming and fervent, that ſhe never ſpake a Word in the Church, but what was neceſſary to be done in joining in the ſacred Service; ſhe never turned her Back upon the Altar, nor ever allowed her ſelf to ſpit upon the Pavement of the Church. But I cannot ſay theſe were neceſſary Laws for all to obſerve; for Nazianzen intimates ſhe did ſomething above the common pitch, and conſequently that it was Choice and Zeal, and not any binding Rules of the Church, that obliged her to it. We might here have conſidered farther their reverent Poſtures of Devotion, Standing, Kneeling, and Proſtration: and have expoſed the Practice of ſitting at Prayers and at the Communion-Service, which Perron and ſome others for different Reaſons contend for, as a Poſture of Devotion uſed in the ancient Church; but I ſhall have a more proper Occaſion to ſpeak of theſe things hereafter, when we come to the particular Offices and Services of the Church.

SECT. XII. Churches the ſafeſt Repoſitory for Things of any Value, and the beſt Retreat in Times of Diſtreſs.

THE laſt Inſtance of their Reverence for Churches which I ſhall take notice of, is, That the Sacredneſs of them made them commonly the ſafeſt Repoſitory for Things of Value, and the beſt Security and Retreat in Times of common Calamity and Diſtreſs. The Church had not only her own private Archives, her Treaſury, and her Cemeliarchium, for preſerving her own Writings, her Utenſils and her Treaſures, but was a Place of common Tuition and Defence, both for Things and Perſons, in many other Caſes. Thus 'tis noted by Ruffin [n] and Socrates [o] and Sozomen, that the Cubit wherewith they were uſed to meaſure the Increaſe of the Waters of Nile, when it overflowed, having been before uſually kept in the Temple of Serapis, was by the Order of Conſtantine laid up in the Chriſtian Church, where it continued till Julian the Apoſtate cauſed it to be removed to the Temple of Serapis again. But Perſons, as well as Things, found a ſafe Retreat and Security in the Sacredneſs of Churches, when many times in barbarous Invaſions no other Place would protect them againſt the Inſolence and Fury of a conquering Enemy. Nay, the very Heathens themſelves often found their Account in flying to the Chriſtian Churches, as St. Auſtin glories over them, beginning his famous Book againſt the Pagans, De Civitate Dei, with this Obſervation. There he tells them what ungrateful Wretches they were to the Religion of Chriſt, to clamour and inveigh ſo bitterly againſt it, when yet, had it not been for the Protection of their Lives in Places dedicated to Chriſt, whither they [p] fled from the Sword of their Enemies, they had never been able at that Day to have moved their Tongues againſt it. For when Alarick the Goth took and ſacked Rome, he gave Orders, That all the Churches ſhould be inviolable, and whoever fled thither ſhould be ſpared; the Sanctity of the Place ſhould be their Protection; by which means the Heathens eſcaped as well as the Chriſtians. For the Soldiers inviolably obſerved their General's Commands, and when they had barbarouſly plundered and murdered in all other Places, they did not pretend to meddle with Churches, or offer the leaſt Violence to any who betook themſelves thither for Safety and Protection. Nay, they carried ſome into Churches themſelves, whom they intended to ſpare, and ſo ſecured them from the Violence of others that might have aſſaulted them. So great a Veneration had even the barbarous Arian Goths for Churches in the midſt of all their Anger and Fury againſt the Romans, as not only St. Auſtin, but Oroſius [q], and St. Jerom, [r] and Caſſiodore [s], and Sozomen [t], with other ancient Writers relate the Story. And it can hardly be doubted then, but that the Catholicks had the ſame Veneration for Churches; eſpecially when it is conſidered alſo, how both by general Cuſtom and Law under the Chriſtian Emperors, every Church was inveſted with the Privilege of an Aſylum, or Place of Sanctuary and Refuge in certain Caſes; of the Original of which, and the ancient Laws relating to it (becauſe ſome Abuſes have been added in After-ages by the Canon Law) I will give a particular Account in the following Chapter.

CHAP. XI.

Of the firſt Original of Aſylums, or Places of Sanctuary and Refuge, with the Laws relating to them, in Chriſtian Churches.

SECT. I. The Original of this Privilege to be deduced from the Time of Conſtantine.

ALL that is neceſſary to be known of this Privilege, ſo far as concerns the Uſe of it in the ancient Church, either relates to the Original of the Cuſtom, or the Place it ſelf where Sanctuary might be had, or the Perſons who were entitled to the Benefit, or laſtly, the Conditions they were to obſerve in order to obtain and enjoy it. And therefore under theſe four Heads we will briefly conſider it. As to the Original of it, there is no Diſpute made by any Author, but that it began to be a Privilege of Churches from the Time of Conſtantine, though there are no Laws about it older than Theodoſius, either in the Juſtinian or Theodoſian Code. But the Law of Theodoſius is ſufficient Evidence it ſelf, that it was the Cuſtom or Practice of the Church before; for his Law was not made to authorize the Thing it ſelf, but to regulate ſome Points relating to it, which ſuppoſes the Thing to be in Uſe before. But whether Conſtantine made any Law to eſtabliſh it, is very much doubted by learned Men. Baronius [a] affirms it upon the Credit of the Acts of Pope Sylveſter: But thoſe are known to be ſpurious and forged Writings, no older than the 9th or 10th Age, by the Acknowledgment of Papebrochius and Pagi [b] who have accurately examined and refuted Baronius's Vindication of them. However, Gothofred allows what ſeems to be the Truth of the Caſe, that Practice and Cuſtom eſtabliſhed this Privilege by degrees even from the time of Conſtantine; for before Theodoſius made any Law about it, the Thing was certainly in Uſe in the Church, as appears from the Account which Gregory Nazianzen gives of it in the Life of Baſil [c], where he tells us how St. Baſil protected a Widow, who fled to the Altar, againſt the Violence that was offered to her by the Governor of Pontus. The like is reported of St. Ambroſe in his Life [d] written by Paulinus; and St. Ambroſe himſelf ſpeaks of the Cuſtom in one of his Epiſtles, where in Anſwer to the Emperor Valentinian Junior, who had commanded him to deliver up one of the Churches of Milan to the Arians, he tells him, that was a Thing he could never obey him in; but if he commanded him to be carried to Priſon or to Death, that he would voluntarily ſubmit to, and neither uſe Force to defend himſelf, nor fly to the Altar to ſupplicate [e] for his Life. Theſe and ſome other ſuch-like Inſtances ſhew, that the Churches enjoyed this Privilege by ancient Cuſtom, before Theodoſius made any Law about it; which he did first, An. 392, not to authorize the Thing, but to explain and regulate some things relating to it; of which more by and by in their proper place.

SECT. II.

At first only the Altar and Inner Fabrick of the Church the Place of Refuge; but afterwards any Outer Buildings or Precincts of the Church invested with the same Privilege.

HERE we are next to examine what part of the Church was more peculiarly assigned to be the place of Sanctuary and Refuge. Gothofred thinks, that at first only the inner Buildings and Apartments of the Church, and especially the Altar, were the places of Refuge: Whence in Synesius [h] and other antient Writers the Altar is so frequently called ἄσυλον τράπεζα, the Table from which no one could be ravished or taken away. But whether this was originally so or not, it is certain that in the time of Theodosius Junior, these Limits for taking Sanctuary were enlarged. For in one of his Laws now extant in both the Codes [i] not only the Altar and the Body of the Church, but all between the Church and outward Walls, that is, Houses and Lodgings of the Bishop and Clergy, Gardens, Baths, Courts, Cloysters, are appointed to enjoy the same Privilege of being a Sanctuary to such as fled for Refuge, as well as the innermost part of the Temple. Particularly the Baptisteries, which, as I have shewed before, were places without the Church, were invested with this Privilege equally with the Altar: For Proterius Bishop of Alexandria, as Liberatus [k] and Evagrius [l] report, took Sanctuary in the Baptistery of the Church, to avoid the Fury of the Eutychian Faction headed by Timotheus Ælurus; and though that was a Place that even the Barbarians themselves had some Reverence for, yet as the Ægytian Bishops [m] complain in their Letter to the Emperor Leo, the Malice of the Eutychians pursued him thither, and there slew him, mangled his Body, dragged it about the Streets, and at last burnt it to Ashes, and scattered his Ashes in the Wind; for which unparalleled Barbarity committed against the Laws of Religion, the Emperor Leo deposed Timotheus Ælurus, and sent him into Banishment all his Life. There were a great many other Places, which had this privilege of Sanctuary also beside Churches, as the Statues of the Emperors, of which there is a particular Title [n] in the Theodosian Code; also the Emperor's Standard in the Camp, the Bishop's House, the Graves and Sepulchres of the Dead, together with the Cross, Schools, Monasteries and Hospitals in After-ages; of which, being all foreign to the business of Churches, I say nothing farther, but refer the curious Reader to the elaborate Treatise of Rittershusius [o] upon this Subject among the London Criticks, where each of these and some other privileged Places are particularly considered.

SECT. III.

What Persons allowed to take Sanctuary.

NEXT to the Places of Refuge, we are to consider the Persons to whom this Benefit extended, and in what Cases they were allowed to take Sanctuary in their Churches. For this Privilege antiently was not intended to patronize Wickedness, or shelter Men from the due Execution of Justice, or the Force of the Laws in ordinary cases; but chiefly to be a Refuge for the Innocent, the Injured, and Oppressed: Or in doubtful Causes, whether Criminal or Civil, only to give Men Protection so long, till they might have an equitable and fair Hearing of the Judges, and not to be proceeded against barbarously and rigorously under pretence and colour of Justice; or at most, only to give Bishops opportunity to intercede for Criminals and Delinquents in such cases, as it was both becoming and lawful for Bishops to turn Intercessors. These were the Sanctuaries which Basil [p] pleaded for, against the Governor of Pontus, and Synesius [q] against Andronicus Governor of Ptolemais, and Chrysostom against Eutropius, who had prevailed with Arcadius to abrogate by Law all Privileges [r] of this Nature belonging to the Church; but by God's Providence, he was the first Man that wanted this Privilege, being fallen under the Emperor's Displeasure, and forced to fly to the Altar for that Refuge which he had denied to others. This gave Chrysostom Occasion to make that eloquent and curious Oration upon his Case, whereby he artfully wrought the People into a tender Compassion for their bittereſt Enemy, that they might go and supplicate the Emperor for him, who now lay prostrate at the Altar, and by their Supplications they obtained his Life, for the Sentence of Death was mitigated and turned into Confiscation and Banishment only [s], though afterwards by Treachery he lost his Life. These were chiefly the Cases which the antient Privilege of Sanctuary respected, and commonly thirty Days Protection was granted to Men in such pitiable Circumstances, which term was thought sufficient [t] by the Law to end any Controversies that such Men might have before the civil Judges. Though the Saxon Law of King Alfred allowed but three Days time for this, as both Rittershusius and Gothofred have observed out of Lambard's Account of our antient [u] English and Saxon Laws. During this Time they were maintained by the Church if they were poor, out of the Revenues of the Poor; but if they were able to subsist themselves, it was sufficient for the Church to grant them Her Protection, and that only in the foremention'd Cases, and no other.

SECT. IV. What Sort of Persons and Crimes denied this Privilege. First publick Debtors.

THEREFORE, that no one might presume upon Indemnity by vertue of this Privilege, who had not a just and legal Title to it, several Crimes and Cases were specified by the Law, as excepted, for which the Church could grant no Protection. As first, Publick Debtors, who either embezzel'd or kept back by Fraud the Publick Revenues of the State. By a Law of Theodosius the Great, now extant in both the Codes, such Debtors, though they fled to the Church for Sanctuary, were to reap no Benefit by it, but immediately to be taken [w] thence by force: Or if they were concealed by the Clergy, the Bishop and Church in that case were liable to be called upon, and made to answer the Debt to the Publick. And Baronius [x] is of Opinion, that it was by vertue of this Law, that St. Austin was obliged to pay the Debt of one Fastius, who fled to the Church for Refuge, not being able to answer the pressing Demands of the publick Exactors; and therefore St. Austin made a publick Collection for him in his Church, because he would not deliver him up to be tortured by his Creditors, as he himself informs us [y] in one of his Epistles. This was the Reason, as I have observ'd in another place [z], why St. Austin refus'd to accept the Donation of a Man's Estate, which was originally ty'd to certain publick Service in the Corporation of the Navicularij, or those who were bound to transport the publick Corn from Africa to Rome. For it might happen, that the Men whom the Church was to employ in this Service, might by Mischance of Shipwreck, or other means, become obnoxious to the Publick: And then the Church must either deliver up her Servants to be tortur'd, or else pay the Debt; for there was no Refuge or Sanctuary allowed in this Case but upon that Condition. And therefore St. Austin [a] himself tells us, he refus'd such an Estate, because one way or other it might have involv'd the Church in great Trouble. In private Cases Gothofred seems to think, that the benefit of Sanctuary was allowed to poor Debtors, that they might have a little Respite from Torture, and either compound with their Creditors, or find some other Method to discharge their Debt, whilst they were under the Shelter and Protection of the Church.

SECT. V. Secondly, Jews that pretended to turn Christians only to avoid paying their Debts, or suffering Legal Punishment for their Crimes.

BUT then even this Benefit was not universal; for the Jewish Converts were particularly excepted from it. For by a Law of Arcadius and Honorius, extant in both the Codes, it was provided, That all Jews, who being either in Debt, or under Prosecution as Criminals, pretended to unite themselves to the Christian Religion, that thereby they might have the Privilege of taking Sanctuary in the Church, and avoid the Punishment of their [b] Crimes or Burden of their Debts should be rejected, and not receiv'd till they had discharged their Debts, or proved themselves innocent of the Crimes laid against them. Yet in other Cases, the Jews were not deny'd this Benefit, but had the common Privilege of Sanctuary with other Men, if Gothofred [c] judge right, who cites Julius Clarus and Petrus Sarpus [d] for the same Opinion.

SECT. VI. Thirdly, Hereticks and Apostates.

Rittershusius [e] thinks the case of Hereticks and Apostates was something worse in this respect, than that of Jews, because they who deserted the Church, were wholly excluded from having any benefit of Sanctuary in it. Covarruvias and Panormitan and Sarpus collect the same before him, but not from any express Law about this matter, but only from a general Law of Theodosius and Valentinian, which excludes Apostates and Hereticks from all Society, and many other common Privileges allow'd [f] to other Men. From whence they conclude by parity of Reason, that they could lay no Claim to the Benefit of Sanctuary, in any Case, because Deserters of Religion, which they had once owned in Baptism, were reckoned worse than Jews, who had never made Profession of it. And therefore by another Law of Theodosius, their Slaves were entitled to the Favour which the Masters themselves were deny'd: For if the Slave of an Apostate or Heretick [g] fled from his Master, and took Sanctuary in the Church, he was not only to be protected, but to have his Manumission, or Freedom, granted him likewise. There being an equal Design in the Law to encourage Orthodoxy, and discourage Heresy and Apostacy by respective Rewards and Punishments allotted to them.

SECT. VII. Fourthly, Slaves that fled from their Masters.

THIS was particularly determined in the Case of the Donatists for Re-baptizing their Slaves to initiate them into their own Religion. But in other cases the Slaves of Orthodox Maſters had not ſo large a Privilege. For by a Law of Arcadius and Honorius, An. 398, Slaves are put in the ſame condition with publick Debtors, and the Curiales, and other publick Officers, whom no Privilege of Sanctuary [a] was to excuſe from the proper Duties of their Station. And therefore though any ſuch one fled to the Church for Refuge, or was ordained a Clerk in the Church, there was no legal Protection allow'd him, but he might be reclaim'd and fetch'd thence immediately to his proper Servitude or Station again, by the Authority of the Civil Judges. I know indeed Gothofred takes this to be that Law of Arcadius, procured by the Inſtigation of Eutropius againſt the Immunities of the Church, which is ſo much reflected on by St. Chryſoſtom [b], and Proſper [c], and Socrates [d], and Sozomen [e], and ſome other antient Writers of the Church, and which Arcadius himſelf thought fit to revoke within a Year after, when Eutropius was fallen under his Diſpleaſure: Which whether it be that very Law or not, is a thing I ſhall not now nicely diſpute; for admitting it be ſo, I obſerve, that it was never wholly revoked and diſannulled, but only in ſome particular Inſtances. For that Part about the Illegal Ordination of the Curiales was left in a great meaſure in its full Force, as has been clearly demonſtrated in another Place [f]: And that Part which concerns Slaves taking Sanctuary in the Church, was with a very ſmall Variation renewed and reinforced by Theodoſius Junior, Son of Arcadius, and Compiler of the Theodoſian Code. For by one of his Laws [g], which is the laſt upon this Head in that Code, No Slave is allowed to have Sanctuary or Entertainment in any Church above one Day, when Notice was to be given to his Maſter from whom he fled for fear of Puniſhment, that he might reclaim him and carry him back to his own Poſſeſſion, only giving a Promiſe of Indemnity and Pardon for his Faults, if they were not very great and heinous. And Ritterſhuſius [h] cites a Law of Theodorick King of the Goths, and ſome others, to the ſame Purpoſe.

SECT. VIII.

Fifthly, Robbers, Murderers, Conſpirators, Raviſhers of Virgins, Adulterers, and other Criminals of the like nature.

BUT in caſe Men were guilty of Crimes of a more heinous nature, ſuch as Theft and Robbery, or Treaſon and Conſpiracy againſt the Government, or Murther and Bloodſhed, or raviſhing of Virgins, or Adultery, or any Crimes of the like nature: Then it mattered not whether the Criminals were Bond or Free, there was not an Hour's reſpite allowed to ſuch Men, but they were to be taken immediately by Force of the Civil Magiſtrate, if need required, even from the very Altar; or if they pretended to make any Reſiſtance with Arms, they might with Indemnity be ſlain there. This is undeniably evident from the Laws of Juſtinian, which ſpecify theſe and all ſuch Criminals as excepted univerſally from all benefit of Sanctuary; it being [i] wholly againſt the Intent and Deſign of that Privilege to give any Protection to Murderers, Adulterers, Raviſhers of Virgins, or any the like, but rather to the innocent and injured Parties, who were expoſed to their Violence and Abuſes: Temples were never deſigned by Law to give Sanctuary both to the Paſſive and the Aggreſſors: And therefore if any that were guilty of ſuch Crimes fled to the Altar for Refuge, they ſhould be drawn thence, and puniſhed acoording to Law with Puniſhments ſuitable to their Offences. This one Law of Juſtinian's ſhews us plainly the true Intent and Meaning of all other antient Laws relating to this Privilege of Sanctuary, that the Deſign of them, as I obſerved before, was chiefly to protect the Innocent, the Injur'd and Oppreſſed from Violence, and in ſome hard or dubious Caſes to grant a little Reſpite, 'till a fair Hearing might be procured. or ſome Interceſſion made to the Judges, by the Biſhop or Clergy, for ſuch Perſons as might ſeem to want it. And ſo Gothofred [k] upon the whole matter determines, That antiently Legal Refuge was no more but the Clergy's Deprecation or Interceſſion for Men in Diſtreſs. And ſuch as they might laudably and decently intercede for, they might for ſome time legally protect from Violence and Torture in the Church; but not obſtruct the due Execution of Juſtice upon other ſort of Criminals, for which it was ſcandalous to intercede.

Sanctuaries, in exempting Men from Legal Punishment, and enervating the Force of Civil Laws.

in giving Protection almost to all sorts of Criminals, and so encouraging the Practice of Villany, by exempting Men from legal Punishment, and enervating the Force of Civil Laws. For the Canon-law of Gratian, and the Popes Decretals, grant Protection to all Criminals, except Night-Robbers, and Robbers on the High-way, and such as commit enormous Crimes in the Church itself upon Presumption of its Protection. But all other Criminals have Liberty of taking Sanctuary, and it is reckoned a Violation of the Immunities of the Church to take them thence, unless a Promise or an Oath be first given, that neither Death [l] nor any other Corporal Punishment, but only a Pecuniary Mulct shall be inflicted on them, as Pope Innocent III. determined in one of his Letters to the King of Scots, which Gregory IX. inserted into the Body of his Decretals. The Council of Orleans [m] has some Canons to the same Purpose, which though contrary to all other ancient Laws, Gratian [n] thought fit to adopt into his own Collections. And so the modern Canon Law, under Pretence of Ecclesiastical Immunities, opened a wide Gap to Licentiousness, by taking off those Restraints which the ancient Laws had justly set upon this matter, when they granted Refuge to Innocent and Injured Men, but not to notorious Criminals. Which Difference is not only noted and complained of by all Protestant Writers, but also by some of the Romish Church. Polydore Virgil [o] makes no scruple to condemn them all over the Christian World, but more especially here in England, where Protection was given, not to the Innocent and Oppressed, but to all sorts of Criminals, such as were guilty of Treason and Rebellion not excepted. Whence he thinks it very apparent, that the Thing, as then practised, was not to be derived from Moses, who allowed Refuge to none but such as kill'd a Man unawares and against their Will, but from Romulus: Which was the Cause that so many Villains took heart and encouragement to practise Wickedness, there being Churches every where ready to receive and protect them; though nothing was more directly contrary to the Establishment of Moses, whose Law was guarded with this Sanction, Exod. xxi. 14. If a Man come presumptuously upon his Neighbour, to slay him with guile, thou shalt take him from my Altar, that he may die. This was the Difference in the Opinion of that Author, between the modern Sanctuaries, and those of Moses and the ancient Church.

SECT. X.

Conditions anciently to be observed by such as fled for Sanctuary. 1st, No one to fly with Arms into the Church.

THERE is one Thing more to be observed concerning the Privilege of Sanctuary in the Laws of the ancient Church, which is, That such Persons as were allowed this Benefit, were obliged to observe certain Conditions in taking Refuge, otherwise they forfeited all their Right and Title to it. As first, they were not to fly with Arms into the Church, nor into any Place or Building adjoyning to it, as the Gardens, Houses, Courts, Cloysters, to which the Privilege of Sanctuary was annexed. This is particularly specify'd and provided by a Law [p] of Theodosius Junior, which has this Sanction added to it, That if any one pretended to act otherwise, and being admonished by the Church refused to lay aside his Arms, that then it should be lawful for the Magistrate, by the Consent of the Bishop, to send his Officers with Arms into the Church upon such an Exigency, and take him thence by Force: and if the Refugee still persisted in his Opposition, and chanced to be slain in the Engagement, it was to be reckoned purely his own Fault, and no Violation of the Church's Privilege in that case, because he refused to observe this necessary Condition of Safety. The Emperors themselves laid aside their Arms and Crowns when they entered into the Church, and therefore Theodosius argues [q], that it was but reasonable all Refugees should do the same, and trust only to the Laws and Sacredness of the Place for their Protection.

SECT. XI.

2dly, No one to raise a seditious Clamour or Tumult, as he fled thither.

A Second Condition to be observed in this Case, was, That Men should betake themselves silently and modestly to the Church, and not by any rude and indecent Clamours endeavour to raise any popular Tumult. Learned Men collect this from a Law in the Greek Constitutions, and the Justinian Code [r], which forbids Refugees to make any clamorous Petitions to the Emperor on such Festivals as he came to the great Church, but if they had any Request to be preferred, they should do it privately by the Archbishop or Defensors of the Church: Otherwise they should

SECT. XII.
Thirdly, No one to eat or lodge in the Church, but to be entertained in ſome outward Building.

THIRDLY, Though Refugees might fly to the Church, and even to the very Altar; yet they were neither to eat nor lodge there; but the Clergy were obliged to prohibit them from doing either of theſe by an expreſs Law of Theodoſius Junior [s], who to cut off all Pretences for the contrary Practices, as if Men could not be ſafe but within the Walls of the Church, made not only the Church and the Altar Places of Refuge, but all other Buildings and Places belonging to the Church; giving this Reaſon for allowing ſuch an ample Space for the Benefit of Sanctuary, that Men might not have the Excuſe of Fear to make them eat or lodge in the Church, which he thought to be Things not ſo decent in their own Nature, nor agreeable to the ſtate of Religion, and the Reſpect and Reverence that was due to Churches, as Places appropriated to God, and ſet apart for his Service.

BOOK IX.

A Geographical Deſcription of the ANTIENT CHURCH, or an Account of its Diviſion into Provinces, Dioceſes, and Pariſhes: And of the firſt Original of theſe.

CHAP. I.

Of the State and Diviſion of the Roman Empire, and of the Church's Conforming to that in Modelling Her own External Polity and Government.

SECT. I. The State of the Roman Empire in the Days of the Apoſtles.

HAVING thus far ſpoken of Churches, as they ſignify the Material Buildings, or Places of Convention ſet a-part for Chriſtian Worſhip, I come now to conſider them in another Notion, as they are put to ſignify any Number of Chriſtian People within a certain Diſtrict, as in a Pariſh, Dioceſe, Province, Patriarchate: Which are Names that we frequently meet with in ancient Writers, though they are not all equally of the ſame Antiquity: And therefore I ſhall here enquire both into the Nature and Original of them. Something has already been ſaid upon this Head, in ſpeaking of the ſeveral Officers of the Church that were placed in thoſe Diſtricts, as Patriarchs, Metropolitans, Biſhops, and Presbyters, ſo far as was neceſſary to explain the Powers and Duties of thoſe Miniſters in the Church: Yet there are many Things to be noted farther, which could not then come under Conſideration; for which reaſon I now make them the Subject of a peculiar Enquiry. And here to underſtand the State and Diviſion of the Church aright, it will be proper to take a ſhort View of the State and Diviſion of the Roman Empire: For it is generally thought by learned Men, that the Church held ſome Conformity to that in her External Polity and Government, both at her firſt Settlement, and in the Changes and Variations that were made in After-ages. In the Time of the Apoſtles every City among the Greeks and Romans was under the immediate Government of certain Magiſtrates within its own Body, commonly known by the Name of Βουλὴ or Senatus, its Common-council or Senate, otherwiſe called Ordo and Curia, the States and Court of the City: Among which there was uſually One Chief or Principal above the reſt, whom ſome call the Dictator, and others, the Defenſor Civitatis; whoſe Power extended not only over the City, but all the adjacent Territory, commonly called the περάσεια, the Suburbs, or leſſer Towns, belonging to its Juriſdiction. This was a City in the civil Account, a Place where the civil Magiſtrate and a ſort of leſſer Senate was fixed to order the Affairs of that Community, and govern within ſuch a Precinct.

SECT. II. The State of the Church conformable to it.

Now much after the ſame manner, the Apoſtles in firſt Planting and Eſtabliſhing the Church, where-ever they found a Civil Magiſtracy ſettled in any Place, there they endeaed to ſettle an Eccleſiaſtical one, conſiſting of a Senate or Presbytery, a Common-council of Presbyters, and one chief Preſident above the reſt, commonly call'd the πρεσβύτερος, or the Apoſtle, or Biſhop, or Angel of the Church; whoſe Juriſdiction was not confined to a ſingle Congregation, but extended to the whole Region or Diſtrict belonging to the City, which was the περάσεια, or παροικία, or as we now call it, the Dioceſe of the Church. According to this Model moſt probably St. Paul directed Titus to ordain Elders in Crete κατὰ πόλιν, in every City, that is, to ſettle an Eccleſiaſtical Senate and Government in every Place where there was before a Civil one: Which from the ſubſequent Hiſtory of the Church, we learn, was a Biſhop and his Presbytery, who were conjunctly call'd the Elders and Senate of the Church. The Cities of the Empire had alſo their Magiſtrates in the Territory or Country round them; but theſe were ſubordinate to the Magiſtrates of the City, and generally chosen by them, as learned Men [t] have observed out of Frontinus de Limitibus Agrariis, and other Roman Antiquaries. In like manner, every City-Church had Spiritual Officers in all Towns and Villages belonging to the City-Region; and these depending on the Mother-Church both for the Exercise of their Power and their Institution; they being both subordinate and accountable to the City-Church, as the subordinate Magistrates were in the Civil Disposition.

SECT. III. The Division of the Roman Empire into Provinces and Dioceses.

ANOTHER Division of the Roman Empire was into Provinces and Dioceses. A Province was the Cities of a whole Region subjected to the Authority of one chief Magistrate, who resided in the Metropolis or chief City of the Province. This was commonly a Prætor, or a Proconsul, or some Magistrate of the like Eminence and Dignity. A Diocese was still a larger District, containing several Provinces within the compass of it: in the capital City of which District a more general Magistrate had his Residence, whose Power extended over the whole Diocese, to receive Appeals, and determine all Causes that were referred to him for a new Hearing from any City within the District. And this Magistrate was sometimes called an Eparchus, or Vicarius of the Roman Empire, and particularly a Præfectus Augustalis at Alexandria. When first this Division was made, it is not so certainly agreed among learned Men; but it is generally owned, that the Division of Provinces is more antient than that of Dioceses. For the Division into Dioceses began only about the Time of Constantine. But the Cantonizing of the Empire into Provinces was long before; by some referred to Vespasian, by others reckoned still more antient, and coæval to the first Establishment of the Christian Church.

SECT. IV. The same Model followed by the Church.

HOWEVER this was, it is very plain, that the Church took her Model, in setting up Metropolitical and Patriarchal Power, from this Plan of the State. For as in every Metropolis, or chief City of each Province, there was a superior Magistrate above the Magistrates of every single City: So likewise in the same Metropolis there was a Bishop, whose Power extended over the whole Province, whence he was called the Metropolitan or Primate, as being the principal Bishop of the Province. And in all Places therefore the See of the Bishop was fixed to the civil Metropolis, except in Africk, where the Primate was commonly the Senior Bishop of the Province, as has been shewed in another place. In like manner, as the State had a Vicarius in every capital City of each civil Diocese; so the Church in process of time came to have her Exarchs, or Patriarchs in many, if not in all the capital Cities of the Empire.

SECT. V. This Evidenced from the Civil Notitia of the Empire.

THIS will appear plainly from the civil Notitia of the Empire, when compared with the Ecclesiastical; which, because it not only gives light in this Matter, but is of singular Use in many other respects to all that study Ecclesiastical History, I will here insert it out of the Book called Notitia Imperii, said to be written about the time of Arcadius and Honorius, where the whole Empire is divided into Thirteen Dioceses under four Præfecti-Prætorio; and about an hundred and twenty Provinces contained in them, in the Manner and Form following.

The Præfectus-Prætorio Orientis, and under him five Dioceses, viz. The Oriental, Egyptian, Asiatick, Pontick, and Thracian Dioceses.

I. In the Oriental Diocese are contained Fifteen Provinces. 1 Palæstina. 2 Phœnice. 3 Syria. 4 Cilicia. 5 Cyprus. 6 Arabia. 7 Isauria. 8 Palæstina Salutaris. 9 Palæstina Secunda. 10 Phœnice Libani. 11 Euphratensis. 12 Syria Salutaris. 13 Osrhoena. 14 Mesopotamia. 15 Cilicia Secunda.

II. In the Diocese of Egypt Six Provinces. 1 Libya Superior. 2 Libya Inferior. 3 Thebais. 4 Ægyptus. 5 Arcadia. 6 Augustanica.

III. In the Asiatick Diocese Ten Provinces. 1 Pamphylia. 2 Hellespontus. 3 Lydia. 4 Pisidia. 5 Lycaonia. 6. Phrygia Pacatiana. 7 Phrygia Salutaris. 8 Lycia. 9 Caria. 10 Insulæ Cyclades.

IV. In the Pontick Diocese Eleven Provinces. 1 Galatia. 2 Bithynia. 3 Honorias. 4 Cappadocia Prima. 5. Paphlagonia. 6 Pontus Polemoniacus. 7 Hellenopontus. 8 Armenia Prima. 9 Armenia Secunda. 10 Galatia Salutaris. 11 Cappadocia Secunda.

V. In the Diocese of Thrace Six Provinces. 1 Europa. 2 Thracia. 3 Hæmimontis. 4 Rhodope. 5 Mæsia Secunda. 6 Scythia.

The Præfectus-Prætorio of Illyricum, and under him Two Dioceses, Macedonia and Dacia.

VI. In the Diocese of Macedonia Six Provinces. 1 Achaia. 2 Macedonia. 3 Creta. 4 Thessalia. 5 Epirus Vetus. 6 Epirus Nova, and pars Macedoniæ Salutaris.

VII. In the Diocese of Dacia Five Provinces. 1 Dacia Mediterranea. 2 Dacia Ripensis. 3 Mæsia Prima. 4 Dardania. 5 Pars Macedoniæ Salutaris, and Prævalitana.

[t] See Dr. Maurice Dioces. Episc. p. 390.

The Præfectus-Prætorio of Italy, and under him Three Dioceſes, viz. Italy or the Italick Dioceſe, Illyricum, and Africa.

VIII. In the Italick Dioceſe are contained Seventeen Provinces. 1 Venetiæ. 2 Æmylia. 3 Liguria. 4 Flaminia and Picenum Annonarium. 5 Tuſcia and Umbria. 6 Picenum Suburbicarium. 7 Campania. 8 Sicilia. 9 Apulia and Calabria. 10 Lucania and Brutii. 11 Alpes Cottiæ. 12 Rhætia Prima. 13 Rhætia Secunda. 14 Samnium. 15 Valeria. 16 Sardinia. 17 Corſica.

IX. In the Dioceſe of Illyricum Six Provinces. 1 Pannonia Secunda. 2 Savia. 3 Dalmatia. 4 Pannonia Prima. 5 Noricum Mediterraneum. 6 Noricum Ripenſa.

X. In the Dioceſe of Africa Six Provinces. 1 Byzacium. 2 Numidia. 3 Mauritania Sitifenſis. 4 Mauritania Cæſarienſis. 5 Tripolis. 6 Africa Proconſularis.

The Præfectus Prætorio Galliarium, and under him Three Dioceſes, viz. Hiſpania, Gallia, Britannia.

XI. In the Spaniſh Dioceſe Seven Provinces 1 Bœtica. 2 Luſitania. 3 Gallæcia. 4 Tarraconenſis. 5 Carthaginenſis. 6 Tingitania. 7 Baleares.

XII. In the Gallican Dioceſe Seventeen Provinces. 1 Viennenſis. 2 Lugdunenſis Prima. 3 Germania Prima. 4 Germania Secunda. 5 Belgica Prima. 6 Belgica Secunda. 7 Alpes Maritimæ. 8 Alpes Penninæ & Graiæ. 9. Maxima Sequanorum. 10 Aquitania Prima. 11 Aquitania Secunda. 12 Novem populi. 13 Narbonenſis Prima. 14 Narbonenſis Secunda. 15 Lugdunenſis Secunda. 16 Lugdunenſis Tertia. 17 Lugdunenſis Senonia.

XIII. In the Britannick Dioceſe Five Provinces. 1 Maxima Cæſarienſis. 2 Valentia. 3 Britannia Prima. 4 Britannia Secunda. 5 Flavia Cæſarienſis. Thus far the Notitia of the Empire.

SECT. VI. Compared with the moſt antient Accounts of the Diviſion of Provinces in the Church.

Now though we have no Notitia of the Church ſo antient as this: (for that of Leo Sapiens, which is exhibited hereafter, is of later Date:) Yet by comparing the broken Fragments that remain in the Acts and Subſcriptions of the ancient Councils, with this Notitia of the Empire, and conferring both with the later Notitia's of the Church, it plainly appears that the Church was divided into Dioceſes and Provinces much after the ſame manner as the Empire, having an Exarch or Patriarch in almoſt every Dioceſe, and a Metropolitan or Primate in every Province. The moſt probable Account of which, conformed to the foreſaid Civil Notitia, is preſented in the following Table, according as the Diviſion of the Church ſeems to have ſtood in the latter End of the IVth Century.

I. In the Oriental Dioceſe. Patriarch of Antioch.

Provinces.	Metropoles.
1 Palæſtina Prima.	1 Cæſarea.
2 Phœnice.	2 Tyrus.
3 Syria.	3 Antiochia.
4 Cilicia Prima.	4 Tarſus.

II. In the Dioceſe of Egypt. Patriarch of Alexandria.

Provinces.	Metropoles.
1 Libya Superior.	1 Ptolemais.
2 Libya Inferior.	2 Dranieon.
3 Thebais.	3 Antinoe, or Lycopolis.
4 Ægyptus.	4 Alexandria.
5 Arcadia.	5 Oxirinchus.
6 Auguſtanica.	6 Peluſium.

III. In the Dioceſe of Aſia. Exarch of Epheſus.

Provinces.	Metropoles.
1 Pamphylia.	1 Perga, or Sida.
2 Helleſpont.	2 Cyzicus.
3 Lydia.	3 Sardes.
4 Piſidia.	4 Antiochia.
5 Lycaonia.	5 Iconium.
6 Phrygia Pacatiana.	6 Laodicea.
7 Phrygia Salutaris.	7 Synada.
8 Lycia.	8 Myra.
9 Caria.	9 Aphrodiſias, or Stauropolis.
10 Inſulæ Cyclades.	10 Rhodus.
11 Aſia Proconſularis.	11 Epheſus.

IV. Dioceſe of Pontus. Exarch of Cæſarea.

Provinces.	Metropoles.
1 Galatia.	1 Ancyra.
2 Bithynia.	2 Nicomedia.
3 Cappadocia Prima.	3 Cæſarea.
4 Cappadocia Secunda.	4 Tyana.
5 Honorias.	5 Claudiopolis.
6 Paphlagonia.	6 Gangra.
7 Pontus Polemoniacus.	7 Neocæſarea.
8 Helenopontus.	8 Amaſea.
9 Armenia Prima.	9 Sebaſtia.

10 Armenia

Provinces.	Metropoles.
10 Armenia Secunda.	10 Melitine.
11 Galatia Salutaris.	11 Peſſinus al. Juſtinianopolis.
V. Dioceſe of Thrace.	Exarch of Heraclea firſt, afterward Conſtantinople.
Provinces.	Metropoles.
1 Europa.	1 Heraclea.
2 Thracia.	2 Philippopolis.
3 Hæmi montis.	3 Adrianople.
4 Rhodope.	4 Trajanople.
5 Mæſia Secunda.	5 Marcianople:
6 Scythia.	6 Tomi. But the Biſhop of Tomi is rather to be reckoned an Autocephalus than a Metropolitan, becauſe he had no Suffragan Biſhops under him.
VI. In the Dioceſe of Macedonia.	The Exarch of Theſſalonica.
Provinces.	Metropoles.
1 Achaia.	1 Corinthus.
2 Macedonia.	2 Theſſalonica.
3 Creta.	3 Gortyna.
4 Theſſalia.	4 Lariſſa.
5 Epirus Vetus.	5 Nicopolis.
6 Epirus Nova.	6 Dyrrachium.
VII. Dioceſe of Dacia.	Exarch perhaps firſt at Sardica, afterwards at Acrida or Juſtiniana Prima, erected by Juſtinian.
Provinces.	Metropoles.
1 Dacia Mediterranea.	1 Sardica.
2 Dacia Ripenſis.	2 The ſame.
3 Mæſia Prima.	3 The ſame.
4 Dardania.	4 Scupi.
5 Prævalitana.	5 Acrida.

VIII. The Dioceſe of Italy is by ſome reckoned but one Dioceſe, by others divided into two, the Dioceſe of Italy, and Prefecture of Rome.

In the Italick Dioceſe.	Exarch of Milan.
Provinces.	Metropoles.
1 Flaminia and Picenum Annon.	1 Ravenna.
2 Venetia and Hiſtria.	2 Aquileia.

4 Britannia Secunda, or all beyond Severn.	4 Caerleon.
5 Valentia, beyond the Picts Wall.	5 York.

This in the main was the State and Diviſion of the Church into Provinces, and Exarchates, or Metropolitical and Patriarchal Dioceſes, in the latter End of the IVth Century: From which it appears, that a very near Correſpondence was obſerved between the Church and State in this Matter both in the Weſtern and Eaſtern Empire.

SECT VII. This evidenced farther from the Rules and Canons of the Church.

AND this may be evidenced farther both from the Rules and Canons, and the known Practice of the Church in this caſe. For when any Provinces were divided in the State, there commonly followed a Diviſion in the Church alſo: And when any City was advanced to a greater Dignity in the Civil Account, it uſually obtained a like Promotion in the Eccleſiaſtical: So when Controverſies aroſe about Primacy between two Churches in the ſame Province or Diſtrict, the way to end the Diſpute was to enquire, which of them was the Metropolis in the State, and order the ſame to be the Metropolis in the Church. Of all which there are manifeſt Proofs in antient Hiſtory. It was by this Rule that the Biſhop of Conſtantinople was advanced to Patriarchal Power in the Church, who before was not ſo much as a Metropolitan, but ſubject to the Primate of Heraclea in Thrace. And this very Reaſon is given by two General Councils, which confirmed him in the Poſſeſſion of this new acquired Power. The firſt of Conſtantinople decreed [a], that he ſhould have the next place of Honour after the Biſhop of Rome, becauſe Conſtantinople was New Rome. Which was thus again confirmed and ratified in the Council of Chalcedon, which ſays, Foraſmuch as we think it proper to follow the Decrees of the holy Fathers, and allow the Canon made by thoſe hundred and fifty Biſhops aſſembled under the Emperor Theodoſius in the Royal City Conſtantinople, we ourſelves order [b] and decree the ſame concerning the Privileges of the moſt holy Church of the ſaid City, which is New Rome. For our Forefathers gave Old Rome her Privileges in regard that ſhe was the Royal City: And thoſe hundred and fifty Biſhops were moved with the ſame Conſideration to grant equal Privileges to the Epiſcopal Throne of New Rome; judging it but reaſonable, that the City which was honoured with the Royal Seat of the Empire and Senate, and enjoyed the ſame Privileges with Old Rome, in all Matters of a Civil Nature, ſhould alſo be advanced to the ſame Dignity in Eccleſiaſtical Affairs, and be accounted the ſecond in Order after her. Accordingly they determined now, that the three whole Dioceſes of Aſia, Pontus and Thrace ſhould be ſettled under the Juriſdiction of this new Patriarch of Conſtantinople. Which plainly ſhews, they had a particular regard to the Model of the State in ſettling the Bounds and Limits of Juriſdiction in the Church. The Council of Antioch aſſigns this for the Reaſon of paying Deference to Metropolitan Biſhops in general, becauſe they were placed in the Metropolis of the Province [c] whither the Men that had Buſineſs or Controverſies, had recourſe. And therefore if any Diſpute happened, as ſometimes there did, between two Biſhops in the ſame Province about Metropolitical Power, each laying a Claim to it: the way to end this Controverſy was to enquire, which of their Sees was the true Metropolis in the State? and adjudge the ſame to have the true legal Right and Privilege in the Church. By this Rule the Council of Turin [d] determined the Controverſy about Preſidency betwixt the two Churches of Arles and Vienna, decreeing, That that Biſhop ſhould be the Primate, who could prove his City to be the Metropolis of the Province. It ſometimes happened, that an ambitious Spirit would petition the Emperor to grant him the Honour and Power of a Metropolitan in the Church, when yet the Province to which he belonged had but one Metropolis in the State: Which was ſo contrary to the foreſaid Rule of the Church, that the great Council of Chalcedon [e] made it Depoſition for any Biſhop to attempt it. But on the other hand, if the Emperor thought fit to divide a Province into two, and erect a new Metropolis in the ſecond Part; then the Church many times allowed the Biſhop of the new Metropolis to become a Metropolitan in the Church alſo. By this means Tyana in Cappadocia came to be a Metropolitical See, as well as Cæſarea, becauſe the Province was divided into two by Imperial Edict. And the like happened upon the Diviſion of many other Provinces, Galatia, Pamphylia, &c. As may be ſeen in the Notitia of the Church, which follows in the End of this Book. The Canons of the Church were made to favour this Practice in the Erection of new Biſhopricks alſo. For the Council of Chalcedon [f] has another Canon which ſays, That if the Imperial Power made any Innovation in the Precincts or Pariſhes belonging to any City, then the State of the Church-precincts might be alter'd in conformity to the Alterations that were made in the Political and Civil State. Which Canon is repeated and confirmed in the Council [g] of Trullo. So that if any Place was advanced to the Privilege of a City, and governed by a civil Magiſtracy of its own, which was not ſo before, it might then alſo be freed from the Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdiction of its former Biſhop, and be governed by one of its own. Thus when Maiuma in Paleſtine, a Dependant on Gaza, was advanced by Conſtantine to the Privilege of a City, and governed by a Magiſtracy of its own; that was preſently followed with the Erection of a new Biſhop's See, which continued ever after, notwithſtanding that Julian in ſpite to Chriſtianity disfranchized the City, and annexed it to Gaza again. Sozomen is our Author for this, and he adds farther [h], that in his Time the Biſhop of Gaza, upon a Vacancy of Maiuma, laying Claim to it as only an Appendage of his own City; and pleading, that one City ought not to have two Biſhops; the Cauſe came to an hearing before a Provincial Synod, which determined in favour of the Maiumitans, and ordained them another Biſhop. For they thought it not proper, that they who for their Piety had obtained the Privilege of being made a City, and were only deprived of their Right by the Envy of a Pagan Prince, ſhould loſe their other Rights, which concerned the Prieſthood and the Church. So it always continued an Epiſcopal See, and has its Place among the reſt in the Notitia of the Church. The like may be obſerved of Emmaus, which at firſt was but a Village belonging to the Dioceſe and City of Jeruſalem. But being afterward rebuilt by the Romans, and called Nicopolis, from their great Victories over the Jews, it became a City and a Biſhop's See, under which Character the Reader may alſo find it in the Notitia of the Church. Theſe are evident Proofs, that in ſettling the Limits of Dioceſes and other Diſtricts, and modelling the external Polity of the Church, a great regard was had to the Rules of the State, and many Things ordered in conformity to the Meaſure obſerved in the Roman Empire.

SECT. VIII. Yet the Church not tyed preciſely to obſerve this Model, but uſed her Liberty in varying from it.

YET theſe being Matters only of Conveniency and outward Order, the Church did not tye herſelf abſolutely to follow that Model, but only ſo far as ſhe judged it expedient and conducive to the Ends of her own Spiritual Government and Diſcipline. And therefore ſhe did not imitate the State-model in all things: She never had one Univerſal Biſhop in Imitation of an Univerſal Emperor; nor an Eaſtern and a Weſtern Pontificate, in Imitation of an Eaſtern and Weſtern Empire; nor four grand Spiritual Adminiſtrators, anſwering to the four great Miniſters of State, the Præfecti-Prætorio in the civil Government; not to mention any other Forms or Miniſters of State-affairs, Multitudes of which may be ſeen in the Notitia of the Empire. Nay in thoſe things wherein ſhe followed the civil Form, her Liberty ſeems to have been preſerved both by the Laws of Church and State; and nothing of this nature was forced upon her, but as ſhe thought fit to order it in her own Wiſdom and Diſcretion. This may be collected from one of Juſtinian's Novels, where having divided the two Armenias into four Provinces, he adds [i] That as to what concerned the State of the Church, his Intent was to leave every thing in its ancient Form, and make no Alterations in the Rights of the old Metropolitans, or their Power of ordaining their Suffragans, &c. And this appears farther from the Anſwer of Pope Innocent Biſhop of Rome, or one under his Name, given to Alexander of Antioch, who had put the Queſtion [k] Whether upon the Diviſion of a Province, and the Erection of two civil Metropolis in it by a Royal Decree, there ought alſo to be two Metropolitan Biſhops in the Church: To this he anſwers, That there was no Reaſon the Church ſhould undergo Alterations upon every neceſſary Change that was made in the civil State, or have her Honours and Dignitaries multiply'd or divided according to what the Emperor thought fit to do in his own Affairs. This ſhews, that the Church was at Liberty in this matter, to follow the Model and Diviſions of the civil State or not, as ſhe judged moſt expedient for her ſelf: And when any Alterations of this nature were made, they were generally done by the Direction or Conſent of a Provincial or General Council, or the tacit Conſent and Approbation of the Church.

SECT. IX. An Account of the Eccleſiæ Suburbicariæ in the Diſtrict of the Roman Church.

WHILST we are upon this Head relating to the antient Diviſion of the Church, it comes properly to be enquired, What the Primitive Writers mean by the Term Eccleſiæ Suburbicariæ, Suburbicary Churches, in the Diſtrict of the Roman Church. Ruffinus in his Tranſlation and Abſtract of the Nicene Canons, gives us the ſixth of them in theſe Words [l]: "The ancient "Cuſtom of Alexandria and Rome ſhall ſtill be "obſerved, that the one ſhall have the Care or "Government of the Egyptian, and the other "of the Suburbicary Churches." A great many Queſtions have been rais'd by Learned Men in the laſt Age concerning this, which I ſhall not clog this Diſcourſe with, but only reſolve two Queſtions, which are moſt material for the Reader to know. 1. What was the Extent of this Diſtrict? 2. Whether it was the Limits of his Metropolitical or Patriarchal Power? To know what was the Extent of this Diſtrict, we cannot take a ſurer way, than to conſider what is meant by the Suburbicary Regions in other Places. For this is a Term that often occurs in the Theodoſian Code [m], where Gothofred [n] and our learned Dr. Cave [o] and many others take it to ſignify the Diſtrict of the Præfectus Urbis, or Juriſdiction of the Provoſt of Rome, which was a Circuit of about an hundred Miles next to Rome; as is evident from the ancient Law, which ſays, his Government extended not only to Rome, but to an hundred Miles [p] round it, where the Limits of his Juriſdiction ceaſed. Which is noted alſo by Caſſidore [q], and Dio [r], who inſtead of Centeſimus Lapis, uſes the phraſe of Seven hundred and fifty Stadia, or Furlongs, which is not much ſhort of the legal Computation. Others reckon the Regiones Suburbicariæ to be the ſame ten Provinces of the Italick Dioceſe which were under the Vicarius Urbicus, who with the other Vicarius of Italy divided the Italick Dioceſe between them: So that the Roman Vicarius had ſeven Provinces in Italy (mentioned before in the Notitia) and the three Iſlands of Sicily, Sardinia, and Corſica, under his Juriſdiction; which they reckon the Suburbicary Provinces of Rome. So our learned Mr. Brerewood [s], and Sirmond [t] and Du Pin, and ſome others, who extend the Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdiction of the Biſhop of Rome to all thoſe ten Provinces under the Inſpection of the Vicarius Urbis. Either of theſe Opinions may be admitted, as having at leaſt their Arguments of Probability to defend them: Whereas they who confine the Suburbicary Churches to a ſingle Dioceſe, or extend them ſo far as to include all the Provinces of the Weſtern Empire, run into contrary Extreams, for which there is no Ground either in the Nicene Canon itſelf, or any other Part of the Hiſtory of the Church in that Age. For it is evident the Canon ſpeaks of the Power of the three great Biſhops, Rome, Alexandria, and Antioch, as extending farther than a ſingle Dioceſe: But that the Authority of the Biſhop of Rome in thoſe Days extended over the whole Weſtern Empire, is not once ſo much as hinted in the Nicene Canon, but is contrary to all the common Senſes of Suburbicary Churches, and refuted by the known Diſtinction between Italick and Roman Churches or Provinces, and the conſtant Oppoſition that was made by the African Churches, and thoſe of Britain, Milan and others, to the leaſt Pretence of Patriarchal Power over them. From which it is rational to conclude, that the Notion of Suburbicary Churches ought not to be extended beyond the Limits either of the Præfectus Urbis, which was an hundred Miles about Rome; and, as Dr. Cave and ſome others think, was alſo the Limits of the Pope's Metropolitical Power: Or at moſt not beyond the Limits of thoſe ten Provinces, which were immediately ſubjected to the civil Diſpoſition and Juriſdiction of the Vicarius Urbis, viz. 1 Campania. 2 Tuſcia and Umbria. 3 Picenum Suburbicarium. 4 Valeria. 5 Samnium. 6 Apulia and Calabria. 7 Lucania and Brutii. 8 Si- cilia. 9 Sardinia. 10 Corſica. Which Dr. Cave [u] ſuppoſes to have been the exact and proper Limits of the Pope's Patriarchal Power, as he thinks the other were the Bounds of his Metropolitical Juriſdiction.

SECT. X. This moſt probably the true ancient Limits of the Biſhop of Rome's both Metropolitical and Patriarchal Juriſdiction.

BUT it matters not much, I think, whether we call this Diſtrict of theſe ten Provinces the Biſhop of Rome's Metropolitical or Patriarchal Dioceſes or Provinces. For after all the Diſputes that have been raiſed about this Matter, theſe ſeem to have been in a great meaſure the true ancient Limits both of his Metropolitical and Patriarchal Power. Many, I know, will take this for a Paradox: But I have ſhewed it to be true [*] in the caſe of the Biſhop of Alexandria, the Bounds of whoſe Juriſdiction were the ſame, viz. the Six Provinces of the Egyptian Dioceſe, both when he was a Metropolitan and Patriarch: And why then might not the Caſe be the ſame with the Biſhop of Rome, whoſe Privileges are preſcribed as a Model for the Biſhop of Alexandria by the Council of Nice, whoſe Words [x] are theſe: Let ancient Cuſtoms prevail; In Egypt, Libya, and Pentapolis, let the Biſhop of Alexandria have Authority over all, becauſe the ſame is cuſtomary with the Biſhop of Rome: In like manner at Antioch, and in other Provinces, let the Privileges be ſecured to the Churches. Some think the Biſhop of Rome was only a Metropolitan, when this Canon was made, as Launoy, Biſhop Beveridge, Biſhop Stillingfleet, Dr. Cave; according to whoſe Sentiments it muſt follow, that the Suburbicary Churches were the Diſtrict or Subject of his Metropolitical Power. Mr. Brerewood [y] and Spalatenſis after St. Jerom think he was properly a Patriarch; And I have ſhewed elſewhere [†] that there are ſome Reaſons to countenance their Opinion: But then the Limits of his Patriarchal Power were ſtill the ſame (according as was at Alexandria) and the ten Provinces of the Roman Dioceſe were the legal Bounds of his Juriſdiction. And ſo Du Pin [z] amongſt the Romaniſts makes no ſcruple ingenuouſly to confeſs; exempting Germany, Spain, France, Britain, Africa, Illyricum, and Seven of the Italick Provinces from any Subjection to the Juriſdiction of the Roman Patriarch in thoſe firſt and Primitive Ages.

SECT. XI. Some evident Proofs of this.

THIS is contrary to the general Stream and Current of the Romiſh Writers, one of which is ſo angry with Du Pin upon this Account, that he treats him with all the Scorn and Bitterneſs imaginable for making ſuch a bold Conceſſion, and endeavours to anſwer [a] both what he and Biſhop Stillingfleet had advanced againſt the Pope's Pretence to Patriarchal Power over the whole Weſtern Empire: But with what Succeſs, the Reader may eaſily judge from theſe few Inſtances, which are evident Proofs of the Senſe that has been given of the Extent and Limits of the Pope's Patriarchal Juriſdiction. 1. Ruffinus, who was an Italian, and Presbyter of Aquilea, and therefore could not be ignorant of the Bounds of the Pope's Patriarchal Power, in interpreting the ſixth Canon of the Council of Nice, confines his Juriſdiction to the [b] Suburbicary Provinces; and other ancient Verſions publiſhed by Sirmondus and Juſtellus, agree with his Interpretation. 2. The other Seven Provinces of Italy, which properly conſtituted the Italick Dioceſe as diſtinct from the Roman Provinces, with Milan their Metropolis at the Head of them, were not anciently ſubject to the Juriſdiction of the Biſhop of Rome. For Milan is frequently ſtyled the Metropolis of Italy by Athanaſius [c] and Theodoret [d], taking Italy in its ſtrict and peculiar Notion, as diſtinct from the Provinces ſubject to Rome. The Biſhop of Milan was never ordained by the Biſhop of Rome (which yet he muſt have been, had he been ſubject to his Patriarchal Power) but by the Biſhop of Aquileia, as the Biſhop of Aquileia and other Places were ordained by Milan, which is evident from the Epiſtle of Pope Pelagius [e], and De Marca [f] does not pretend to deny it. The like has been obſerved by learned Men concerning Ravenna, and other Places in Italy, which frequently conteſted the Point of Superiority and Subjection with the Biſhops of Rome, of which Dr. Cave [g] gives the Reader a particular Hiſtorical Account for many Ages ſucceſſively, too long to be here inſerted. 3. For the African Provinces (which are pretended to be part of the Pope's Patriarchal Dominions) they had always an Exarch or Patriarch of their own, the Primate of Carthage, who was Abſolute and Independent [h] of any other, as Juſtinian declares in one of his Novels. And it is plain, the African Councils always thought ſo: For as they never ſent to Rome for Ordinations, ſo they prohibited all Appeals thither upon any Account whatſoever. Which is evident beyond all Contradiction from the Council of Milevis [i], which orders every African Clerk, that appeals from the Sentence of his own Biſhop, or a Synod of Select Judges, to appeal to none but African Synods, or the Primates of the Provinces. And if any preſumed to appeal beyond Seas, meaning to Rome, he ſhould be excluded from all Communion in the African Churches. This Decree was farther confirmed by ſeveral Acts of their General Synods, made upon the famous Caſe and Appeal of Apiarius an African Presbyter, whom Zoſimus Biſhop of Rome pretended to reſtore to Communion, after he had been depoſed by an African Council. Zoſimus alledged for himſelf a pretended Decree of the Council of Nice, giving him authority to receive Appeals: But this the African Fathers proved to be a Forgery, by ſending for Authentick Copies of the Nicene Decrees from Conſtantinople, Antioch, and Alexandria, where no ſuch thing appeared. Upon this the African Fathers write a very ſharp Letter to Pope Celeſtine; (for Zoſimus and Boniface his Succeſſor were both dead whilſt this Controverſy was depending:) Where among other things they deſire him, that he would not for the future give Ear to any that came from Africk, nor admit thoſe to Communion, whom they had excommunicated, which he might eaſily perceive to be prohibited by the Council of Nice, according to whoſe Decrees both the inferior Clergy, and the Biſhops themſelves were committed to the Judgment of their own Metropolitans: For the Nicene Fathers very juſtly and wiſely conceive, that all Controverſies ought to be ended in the Places where they aroſe. And it was very unreaſonable in itſelf to think, that God ſhould enable a ſingle Perſon to examine the Juſtice of a Cauſe, and deny his Grace to a vaſt Number of Perſons aſſembled in Council. Therefore upon the whole Matter they deſire him henceforth to forbear ſending any of his Clerks into Africk, to execute his Sentence there, leſt they ſhould ſeem to introduce the ſmoaky Pride of the World into the Church of Chriſt. With abundance more to the ſame purpoſe, which the Reader may find at large inſerted [k] among the Canons of the African Code. From which it is as plain as the Sun at Noonday, that in the Time of St. Auſtin the Pope could lay no juſt Claim to Patriarchal Power over any of the African Churches. 4. Baluzius has farther demonſtrated for the Gallican Churches (in his excellent Preface to Antonius Auguſtinus's Book De Emendatione Gratiani) that for eight hundred Years the French Synods never allowed of any Appeals from their own Determinations to the Pope. They always ordained their own Metropolitans, as is evident from the ſecond Synod of Orleance [l] an 533; and many times ſtoutly reſiſted the Encroachments of the Popes: for which I refer the Reader to the foreſaid Baluzius and Dr. Cave [m], the Particulars being too long to be inſerted here. 5. Laſtly, for the Britannick Churches, it is evident, that for ſix hundred Years they never acknowledged any Dependance upon Rome. When Auſtin the Monk came into England, and pleaded with the Britiſh Biſhops (Seven in number) for Subjection to the Biſhop of Rome, and Conformity to the Roman Rites in the Obſervation of Eaſter, and ſome other Things: He was anſwered poſitively [n] That they owed no Obedience to the Pope of Rome, but were under the Government of the Biſhop of Caerleon upon Uske, who was their Overſeer under God. And for the buſineſs of the Paſchal Controverſy, they were ſo far from paying any Deference to the Roman Cuſtom, that they continued their ancient Practice of obſerving Eaſter on a different Sunday from Rome for ſome Ages after, notwithſtanding all the Arguments that the Pope or his Party could urge againſt them: For which Reaſons they were treated as Schiſmaticks by the Agents and Emiſſaries of Rome: Which is an evident Demonſtration, that they did not then acknowledge any thing of the Pope's Patriarchal Power over them. All this is clear from Bede [o], who repeats it in ſeveral places. And William of Malmsbury [p], and Stephen Heddius [q], and Eadmerus [r], and other Writers of the Life of Wilfrid Archbiſhop of York, (a great Zealot for the Romiſh Cauſe againſt the Britiſh Cuſtoms) tell us the very ſame Story. For they ſay, Wilfrid refuſed to receive Ordination from the Scottiſh or Britiſh Biſhops, or from any ordained by them, becauſe the Apoſtolical See had rejected their Communion. So that, as Biſhop Stillingfleet has obſerved [s] out of theſe Authors, it is plain, the Britiſh and Scottiſh Churches ſtood Excommunicate at that time by the Church of Rome, becauſe they would not ſubmit to her Rites and Cuſtoms about Eaſter, and her pretended Power over them. A great deal more has been alledged by our learned Antiquaries Mr. Brerewood [t], Mr. Watſon [u], Dr. Cave [w], and Biſhop Stillingfleet [x], to ſhew the ancient Liberty and Independency of the Britannick Churches, which I ſhall not here repeat, but only conſider an Exception or two, which are made by Schelſtrate in his Diſſertation concerning the Patriarchal Power of the Biſhop of Rome, in Anſwer to Biſhop Stillingfleet's Antiquities of the Britiſh Church.

SECT. XII. The contrary Exceptions of Schelſtrate, relating to the Britannick Church, conſidered.

HE ſays [y] the Manuſcript ſet out by Sir H. Spelman, containing the Anſwer of Dinothus to Auſtin, is ſpurious and forged: For the Style manifeſtly diſcovers it to be Modern. Which is a weighty Argument indeed from a Perſon, who was ſo competent a Judge of the Britiſh Style, in which that Manuſcript was written, that he profeſſes he did not underſtand even the Engliſh Tongue without the help of an Interpreter. And how then ſhould he be able to judge of a Britiſh Writing by its Style, without knowing a Syllable of its Language? But, he adds, the Matter of it alſo diſcovers it to be a Forgery: For it is manifeſt there was no Archbiſhop of Caerleon upon Uſk at that time, as the Writing pretends; but that the Metropolitan Juriſdiction had for above a hundred Years before been tranſferred to Menevia. As if it was not as manifeſt to all the World, that the Archbiſhop of Menevia or St. David's might retain the Title of Caerleon, though the See was removed, becauſe Caerleon was the original Seat; as well as the Biſhop of the Iſle Man now retains the Title of Epiſcopus Sodorenſis, becauſe Sodora and all the Hebrides, or Iſlands on the Weſt of Scotland, were once part of his Dioceſe, though now for many Ages they have been ſeparated from it. Or to give an inſtance nearer Rome, we are told by Geographers [z], that Oſtia and Porto ſtill give title to two Biſhops, one whereof is always a Senior Cardinal, and the other Dean of the College of Cardinals, though both places are now in ſuch Ruins, that there is ſcarce an Inhabitant in either. We ſhall ſee hereafter in the 5th Chapter of this Book, that many times three or four antient Italian Biſhopricks were united into one, as Holſtenius [a] has obſerved of Tarquina, Cornetum and Graviſca; in which caſe no Abſurdity is committed, which ever of the Titles the Biſhop of the united Dioceſe was called by. Why then muſt it be an Objection againſt the Validity of this Teſtimony, that it calls the Biſhop of Menevia by the Title of Caerleon, when that was the original Title? But 2dly, he ſays, It appears from Bede, that the Queſtion was not concerning the Primacy of the Roman Biſhop, but about Auſtin's Metropolitical Juriſdiction over them. But how then came the Britiſh Biſhops to be reckoned Schiſmaticks, if the Pope's Authority was no ways concern'd in the diſpute? Would they be Schiſmaticks for rejecting Auſtin's Metropolitical Juriſdiction, had he unwarrantably uſurped that power of his own head, and without a legal Commiſſion from ſome ſuperior obtruded himſelf upon them? It is plain therefore the one was included in the other, and the rejecting Auſtin was rejecting the Power that ſent him. But they alſo conteſted the Pope's Supremacy in another reſpect, refuſing to comply with the Romiſh Rites and Uſages in the obſervation of Eaſter, the Adminiſtration of Baptiſm, St. Peter's Tonſure, and ſome other Cuſtoms; which was an argument, that as they had no dependence upon the Church of Rome heretofore, nor much Communication with her, but rather with the Eaſtern Churches; ſo now they intended not to ſubmit to her Dictates, but to follow their own antient Cuſtoms as a free Church, and independent of her. Can any one ſuppoſe, that had the Britiſh Biſhops looked upon the Pope as inveſted with a legal Supremacy over them they would have ſcrupled complying with Directions in ſuch Matters, as the Obſervation of Eaſter and the like, when ſuch things were but the ſmalleſt part of Patriarchal Juriſdiction? Even our Author himſelf, when he comes to conſider the Matter a little farther, is not ſo hardy as to ſtand by his own Aſſertion, but comes to call them Names at laſt with Baronius and others of his own Party, telling us [b] that after the Saxons had broken in upon them, they deſerted the Doctrines and Rites of the Catholick Church, and receded as Schiſmaticks from the Center of Eccleſiaſtical Communion: And that it ought to be concluded, that God was willing to ſhew the Falſhood of the Schiſmatical Church of Britain, by the Miracle which he wrought upon Auſtin's Interceſſion. This is home to our point, and gives up the Cauſe in queſtion, which is, Whether the Britiſh Church owned the Pope's Supremacy at the coming of Auſtin hither: Which our Author, after ſome ſmall Bickerings with his learned Adverſary, is forced to deny, and join Iſſue with him, and then betakes himſelf to their laſt and common Refuge, ill Names and Miracles, which being no Arguments in this caſe, I ſhall not ſtand to give them any Anſwer; but only enquire into one thing more, how it appears that the Britains had deſerted any antient Doctrine relating to the Pope's Patriarchal Power, upon the coming of the Saxons? To evidence this, our Author muſt give us very plain Proofs, that before that time the Britiſh Church always owned the Biſhop of Rome's patriarchal Juriſdiction over them. And this indeed is the pretended Deſign of his whole Diſſertation: But his Proofs amount to no more than a few ſlight Conjectures, by which he would be thought to have demonſtrated theſe four things. 1. That St. Peter was the Founder of the Britiſh Church [c], which any one that reads Biſhop Uſher de Primordiis [d], will as readily attribute to St. Paul or twenty others: So little reaſon is there for grounding the Pope's Patriarchal Power upon the firſt Converſion of the Britiſh Church. 2. He argues from antient Tradition, that Patriarchal Power is an Apoſtolical Inſtitution, and that thereby [e] the Britiſh Church was made ſubject to the Roman, whoever was the firſt Converter of it. But this Tradition is involv'd in greater Obſcurity, and proceeds upon more precarious Proofs than the former. 3. He ſays, The Britiſh Biſhops in the Council of Arles own'd the Pope's [f] Patriarchal Power over them, and all the Weſtern World. 4. And laſtly, That this Power, in this full Extent and Latitude, is both acknowledged and confirmed [g] by the ſixth Canon of the Council of Nice. How far the Council of Nice allowed or confirmed this Power, has been already ſhew'd in diſcourſing of the Suburbicary Churches. So that the only thing remaining is to examine what weight there is in his Argument from the Council of Arles. This Council was ſummon'd by Conſtantine, and not by the Pope, againſt the Donatiſts, An. 314. Here were preſent three Britiſh Biſhops, Eborius from York, Reſtitutus from London, and Adelphius from Lincoln, (Colonia Lindi) as I ſhall ſhew hereafter it probably ought to be read. Now in their Synodical Epiſtle to Pope Sylveſter there is a Paſſage (but by all acknowledged to be a very corrupt one) which ſpeaks ſomething of his holding the greater [b] Dioceſes. Which our Author interprets to mean his having a Patriarchal Power over all the great Dioceſes of the Weſtern Empire, Macedonia, Dacia, Illyricum, Italy, Africa, Spain, France and Britain. But one queſtion may be here asked, which will ſpoil all this flouriſh of a Comment. Did the African Fathers, many of which were preſent at this Council, ſo underſtand the Words, Greater Dioceſes? If they did, How came it to paſs, that within an Age after they ſo ſtifly oppoſed three Popes ſucceſſively, and vindicated their own Liberties in this very point (as we have ſeen before [*] they did) denying them abſolutely all Power of receiving Appeals from any of the African Churches? Had St. Auſtin and all the reſt of them forgot what their Forefathers had ſo lately ſubſcribed at Arles, that Africa was one of the Pope's larger Dioceſes? Or had they been harraſſed out of their Senſes, like the poor Britains, by ſome Saxon Invaſion, and were now run into Schiſm, as the other are reproachfully and falſly ſaid to have done? Nothing of all this can be pretended in the preſent caſe: And therefore that is Demonſtration to me, that neither the African Fathers, nor the Britains, nor any others then preſent in Council, took the Words Greater Dioceſes, in the Senſe which this Author puts upon them. So that whatever Meaning they muſt have, it is plain this cannot be their Meaning: And then all the Argument, which our Author has built upon this Suppoſition, in order to ſubject the Britains to the Pope, at once falls to the Ground. I will not now ſtand diſputing with him, whether the Word Dioceſe, was never about this time taken in any Author for one of the great Dioceſes of the Roman Empire. He ſays Conſtantine [i] ſo uſes it in one place, ſpeaking of the Aſiatick and Pontick Dioceſes: And if that will do him any Service, I can help him to another; for Conſtantine alſo ſpeaks of a Civil Officer, called Καθολικὸς διοικήσεως, or Rationalis of the Dioceſe [k], where I agree with Valeſius, we are to underſtand one of the great Dioceſes of the Roman Empire. Nay I have ſaid before, that I think there were Patriarchs too in the Church at that time, and that they had the great Dioceſes of the Roman Empire divided among them. But does it hence follow, that becauſe the word Dioceſe, is ſome times ſo uſed, that therefore it muſt needs ſignify ſo in this Place, when there is plain Demonſtration to the contrary? All the World knows that about the ſame time the Name Dioceſe was given to ſingle Epiſcopal Churches alſo, and they too were called greater Dioceſes in oppoſition to the Tituli or Pariſhes, which were quaſi Diœceſes, the leſſer Dioceſes under them, as the Pontifical words it [l] in the Life of Pope Marcellus, who was one of Sylveſter's Predeceſſors. So that Sylveſter's holding greater Dioceſes, may mean no more than his being a Metropolitan, or having ſeveral Epiſcopal Dioceſes under his Juriſdiction, to whom he was to ſignify according to Cuſtom the Time of keeping Eaſter, and other things decreed in the Council. Or if we ſuppoſe him to have been a Patriarch at that time, then his greater Dioceſes may ſignify thoſe ten Suburbicary Provinces, which were the antient Bounds of his Patriarchal Juriſdiction. But whatever meaning they have, it is certain they cannot be underſtood in our Author's Senſe, of the great Dioceſes of the Roman Empire: Becauſe it were abſurd to think, that Africa ſhould acknowledge it ſelf to be one of the Pope's Dioceſes, which never was reckoned among the Suburbicary Provinces, and what is more always reſolutely oppoſed the Pope's Pretences to the leaſt ſhadow of power over it, claiming an abſolute and independent power within it ſelf in all Matters of Eccleſiaſtical Cognizance and Juriſdiction. And the caſe of the Britannick Church being the ſame with that of Africk, it follows, that it was as independent of Rome as the other was, notwithſtanding any pretended Confeſſion of Subjection made by its Biſhops in the Council of Arles, upon which our Author lays the main Strength of his Cauſe, though there is nothing in it, when fairly canvaſſed and examined, as I doubt not I have made it appear to every unprejudiced Reader. I was the more willing to conſider here ſome of the chief Exceptions of this celebrated Writer againſt the Liberties of the Britannick Church, becauſe I know not whether any one elſe has made a Reply to them; and theſe Strictures will ſerve to ſuggeſt at once to the Reader the true Grounds upon which our antient Liberties were founded, and the contrary pretences, which would ſubject us to the power of the Biſhop of Rome, as Patriarch of the Weſtern Empire, though the Britannick Dioceſe had as juſt Title to be independent at that Time as Rome it ſelf, or Africk, or any other Dioceſe in the Empire. I make no farther Enquiry here into the Bounds of other Patriarchs or Metropolitans, or their Dioceſes, becauſe no ſuch momentous Diſputes have been raiſed about them, and they may be eaſily learned from the Notitia of the Church here ſubjoyned in the latter part of this Book. Therefore I proceed in the next place to examine the ordinary Extent of the antient Epiſcopal Dioceſes, or as we now call them, Dioceſan Churches.

CHAP. II.

A more particular Account of the Number, Nature and Extent of Dioceſes, or Epiſcopal Churches, in Africa, Ægypt, and other Eaſtern Provinces.

SECT. I. Dioceſes antiently called παροικίαι, Parœciæ.

IT is evident from what has been diſcourſed in the laſt Chapter, that the moſt antient and Apoſtolical Diviſion of the Church was into Dioceſes, or Epiſcopal Churches; that is, ſuch Precincts or Diſtricts, as ſingle Biſhops govern'd with the Aſſiſtance of their Presbyters. But yet we are to make a little farther Enquiry into the nature and extent of theſe, becauſe great Errors have been committed by ſome late Writers about them. There are who pretend, that a Dioceſe for the three firſt Ages was never more than ſuch a number of People as could meet, and ordinarily did meet in a ſingle Congregation: Others extend the Limits of antient Dioceſes farther than this at firſt, to include a City and the whole Region about it: But then they reckon, that upon the general Converſion of Heathens to Chriſtianity, ſuch Dioceſes ought to have been divided into ſingle Congregations, and a new Biſhop and Clergy ſet over every one. There is no difference betwixt theſe two Opinions, ſave only this, that the one wholly miſtakes the Church's firſt and primitive Model, and the other quarrels with her Practice. But the truth of the matter was, that the Church in ſettling the Bounds of Dioceſes went by another Rule, not that of ſingle Aſſemblies or Congregations, but the rule of Government in every City, including not only the City it ſelf, but the Suburbs, or Region lying round about it within the Verge of its Juriſdiction. Which ſeems to be the plain reaſon of that great and viſible difference which we find in the extent of Dioceſes; ſome being very large, others very ſmall, according as the civil Government of each City happened to have a larger or leſſer Juriſdiction. There are two things indeed that commonly impoſe upon unwary Readers in this matter. One is, that the ancient name of an Epiſcopal Dioceſe for three hundred Years is commonly παροικία, which they miſtake for a Pariſh Church, or ſingle Congregation: Whereas, as learned Men [a] have rightly obſerved, it ſignified then not the Places or Habitations near a Church, but the Towns or Villages near a City, which together with the City was the Biſhop's παροικία, or as we now call it, his Dioceſe, the Bounds of his ordinary Care and Juriſdiction. That thus it was, appears evidently from this, that the largeſt Dioceſes, ſuch as thoſe of Rome, Antioch, and Alexandria, which had many particular Churches in them, were called by the ſame Name, as the Reader may find an hundred Paſſages in Euſebius [b], where he uſes the word παροικία, when he ſpeaks of thoſe large and populous Cities, which had many particular Churches in them. The City of Alexandria in the time of Alexander and Athanaſius was divided into ſeveral Diſtricts called Laura, in every one of which there was a Church, with a Preſbyter fix'd upon it: And yet all theſe were but one παροικία, as Alexander calls it in his Circular Epiſtle [c] againſt Arius. The Reader may ſee the Word ſo uſed by Epiphanius [d], St. Jerom [e], the Councils of Antioch [f], Ancyra [g], and many others in After-ages, when it is certain Epiſcopal Dioceſes were ſomething larger than Pariſh-Churches, as thoſe are taken to ſignify ſingle Congregations. So that nothing can be plainer than the uſe of the Word παροικία, for a Dioceſe, to the IVth Century.

SECT. II. When the Name, Dioceſe, began firſt to be uſed.

AND now about this time the name Dioceſe began to be uſed likewiſe. For the Council of Arles, which was held in the beginning of the IVth Century, writing to the Biſhop of Rome, ſays, that he did Majores Diœceſes tenere [h], poſſeſs greater Dioceſes; which though Schelſtrate and other Romiſh Writers interpret Patriarchal Dioceſes, to aggrandize the Pope's Juriſdiction; yet it is more probable, as Dr. Cave [i] obſerves, that it means only ſingle Biſhopricks; though I grant Conſtantine might have made the diviſion of the Empire into civil Dioceſes, from whence Patriarchal Dioceſes took their name in the following Ages. The Word is used frequently for a single Diocese in the African Councils, as where it is said [k], A Bishop shall not leave his principal Seat, and betake himself to any other Church in the Diocese: So likewise often in the African Code, and the Collation of Carthage. From which it appears, that the words Parochia and Diœcesis were of the same import in those times, and the calling of a Diocese by the name of Parochia, does not make it a single Congregation.

SECT. III. What meant by the περάσεις, or Suburbs of a City.

ANOTHER thing that imposes upon Men in this matter is the Ambiguity of the names, περάσεια, and Suburbia, the Suburbs of a City; which in the modern acceptation signifies no more than the Houses or Habitations next adjoyning without the walls of a City; but antiently it denoted all the Towns or Villages, which lay round the City in a certain District, which were therefore reckoned as belonging to that City, though many times at several Miles distance from it. Thus Canopus was twelve Miles distant from Alexandria, and yet in the Acts of the Council of Chalcedon we find it called by one Athanasius [l], the περάσειον, or Suburbs of that City. So Sozomen [m] calls Daphne the Suburbs of Antioch, though it was forty Furlongs or five Miles distance from it. And Pancirol [n] notes of the famous Suburbs of Constantinople, called ἕβδομον, or Septimum, that it was so denominated from its being seven Miles off from the City at first, though afterward by the strange Growth and Increase of that City it came to be reckon'd a more immediate part of it. So there was in the Suburbs of Carthage, a Place called Decimum, because it was ten Miles distant from the City, as Procopius [o] informs us. And some think the Ager Sexti, in which Cyprian suffered Martyrdom, was so named from its being six Miles off from the City. For the Roman Martyrology puts Sextum Milliare instead of Ager Sexti. Now in all such Suburbs as these there were particular Assemblies, distinct from those of the City Churches; as appears from what Eusebius [p] observes out of the Epistle of Dionysius of Alexandria, who says, when he was banished to Colluthion, a place in the Region of Mareotes, that he should still hold particular Assemblies, as they were us'd to do in those Suburbs that were something more remote from the City. So that these antient Words, παροικία and περάσεια, when taken in their true, antient and primitive Sense, do not make a Bishop's Diocese to be only a single Parish in the modern Sense, but a City with all the Towns or Villages within the Region or District, to which the City Magistrate extended his Jurisdiction. For that, Justellus [q] has shewed out of good Authors, is the difference between πόλις and Κώμη, a City and a Village: A City is a place that is govern'd by a Magistracy and Laws of its own, and exercises Authority over the Region or Territory that lies about it; but a Village is a dependent only on a City, and has no Magistrates of its own, but such as belong to the City whereof it is a Dependent. According to which notion an Episcopal Church was generally a City and a whole Region, of the very same Extent with the Power of the Civil Magistrate, whose Bounds for the most part were the Bounds of the Bishop's Diocese; though the Rule was not so universal, but that it admitted of some particular Exceptions. And from hence it will appear, that though there was great difference in the Extent of Dioceses, as there was in City-Regions and Districts, and many of them were but small in comparison of others; yet they were generally so large as to admit both of a Bishop and a Presbytery in the City Church, and Presbyters and Deacons in the Country Regions.

SECT. IV. Dioceses not generally so large in Nations of the first Conversions, as in those converted in the Middle Ages of the Church.

TO clear this whole Matter (which is of great Use upon several Accounts towards understanding rightly the State of the antient Church) I will here make a particular Enquiry into the Extent both of the largest and narrowest Dioceses, and distinctly consider the State of each. For though they differed much in Extent, yet they all agreed in the same Species of Government; the Essence of which consisted not in being confined precisely to such or such Limits; for that was but accidental to the Constitution: The same Species of Government is still preserved in most Parts of the Church, and yet any one that will allow himself the Liberty of making just Observations, may easily discern a Difference between some of the first Conversions, and those that followed in the middle Ages of the Church: For in the former, it is evident, Dioceses were generally more numerous, and not so large as in the latter. The whole Extent of Asia Minor, from the Hellespont to the River Euphrates, is estimated by the best Geographers at 630 Miles; the Breadth from Sinus Issicus in Cilicia to Trabezond at 210: Yet there were almost 400 Dioceses in this Tract of Land, as the Reader may satisfy himself from the Notitia of the Church at the End of this Book. But now if we look into any middle Age Conversions, we shall find the Number of Dioceses very small in comparison of these, and their Extent very great. For in Germany, which is computed about twice as large as Asia Minor (being 840 Miles in length, and 740 in breadth) there are but 40 Bishopricks; in all Belgium but 18; in Denmark but 15; in Swedeland but 10; in Ruſſia 21; in Poland 30; as Dr. Heylin and other Geographers have computed them. And our Number in England, being alſo a later Converſion, bears no Proportion to thoſe of Aſia Minor, though the Iſle of Great Britain is not much inferior to it in Bigneſs. I leave the Curious and the Learned to enquire into the Reaſons of this Difference, while I go on to ſhew the different Extent of Dioceſes in the Primitive Church, where we ſhall meet with ſome very large, others very narrow, but the ſame Species of Epiſcopacy preſerved in all, and none confined abſolutely to a ſingle Congregation.

SECT. V. A particular Account of the Dioceſes of Africk.

I ſhall begin with the Dioceſes of Africk, which ſome by Miſtake have reckoned the leaſt Biſhopricks in the World; whereas upon a juſt Computation they will appear to be far larger than many others. The whole Extent of Africk (comprehending the ſix Roman Provinces, Tripolis, Byzacena, Africa Proconſularis, Numidia, and the two Mauritanias) is computed by Procopias [r] to be ninety Days Journey in length: Which, reckoning as he does, that a Day's Journey was 210 Stadia, or twenty ſix Miles and a quarter, amounts to above 2360 Miles: The breadth was in ſome places 200, and in others 500 Miles: Which makes it by Computation twice as big as Germany or France. Now there were in this Compaſs, in St. Auſtin's Time, about 466 Biſhopricks, as appears both from the Collation of Carthage [s], and the Abſtract of St. Auſtin [t], and the Notitia of the African Church, made about 50 Years after St. Auſtin's Death, and publiſhed [u] by Sirmondus. The preſent Dioceſes in France, if compared with theſe, will appear to be as large again, and thoſe of Germany much larger: Yet the African Biſhopricks, as a learned Man [w] rightly calculates, might one with another notwithſtanding be reckoned to contain each of them threeſcore or fourſcore Towns and Villages. It is certain, at leaſt, that many of them were of very large Extent. St. Auſtin's Dioceſe of Hippo was above forty Miles long: For he himſelf tells us [*], that Fuſſala, a Place in his Dioceſe, which he erected into a new Biſhoprick, was forty Miles diſtant from him. Some other Churches in his Dioceſe are alſo mentioned in his Epiſtles [x] and other Writings, which Biſhop Stillingfleet [y] has collected together: To which the Reader may add other Epiſtles [z], where he mentions the Churches of Subſana, Turres, Ciza, Verbalis, Fundus Strabonianenſis, and Gippitanus, as Parts of his Epiſcopal Care alſo. In Hippo it ſelf there were ſeveral Churches, three of which are occaſionally mentioned by St. Auſtin, one called Eccleſia Pacis [a], another [b] Baſilica Leontii, and a third, Ad viginti Martyres, the Church of the twenty Martyrs [c], whoſe Memory was famous at Hippo [d], as being in all Probability African Martyrs, and of that particular Church whereof St. Auſtin was Biſhop. In the other Hippo, called Hippo Diaretorum for diſtinction ſake, the African Canons [e] ſpeak of ſeveral Churches. And in the Collation of Carthage we often meet with Complaints of the Catholick Biſhops, that the Donatiſts had ſet up Anti-biſhops, not only in their Cities, but in other Places [f] of their Dioceſes: And the Donatiſt Biſhops return the Charge, telling the Catholicks particularly, that at Conſtantina [g] they had not only ſet up a Biſhop in the City, but another in the middle of the Dioceſe: And that at Milevis they had done the ſame, making one Biſhop in that place, another at Tunca, a City in the ſame Dioceſe, and a third at Ceramuſſa. From which it is eaſy to conclude, that thoſe Dioceſes were then ſo large, as not only to have a Country Region, but ſometimes more Cities than one within their Diſtrict. The like may be inferred from that Canon of the African Councils, which ſays, [h] no Biſhop ſhall leave his principal Cathedral, and reſide in any other Church of his Dioceſe. That manifeſtly implies, that their Dioceſes had other Churches in the Country, beſide the City Cathedral in them. And indeed Inſtances of this kind would ariſe without number to any one that would make a curious Search into the Hiſtory and Antiquities of the African Church. I ſhall only add two things more relating to it: 1. That Carthage is well known to have had a great number of Churches belonging to its Dioceſe in the IVth Century. Mr. Sirmond [i] in his Notes upon St. Auſtin's Sermons gives us the Names of ſeven of them, which were mentioned in the Titles of his Sermons, viz. The Cathedral Church, call'd Baſilica Major & Reſtituta, Baſilica Fauſti, Baſilica Leontiana, Baſilica Celerinæ, Baſilica Novarum, Baſilica Petri in the third Region, and Baſilica Pauli in the ſixth Region. To which Biſhop Stillingfleet [k] adds two Churches without the City, one where St. Cyprian ſuffered Martyrdom, and another where his Body was buried at a Place called Mappalia, both which are mentioned by Victor Uticenſis. Dr. Maurice [l], who examined a little farther, adds ſtill to thoſe within the City, the Church called Florentia, and Baſilica Gratiani, and Theodoſiana, and Honoriana, and Tricillarum: And doubtleſs there were many others not mentioned, ſince Victor [m] reckons about five hundred Clergy belonging to the Church of Carthage. The other thing I would note concerning the African Church, is, that in Tripolis, one of the ſix Provinces of the Roman Africa, there were but five Biſhops, which we learn both from the Canons of the African [n] Councils, and the antient Notitia of that Church, which names their Sees, Leptis Magna, OEea, Tacapa, Sabrata, and Girberis; from three of which there were Biſhops in the Council under Cyprian at Carthage: And the Preſence of no more was required, becauſe of the Paucity of them. But now this was a large Tract of Ground, as Blondel [o] himſelf proves out of Ptolemy, who names many other Cities, Chuzis, Sumucis, Piſinda, Sydedenis, Azuis, Geriſa, Iſcina, Amuncla, Butta, and others. So that whether we compare the whole Extent and Dimenſions of Africk with the Number of Dioceſes contained therein, or conſider any particular Province or Dioceſe by it ſelf, it plainly appears, that every Biſhop had a City, and a Region or large Territory for his Dioceſe; ſome two Cities or more; and none ſo ſmall a People, as to deſerve the Name that ſome have beſtowed upon them, of Country Pariſhes or ſingle Congregations.

SECT. VI. Of the Dioceſes of Egypt, Libya and Pentapolis.

OUT of the African Provinces let us paſs into thoſe of the Egyptian Dioceſe, as it is called in the civil Account of the Roman Empire, under which are comprehended all the Regions of Libya, Pentapolis, and Egypt from Tripolis to the Red Sea. Theſe Countries all together are juſtly computed by a learned Man [p] to be three times as great as England: Yet they never had above an hundred Biſhops in them all. For Alexander and Athanaſius, who were very competent Judges, reckon ſcarce ſo many. Athanaſius [q] ſays, there was ἐγγὺς ἑκατὸν, near an hundred in Egypt, Libya, and Pentapolis; and Alexander [r] uſes the ſame Expreſſion in his circular Epiſtle againſt Arius, ſaying, that he and the reſt of the Biſhops of Egypt and Libya, being near an hundred, met together in Council, had condemned Arius and his Followers. And after this the Notitia's of the Church reckon no more. That which the Reader will find at the End of this Book, has but ninety ſeven, excluding thoſe of Tripoli, which have been ſpoken of before: And others in Carolus à Sancto Paulo never exceed an hundred and one. So that the number of Dioceſes ſeems to have continued near the ſame without Alteration for ſeveral Ages. Carolus à Sancto Paulo has collected their Names out of the ancient Writers, and Subſcriptions of Councils, and other Monuments of the Church, which I ſhall here ſubjoin, as I ſhall for all o ther Countries as we paſs on, that ſuch Readers as pleaſe to compare the Names with the Maps of Eccleſiaſtical Geography, which I have cauſed to be publiſhed with ſome Corrections to attend this Work, may the better underſtand the Extent of Dioceſes, and the true ancient State and Geography of the Church. The Egyptian Patriarchate was ſometimes divided into three Provinces, ſometimes into ſix, ſometimes into nine, but the Limits of the whole were the ſame, including Egypt, Libya and Pentapolis: Carolus à Sancto Paulo follows the largeſt Diviſion, and ſo makes ſeven Provinces in Egypt, reckoning the Dioceſes in this Order.

Beſide theſe, Carolus à Sancto Paulo reckons ſeven others in Egypt of uncertain Poſition. Vantena, Gauœa, Flagonita, Cotenopolis, Gazula, Eleſma, and Pſynchus: But Holſtenius rightly obſerves, that five of theſe are but Corruptions of others named before. Vantena is put for Antinoe; Flagonita for Fragonita; Eleſma for Clyſma; Gazula for Zagula; and Pſynchus for Oxyrinchus: And I obſerve, that Paralus, and perhaps one or two more, ſeem to be named twice. So that we cannot reckon the whole Number of Dioceſes much above an hundred in theſe nine Provinces. Now, to make a tolerable Eſtimate of the Largeneſs and Extent of theſe Dioceſes, we muſt conſider a little the State of theſe Countries, together with the Extent of them. And by this means we ſhall find this Obſervation to be true (which I am alſo to make upon Paleſtine, Aſia Minor, and Italy) that here were ſome of the largeſt and ſome of the ſmalleſt Dioceſes in the World under the ſame form of Epiſcopal Government. In Libya and Pentapolis the Dioceſes ſeem to have been very large; for the whole Number in both Provinces was but twenty two: And yet theſe Provinces were of great Extent, as appears from what Pliny [s] delivers out of Eratoſthenes, that from Alexandria in Egypt to Cyrene in Pentapolis was five hundred twenty five Miles, the greateſt part of which muſt be divided among theſe Biſhopricks; which is ſome ground to conjecture that they were of the largeſt Size. Berenice was the moſt Weſtern Border of Pentapolis, from whence to Arſinoe or Teuchira, the next neighbouring Seat, Pliny [t] reckons forty three Miles, and from Arſinoe to Ptolemais twenty two. And it is certain ſeveral others lay at greater Diſtance from each other. But ſome may fancy perhaps, they were ſmall inconſiderable Dioceſes for all this, becauſe Syneſius [u] ſpeaking of his own City Ptolemais, the Metropolis of Pentapolis, ſays, it was but a ſmall City. To obviate this, I will note a few things out of Syneſius concerning the Cities and Dioceſes of this Region. That Ptolemais, where Syneſius was Biſhop, had a Territory and Country Churches in its Dioceſe, is evident from Syneſius himſelf, who writing to his Preſbyters upon his firſt Conſecration, deſires them to pray for him, and enjoin the People both in the City and Country Churches [*] both publickly and privately to pray for him likewiſe. This is evident Proof, that though Ptolemais itſelf might not be a very large City, yet it had a Dioceſe of ſome Extent, and Village Churches in the Circuit of it. In another Place he complains, that all the Churches [†] of Ampelitis, that were under him, were burned down and deſtroyed. There were two Regions of this Name in Pentapolis, one belonging to Cyrene, the other to Ptolemais: And it is probable there were in both of them Towns and Villages depending reſpectively upon thoſe Mother-Churches. Indeed Carolus à Sancto Paulo, out of Syneſius, ſpeaks of one or two Dioceſes in this Province, which ſeem to be leſs. For Hydrax and Palæbiſca were but Villages, once belonging to the Dioceſe of Erythros, from which they were ſeparated in the time of the Emperor Valens, and had a diſtinct Biſhop of their own. But there was none before him, nor any after, for it was united by Theophilus Biſhop of Alexandria [w] to Erythros again. So that it rather proves the Largeneſs of the Dioceſes, that they were of ſuch an Extent as to admit of others being taken out of them. In another Place Syneſius [x] ſpeaks of the Olbiatæ, whom he ſtyles δῆμον κωμήτης, a Country People, and ſays they had a Biſhop. But a learned Man obſerves [y] rightly, that this may ſignify a People or Nation living in many Villages, of which ſort there were ſeveral in the Region of Pentapolis and other Parts of Africk, where there were but few Cities: For, as he ſhews out of Pomponius Mela and Pliny, theſe Country People generally inhabited in great Numbers together, and were under the Denomination of little Nations, though they dwelt in Cottages, or Mapalia, as they called them in the Language of thoſe Countries. So that though a Biſhop's Seat was in a Village, he might have a large Region for his Dioceſe, as we ſhall find in purſuing the Hiſtory of other Nations. In the neighbouring Province of Libya, Zygus was a Village, and a Biſhop's Seat: Yet, as the ſame learned Perſon [z] obſerves out of Ptolemy [a], it was ſuch a Village as had a Territory along the Sea-ſide; and the whole Sea-coaſt of Libya was divided between that and two or three other ſuch Villages or Cities, call them which you pleaſe. For there were but ſeven Dioceſes in all this Libya, which extended three hundred Miles along the Sea-ſhore, ſo that the Biſhops Sees were at leaſt fifty Miles from each other. And yet perhaps being a deſert Country, and inhabited by very barbarous People, the Dioceſes might be leſs than many others, if computed by the Number of Chriſtians, rather than the Extent of Ground; as if we compare them with ſome in Egypt, their next Neighbours. In Egypt the Dioceſes cannot be reckoned ſo large as thoſe of Libya and Pentapolis, becauſe here were eighty Biſhopricks; and yet the Extent of Egypt was not more than the other two, but the Country was infinitely more populous, and ſo capable of more Biſhopricks in a leſs compaſs. Dr. Heylin computes the Length of it to be only five hundred ſixty two Miles, and the Breadth one hundred and ſixty: Which comes pretty near the Computation of Pliny [b], who reckons it five hundred eighty ſix Miles long, and one hundred and ſeventy broad from Peluſium to Canopus. This divided into eighty Dioceſes, will allow above thirty Miles length and breadth to every Dioceſe; which is a competent Space for an Epiſcopal Dioceſe conſiſting of many Towns or Pariſhes, but too large for any ſingle Congregation. We may judge of the Extent of ſome of theſe Dioceſes by that of Alexandria, which had firſt a great many Churches with Presbyters fixed upon them in the City it ſelf, in the time of Alexander and Athanaſius, as Epiphanius [c] more than once informs us, naming beſide the great Church, commonly called Cæſarea, thoſe of Dionyſius, Theonas, Pierius, Serapion, Dizyas, Mendidius, Annianus, Abias and Baucalis, where Arius was Preſbyter. Then again it had the large Region of Mareotes belonging to it. For Athanaſius [d] ſays, there never had been either Biſhop or Chorepiſcopus in all that Region, but only Presbyters under the Biſhop of Alexandria; and that they were fourteen in Number, (beſides thirteen Deacons) ſome of which had two Villages, and others more within their reſpective Pariſhes. Canopus alſo was once in this Dioceſe, being reckoned one of the Suburbs of Alexandria (as has been noted before) though a large Place, and twelve Miles diſtant from it. Nicopolis alſo was in this Dioceſe, which Strabo equals [e] to a City. So that there muſt be particular Aſſemblies in the remoter Suburbs of this Dioceſe, which could not poſſibly meet with the Mother-Church. We have not ſo particular an Account of any other Dioceſe in Egypt, but from this we may make ſome Eſtimate of the reſt, ſince it appears that a competent Territory of twenty or thirty Miles might be allowed to every Dioceſe upon a rational Computation. Nor is it any juſt Exception to this, that here were ſometimes Biſhops Seats in Villages as well as Cities. For many Villages were equal to Cities, and had alſo large Territories belonging to them. As Strabo particularly notes of Schædia, which was but a Village in his Time [f], yet ſuch an one as might compare with a City; and in Athanaſius's time it ſeems to have been advanced into a City, or was at leaſt the Head of a Nomus or Region called Menelaites: For Athanaſius ſtyles Agathodæmon [g] Biſhop of Schædia and Menelaites together. So that though we find in the Greek Notitia of this Province ſeveral Biſhopricks denominated from Villages, as Vicus Pſaneos, and Cotrideos, Rhicomerium, Pariana, and Anaſſa; yet we are not to imagine the Biſhops of theſe Places were Paſtors only of a private Village, but that they had each a larger Territory, after the Example of Schædia, for their Juriſdiction. In the Dioceſe of Arſinoe, it is plain, there were Country-Pariſhes in the middle of the third Century: For Dionyſius Biſhop of Alexandria ſpeaks of them in one of his Epiſtles, where he diſcourſes of Nepos the Millenary, who was Biſhop of the Place. After his Death, he ſays, he went into the Region of Arſinoe, and having called together the Presbyters and Teachers of the Country Villages [h], he held a Conference with them for three Days together about Nepos's Opinions, which it ſeems had infected ſome of their Churches, and drawn them into Factions and Schiſms. The like Obſervation is made by Caſſian [i] upon Panæphyſus in the Province of Auguſtamnica Prima, that it had many Towns and Villages under it, till they were ſwallowed up with the Inundation of the Sea and an Earthquake. And Carolus à Sancto Paulo rightly obſerves out of Athanaſius [k], that Phragonea in Ægyptus Secunda had the whole Nomus of Elearchia for its Dioceſe. And excepting Thenneſus in the Province of Auguſtamnica, which Caſſian [l] ſeems to make an Iſland, without any Territory about it, it may be generally affirmed of all the Egyptian Cities, that they had their περάσεια, or Country-Towns and Villages about them, ſome more, ſome leſs, where, as Dionyſius Biſhop of Alexandria words it [m], they had their holy Aſſemblies diſtinct from thoſe of the Mother-Churches.

Yet, not to put a Fallacy upon my Readers, I muſt obſerve one thing, which will much diminiſh the Largeneſs of thoſe Dioceſes in one Part of Egypt; that is, that as it was the moſt populous Country in the World in ſome Parts of it, ſo it was abſolutely deſert and uninhabited in others. The Cities were generally placed pretty near the Banks of the Nile, but on both Sides within ten or twenty Miles from them were vaſt Mountains and Deſerts, where no Mortal dwelt, till, as Oroſius obſerves [n], the Monks firſt took up their Abode there, leaving the Cities, to inhabit thoſe vaſt Tracts of Wilderneſſes and Sands, which for their Barrenneſs and want of Water, and Multitudes of Serpents, had never before ſeen any thing of human Converſation. This Account of the Egyptian Deſerts is confirmed by Joſephus, [o] where he ſpeaks of Moſes making an incredible Expedition with an Army through them, to ſurprize and come unexpectedly upon the Ethiopians. And the Chriſtian Writers, who treat of the Monaſtick Life, give a more particular Deſcription of them. Sulpicius Severus makes the Entrance on theſe Deſerts in Thebais [p] to be only twelve Miles from the River Nile. But the Deſerts themſelves were vaſtly greater. For Caſſian ſpeaking of the Wilderneſs of Scethis, where Paphnutius was Abbot, ſays, there was one of the Monks who had his Cell [q] eighteen Miles from Church. But the Deſert of Porphyrion, he ſays, was abundantly larger than this: For a Man might travel ſeven or eight Days Journey in it [r] without coming near any Houſe or Town, before he came to the Cells of the Monks, which had their Habitation therein. So that by this Account, 'tis probable almoſt one half of Egypt was cut off in Sands and Deſerts, which could not be cultivated, and therefore were not inhabited, till the Monks, who found out a new way of living, left the Cities, to become here and there ſcattered Inhabitants of the Wilderneſs. And by this means the Dioceſes of Egypt, if we ſpeak properly of the habitable Part of them, will be reduced to a much narrower Compaſs, and fifteen Miles may perhaps paſs for a general Meaſure of their Extent in this Senſe one with another. But as Alexandria and others might be larger, ſo it is certain Thennefus, and Panephyſus and others were much leſs: Which makes good the Obſervation and Reflection I at firſt paſſed upon them, that here were ſome of the largeſt and ſome of the ſmalleſt Dioceſes in the World, under the ſame Species and Form of Epiſcopal Government, for any thing that we find to the contrary.

SECT. VII. Of the Dioceſes of Arabia. And why theſe more frequently in Villages than in other Places.

OUT of the Patriarchate of Alexandria we ſhould next have gone into that of Jeruſalem, but Arabia coming between, we will take a View of it here, though it belonged to the Patriarch of Antioch. Carolus a Sancto Paulo calls it by Miſtake Arabia Petræa, which, as Holſtenius obſerves, was a diſtinct Province under the Patriarch of Jeruſalem, and commonly known in antient Church-Records by the Name of Palæſtina Tertia. But Arabia here is taken only for that Part which was under the Metropolis of Boſtra, and ſometimes called Philadelphia in antient Writers. In this Province we have Accounts of twenty one antient Dioceſes, whereof eighteen are recounted by Carolus a Sancto Paulo. 1 Boſtra. 2 Adra. 3 Medaba. 4 Geraſa. 5 Nibe or Nive. 6 Philadelphia, whence in Epiphanius and others the Region is called Arabia Philadelphiæ. 7 Esbus. 8 Neapolis. 9 Philippopolis. 10 Conſtantine. 11 Dionyſias. 12 Maximianopolis. 13 Avara. 14 Alana, al. Neela. 15 Zerabena. 16 Erra. 17 Anitha, or, as Holſtenius reads it, Eutimia. 18 Parembola. To which Holſtenius adds three more, Canotha, Phæno, and Bacatha, mentioned by Epiphanius and Euſebius. In After-ages, when the Notitia was made which is publiſhed in the 7th Chapter of this Book, the number of Dioceſes was augmented to thirty four, whereof twelve are called Villages. And it appears from Sozomen [s] that this was no new thing in this Country; for he takes notice that it was uſual in ſome Provinces to conſecrate Biſhops in Villages, and he particularly ſpecifies Arabia and Cyprus for it. But then we are not to imagine, that theſe Dioceſes were confined to a ſingle Village, as ſome have vainly concluded, to favour the Hypotheſis of Congregational Epiſcopacy. For theſe Villages were what the Antients commonly called Metrocomiæ, Mother-Villages, which had many other Villages depending on them; ſo that they were the chief Villages of a certain Diſtrict. This is evident from Epiphanius [t], who ſpeaking of Bacathus, one of the Village-Biſhopricks, ſtyles it μητροκωμίαν ἀραβίας, a Mother-Village in Arabia, which implies, that there were others depending on it. So that theſe Dioceſes might be as large as any other, having not only that Village, but whole Tracts and Regions ſometimes depending on them, as may be ſeen in the foreſaid Notitia, where ſome of them are called Clima Orientalium, and Clima Occidentalium; denoting not only a particular Village, but a little People or Nation of ſuch a Combination or Diſtrict, under a Mother-Village, from which the whole Dioceſe or Circuit had its Denomination. The Arabians were a People that choſe rather to live in Villages, and had but few Cities in compariſon of others: And that ſeems to be the Reaſon why Village-Biſhops were allowed in this Country, which otherwiſe were forbidden by the Canons of the Church, as has been ſhew'd in another [*] Place.

SECT. VIII. Of the Dioceſes of Paleſtine, or the Patriarchate of Jeruſalem.

OUT of Arabia our next Step is into Paleſtine, or the Patriarchate of Jeruſalem, which being taken out of the Patriarchate of Antioch, had three Provinces aſſigned for the Limits of its Juriſdiction, which in the antient Monuments of the Church are commonly called Palæſtina Prima, Secunda, and Tertia, following the Civil Account of the Roman Empire. In theſe three Provinces (compriz'd within the Borders of the Land of Canaan, and Arabia Petræa) Carolus a Sancto Paulo reckons about forty ſeven antient Dioceſes.

Baſchat*, which he reckons to be the ſame with Bacatha in Arabia Philadelphiæ; and Phenon, which he aſſigns to the ſame Province. But inſtead of theſe two he has found out three more in Palæſtina Prima, viz. Sycamazon, Gerara, and another Lydda diſtinct from Dioſpolis afore-mentioned. So that the whole number of known Dioceſes was forty eight.

Now if we look upon all theſe together, and compare them with the forty Dioceſes in Germany at this Day, they will appear very ſmall indeed in compariſon of them. For whereas Germany is computed eight hundred and forty Miles in length, and ſeven hundred and forty in breadth; the whole Extent of theſe three Provinces will not amount to a Square of one hundred and ſixty Miles. For the length of all Paleſtine, or the Land of Canaan, taking in part of Phœnicia as far as Tyre and Sidon, which yet is excluded from theſe Provinces, is computed by St. Jerom [u], Cotovicus [w], Maſius [x] and others, to be but an hundred and ſixty Miles; and the breadth from Joppa to Jordan not above ſixty: To which if we add about ſixty more beyond Jordan, for the breadth of Palæſtina Tertia, to the Borders of Arabia Philadelphiæ and Boſtra, we have then the compleat Dimenſions of the three Provinces together. By which it appears, that two German Dioceſes of one hundred Miles length, are as large as all thoſe forty eight Dioceſes put together. Yet there were ſome Dioceſes among them of a competent Bigneſs. Eleutheropolis, a City much ſpoken of by St. Jerom, not far from the Place where Hebron ſtood, in the Borders of Dan and Judah, ſeems to have had a pretty large Territory. For St. Jerom ſpeaks of Villages belonging to it at ſeventeen Miles [†] diſtance from it, and mentions a great many other Villages in the ſame Territory, though he does not ſo exactly tell us their diſtance from the City. Sozomen names ſome others, as Beſanduca [y], where he ſays Epiphanius was born: And Ceila, and Berathſatia [z], where the Bones of the Prophets Micah and Habbakuk were found. Near Beſanduca Epiphanius built his Monaſtery, and the Village had a Church in it, where Epiphanius ordained a Deacon, as he himſelf informs us [a]. From all which it is very evident this City had a large Territory and conſiderable Dioceſe, with many Country-Towns and Churches belonging to them. And there were ſeveral others, eſpecially in Palæſtina Secunda and Tertia, equal in Extent to the Dioceſe of Eleutheropolis. But a judicious Reader will eaſily conclude from the Largeneſs of theſe, that ſome others muſt needs therefore be very ſmall, ſince there were ſo great a Number in ſo ſhort a Compaſs. If we caſt our Eye upon the Sea-coaſt of Paleſtine, and reckon Tyre and Sidon and Ptolemais and Sycaminum and Porphyria into the Account (as being within the antient Bounds of the Land of Canaan, though they now belong to the Province of Phœnice and the Patriarch of Antioch) we ſhall find ſeventeen or eighteen Cities in a Line of one hundred and ſixty Miles, and ſome very near Neighbours to one another. Cotovicus [b] reckons it but four Miles from Ptolemais to Porphyria; and Sicaminum and Zabulon were not farther removed from it. But Ferrarius reckons it twenty or twenty four; ſo that the Poſition of the two firſt is a little doubtful, but the other three may be reckoned within five or ſix Miles of one another. Baudrand obſerves [c] the like of Dora, and Cæſarea the Metropolis, that they were but five Miles diſtant from each other. So Ferrarius computes Antipatris ten Miles from Cæſarea, and Dioſpolis ten more from Antipatris. Dioſpolis is in the Scripture called Lydda, and ſaid to be nigh unto Joppa. Baudrand reckons it but ſix Miles, correcting Ferrarius, who computes it ten. Jamnia was alſo about ten Miles from Joppa, and but twelve from Lydda, as is collected out of Antonine's Itinerary. So that theſe three Cities were not above twelve Miles diſtant from each other. But Gaza, Maiuma and Anthedon, were ſtill nearer Neighbours, not above twenty Furlongs or three Miles from each other, as Sozomen particularly [d] remarks their Diſtance. Maiuma, he tells us, was once only a Village belonging to Gaza, to which it was the Sea-port, ſeated nearer the Sea upon the River Beſor: But when Conſtantine, for its Merit in readily embracing Chriſtianity, had granted it the Privilege of a City, it preſently, according to the antient Rule, became a Biſhop's Seat, and continued ever after ſo to be, notwithſtanding ſome Attempts made againſt it, of which I have given an Account in the foregoing Chapter. But though theſe Cities lay ſo near together, we are not to think, they were of the Congregational way, or their Biſhops only Pariſh-Paſtors. While Maiuma was joined to Gaza, the Church was doubtleſs more than a ſingle Congregation. For Euſebius ſpeaking of Silvanus Biſhop of Gaza, who ſuffered Martyrdom in the time of the Diocletian Perſecution, ſtyles him [e] Biſhop of the Churches in and about Gaza: Which implies, that his Dioceſe was more than a ſingle Congregation. Nay after Maiuma was taken from it, Gaza had ſtill many other Villages, and a populous Territory belonging to it. Sozomen [f] mentions three Villages, one called Thabaca, where Hilarion was born; another Sopharconbra, where Ammonius was born; and a third named Bethelia, which he calls πολυάνθρωπον κώμην γαζαίαν, a moſt populous Village under the Juriſdiction of Gaza; which was alſo famous for the Heathen Pantheon, beſide other Temples that were in it; whence he conjectures, it had the Name of Bethelia, which in the Syrian Tongue is the ſame as Domicilium Deorum, or the Houſe of the Gods. Now a Village that had ſeveral Heathen Temples in it, had no doubt upon its Converſion ſome Chriſtian Churches alſo, where they had Presbyters to celebrate Holy Offices, though in Dependance on the Church of Gaza. And for Maiuma, when it became a diſtinct Dioceſe, its Biſhop was not a ſingle Pariſh-Paſtor, but he had a Clergy under him, and all other Things that the Epiſcopal Church of Gaza had, as Sozomen [g] particularly notes in the caſe, ſaying, Each City had their own Biſhop and Clergy, and their own proper Feſtivals for their Martyrs, and Commemorations of the Biſhops and Prieſts that had lived among them, and their proper Bounds of the Country lying round about them. And that we may not wonder that there ſhould be ſuch Villages as theſe, it will not be amiſs to obſerve what Joſephus reports of two Villages of Idumæa not far from theſe, Begabri and Caphartophan, where he ſays [h] Veſpaſian ſlew above ten thouſand People, took a thouſand Captives, and forced many others to fly away. He alſo ſays [i] in another place, there were many Villages in Galilee ſo populous, that the leaſt of them had above fifteen thouſand Inhabitants in them. Now a few ſuch Villages as theſe, united under a Metrocomia, or Mother-Village, might quickly ariſe into Numbers enough to become a Dioceſe, and have a Biſhop and Clergy of their own, which it would be abſurd to miſtake for the Paſtor of a ſingle Congregation. And this was evidently the Caſe of the ſmalleſt Dioceſes in this Part of Paleſtine, where notwithſtanding the Narrowneſs of their Limits, they were under the ſame ſpecies of Epiſcopal Government with other Churches.

The Inland Dioceſes of Paleſtine were generally larger; yet ſome of them were ſmall. For Emmaus was but ſixty Furlongs, or ſeven Miles and a half from Jeruſalem, as both the Scripture and Travellers [k] inform us: Yet when of a Village it became a City, being rebuilt by the Romans in the time of Adrian, and by them called Nicopolis in Memory of their Victories over Jeruſalem, as Sozomen [l] and Euſebius [m] and St. Jerom [n] inform us; it then alſo advanced itſelf to an Epiſcopal See, and according to the Rule of the Church had the City-Territory for its Dioceſe; under which Denomination and Quality we find it afterwards in the Notitias of the Church. This perhaps brings the Dioceſe of Jeruſalem into narrower Bounds one way than is commonly imagined; but ſtill it was of ſufficient Extent to have many particular Churches in it. For the Jewiſh Antiquaries commonly tell us, there were above four hundred Synagogues in the City itſelf. Dr. Lightfoot [o] reckons four hundred and fifty. Others [p] four hundred and ſixty, and ſome ſay [q] there were four hundred and eighty for Jews and Strangers there. Optatus ſays, there were ſeven in a very ſmall Plain upon the top of Mount Sion, where the Jews [r] were uſed to meet and hear the Law of Moſes read. And Epiphanius [s] mentions the ſame, which he ſays were alſo left ſtanding after the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem to the time of Adrian, and one of them to the time of Conſtantine. Now it would be very ſtrange, that a City which had ſo many Synagogues, ſhould not afford above one Church, after it was made Chriſtian, and ſo many thouſand Converts were in it even in the time of the Apoſtles. But it had alſo a Territory without the City, and Churches at ſome diſtance from it. For Bethlehem was in the Dioceſe of Jeruſalem, ſix Miles from the Mother-Church; upon which account it had a Church and Presbyters of its own, but thoſe ſubject to the Biſhop of Jeruſalem, as St. Jerom [t] informs us, who charges John Biſhop of Jeruſalem for an extravagant Abuſe of his Power, in laying his Injunctions on his Presbyters at Bethlehem, that they ſhould not baptize the Catechumens of the Monaſtery, who ſtood Candidates at Eaſter, upon which they were ſent to Dioſpolis, for Baptiſm. St. Jerom mentions the Church of Thiria [u] in the ſame place, where the Biſhop of Jeruſalem ordained Presbyters and Deacons: And there is no doubt but there were many other ſuch Pariſhes within the Precincts of his Dioceſe, acknowledging his Juriſdiction. We cannot give ſo particular an Account of all the Dioceſes of Paleſtine; but thoſe which ſome have thought the leaſt, Lydda and Jamnia, appear to have been Cities, and to have had their Dependencies in their neighbouring Country round them. So that except Maiuma, which was disfranchiſed by Julian, there was no Village in Paleſtine that had a Biſhop of its own; but the Villages were all as ſo many Pariſhes to the neighbouring City in whoſe Territory they lay: Which made theſe Dioceſan Churches ſtill of the ſame ſpecies with the reſt, that had a large Extent of Juriſdiction. Joſephus indeed calls Lydda a Village, but he ſays, it was a Village not inferior to a City; and afterward it was made a City, and called Dioſpolis, when it was a Biſhop's See: And though its Dioceſe could not extend very far one way, being it was but ſix Miles from Joppa toward the Sea; yet other ways it extended farther, for St. Jerom [w] ſpeaks of Bethſariſſa a Village belonging to it, though it was near fifteen Miles diſtance from it, in the Region call'd Regio Tamnitica, which ſeems to have been the Territory belonging to this City.

I have been the more particular in deſcribing the Dioceſes of Paleſtine, becauſe here Chriſtianity was firſt planted, and the true Model of antient Epiſcopacy may beſt be collected from them. They who reckon theſe Biſhopricks no larger than Country-Pariſhes, are ſtrangely miſtaken on the one hand; and they who extend their Bounds as wide as German Dioceſes, are no leſs extravagant on the other. To make the right eſtimate, the Reader muſt remember that there were never quite fifty Biſhops in all the three Paleſtines. In the middle of the VIth Century there were but forty five, who ſubſcribed in the Council of Jeruſalem, An. 536. And we do not find upon the niceſt Enquiry they ever exceeded forty eight. So that it were the abſurdeſt thing in the World to ſuppoſe, as ſome have done, that theſe Dioceſes were but Pariſh Churches, or ſingle Congregations. On the other hand, when it is remember'd, that the Extent of the whole Country was not above an hundred and ſixty Miles, it is as evident theſe Dioceſes could not be of the largeſt Size, and if compared with ſome others, ſcarce be found to have the Proportion of one to twenty, which needs no farther Demonſtration.

SECT. IX. A Catalogue of the Provinces and Dioceſes under the Patriarch of Antioch.

THE next Patriarchate is that of Antioch, to which Carolus a Sancto Paulo aſſigns theſe thirteen Provinces: Syria Prima. Syria Secunda. Theodorias. Cilicia Prima. Cilicia Secunda. Iſauria. Euphratenſis. Oſrhoena. Meſopotamia. Phœnicia Prima. Phœnicia Secunda. Arabia, and the Iſle of Cyprus. One of theſe, Arabia Philadelphiæ, has been already ſpoken of; and three others, Iſauria and Cilicia Prima and Secunda, lying in Aſia Minor, ſhall be conſidered in the next Chapter among the Provinces of that Country. For the reſt I will here give firſt a particular Catalogue of the Dioceſes in each Province, and then make a few Remarks upon them, and ſome other Eaſtern Provinces not mentioned by that Writer.

In Syria Prima.

1 Antiochia. 2 Seleucia Pieria. 3 Berrœa, by ſome called Aleppo. 4 Chalcis. 5 Onoſarta, or rather Anaſarta. 6 Gabbus. To which Holſtenius adds another called Paltus, which he thinks wrong placed in Theodorias.

In Syria Secunda.

1 Apamea upon the River Orontes. 2 Arethuſa. 3 Epiphania. 4 Lariſſa. 5 Mariama, or Mariamne. 6 Raphanæa. 7 Seleucia juxta Belum, al. Seleucobelus. To theſe alſo Holſtenius transfers another, named Balanea, out of the Province of Theodorias, where he thinks it was wrong placed; but he is miſtaken.

In Theodorias.

1 Laodicea. 2 Gabala. 3 Paltus. 4 Balanæa.

In Euphrateſia or Comagene.

1 Hierapolis. 2 Cyrus. 3 Samoſata. 4 Doliche. 5 Germanicia. 6 Zeugma. 7 Perre, by ſome corruptly read Perga, and Pella, and Peria, as Holſtenius obſerves. 8 Europus, al. Amphipolis and Thapſacum. 9 Urima. 10 Cæſarea, otherwiſe called Neocæſarea Euphratenſis. 11 Sergiopolis. 12 Sura. 13 Marianopolis, which ſome place in Syria Secunda.

In Oſrhoena, or Meſopotamia Inferior.

1 Edeſſa. 2 Carræ. 3 Circeſium. 4 Nicephorium. 5 Batnæ. 6 Callinicus, al. Leontopolis. 7 Marcopolis. 8 Himeria. 9 Dauſara.

In Meſopotamia Superior.

1 Amida, now called Caramit. 2 Niſibis. 3 Rheſina. 4 Martyropolis. 5 Caſchara. To theſe Holſtenius adds two more, Cepha, and Mniſus or Miniza.

In Phœnicia Prima.

1 Tyrus. 2 Sidon. 3 Ptolemais, or Acon. 4 Berytus. 5 Byblus. 6 Tripolis. 7 Area. 8 Orthoſias. 9 Botrus. 10 Aradus. 11 Antardus. 12 Porphyrium. 13 Paneas, or Cæſarea Philippi. 14 Sycaminum, now called Capo Carmelo.

In Phœnicia Libani.

1 Damaſcus. 2 Laodicea Scabioſa. 3 Abyla. 4 Heliopolis. 5 Jabruda. 6 Palmyra. 7 Emeſa. 8 Danaba. 9 Evaria, al. Euroia, al. Juſtinianopolis. 10 Comoara. 11 Corada. 12 Saracenoram Civitas, which rather belongs to Arabia. Holſtenius adds one more called Arlana.

In Cyprus.

1 Conſtantia. 2 Citium. 3 Amathus. 4 Curium. 5 Paphos. 6 Arſinoe. 7 Lapithus. 8 Thamaſſus. 9 Chytrus. 10 Tremithus. 11 Soli. 12 Ledra. 13 Tiberiopolis. Holſtenius adds, Carteriopo- lis, and Carpaſia, where Philo was Biſhop, who commonly by a vulgar Error is call'd Carpathius, as if he had been Biſhop of Carpathus an Iſland in the Mediterranean-Sea, whereas he was Biſhop of this Carpaſia in the Iſle of Cyprus, as Holſtenius and Dr. Cave have both obſerved.

SECT. X. Obſervations on the Dioceſes of Cyprus.

NOW to make ſome few Remarks upon theſe Dioceſes diſtinctly, I obſerve that by the ſame Reaſon that Carolus a Sancto Paulo places Cyprus under the Patriarch of Antioch, he might have brought Aſſyria, Perſia, Babylonia, Adiabene, India, and the Nation of the Homerites in Arabia Felix, under Antioch alſo. For there were Biſhops in all theſe places, as I ſhall ſhew, but independent of any Patriarch except their own Metropolitans. And ſo Cyprus was declared to be by the Council of Epheſus; whence it was always reckoned an Autocephalus, or Independent Province, as has been more fully proved [*] in another place. All I have farther to obſerve of it here, is in reference to thoſe fifteen Dioceſes that we have found there, that they were large ones, if compared with thoſe of Paleſtine: For Cyprus is computed by Ferrarius 170 Miles long, and by others 200; which is more than Paleſtine. Baudrand reckons it 500 Miles in compaſs; which, without enquiring any farther into the particular diſtance of Places or largeneſs of the Cities or Villages, is ſufficient to ſhew that thoſe Dioceſes were none of the leaſt Size, though ſhort of ſome that we ſhall meet with in the Continent, as we take a View of the other Provinces.

SECT. XI. Of the Dioceſes of Syria Prima and Secunda.

THAT which lay next to Cyprus was Syria, which anciently comprehended all the Country betwixt the Mediterranean and Euphrates; but the Romans divided it into ſix Provinces, Syria Prima and Secunda, Phœnicia Prima and Secunda, Theodorias, and Euphratenſis, otherwiſe called Hagiopolis and Comagene. The ſix Provinces together are computed by Geographers to be between three and four hundred Miles in length, and two hundred broad from the Mediterranean to the Euphrates. And the whole Number of Dioceſes in all the Provinces was about fifty ſix, that is, but eight more than we found in Paleſtine. By which the Reader may eaſily make a general Eſtimate of the Largeneſs of theſe in compariſon of the other in Paleſtine, by conſidering the Dimenſions of each Country, and comparing them together. But I will ſpeak a little more particularly of a few Dioceſes in theſe Provinces. Syria Prima had anciently but ſix Dioceſes, and in the later Notitia's we find only five. The Metropolis was Antioch, one of the largeſt Cities in the World. Chryſoſtom, who may be ſuppoſed to be a competent Judge of its Greatneſs, ſpeaks ſometimes of ten or twenty Myriads [x], that is an hundred or two hundred thouſand People in it. And he makes this a Part of his Panegyrick upon Ignatius, That whereas it is a difficult Matter ſometimes to govern an hundred or fifty Men; yet ſuch was his Wiſdom and Virtue, that St. Peter doubted not to commit to his Care a City, which had two hundred thouſand People in it. The Territory without the City was anſwerable to its Greatneſs within: For one way it reached two Days Journey, or fifty Miles, to the Territory of Cyprus, where Theodoret was Biſhop: For Strabo [y] ſays, theſe two Territories joined one to another. There were many great Villages like Cities in this compaſs; as Daphne in the Suburbs of Antioch; Gindarus in the Borders of the Dioceſe toward Cyprus: In Strabo's time it was a City [z] belonging to Cyprus, or Cyrrheſtica. But I muſt note, that there ſeem to have been two Places of that Name, the one a City, the other a Village. For Strabo [*] ſpeaks of a Gindarus in the Regio Cyrreſtica, which he calls a City: And we find one Petrus Gindarenſis ſubſcribing among the Biſhops of Syria in the Council of Nice; who was alſo among the Biſhops of the Council of Antioch which condemned Athanaſius, as Holſtenius [a] and Schelſtrate have obſerved out of the Subſcriptions of theſe Councils. Whence we may conclude, that Gindarus mentioned by Strabo, was probably the ſame City, whereof this Peter was Biſhop, and that there was another Gindarus, a Village in the time of Theodoret belonging to Antioch, where Aſterius the Monk lived, of whom Theodoret [b] ſpeaks in his religious Hiſtory; where he alſo mentions other Villages [c] near Mount Amanus in the Territory of Antioch; which muſt be at a great Diſtance from Antioch: For Mount Amanus was the Northern Limit of Syria. Berræa and Chalcis were large Cities, 20 Miles from one another. In the ſame Province lay Selecia Pieria ſixteen Miles from Antioch down the River Orontes, and five Miles from Sea; which was Compaſs enough to make a large Dioceſe, though much inferior to the former.

In Syria Secunda there was anciently ſeven Biſhopricks, and we find the ſame Number in the later Notitia's of the Church. Of theſe Apamea was the Metropolis, a City which Theodoret [d] makes to be ſeventy five Miles from Antioch: And that it had a large Territory and many Villages, we learn from Strabo [e] and other antient Writers. Lariſſa in this Province is computed by Ferrarius to be fourteen Miles from Apamea; Arethuſa ſixteen from Epiphania; Epiphania eighteen from Lariſſa. So that at leaſt twenty Miles will be allotted to every Dioceſe in the Province.

SECT. XII. Of the Dioceſes of Phœnicia Prima and Secunda.

IN Phœnicia Prima ſome few Cities, as I have obſerved before in ſpeaking of Paleſtine, lay very near together, as Sycaminum and Porphyrium, whoſe Dioceſes could not be very large upon that Account. But Tyre and Sidon and Berytus were both large Cities and at a greater diſtance. For Tyre was twenty five Miles diſtant from Sidon on the one ſide, and as much or more from Ptolemais on the other ſide. Cotovicus [f] reckons it but twenty, but Ferrarius ſays it was two and thirty. And the City itſelf was very large, if we take Strabo's Account, for he ſays [g] it filled an Iſland that was nineteen Miles in compaſs. Pliny [h] agrees as to the bigneſs of the Iſland, but makes the City only two and twenty Furlongs. Sidon was alſo a large City, and not within twenty five Miles of any other. Baudrand makes it twenty five from Tyre, and thirty five from Berytus. Berytus was famous for the Study of the Civil-Law, and reckoned among the great and flouriſhing Cities of the Eaſt, and it had no nearer Neighbours than Sidon on the South, and Byblus on the North, which Ferrarius ſets at thirty four Miles diſtance from it. The Dioceſes in the other Phœnicia toward Mount Libanus, were greater than the former. For here were ſome larger Cities and at a greater Diſtance from one another. Among theſe was the great City Damaſcus, once the Metropolis of the Province, the Largeneſs of which may be collected from what Joſephus relates [i] how that the Damaſcenes ſlew there ten thouſand Jews in one Day. Emiſſa, the new Metropolis, is accounted alſo a large City by Ammianus Marcellinus [k], who equals it to Tyre, and Sidon, and Berytus. And for their Territories, we muſt judge of them by their Diſtance from other Places. Laodicea and Arethuſa were the neareſt Neighbours to Emiſſa, and Ferrarius makes them ſixteen Miles diſtant from it. And we do not find Damaſcus pent up in narrower Bounds: For it was ſurrounded with Abyla, and Jabruda, and Cæſarea Philippi, the laſt of which Ferrarius reckons twenty ſix Miles from it. Abyla was the Head of a Region, thence called Abylene, which gave the Denomination of a Tetrarch to Lyſanias, as St. Luke informs us: Whence we may collect there was a conſiderable Territory belonging to it. Here was alſo the great City Palmyra, the Head of another Region, thence called Palmyrene, of which it is reaſonable to make the ſame Concluſion; though I have nothing more particularly to remark of the Extent of theſe Regions, ſave that Abyla is reckoned thirty two Miles from Heliopolis, another noted City in this Province, and one of its neareſt Neighbours, as Ferrarius out of Antonine's Itinerary computes their Diſtance. Vid. Ferrar. voce Heliopolis.

SECT. XIII. Of Theodorias.

IN the Province of Theodorias between Syria Prima and Phœnicia on the Sea-coaſt there were but three Dioceſes. Laodicea the Metropolis, Balanea and Gabala, and the ſame are mentioned in Goar's Notitia and others. Now the diſtance of theſe Places may be ſeen in Antonine's Itinerary. Balanea was twenty four Miles from Antaradus in Phœnicia; Gabala twenty ſeven Miles from Balanea, which Ferrarius calls twenty four according to modern Accounts; and Laodicea the Metropolis was eighteen from Balanea. And their Territories extended farther other ways.

SECT. XIV. Of Euphrateſia, or Comagene.

IN the Province of Euphrateſia or Comagene there were anciently thirteen Dioceſes, and but one more in later Notitia's. Here were ſeveral large Cities, as Hierapolis the Metropolis of the Province, and Samoſata on the Euphrates, which both Joſephus [l] and Ammianus Marcellinus [m] deſcribe as a great and magnificent City. But the largeſt Dioceſe for Extent of Territory in theſe Parts was that of Cyrus, where Theodoret was Biſhop, who gives a moſt particular Account of it. He ſays in one place [n] it was forty Miles in length and forty in Breadth; and that there were above ſix Myriads, or threeſcore thouſand ζύγα or Juga of Land in it. Now a Jugum of Land was not a ſingle Acre, as ſome learned Men miſtake; but as much Land as a Yoke of Oxen could plough in a Year; and the Roman Taxes were raiſed by ſuch Proportions of Land, whence the ordinary Tax upon Land was ſtiled Jugatio in the Civil-Law, as I have had Occaſion to note [o] in another Place. So that threeſcore thouſand Juga, according to this Account, will make a far greater Dioceſe, than if we ſhould underſtand it of ſingle Acres only. And that we may not think this was barren and unoccupied Land, Theodoret in another Place ſpecifies what number of Churches and Pariſhes he had in his Dioceſe, which he ſays [p] were eight hundred: Some of which were over-run with the Hereſies of Marcion, Arius, and Eunomius, when he came to the Dioceſe; but he converted above ten thouſand of one Sect only, viz. Marcionites, [q] to the Catholick Faith, and of others ſome thouſands more. All which Arguments agree to make it one of the largeſt Dioceſes in the Eaſt, as Blondel [r] ingenuouſly confeſſes it to be, though ſome others would fain inſinuate the whole Story to be a Fiction, when yet all Circumſtances concur to give it the cleareſt Evidences of Truth. They who would ſee Objections anſwered, may conſult Biſhop Stillingfleet [s] or Dr. Maurice [t], who have particularly conſidered the Exceptions that have been raiſed againſt it. As to the other Cities of this Province, Doliche, Germanicia, Nicopolis,

Some of them were but small Cities, as Doliche, which Theodoret speaks of [u] with the diminutive Title of πολίχνη σμικρά, a very small City: But they might have large Dioceses, as Cyrus had, which itself was neither a great City nor very well inhabited, but had a Diocese larger than many other Cities which were ten times the bigness of it.

SECT. XV. Of Osbroena, and Mesopotamia.

IN the Roman Provinces beyond the Euphrates (which some call by the general Name of Mesopotamia, because it lay between the two Rivers Tigris and Euphrates; but the Romans divided it into two Provinces, Osbroena on the Banks of Euphrates, and Mesopotamia toward the Tigris) there are so few Dioceses to be found in antient Records, that to me it seems probable that our Accounts are very imperfect: For the whole Number in both Provinces is but sixteen; whereas in the later Notitia's there are sixteen in Osbroena alone, and in the other Province thirty five more; which makes it probable that antient Accounts are here defective. Otherwise we must say, that these Dioceses were extremely large. For Baudrand makes the Country four hundred and twenty Miles long, and two hundred and seventy broad. Which divided into sixteen Dioceses would make them all of great Extent. But the Country seems not to have been all converted, for the Roman Cities were only such as lay by the Banks of the Rivers, and chiefly upon the Euphrates. I shall therefore make no other Estimare of them, than by the certain Light we have of them in antient History. From which it is clear, that some of them were at least such Episcopal Dioceses as were in all other parts of the World, that is, Cities with Country-Regions, and Village-Churches. This is evident from what Epiphanius observes of Chascara, one of the Cities of Mesopotamia, that beside the Bishop's See it had Village-Churches, and Presbyters incumbent on them in the IIId Century. For speaking [w] of Manes the Heretick, the first Founder of the Manichees, he says, when he had been baffled at a publick Disputation by Archelaus Bishop of Chascara, and had like to have been stoned by the People, he fled to Diodoris a Village belonging to Chascara, where one Tryphon was Presbyter, whom he challenged to a new Disputation. And if the lesser Cities had such kind of Dioceses, we may readily conclude the same of Nisibis the Metropolis, which was so large a City as to be able to defend itself sometimes against all the Power of the Persian Empire; being, as Sozomen [x] observes of it, in a manner all Christian in the time of the Emperor Julian. Edessa, the Metropolis of the other Province of Osbroena, was also a very large City, and the Royal Seat of Agbarus, who lived in our Saviour's Time, and by whose Means it is generally thought to be converted very early to Christianity; and so it might perhaps from the very first have several Churches in it. However, in After-ages we are sure it had: For Sozomen speaking of the Persecution under Valens the Arian Emperor, says, he took away all the Churches within the City, among which [*] that of St. Thomas was one, so that the People were forced to assemble in Gardens without the City for Divine Service.

SECT. XVI. Of Armenia Persica.

BESIDE these Provinces mentioned by Carolus a Sancto Paulo, there were some other Countries out of the Bounds of the Roman Empire, which had the same Form of Episcopal Government, upon which therefore it will not be amiss to make a few Strictures, whilst we are speaking of the Eastern Provinces. That which we now call Armenia Magna, was anciently called Armenia Persica, because it belonged not to the Roman, but to the Persian Empire. Here were also Bishops in the time of Theodoret, as appears from some of his Epistles. For writing to one Eulalius a Bishop, he styles him [y] for distinction sake, τὸ περσικῆς Ἀρμενίας, Bishop of the Persian Armenia. And another Epistle [z] is directed to one Eusebius a Bishop of the same Region. By which it is plain there were Bishops in that Country in Theodoret's time; but how many we cannot learn from him or any other antient Writer. Otho Frisingensis [a] and Baronius [b], and some other modern Writers, talk much of the Catholick of Armenia that sent to submit himself to the Pope in the XIIth Century, having a thousand Bishops under him. But as Mr. Brerewood [c] rightly observes, if the whole Story be not a Fiction, Otho must needs mistake Obedience for Communion: For the Catholick of Armenia might have a great number of the Jacobite Bishops in his Communion, but there could not be so many in Armenia under his Jurisdiction. For the modern Notitia mentions but nineteen Bishops in this Armenia, as the Reader will find in the seventh Chapter of this Book. And it is not probable they should multiply from twenty to a thousand in an Age or two. However this Story has no relation to the State of the Church in the Primitive Ages, about which the present Enquiry is only concerned.

SECT. XVII. Of Assyria or Adiabene, and Chaldæa.

WE have some farther Account of the Churches in other Parts also of the Persian Dominions beyond the River Tigris, in Adiabene, which is a Region of Assyria, and in Babylonia or Chaldæa, in which we find two large Cities, Seleucia and Ctesiphon, under one Bishop. These were the Royal Seats of the Persian Kings, and but three Miles from each other, as Pliny [d] and Ferrarius after him compute, though others place them at a greater distance. Seleucia is by some said to be the same as Mosul, the present Seat of the Patriarch of the Nestorians. But antiently they were both but one Diocese, as we learn from Sozomen [e], who styles Simeon Archbishop of Ctesiphon and Seleucia, under Sapores King of Persia, who lived in the time of Constantine. There were other Bishops also in these parts at the same time, some of which suffered Martyrdom together with Simeon, as the same Author informs us [f]. He also mentions one Acepsimas, a Bishop in the Region of Adiabene, and 23 more, whose Names are there recorded, as suffering Martyrdom about the same time [g] in several parts of the Persian Empire. And what sort of Dioceses they had, we may conjecture from what Sozomen [h] says of one of them named Bichor, That he suffered Martyrdom together with Maurcandus his Chorepiscopus, and two hundred and fifty more of the Clergy that were under him. Such a number of Clergy, and a Chorepiscopus among them, seem to bespeak a pretty large Diocese; and if the rest were answerable to this, we may conclude the Bishops were all of the same Species as we have seen in all the Eastern Nations.

SECT. XVIII. Of the Immireni in Persia, and Homeritæ in Arabia Felix.

Theodorus Lector [i] speaks of another Nation converted to Christianity in the time of Anastasius the Emperor, whom he names Immireni, and says, they were Subjects of the Persian Empire, and dwelt in the most southern parts of their Dominions. Whether they had above one Bishop is not certain; for only one is mentioned as set over them upon their Conversion. And it might be with them, as it was with some other barbarous People, Goths, Saracens, &c. that one Bishop served the whole Nation. Valesius confounds this People with the Homeritæ, whom Bochart and others more truly place in Arabia Felix toward the South-Sea. Baronius [k] supposes the Homerites first converted to the Christian Faith about the Year 354, at the same time that the Indians or Ethiopians were converted in the Reign of Constantius. But we have no account then of what Bishops were settled among them: But in the beginning of the VIth Age we find the Christian Religion in a flourishing Condition there, till one Dunaan an Apostate Jew, having gotten the Kingdom, raised a great Persecution against the Church, especially at Nargan, where one Arethas was a petty King, subject, as many other small Reguli were, to the Kingdom of the Homerites, whom he barbarously destroyed with all his people. But this Cloud quickly blowing over by the Assistance of Justin the Roman Emperor, and Elesban King of Ethiopia, who conquer'd Dunaan [l], the Government fell again into the Hands of a Christian King, in whose Time Gregentius Archbishop of Tephra, the Royal City, is said to have had that famous Disputation with Herbanus the Jew, the result of which was the Conversion of an incredible number of Jews in that Region. Here I chiefly observe that Gregentius is styl'd Archbishop of Tephra, which implies, that he had Suffragan Bishops under him: And in the Relation of his Death at the end [m] of the Dispute, it is added, that both Bishop, Priests and Deacons were gather'd together to attend his Funeral. By which it appears, that the state of that Church, so far as we have any account of it, was conformable to other Churches.

SECT. XIX. Of Bishops among the Saracens in Arabia.

WE have some few Intimations also given us of Churches planted antiently among the Saracens in Arabia, which were never under the Roman Empire. Hilarion is said by some [n] to have begun the Conversion of this Nation, but it was not compleated till Mauvia Queen of the Saracens made it a Condition of her making Peace with the Romans in the time of Valentinian, that they should send her one Moses a famous Monk to be the Bishop of her Nation; which was accordingly done, and so he became the first Bishop of that Region of the Saracens, as Ruffin [o] and Socrates [p] and the other Historians inform us. Sozomen also adds, that one Zocomos another Regulus or petty Prince of another Region of the Saracens, being converted by a Monk, brought over all his Subjects to the Christian Faith. Theodorus Lector [q] likewise mentions another of these Saracen Princes, named Alamundarus, who embraced the Faith in the Reign of the Emperor Anastasius, An. 513. And Cyril of Scythopolis, who wrote the Lives of Euthymius and Sabas, takes notice also of a Plantation of Saracens under the Roman Government in Palestine [r], over whom one Peter, a converted Saracen, who had before been their Captain, was made the first Bishop by Juvenal Bishop of Jerusalem about the middle of the Vth Century. Now we are to observe, that as these Saracens were thus divided into little Nations (after the manner of the Arabians) and had each their Regulus or petty Prince: So they seem each to have had their proper Bishop, one to a Nation, and no more. And therefore in Councils we find them usually subscribing themselves rather by the Title of their Nation, Episcopus Gentis Saracenorum, than any other way. Which I take to be an Indication, not that all the Saracens in the World had but one Bishop, but that every petty Nation had a Bishop of its own, though it is hard to distinguish sometimes which Family or Tribe of them is meant by that general Title. In the second Council of Epheſus [s] one Auxilaus is ſtyled Epiſcopus Saracenorum Fœderatorum, among the Biſhops of Paleſtine, whence it is eaſy to conclude, there is meant the ſame Saracens that Cyril ſpeaks of, who were Confederate with the Romans, or under the Roman Government. But in other places we are left to gueſs what Saracens may be meant, ſince they were divided into ſeveral petty Nations, and more than one Nation of them, as we have ſeen, were converted to the Chriſtian Faith.

SECT. XX. Biſhops of the Axumites or Indians beyond Egypt.

THERE is one Eaſtern Country more, famous for its Converſion by Ædeſius and Frumentius in the time of Athanaſius, but yet learned Men are not agreed where to place it. The antient Hiſtorians Ruffin [t], Socrates [u], and the reſt that relate the Story, commonly call it India ulterior, the Inner India: Whence Carolus a Sancto Paulo [w] and Baronius [x], and many others, take it for granted, that they mean India within Ganges, the other part without Ganges having been converted before (as they think) by the Apoſtle St. Bartholomew. But Holſtenius [y] and Valeſius [z] correct this miſtake, and Biſhop Pearſon [a] has more fully proved that the India they ſpeak of was no part of the Eaſt-Indies, but India beyond Ægypt, which was part of Ethiopia, whereof Axumis was the Metropolis. This lay not far from the Mouth of the Red-Sea over-againſt the Country of the Homerites in Arabia, whence Conſtantius in one of his Laws [b] joyns theſe two Nations together. From which and many other Authorities, Biſhop Pearſon unanſwerably proves, that this India can be underſtood of no other but the Ethiopick India, whereof Axumis was the Metropolis. This the Ancients called India, as well as the other: For Virgil ſays, The Nile flowed from the Blackamoor Indians [c], and Procopius Gazenſis ſtyles the Red-Sea, the Indian-Sea, becauſe it bordered upon this India beyond Egypt. Now in this Country Frumentius was the firſt Biſhop that we read of, being ordained Biſhop of Axumis by Athanaſius and a Synod of Egyptian Biſhops, and ſent thither to convert the Country and ſettle Churches among them: Which therefore we need not doubt, were of the ſame Species with thoſe in Egypt and the reſt of the World. For Axumis was not the only Place that had a Biſhop. For Palladius mentions one Moſes [d] Biſhop of Adulis, which was another City of Ethiopia. And in his Life of St. Chryſoſtom [e] he alſo ſpeaks of one of his own Name, Palladius Biſhop of the Blemmyes, which were a People of Ethiopia, adjoining to Egypt, as Strabo and Pliny and other Geographers inform us. Biſhop Pearſon gives ſome other Proofs, out of Cedrenus and the Arabick Canons of the Nicene Council, and their antient Liturgies, that they had Biſhops in that Country ever ſince this their firſt Converſion. But nothing more particular occurring concerning their Dioceſes, for want of better Light we can give no farther Account of them. And for the ſame Reaſon I muſt omit ſeveral other Eaſtern Nations, as the Parthians, and Indians about Ganges, which were converted by St. Thomas the Apoſtle; and the Iberians and other Nations lying upon the Caſpian-Sea, which Ruffin [f] ſays, were converted firſt by a Captive Woman in the time of Conſtantine. Antient Hiſtory affords us but ſlender Accounts of the Original of theſe Churches, and leſs of the Conſtitution and Settlement of them. So that taking our leave of theſe far diſtant Regions, we will come next to a Part of the World which is better known, which is the Patriarchate of Conſtantinople, under which were antiently comprehended all the Provinces of Thrace and Aſia Minor, except Iſauria and Cilicia, which alway belonged to the Patriarch of Antioch. I ſhall firſt ſpeak of Aſia Minor, and then proceed to the European Provinces, taking each Country as they lie in their natural Order.

CHAP. III.

A Continuation of this Account in the Provinces of Aſia Minor.

SECT. I. Of the Extent of Aſia Minor, and the Number of Dioceſes contained therein.

TO underſtand the State of Dioceſan Churches in Aſia Minor, it will be proper, before we deſcend to Particulars, to examine the Extent of the Country in groſs, and ſee how many Dioceſes are to be found in the whole: For by this we may make an Eſtimate of them in general, allowing each Dioceſe its Proportion upon an equal Diſtribution of the Country into ſo many Parts as there were Dioceſes in it. Not that they were really ſo equally divided: (For in ſumming up the Particulars we ſhall find here were ſome of the largeſt and ſome of the ſmalleſt Dioceſes in the World:) But we may conceive them as equal, in order to make a Diviſion of the whole Country at once among them. Now Dr. Heylin in his Geography [a] reckons the length of Aſia minor from the Helleſpont to the River Euphrates to be 630 Miles; and the breadth from Sinus Iſſicus in Cilicia to Trabezond in Pontus to be 210 Miles. The antient Geographers Strabo [b] and Pliny [c] make it almoſt 200 Miles more in length. But then their Accounts are taken from ſome antient Periplus or Sea-voyage, which never proceeds in a direct Line, but takes in the Bendings and Windings of the Sea, which may eaſily ſtretch 600 to 800 Miles: So that the Accounts may be the ſame, when Allowance is made for the Exceſſes of one way of meaſuring above the other. As to the breadth, Pliny's Account is rather leſs: For he makes it but bare 200 Miles [d] from Sinus Iſſicus to the Euxine Sea. But then he ſays, this was the narroweſt Part of it, where the two Seas almoſt made it a Peninſula. And it is certain in other Parts it was much broader. For Strabo [e] reckons the breadth of Cappadocia only from Pontus to Mount Taurus 1800 Stadia, which is above 200 Miles: And yet Caſaubon [f] ſuppoſes, that by Pontus he does not mean the Pontus Euxinus, but the Province of Pontus, which was to be added to the breadth of Aſia on one ſide of Cappadocia, as Cilicia was on the other. So that we can hardly ſuppoſe the breadth of Aſia, taking one Part with another, to be leſs than 300 Miles. Now this was divided by the Romans into two large Civil Dioceſes, the Aſiatick and Pontick, each of which had ten or eleven Provinces in them, and every Province ſeveral Cities and Epiſcopal Dioceſes, beſide thoſe of Iſauria and Cilicia, which are reckoned to the Oriental Dioceſe, and were under the Patriarch of Antioch. Chriſtopherſon in his Tranſlation of Theodoret, makes a ſtrange Miſtake concerning theſe Biſhopricks. For whereas Theodoret ſays, that Aſia or the Aſiatick Dioceſe was τῶν ἕνδεκα ἀρχόντων, under eleven Civil Prefects [g], he tranſlates it, undecim Antiſtites, as if there had been but eleven Biſhops in all the Aſiatick Dioceſe; and only as many in the Pontick Dioceſe, becauſe Theodoret ſays it had ἰσαρίθμους ἡγεμένας, the ſame number of Governors; whereas Theodoret is not ſpeaking of Eccleſiaſtical Governors but Civil Governors of Provinces; whereof there was the Number Theodoret ſpeaks of in each of thoſe Dioceſes; but Biſhopricks were abundantly more numerous: For ſome ſingle Provinces had above forty, and in the whole Number they were according to Carolus a Sancto Paulo's reckoning 388, viz. In Aſia 42. Helleſpont 19. Phrygia Pacatiana Prima 29. Pacatiana altera 5. Phrygia Salutaris 20. Lydia 24. Caria 25. Piſidia 28. Pamphylia prima 12. Pamphylia ſecunda 24. Piſidia 19. Lycaonia 19. Cappadocia prima 6. Cappadocia ſecunda 6. Cappadocia tertia 5. Armenia prima 5. Armenia ſecunda 10. Galatia prima 7. Galatia ſecunda 4. Pontus Polemoniacus 6. Elenopontus 6. Paphlagonia 5. Honorias 5. Bithynia prima 14. Bithynia ſecunda 4. Cilicia prima 7. Cilicia ſecunda 9. Iſauria 23. In the latter Notitia, which the Reader will find at the end of this Book, the Number is a little increaſed to 403. For though ſome Provinces decreaſed, yet others increaſed in their Numbers, ſo that in the VIIIth Century we find 15 Dioceſes more than were in former Ages, which is no great Alteration in ſuch a multitude, conſidering what great Additions have been made in ſome other Countries in compariſon of this. Now then, ſuppoſing 400 Dioceſes to have been in a Country 600 Miles in length and 300 in breadth, let us examine how much upon an equal Diſtribution will fall to every Dioceſe. And it appears upon an exact Computation, that ſuppoſing there had been 450 Dioceſes, there would have been 20 Miles to each Dioceſe: And conſequently, there being not ſo many by 50, every Dioceſe muſt have ſo much the more upon an equal Diſtribution. But then it muſt be owned, that the Diſtribution was generally unequal in this Country: For the Biſhopricks of the Pontick Provinces were for the moſt part very large, and thoſe of the Aſiatick Provinces conſequently the ſmaller upon that Account, and abundantly more numerous: So that here the Reader may view the largeſt and ſmalleſt Dioceſes in the World together, and yet the ſame Species of Epiſcopacy maintained in all without Diſtinction.

SECT. II. Of Cappadocia and Armenia Minor.

To begin with the Pontick Provinces, Cappadocia was a very large Country, and had but few Biſhopricks. Strabo [h] reckons it 3000 Stadia in length, that is 375 Miles: But then he takes it in a larger Senſe than we do now, as including all from the Provinces of Lycaonia and Phrygia to the Euphrates; which takes in Armenia minor as well as Cappadocia: For antiently they were all one Kingdom, though afterwards divided into five Provinces, three Cappadocia's, and Armenia prima and ſecunda. But now in all theſe five Provinces there were not thirty Dioceſes at firſt, and ſome of thoſe were new erected in the IVth Century, as Saſima, where Gregory Nazianzen was made Biſhop, which before belonged either to Cæſarea, the Metropolis of Cappadocia prima, from which it was an 100 Miles diſtant; or to Tyana the Metropolis of Cappadocia ſecunda, from which it lay 32 Miles, [i] as Ferrarius computes. This ſhews that theſe Dioceſes were of great Extent: But we have ſtill more certain Evidence of the thing: For Gregory Nazianzen [k] ſays, that St. Baſil, who was Biſhop of Cæſarea, had fifty Chorepiſcopi under him; and Basil himself often speaks of his Chorepiscopi [l] and Country Presbyters and Deacons [m] under them: Which argues his Diocese to be of great Extent, though we cannot precisely fix the Limits of it. And the Paucity of Dioceses in this Province argues the same. For by Carolus a Sancto Paulo's Account, beside Cæsarea, the Metropolis of the first Cappadocia, there were but five Bishopricks more in that Province, Nyssa, where Gregory Nyssen was Bishop, Thermæ Regiæ, Camuliana or Justinianopolis Nova, Ciscissa, and Theodosiopolis at the time of the sixth General Council; which are the same that are mentioned in the later Notitia's, only Methodiopolis is put for Theodosiopolis Armeniæ, to which Province the Council of Chalcedon ascribes it. So that there were really never above five Dioceses in this Province, and two of those, Camuliana and Ciscissa, erected after the Council of Chalcedon. For in the Synodical Epistle of this Province to the Emperor Leo at the end of that Council, there are but two Bishops subscribe beside the Metropolitan of Cæsarea, viz. the Bishops of Nyssa and Thermæ. Sozomen [n] speaks of one Prapidius, Governor of St. Basil's Hospital (called Basilias from its Founder) who was likewise a Bishop that had several Villages under his Jurisdiction. But whether his Diocese was in this Cappadocia is uncertain.

The second Cappadocia, which was made by a Division of the Province in the time of St. Basil, had according to Carolus a Sancto Paulo's Account six Dioceses, Tyana the Metropolis, Sasima, Justinianopolis, Asuna, Faustinopolis, and Cybistra. But as Holstenius [o] has observed, two of these are mistaken. For there never was any such City as Asuna, which is only a corruption in the Latin Editions of the Councils for Sasima; it being in the Greek, ἐπισκοπῶν σασίμων, Bishop of Sasima. And Justinianopolis was only another Name for Mocissus, which Justinian having advanced to be a Metropolis in the third Cappadocia, stiled it by his own Name Justinianople. So that there were really no more than four Dioceses in this Province, and one of them, Sasima, but of late Erection. This was also but an obscure Village, σενὸν κωμύδριον Nazianzen [p] himself calls it. So that the three ancient Dioceses must be of very large Extent, though we have no farther Account of them, save that Pasa a Village twelve Miles distant from Tyana, is said to be in that Diocese [q], by one Buphrantes in the fifth General Council, and Sasima was originally part of the same Diocese, though thirty two Miles distant from the Cathedral. Which sufficiently demonstrates the largeness of Dioceses in this Province.

The third Cappadocia had never above five Bishopricks, Mocissus, Nazianzum, Colonia, Parnassus, and Doara. Of these Mocissus was the Metropolis, which owed its Honour to Justinian, who dignify'd it with the Title of a Metropolis, and as Procopius [r] informs us, gave it his own Name Justinianople; by which Title Peter Bishop of the Place subscribes himself [s] in the Council under Mennas. Doara was but a Village, as Holstenius [t] observes out of St. Basil, who styles it [u] κώμην Δώαρα. And Nazianzus was but a small City, as Gregory Nazianzen himself [w] styles it: But they must have large Dioceses, else the other three must be so much the larger for it. For Geographers place them at a considerable distance from one another. Nazianzus had its Chorepiscopi, sometimes mentioned in Gregory Nazianzen's Epistle [x], which is an Argument that it had a large Country Region.

In Armenia prima, Carolus a Sancto Paulo could find but five Bishopricks, Sebastea the Metropolis, Sebastopolis, Nicopolis, Satala and Berisse. And the latter Notitia's add but one more, Colonia, which is also reckoned to Cappadocia tertia, unless there were two of the same Name in those Provinces. In the second Armenia he augments the Number to Ten, Melitene the Metropolis, Arca, Comana, Arabissus, Cucusus, Ariarathia, Amasa, Zelona, Sophene, Diospontum. But Holstenius in his Animadversions upon the place [y] observes that four of these are to be struck out of the Account: For Amasa or Amasia belonged to Hellenopontus; and Zelona was no other than Zela in the same Province; Sophene belonged to Armenia major; and Diospontum was not the Name of a Bishoprick, but only an old Name for the Province of Hellenopontus. And his Conjecture is confirmed by the later Notitia's, which name the six first of these Dioceses, but none of those four, under the Title of Armenia minor. So that in all these five Provinces upon an exact Computation, there were not above twenty four Dioceses in the whole: Some of them therefore must be very large in a Country of three hundred Miles Extent.

SECT. III. Of Pontus Polemoniacus.

THE next Province to these upon the Euxine Sea, was Pontus Polemoniacus, so called from Polemonium a chief City in the Province; beside which, and Neoæsarea the Metropolis, there were but three other Bishopricks, Trapezus, Cerasus, and Comana: All which lay at a great distance from one another. Polemonium, Cerasus and Trapezus, lay in a Line on the Sea-coast: And by Pliny's reckoning [z] Polemonium and Trapezus were a hundred fifty five Miles distant from each other, and Cerasus lay in the middle between them. Neocæsarea was a hundred Miles within Land, and Comana ſixty from it. Juſtinian [*] mentions theſe five Cities in one of his Novels, and ſays, there were no more in the Province. For Pitius and Sebaſtopolis were not Cities, he ſays, but only Caſtles: And, as Holſtenius [†] obſerves, they were not properly of this Province, but lay in Solo Barbarico, and were only Appendages to this Province, becauſe they could not conſtitute a Province of themſelves. So that though Carolus a Sancto Paulo make Pitius a ſixth Biſhoprick of this Province, yet the later Notitia's leave it out of the number, and only retain the five firſt mentioned. Which ſhews, that for eight hundred Years there never was any Alteration made in this Province, nor more Epiſcopal Dioceſes erected, than there were Imperial Cities, though they lay at ſo great a diſtance from one another.

SECT. IV. Of Helenopontus.

THE next Province to this on the Sea-coaſt, was Helenopontus, which had only ſix Biſhopricks at the time of the Council of Chalcedon, Amaſea the Metropolis, Amiſus, Sinope, Iborea, Zela, and Andrapa, as appears from the Synodical Epiſtle of the Biſhop of this Province [a] to the Emperor Leo: And there was but one more added in After-ages. Of theſe Amiſus and Sinope lay upon the Sea-coaſt at a great diſtance from one another. For Pliny ſays, Amiſus lay in the Way between Polemonium and Sinope, a hundred and twenty Miles from Polemonium [b], and a hundred and thirty from Sinope [c]. Which comes pretty near the Account of Strabo, who reckons it nine hundred Stadia, or a hundred and twelve Miles from Amiſus [d] to Sinope. He alſo ſpeaks of Armena a Village of Sinope [e] fifty Stadia from it. And of Amaſea, the Place of his Nativity, he gives a more particular Account, telling us, that it had a very large Territory one way, which for Number of Villages in it was called χιλιόκωμον πεδίον [f], the Country of a thouſand Villages. This was an In-land City, reckoned by ſome a hundred Miles from Sea. Zela was as far from Amaſea. So that without all doubt theſe were Dioceſes of the largeſt Size, ſince the Cities lay ſo remote from one another.

SECT. V. Of Paphlagonia and Galatia.

NEXT to Helenopontus on the Sea-coaſt lay the Province of Paphlagonia, in which Carolus a Sancto Paulo reckons five Biſhopricks, Gangra the Metropolis, Sora, Junopolis, Pompeiopolis, and Amaſtris. To which Holſtenius has added Dadibra, whoſe Biſhop Polychronius ſubſcribed in the Council of Chalcedon [g] by Peter the Metropolitan of Gangra. In the following Ages the Number decreaſed; for there is no mention of Pompeiopolis or Amaſtris in the later Notitia's of the Church. Among theſe Gangra is noted by St. Baſil [h] as a Place that had ſeveral Churches and Altars in it. Amaſtris was a large City, which grew out of four others adjoining to it, Seſamus, Cytorus, Cromna and Teius, as Ferrarius obſerves, who [i] makes it to be ſixty eight Miles from Heraclea in the next Province of Honorias. And all the reſt ſeem to have been at as great diſtances from each other.

On the South of Paphlagonia lay Galatia, an In-land Country, having Cappadocia on the Eaſt, and Phrygia on the Weſt. This by the Romans was divided into two Provinces, Galatia Prima, and Secunda or Salutaris. In the firſt there were ſeven Biſhopricks, Ancyra the Metropolis, Tabia, Heliopolis, or Juliopolis, Aſpona, Cinna, Berinopolis, and Anaſtaſiopolis. The laſt of which ſeems to be erected in the latter End of the VIIth Century only; for there is no mention of it till the ſixth General Council of Conſtantinople, An. 681. The Greek Notitia's add but one more, Mizzi, retaining all the other old Names; which ſhews that little Alteration was made in this Province for the ſpace of eight Ages in the Church. The other Galatia had originally but four Dioceſes, Piſſinus, Orciſtus, Peteneſſus, and Trochmada or Trochmi: But the number was doubled in After-ages, as appears from the Notitia at the End of this Book, which adds, Eudoxias, Mericium, and Therma or Germocolonia, and Juſtinianopolis, otherwiſe called Spalea. Now Galatia was a large Country, and the Dioceſes (even when theſe four laſt mentioned were added) were ſtill of great Extent. For Baudrand [k] obſerves, that Peſſinus was fifty Miles from Ancyra, and thirty from Therma, by which we may gueſs at the diſtance of other Places. Carolus a Sancto Paulo places Cinna pretty near Ancyra; but Baudrand removes it to the Southern Borders of Galatia nearer Synada in Phrygia [l]. And Ferrarius computes Aſpona to be ſixty four Miles from Ancyra Eaſtward. Berinopolis and Juliopolis ſeem to have been almoſt as much to the Weſt. Which leaves room for the Territory of Ancyra to be ſufficiently large, though I find no particular Account given of it, nor of ſome other Places in theſe two Provinces of Galatia.

SECT. VI. Of Honorias.

NEXT to Paphlagonia on the Sea-coaſt lay the Province of Honorias, or Pontus Honorii, ſo called by Theodoſius the Emperor in honour of his Son Honorius. This was divided from Bithynia by the River Sangarius, and from Paphlagonia by the River Parthenius. Here were antiently five Biſhopricks, and the later Notitia's have but ſix, Claudiopolis, Heraclea, Pruſias, Tium, Cratea, Adrianopolis, which laſt is not to be met with in the Subſcriptions of any antient Council. Of theſe, Tium and Heraclea lay upon the Euxine Sea, thirty eight Miles diſtant from each other, as Pliny [m] informs us. Claudiopo- lis was at as great distance from them in the middle of the Province; Baudrand [n] says, it was above thirty Miles from Heraclea. So that we may judge of Cratia, otherwise called Flaviopolis, and of Prusias, by what we have discovered of the former. All these Cities are sometimes reckoned to Bithynia, because Honorias was antiently Part of Bithynia, till Theodosius made a distinct Province of it.

SECT. VII. Of Bithynia prima and secunda.

BUT after the Separation was made, Bithynia was again divided into two Provinces. In the first of which Carolus a Sancto Paulo reckons fourteen Dioceses. 1 Nicomedia the Metropolis. 2 Chalcedon. 3 Prusa ad Olympum. 4 Prænetum. 5 Helenopolis. 6 Basilinopolis. 7 Apollonias. 8 Hadriana. 9 Cæsarea, al. Smyrdiana. 10 Arista. 11 Patavium. 12 Dablis. 13 Neocæsarea. 14 Cius. In the other Bithynia only four. 1 Nicæa, where the famous Council of Nice was held, the Metropolis of the Province. 2 Apamea. 3 Linoe. 4 Gordus. And the later Notitia of Leo Sapiens makes but one more in both Provinces, though some new Names of Places are inserted. Among these I observe the City of Nice had a large Diocese: For several Regions belonging to it are mentioned in the Council of Chalcedon, in a famous Dispute between the Metropolitans of Nicomedia and Nice, both laying Claim to the Diocese of Basilinopolis, as one of their Suffragans. Anastasius Bishop of Nice pleaded, That Basilinopolis [o] was once but a Region belonging to Nice, as Tacteus and Doris then were, till Julian or some other Emperor made it a City, setting up a Curia or Civil Magistracy therein, upon which it became also a Bishop's See, according to the known Rule and Practice of the Church. So that the Diocese of Nice was once so large, as to have another Diocese taken out of it, and yet there remained several Regions belonging to it. The like may be collected from its distance from other Places. Pliny [p] says, It was twenty five Miles from Prusa, and Ferrarius reckons forty four Miles from Nicomedia, but sets Helenopolis or Drepanum in the Middleway [q] between them. Basilinopolis by mistake is set by Carolus a Sancto Paulo at a greater distance from it, between Nicomedia and Chalcedon; but it must be nearer, having been once a Part of its Diocese, as was observed before. For other Places I find little Account of them in particular, save only that Strabo makes it three hundred Furlongs or thirty seven Miles from Nicomedia to the Mouth of the River Sangarius, whereabout Cius stood; and Ferrarius computes sixty from Nicomedia to Chalcedon, in all which Tract there were but these three Dioceses, and one more called Prænetum; so that if we had a particular Account of Nicomedia and Chalcedon, we might perhaps find them to have had Dioceses of as great Extent as any other. But Apamea and Prusias, Baudrand [r] says, were but nine Miles distant from one another. For these lay in the Southern Parts of Bithynia, and were some of the last in the Pontick Civil Diocese toward the Asiatick Diocese, where, as I observed before, the Cities were more numerous and thicker set together, and consequently the Episcopal Dioceses were generally less than in the other Provinces, as will appear by taking a distinct View of them in order as they lay.

SECT. VIII. Provinces in the Asiatick Diocese. Hellespontus.

IN the Asiatick Diocese the first Province next adjoyning to Bithynia was Hellespontus, so called from the Straits of the Sea named Hellespont, which was its western Border. It was antiently Part of Mysia and Phrygia minor, bordering on Phrygia major Eastward, and Asia to the South. In this Province Carolus a Sancto Paulo has observed nineteen Dioceses in the antient Councils. 1 Cyzicus the Metropolis. 2 Germa. 3 Pæmanium. 4 Occa. 5 Bares. 6 Adrianotheræ. 7 Lampsacus. 8 Abydus. 9 Dardanum. 10 Ilium. 11 Troas. 12 Melitopolis. 13 Adriana. 14 Scepsis. 15 Pionia. 16 Præconesus. 17 Ceramus. 18 Parium. 19 Thermæ Regiæ. But the last of them Holstenius thinks is mistaken for Germa by a corrupt Reading of the antient Subscriptions. The Notitia of Leo Sapiens has but thirteen of these, so that five of them were sunk and united to others in the VIIIth Century. The greatest distance that I can find, of any of these Cities, was not above twenty Miles from one another. Which was the distance between Cyzicus and Parium, and Lampsacus and Abydus. But then Dardanum was but seventy Furlongs or eight Miles from Abydus; Ilium but thirteen Miles from Dardanum; Troas but twenty seven Miles from Abydus, though Pionia, Ilium, Bares, and Dardanum lay between them. So Præconesus was but a very small Island, and Præmanium a Castle once belonging to the Territory of Cyzicus, as Ferrarius has noted out of Strabo, Stephanus, and other antient Writers.

SECT. IX. Asia Lydiana, or Proconsularis.

THE two next Provinces I joyn together, because we sometimes find them under the common Name of Asia Lydiana, or Proconsularis, under which Title Bishop Usher has a most accurate Dissertation [s] upon them, where he distinguishes the several Acceptations of the Name Asia, either for the greater Asia, or Asia minor, or Asia proprie dicta, which was the Romans first Conquests in Asia, containing the Provinces of Phrygia, Mysia, Caria and Lydia; or lastly, for Asia Lydiana or Proconsularis, which was those two Provinces which in Conſtantine's diviſion are called diſtinctly Aſia and Lydia, as we here now take them. In this ſenſe we may call the former, Aſia maxime proprie dicta, which is bounded on the North by the Province of Helleſpontus, on the Eaſt by Phrygia and Lydia, on the South by the River Mæander, which ſeparates it from Caria, and on the Weſt by the Ægean Sea. In it Carolus a Sancto Paulo has found forty two antient Dioceſes. 1 Epheſus the Metropolis. 2 Hypæpa. 3 Trallis. 4 Magnæſia ad Mæandrum. 5 Elæa. 6 Adramyttium. 7 Aſſus. 8 Gargara. 9 Maſtaura. 10 Brullena, al. Priulla. 11 Pitane. 12 Myrrina. 13 Aureliopolis. 14 Nyſſa. 15 Metropolis. 16 Valentinianopolis. 17 Aninetum. 18 Pergamus. 19 Anæa. 20 Priene. 21 Arcadiopolis. 22 Nova Aula. 23 Ægea. 24 Andera. 25 Sion. 26 Fanum Jovis. 27 Colophon. 28 Lebedus. 29 Teos. 30 Erytræ. 31 Antandrus. 32 Pepere or Perpere. 33 Cuma or Cyme. 34 Aulium, al. Aulii Come vel Vicus. 35 Naulochus. 36 Palæopolis. 37 Phocæa. 38 Bargaza, al. Baretta. 39 Thymbria. 40 Clazomenæ. 41 Magneſia. 42 Smyrna. To theſe Holſtenius adds four more, Evaza, Areopolis, Temnus and Argiza. And thirty eight of theſe are the ſame that are mentioned in the Notitia of Leo Sapiens in the ſeventh Chapter of this Book. Now this was but a very ſmall Province for ſo many Dioceſes, if we examine either the whole Extent of it, or ſome particular Dioceſes therein. The Extent of it in length was from Aſſus near Troas to the River Mæander, or the Cities Bargaſa and Sion: Which was antiently the Country of Ionia, Æolis and part of Myſia, about two hundred Miles in length upon the Ægean Sea. But the breadth was nothing anſwerable to its length, being not above fifty Miles, taking one part with another. As to particular diſtances of Places, I find ſome of them thus noted by Ferrarius and Baudrand. Aſſus in the moſt northern Border was fifteen Miles from Gargara, and thirty from Antandrus; but Anæa and Andera lay between or near unto them. From Antandrus to Adramyttium is alſo reckon'd thirty Miles, but then Trenænothyra in Phrygia and Nova Aula in this Province come between them. On the ſame Shore we find Naulochus and Pitane, and then Elea, Myrina and Cyme, whereof Myrina was but ſeven or eight Miles from Elea, and Cyme the ſame diſtance, ſixty Furlongs from Myrina. Between Pergamus and Cyme is reckon'd twenty ſix Miles, but the forementioned Cities Myrina and Elea, with Aminetum and Hierocæſarea, lay between them. On the South of Cyme lay Phocæa, ten Miles from the Mouth of the River Hermus, and about the ſame diſtance from Cyme. From Phocæa to Smyrna is computed twenty five Miles, and from Smyrna to Colophon twenty Miles, but Lebedus lay in the middle way between them. Colophon and Metropolis upon the Cayſtrus were each of them twenty Miles from Epheſus, and Epheſus ſeems not to have had any nearer Neighbour, unleſs it was Priene towards the River Mæander, from whence we may conclude, that Epheſus was the largeſt Dioceſe in all this Province. And by theſe few Hints we may judge of the general Extent of them.

In the other Province of Lydia, Carolus a Sacto Paulo reckons twenty ſix Dioceſes. 1 Sardis the Metropolis. 2 Philadelphia. 3 Tripolis. 4 Thyatira. 5 Septe. 6 Gordus. 7 Trallis. 8 Silandus. 9 Mæonia. 10 Fanum Apollinis. 11 Moſtena. 12 Apollonia. 13 Attalia. 14 Bana. 15 Balandus. 16 Hierocæſarea. 17 Acraſſus. 18 Daldus. 19 Stratonicia. 20 Satala. 21 Gabala. 22 Heraclea. 23 Areopolis. 24 Hellene. 25 Sena, al. Setta. 26 Civitas Standitana. To which Holſtenius adds three more, Maſtaura, Ceraſa, and Orcanis or Hircani, which Triſtan and Carolus a Sancto Paulo both miſtake for a City ſomewhere among the Hircanians, but Holſtenius ſhews it belonged to Aſia minor and this Province of Lydia. I will not ſtand to examine the particular Bounds and Extent of Dioceſes throughout this Province; it being ſufficient to obſerve in general, that both it and Aſia put together, were not larger than the Provinces of Pontus Polemoniacus and Helenopontus; and yet there were not above ten or eleven Dioceſes in thoſe two Provinces, whereas we have diſcovered in theſe above ſeventy five, which is almoſt the Diſproportion of eight to one, and fully makes out the Obſervation I at firſt made of Aſia minor, That it had ſome of the greateſt and ſome of the ſmalleſt Dioceſes, quietly enjoying the ſame Form of Government together.

SECT. X. Of Caria.

THE next Province on the South of Aſia and Lydia, is Caria, bounded on the Eaſt with Lycia, and on the South and Weſt with the Ægean Sea, having the Rivers Mæander and Calbis for its Inland Bounds. Here Carolus a Sancto Paulo has found twenty five Dioceſes. 1 Aphrodiſias the Metropolis. 2 Stauropolis. 3 Cybira. 4 Heraclea Salbaci. 5 Apollonias. 6 Heraclea Latmi. 7 Tabæ. 8 Antiochia ad Mæandrum. 9 Næapolis. 10 Orthoſias. 11 Harpaſa. 12 Alabanda. 13 Stratonice. 14 Alinda. 15 Amyzon. 16 Jaſſus. 17 Bargyla. 18 Halicarnaſſus. 19 Larima, al. Halarima. 20 Cnidus. 21 Myndus. 22 Ceramus. 23 Anaſtaſiopolis. 24 Eriſa. 25 Miletus. The Notitia of Leo Sapiens increaſes the Number to thirty one. Miletus was the Place whither St. Paul called the Elders of Epheſus, which was about forty Miles diſtant from it. But ſeveral Dioceſes lay between them, as Heraclea near Mount Lathmus, which Ferrarius computes but twelve Miles from Miletus, ſo alſo Briullium, Sion and Arpaſa in the ſame Coaſt toward Epheſus. On the South of Miletus the other way, we have Jaſſus fifteen Miles from it, and Tabæ placed between them. From Jaſſus to Halicarnaſſus is computed fifty five Miles, but Bargillia and Mundus ſtand between them. From Halicarnaſſus to Gnidus is thirty Miles, but Ceramus is an intervening Dioceſe. And ſo the Reader may find all the Dioceſes of this Province ſcarce exceeding the Compaſs of ten or fifteen Miles throughout. But this was Territory ſufficient to make them exceed ſingle Congregations, and we need not queſtion but it was true of them all, what Sozomen (Lib. 5. c. 20.) particularly obſerves of Miletus, That in the Time of Julian it had ſeveral Chriſtian Oratories in its Neighbourhood. For he ſays Julian ſent Orders to the Governour of Caria, that whereas there were ſeveral Oratories or Churches built in Honour of the Martyrs near the Temple of Didimæum; (ſo the Temple of Apollo was called, that ſtood before Miletus;) he ſhould, if they were covered and had Communion-Tables in them, burn them with Fire: or, if they were half decayed of themſelves, he ſhould take care utterly to demoliſh and deſtroy them. There were, it ſeems, Churches then in the Suburbs or Country Regions of Miletus, which Julian, remembring what had lately happened to the Temple of Apollo at Daphne in the Suburbs of Antioch, was ſo careful to have deſtroy'd, becauſe they were an Annoyance to his God.

SECT. XI. Of Lycia.

THE next Province to Caria, on the Sea-coaſt, is Lycia, where Carolus a Sancto Paulo reckons twenty eight Dioceſes. 1 Myra the Metropolis. 2 Maſtaura. 3 Telmeſſus. 4 Limyra. 5 Araxa. 6 Podalæa. 7 Sidyma, al. Diduma. 8 Olympus. 9 Zenopolis. 10 Tios. 11. Corydalla. 12 Caunus, al. Acaleia. 13 Acaraſſus. 14 Xanthus. 15 Marciana. 16 Choma. 17 Phellus. 18 Antiphellus. 19 Phaſelis. 20 Aucanda. 21 Eudoxias. 22 Patara. 23 Nyſa vel Neſus. 24 Balbura. 25 Oeneanda. 26 Bubon, al. Bunum. 27 Calinda. 28 Rhodia. The Notitia of Leo Sapiens has moſt of the ſame Names and eight more; for it makes the whole Number of Dioceſes thirty ſix. But the leſſer Number in ſo ſmall a Province is ſufficient to ſhew the narrow Extent of its Dioceſes in compariſon of thoſe of the Pontick Provinces. For this Province was not above eighty or an hundred Miles ſquare, and the Cities therefore, one may eaſily conclude, lay pretty cloſe together. Phellus is reckoned but ſix Miles from Antiphellus one way, and ten from Myra the Metropolis another way. Antiphellus was nine from Patara, and Telmeſſus and Patara ſcarce ſo much from Xanthus; for Baudrand reckons but ſeventy Furlongs. By which it is eaſy to make an Eſtimate of the remaining Cities of this Province, which lay about equal Diſtances from one another.

SECT. XII. Of Pamphylia prima and ſecunda.

THE next Province on the ſame Shore, is Pamphylia, divided by the Romans into two, called Pamphylia prima and ſecunda. In the ſecond of them, which bordered upon Lycia, Carolus a Sancto Paulo reckons twenty ſix Dioceſes. 1 Perga the Metropolis. 2 Termeſſus. 3 Eudoxias. 4 Maximianopolis. 5 Palæopolis. 6 Penteneſſus. 7 Diciozanabrus, al. Zenopolis. 8 Ariaſſus. 9 Pugla. 10 Adriana. 11 Attalia. 12 Magidis. 13 Olbia. 14 Corbaſa. 15 Lyſinia. 16 Cordylus. 17 Lagania. 18 Panemoticus. 19 Geone. 20 Commachum. 21 Silvium. 22 Piſinda, al. Sinda vel Iſinda. 23 Talbonda. 24 Unzela. 25 Gilſata. 26 Pella. To which Holſtenius adds five more, Colobraſſus, Coraceſium, Senna, Primopolis, and Seleucia. But three of theſe are by Carolus a Sancto Paulo ſet in the other Pamphylia with nine more, in this order. 1 Sida the Metropolis. 2 Aſpendus. 3 Etene. 4 Erymne. 5 Caſſus. 6 Semneam, which is the ſame with Senna before mentioned. 7 Carallus. 8 Coraceſium, mentioned before. 9 Syſdra. 10 Lyrbæ. 11 Colibraſſus. 12 Selga. To which Holſtenius adds Catana, which makes the whole Number in theſe two Provinces forty one. And the Number is ſome Evidence that they were comparatively but ſmall. Sometimes, as Holſtenius has obſerved, two of them were united together. For in the Council of Conſtantinople under Flavian, one Sabianianus ſubſcribes himſelf Biſhop of Eudocias, Termeſſus, and Jobia [*]. Which we find in the firſt Seſſion of the Council of Chalcedon. And in the time of Leo Sapiens ſome more of them were united together; for his Notitia has but thirty ſix Dioceſes in both the Provinces. Yet any of them ſingle were of a competent Extent, to confute the Notion of thoſe who make Epiſcopal Dioceſes only Pariſh-Churches.

SECT. XIII. Of Lycaonia.

ON the North of Pamphylia, more within Land, lay the Province of Lycaonia, where we find nineteen Dioceſes. 1 Iconium the Metropolis. 2 Lyſtra. 3 Derbe, all mentioned in the Acts of the Apoſtles. 4 Onoſada, al. Uſada. 5 Amblada. 6 Honomada. 7 Laranda. 8 Baratta. 9 Hyda. 10 Sabatra. 11 Canna. 12 Berinopolis. 13 Iliſtra. 14 Perte. 15 Arana, al. Barattа. 16. Iſaura. 17 Miſthium. 18 Corna. 19. Pappa. To which Holſtenius adds another, called Hydmautus, or Gadamautus in the Acts of the Council of Chalcedon. But the Notitia of Leo Sapiens has but fifteen.

SECT. XII. Of Piſidia.

IN the next Province of Piſidia, Carolus a Sancto Paulo finds twenty Dioceſes. 1 Antiochia the Metropolis. 2 Sagalaſſus. 3 Sozopolis. 4 Apamea. 5 Tityaſſus. 6 Baris. 7 Adrianopolis. 8 Limenopolis. 9 Laodicea Combuſta. 10 Seleucia. 11 Adada. 12 Mallus. 13 Siniandus. 14 Metropolis. 15 Paralaus. 16 Bindeum. 17 Philomeum, which ſome place in Phrygia. 18 Proſtama. 19 Gortena. 20 Theodoſiopolis. The Notitia of Leo Sapiens augments the Number to twenty three. I ſtand not to make any particular Remarks upon theſe Dioceſes, becauſe any Reader that knows theſe two Provinces, will easily imagine they are not to be compared with the other Dioceſes in the Northern Parts of Pontus.

SECT. XV. Of Phrygia Pacatiana and Salutaris.

THE laſt Provinces in the Aſiatick Dioceſe, are thoſe which the old Greeks and Romans called by one common Name Phrygia Major, but the Roman Emperors divided it at firſt into two, and then into three Provinces, one called Phrygia Salutaris from the Medicinal Waters found there, another Phrygia Pacatiana, or as ſome Books read it corruptly, Capatiana; and a third Pacatiana Secunda. In Phrygia Salutaris, Carolus a Sancto Paulo reckons up twenty Dioceſes. 1 Synnada the Metropolis. 2 Dorylæum. 3 Polybotus. 4 Nacolia. 5 Midaium. 6 Hipſus. 7 Prymneſia. 8 Myrum or rather Merum. 9 Eucarpia. 10 Lyſias. 11 Auguſtopolis. 12 Bryſum. 13 Otrum. 14 Stectorium. 15 Cinnaborium. 16 Amadaſſa. 17 Cotyaium. 18 Præpeniſſus. 19 Docimæum. 20 Amorium.

In Phrygia Pacatiana prima, he recounts twenty nine. 1 Laodicea the Metropolis. 2 Tiberiopolis. 3 Azana. 4 Itoana, or Bitoana. 5 Ancyra Ferrea, which Holſtenius obſerves to be ſometimes attributed to the Province of Lydia adjoyning. 6 Cidiſſus. 7 Egara, which Holſtenius corrects into Aliana. 8 Pelte. 9 Apira. 10 Cadi. 11 Tranopolis vel Trajanopolis. 12 Sebaſta. 13 Eumenia. 14 Temenothyræ. 15 Aliona. 16 Trapezopolis. 17 Silbium. 18 Iluſa. 19 Nea. 20 Chæretapa. 21 Coloſſa, now called Chone. 22 Sinaus. 23 Philippopolis. 24 Themiſonium. 25 Sanis. 26 Acmonia. 27 Theodoſiopolis. 28 Bleandrus. 29 Atanaſſus. Holſtenius ſtrikes out one of the Number, for Nea is but a corruption of the Greek, for Sanæa or Sanans, as he ſhews, but he finds out another, call'd Dioclia, to ſupply its room.

In Pacatiana ſecunda there were but five Dioceſes, being by much the leaſt of all the Provinces. 1 Hierapolis the Metropolis. 2 Dionyſiopolis. 3 Anaſtaſiopolis. 4 Moſynus. 5 Attudi. But this Province being of later Erection, theſe Dioceſes are more commonly attributed to Phrygia Pacatiana without any Diſtinction. Now I obſerve of Phrygia in general, that ſome of its Dioceſes bordering upon Galatia, were like thoſe of Galatia and the other Pontick Provinces, of a larger Extent than the reſt about Hierapolis and Laodicea, which two Metropolitical Sees were not at very great Diſtance from one another. Ferrarius in one place ſays, but ſix Miles; but it ſeems to be a Typographical Error, for in another place he makes Coloſſæ † to be between Hierapolis and Laodicea upon the Confluence of the Rivers Lycus and Mæander, at twenty Miles diſtance from them both. So that there muſt be a miſtake one way or other. Pliny is very exact in deſcribing the Situation of Laodicea [*], for he ſays, it ſtood upon the Lycus, and had its Walls waſhed alſo with the Aſopus and the Caprus: But yet he does not tell us how far the Confluence of theſe Rivers was from the Confluence of the Lycus with the Mæander, where Coloſſæ ſtood. But it may be concluded, it was no greater Diſtance from it, ſince all Authors agree, that Laodicea ſtood near the Mæander; and theſe three Cities, Coloſſæ, Hierapolis, and Laodicea, which St. Paul joyns together, are ſaid by Chryſoſtom, Theodoret, and others to be very near each other. They who have Opportunity to conſult Antonine's Itinerary, which at preſent I have not, may perhaps find them more exactly deſcribed, and limited with more certain Bounds than I can pretend to aſſign them. If the firſt Opinion of Ferrarius be true, and agreeable to Antonine, That they lay but ſix Miles aſunder; then it will readily be concluded, that the Dioceſes in this part of Phrygia, were comparatively very ſmall, ſince by Carolus a Sancto Paulo's Deſcription, Itoana, Trapezopolis, Attudi, Moſynus, and Antioch upon the Mæander in Caria, ſeem not to have been at much greater Diſtance from one another.

SECT. XVI. Of Iſauria and Cilicia.

BESIDE theſe ſeveral Provinces of the Aſiatick and Pontick Dioceſes in Aſia Minor, there were alſo three Provinces in it which were reckoned to the Eaſtern Dioceſe and the Patriarchate of Antioch, viz. Iſauria, Cilicia Prima, and Cilicia Secunda, which muſt be ſpoken of in this place. Iſauria was antiently reckoned only a part of Cilicia, but from the time of Conſtantine both in the Civil and Eccleſiaſtical Account it was eſteemed a diſtinct Province. Carolus a Sancto Paulo mentions twenty two Dioceſes. 1 Seleucia the Metropolis. 2 Celenderis. 3 Anemurium. 4 Lamus. 5 Antiochia ad Tragum. 6 Selinus, al. Trajanopolis. 7 Jotape. 8 Diocæſarea. 9 Philadelphia. 10 Domitiopolis. 11 Titopolis. 12 Hierapolis. 13 Niphelis. 14 Daliſandus. 15 Claudiopolis, al. Iſauria. 16 Germanicopolis. 17 Sbide, al. Iſis. 18 Ceſtrus. 19 Olbus. 20 Lybias. 21 Hermopolis. 22 Irenopolis. To which Holſtenius adds two more; Charadra and Lauzada, which is ſometimes written corruptly Vaſada and Nauzada.

In Cilicia Prima there were eight Dioceſes. 1 Tarſus the Metropolis. 2 Pompeiopolis. 3 Sebaſte. 4 Coricus. 5 Adana. 6 Mallus. 7 Zephyrium, and 8 Auguſta, added by Holſtenius, who ſhews it to be a diſtant place from Sebaſte.

In the Cilicia there are reckoned nine. 1 Anazarbus the Metropolis. 2 Mopſueſtia. 3 Ægæ. 4 Epiphania. 5 Irenopolis. 6 Flaviopolis. 7 Caſtabala. 8 Alexandria, now called Scanderon. 9 Roſſus, in the Confines of Syria. The greateſt Part of theſe were large Dioceſes, like thoſe of Syria, as any one that computes the diſtance be-

SECT. XVII. Of Lazica or Colchis.

SOME reckon Lazica, which was antiently called Colchis, an Appendix to Aſia Minor, and therefore I mention it in this place. It is all the Country on the Euxine-Sea from Trebezond in Pontus to Phaſis, which Strabo reckons near two hundred Miles. The modern Notitia's ſpeak but of five Dioceſes, but that of Leo Sapiens in Leunclavius has fifteen. It was firſt made a Roman Province in the time of Juſtinian, who mentions the Cities [t] that were in it, Petra and Juſtiniana; with four Caſtles, Pitius, Sebaſtopolis, Archæopolis and Rhodopolis, which had antiently been in the Hands of the Romans; and four other Caſtles, Scandias, Sarapenes, Muriſios, and Luſieros, which he had lately taken out of the Hands of the Perſians. Of theſe one is as antient as the Council of Nice: For Stratophilus Biſhop of Ptyuſium or Pitius ſubſcribes there among the Biſhops of Pontus Polemoniacus, to which Province it was then annexed, as lying in Solo Barbarico, and not conſtituting any other Province. In the ſixth General Council there is mention of Petra, and Phaſis the Metropolis. And that is all the Account we have of them in the antient Councils.

SECT. XVIII. Of the Iſle of Lesbos and the Cyclades.

ANOTHER Appendix to Aſia Minor, are the leſſer Iſlands of the Ægean Sea, which conſtituted a Province by themſelves. Carolus a Sancto Paulo reckons four Dioceſes in Lesbos it ſelf, Mytelene, Methymna, Tenedos, and Poroſelene. But Poroſelene and Tenedos were diſtinct Iſlands by themſelves, which ſometimes had Biſhops of their own, and ſometimes were united to Lesbos: In the Council of Sardica, Dioſcorus ſubſcribes himſelf Biſhop of the Iſle of Tenedos alone: But in the ſecond Council of Epheſus, and in the Council of Chalcedon, Florentius ſubſcribes himſelf Biſhop of Lesbos and Tenedos together. Now as we muſt ſay, that Tenedos was but a ſmall Dioceſe by it ſelf, for it was but ten Miles in compaſs, as Ferrarius computes; ſo when Lesbos was joyned with it, it was a large one. For Pliny ſays, Lesbos alone had nine famous Towns, and Strabo makes it 1100 Stadia, or 140 Miles in compaſs.

The other Iſlands, called Cyclades, were divided into eleven diſtinct Dioceſes. 1 Rhodus the Metropolis. 2 Samos. 3 Chios. 4 Coos. 5 Naxus. 6 Paros. 7 Thera. 8 Delos. 9 Tenus. 10 Melos. 11 Carpathus. Now the largeſt of theſe, Rhodes, Samos and Chios, were about 100 or 120 Miles in compaſs, as Pliny [u] informs us. But the leſſer ſort of them, Tenos and Thera, were not above fourteen or fifteen Miles long, or forty in compaſs. So that among theſe we find Dioceſes of different Extent, as in the reſt of Aſia, but all agreeing in the ſame Species of Epiſcopal Government; and ſome of them, as Lesbos, having their Chorepiſcopi, but none ſo ſmall as to be confined to a ſingle Congregation.

And ſo we have gone over all the Provinces of the Eaſt under the Civil Government of the Præfectus Prætorio Orientis, except the ſix Provinces of the Thracian Dioceſe, which becauſe they are European Provinces, we will conſider them as ſuch among the Provinces of Europe, and give them the firſt place in the following Chapter.

CHAP. IV.

SECT. I. Of the ſix Provinces of Thrace. And firſt of Scythia.

IN Purſuance of the former Enquiry, we are led out of Aſia Minor into the Provinces of Europe, where the ſix Provinces of the Thracian Dioceſe, Europa, Thracia, Hæmimontis, Rhodope, Mœſia ſecunda, and Scythia, firſt offer themſelves to Conſideration. This was all the Country from Macedonia and the River Strymon to the Danube, which is now Romania and Bulgaria. A Country extending from Conſtantinople to Sardica above three hundred Miles one way, and from the Ægean Sea to the Danube almoſt as much the other. In all theſe Provinces the Dioceſes were very large. For in Scythia, the moſt Northern Province, there was but one Biſhoprick, though there were many Cities. For the Biſhop of Tomi was the ſole Biſhop of this whole Region, as is noted by Sozomen [a] and Theodoret [b] and other antient Writers, by whom he is ſometimes called the Biſhop of Tomi, and ſometimes the Biſhop of Scythia, as being the only Superintendent of all the Churches in that Scythia, which was made a Province of the Roman Empire.

SECT. II. Of Europa.

THE Province of Europa had alſo large Dioceſes. For ſeveral Cities were under one Biſhop. We find in the Acts of the Council of Epheſus [c] a Petition offered to that Council by the Biſhops of this Province, wherein they pray, that an Immemorial Cuſtom of their Country might be continued, whereby the Biſhop of Heraclea had alſo Panium in his Dioceſe, the Biſhop of Bizya had Arcadiopolis, the Biſhop of Cœle had Callipolis, the Biſhop of Subſadia had Aphrodiſias: To which Petition the Council agreed, and ordered, that no Innovation ſhould be made in the matter. Nor was there any Alteration in the time of the Council of Chalcedon: For there we find one Lucian [d] ſtyled Biſhop of Bizya and Arcadiopolis ſtill. But in the Council of Conſtantinople under Mennas [e] we meet with ſome Alterations: For there Panium had a diſtinct Biſhop from Heraclea, and Callipolis from Cœle. And in the Notitia of Leo Sapiens in Leunclavius, Bizya and Arcadiopolis are not only diſtinct Biſhopricks, but both of them advanced to the Honour of Autocephali or Titular Metropolitans in the Church. In this Province ſtood alſo Byzantium, once ſubject to Heraclea the Metropolis, till it was rebuilt, and advanced to be the royal City by Conſtantine, after which it grew ſo great and populous, as to equal Old Rome. Sozomen [f] ſays, Conſtantine adorned it with many noble Oratories; and it appears from one of Juſtinian's Novels [g] that in his time four of theſe Churches had no leſs than five hundred Clergy of all ſorts belonging to them. The Novatians themſelves, as Socrates [h] obſerves, had three Churches within the City: And in the Suburbs, or Region belonging to the City, the Catholicks had many Pariſhes and Churches at a conſiderable diſtance, as Hebdomum, Sycæ, Marianæ, Hieron, Elea, Therapea and Heſtiæ, otherwiſe called Michaelium, which Sozomen [i] ſays, was thirty five Furlongs from the City by Water, and ſeventy by Land. I think it needleſs to be more particular in the Deſcription of this Dioceſe, ſince theſe are ſufficient Indications of the largeneſs of it. I ſhall only add concerning this Province of Europa, that though Carolus a Sancto Paulo reckons thirteen Dioceſes in it, Heraclea, Panium, Cœlos, Callipolis, Cyla, Aphrodiſias, Theodoſiopolis, Cherſoneſus, Druſipara, Lyſimachia, Bizya, Selymbria and Arcadiopolis: Yet really there were but nine: For Cœlos and Cyla, as Holſtenius has obſerved [k], were two Names for the ſame City, and Callipolis was joyned in the ſame Dioceſe with it; in like manner as Panium was annexed to Heraclea, and Arcadiopolis to Bizya. So that theſe were anciently Dioceſes of great Extent.

SECT. III. Of Thracia.

IN the Province of Thracia, properly ſo called, there were but four Dioceſes, Philippopolis, Diocletianopolis, Nicopolis and Dioſpolis. And the modern Notitia's, that of Leunclavius only excepted, have but three: For Nicopolis is not mentioned in them.

SECT. IV. Of Hæmimontis.

IN the Province of Hæmimontis there were antiently ſix Dioceſes, Adrianopolis, Meſembria, Sozopolis, Plutinopolis, Develtus and Anchialus. The latter Notitia's reckon but the four firſt, and Zoida inſtead of the two laſt, which are omitted, as being ſunk or united into one.

SECT. V. Of Rhodope.

IN the Province of Rhodope, Carolus a Sancto Paulo finds ſix Dioceſes, Trajanopolis, Maximianopolis, Abdera, Maronia, Ænus, and Cypſela. To which Holſtenius adds, Topirus, which the other by miſtake places in Macedonia. But theſe were ſo far from increaſing in later Ages, that they ſunk into three, Trajanopole, Anaſtaſiopole, and Perus, which are all that the modern Notitia's mention.

SECT. VI. Of Mœſia ſecunda.

IN Mœſia inferior, or ſecunda, the laſt of the ſix Thracian Provinces, which is now much the ſame with Bulgaria, Carolus a Sancto Paulo reckons nine Dioceſes, Marcianopolis, Nicopolis, Novæ, Abritum, Duroſtorum, Dionyſiopolis, Odeſſus, Apiaria, Comæa; to which Holſtenius adds another called Triſta, or Priſta, by Socrates, and Nicephorus Caliſtus σεξανλάωρσα. But whether increaſed or diminiſhed, we know not, for there is no Account of them in the Notitia's of later Ages. I make no further Remark upon theſe Dioceſes, ſave that they were generally large ones, as any one that will caſt his Eye upon a Map, or examine particular diſtances of Cities, will eaſily be convinced. And we may make the ſame general Obſervation upon moſt of the Dioceſes of the European Provinces in Macedonia, Dacia and Illyricum, till we come as far as Italy. For which Reaſon, it will be ſufficient to give the Reader only a Catalogue of the Names of Dioceſes in every Province of thoſe Regions, according to the Order and Diſtribution of them in the Church, following the Model of the Civil Government, which divided theſe Countries into three great Dioceſes, and ſeventeen or eighteen Provinces, under the general Name of Illyricum Orientale and Occidentale.

SECT. VII. Provinces in the Civil Dioceſe of Macedonia. Epiſcopal Dioceſes in Macedonia prima and ſecunda.

THE firſt of theſe are the Provinces of Greece, which by the Romans are all comprehended under one common Name of the Civil Dioceſes of Macedonia, which with the Dioceſe of Dacia was antiently the Diſtrict of the Præfectus Prætorio Illyrici Orientalis. In the Dioceſe of Macedonia were antiently ſix Provinces, or according to Hierocles's Account, ſeven: Macedonia prima and ſecunda, Epirus vetus, and Epirus nova, Theſſalia, Achaia, and the Iſle of Crete. Carolus a Sancto Paulo confounds the two Macedonia's together, and reckons ſeventeen Dioceſes in both. 1 Theſſalonica the Metropolis of the firſt Macedonia. 2 Philippi the Metropolis of the ſecond. 3 Stobi the old Metropolis of the ſecond Province. 4 Berrhæa. 5 Dium. 6 Particopolis. 7 Doberus. 8 Caſſandria. 9 Neapolis. 10 Heraclea Pelagoniæ. 11 Torone. 12 Lete. 13 Topiris. 14 Serre. 15 Heraclea Strymonis. 16 Iſle of Thaſſus. 17 Hephæſtia in the Iſle of Lemnos. To which Holſtenius [m] adds Primula and Zapara, but rejects Topiris, as belonging to Rhodope a Province in the Thracian Dioceſe, and obſerves of Serre, that it was but another name for Philippi.

SECT. VIII. Of Theſſalia.

THE next Province upon the Ægæan Sea is Theſſalia, where Carolus a Sancto Paulo finds but eight Dioceſes. Lariſſa the Metropolis, Demetrius, Echinus, Cypera, Metropolis, Lamia, Triccæ and Thebæ Phthioticæ. But Holſtenius [n] adds three more, Diocæſarea, Gomphi and Scarphia, the laſt of which Carolus a Sancto Paulo confounds with Echinus. The Notitia in Leunclavius calls this Province Hellas ſecunda, and names eleven Dioceſes in it, four of which retain their old Names, by which it is reaſonable to conjecture, that Hellas ſecunda and Theſſalia were but two Names for the ſame Province; and the Number of Dioceſes agreeing exactly in both Accounts, we may conclude there never were above eleven Dioceſes in all this Province.

SECT. IX. Of Achaia, Peloponneſus and Eubœa.

THE next Province to Theſſaly is Achaia, which was a very large Province, including not only what the Antients called Attica and Achaia, but alſo all Peloponneſus, and the Iſle of Eubœa. Here Carolus a Sancto Paulo finds twenty ſix Dioceſes, four of which were in the Iſle of Eubœa. 1 Chalcis, now called Negroponte. 2 Oreum. 3 Porthmus. 4 Cariſtus. Nine in Peloponneſus. 1 Corinthus the Metropolis of the whole Province. 2 Argos. 3 Tegea. 4 Megalopolis. 5 Lacedæmon. 6 Meſſena. 7 Corone. 8 Petræ. 9 Hellice. Thirteen in the other Part of Achaia. 1 Athenæ. 2 Megara. 3 Theſpiæ. 4 Naupactus. 5 Secorus. 6 Elatea. 7 Opus. 8 Strategis. 9 Thebæ. 10 Platea. 11 Tanagra. 12 Marathon. 13 Carſia, al. Coriſſia. Holſtenius adds another Corone or Coronia in Bœotia, beſide the Corone that was in Peloponneſus. The Notitia of Leo Sapiens in Leunclavius and the ſeventh Chapter of this Book, makes three Provinces of this, calling them Hellas prima, and Peloponneſus prima and ſecunda, and the number of Dioceſes is pretty near the ſame, by which we may gueſs no great Alteration was made in them for ſeveral Ages. The Largeneſs of theſe Dioceſes may eaſily be concluded from the Greatneſs of many of the Cities and their large Territories, which the Reader may find already demonſtrated by Dr. Maurice in his Diſcourſe of Dioceſan Epiſcopacy, p. 380. concerning Thebes, Athens, Lacedæmon, Megalopolis, and other Cities of this Province in particular.

SECT. X. Of Epirus Vetus and Epirus Nova.

THE next Region is Epirus, ſeparated from Achaia by the River Achelous. This was antiently one Kingdom, but the Romans divided it into two Provinces, Epirus Vetus and Epirus Nova. In the former, Carolus a Sancto Paulo reckons ten Dioceſes. 1 Nicopolis the Metropolis. 2 Anchiaſmus. 3 Phœnicia. 4 Dodone. 5 Adrianopolis. 6 Buthrotum. 7 Euria. 8 Photica. 9 Iſle of Cephalenia. 10 Iſle of Corcyra. In the new Epirus only eight. 1 Dyrrachium, or Doracium, the Metropolis. 2 Scampes. 3 Apollonia. 4 Aulon. 5 Amantia. 6 Lychnidus. 7 Bullidum or Bulis. 8 Prina or Priſna. To which Holſtenius adds Liſtra or Heliſtra, but with ſome Doubting, whether it do not rather belong to Lycaonia. Theſe were very large Dioceſes, above forty or fifty Miles long: Notwithſtanding which, two of them were ſometimes united together: For in the Acts of the Council of Epheſus, as Holſtenius has obſerved, one Felix is called [*] Biſhop of Bulis and Apollonia together. In the Greek Notitia of Leo Sapiens, Old Epirus goes by the name of Ætolia, and has the ſame number of ten Dioceſes only, though not the ſame Names. The other Epirus has ſixteen, but then the Province of Prevalitana is joyned to it, and moſt of its Dioceſes taken in to make up the number. Whence I conclude that the Dioceſes in theſe Provinces have been of great extent in all Ages; the Iſle of Corcyra it ſelf being reckoned by ſome Geographers forty five Miles long, and by Pliny [o] no leſs than ninety ſeven.

SECT. XI. Of the Iſle of Crete.

IN the Iſle of Crete, which was the laſt of the Macedonian Provinces, Carolus a Sancto Paulo names eleven Dioceſes. 1 Gortyna the Metropolis. 2 Gnoſſus. 3 Hierapetra. 4 Lappa. 5 Sabrita. 6 Eleuthera. 7 Cherroneſus. 8 Sidonia. 9 Cyſamus. 10 Citium. 11 Cantanum. The Notitia of Leo Sapiens in Leunclavius makes them twelve, but Hierapetra is there by miſtake of ſome Tranſcriber divided into two, which being corrected reduces them to the ſame number. Whence I conclude, this was pretty near the ſtanding Number for ſeveral Ages. Now Crete is reckoned by Ferrarius and others out of Pliny and Strabo two hundred and ſeventy or three hundred Miles long, and fifty broad. Which makes twelve Dioceſes equal to the reſt of the Macedonian Provinces, all which appear viſibly to be Dioceſes of great extent, without deſcending any farther to give a more particular Account of them.

SECT. XII. Of the Five Provinces in the Dioceſe of Dacia. Of Prævalitana.

THE other civil Dioceſe of Illyricum Orientale, went by the common name of Dacia, conſiſting of five Provinces, Prævalitana, Mœſia ſuperior, Dacia Mediterranea, Dacia Ripenſis and Dardania. Prævalitana lies on the North of Epirus to the Adriatick Sea, being Part of that Country which is now called Albania. Carolus a Sancto Paulo names but two Dioceſes in it, Scodra, the old Metropolis of the Province, and Achrida, which was antiently called Prævalis, but afterwards Juſtinian honoured it with his own Name, Juſtiniana prima, and advanced it to Patriarchal Dignity, aſſigning it all the five Provinces [p] of the Dacian Dioceſe, and the two Pannonia's in the Dioceſe of Illyricum Occidentale, for the Limits of its Juriſdiction. Beſides theſe two Biſhopricks, Holſtenius has found out two more in this Province, Rhizinium and Liſſus, now called Aleſſio on the Adriatick Sea; Carolus a Sancto Paulo alſo by Miſtake places Scodra in the Province of Dalmatia, making Juſtiniana prima a Metropolitan See without any Suffragans under it.

SECT. XIII. Of Mœſia ſuperior.

ON the North of Prævalitana to the Danube lay Mœſia ſuperior, between Pannonia on the Weſt, and Dacia on the Eaſt. Carolus a Sancto Paulo confounds the Epiſcopal Dioceſes of this Province and the Dacia's together, making Sardica the Metropolis of them all, and calling them from that by the common Name of Provincia Sardicenſis; and beſide Sardica he finds but three more Dioceſes in the three Provinces, Remeſſiana, Aquæ, and Caſtrum Martis. But Holſtenius is a little more accurate, and treats diſtinctly of them. He aſſigns to Mœſia ſuperior, Caſtrum Martis, and another called Margus, ſeated on the Confluence of the River Margus and the Danube.

SECT. XIV. Of Dacia Mediterranea and Dacia Ripenſis.

TO Dacia Mediterranea he aſſigns Sardica the Metropolis, and Romatiana and Naiſſus, which he and Pagi make to be the Birthplace of Conſtantine the Great. In the other Dacia, called Ripenſis from its running along the Banks of the Danube between Mœſia prima and ſecunda, he places Aquæ, which is mentioned in the Council of Sardica in St. Hilary's Fragments, and Iſcus or Iſcopolis, another City, whoſe Biſhop ſubſcribed out of the ſame Province in the aforeſaid Council. In his Annotations alſo upon Ortellius [q] he obſerves two other Epiſcopal Cities in this Province, one called Martis by Hierocles, or Stramartis by Procopius, and another called Budine, now Bodine in Bulgaria upon the Danube: But perhaps theſe are both Modern Sees, for he cites no other Authority but that of the Notitia's for them, and Stramartis ſeems to be a corruption of Caſtra Martis.

SECT. XV. Of Dardania and Gothia.

ON the South of Dacia, between it and Macedonia, was the Province of Dardania, divided from Macedonia by Mount Scardus, and from Thracia by part of Mount Hæmus. It is now part of Servia, and was antiently a part of Mœſia, as Dacia alſo was, till the Daci paſſing over the Danube, got themſelves planted in the middle of Mœſia, which from that time was call'd Dacia nova, as the other beyond the Danube was call'd Dacia antiqua, and Gothia. In this Province of Dardania, Carolus a Sancto Paulo finds four Dioceſes. 1 Scupi, the Metropolis. 2 Ulpianum, otherwiſe called Juſtiniana ſecunda. 3 Diocletiana, which at the time of the Council of Sardica was reckon'd a City of Macedonia. 4 Neſſyna or Neſſus. Holſtenius adds another called Pautalia, which Hierocles in his Notitia reckons among the Cities of Dacia Mediterranea, and Stephanus and Ptolemy among the Cities of Thracia, as lying in the Confines of thoſe Provinces. Beſides theſe five Provinces of the Dacian Dioceſe on the South-ſide of the Danube, there was another on the North-ſide out of the Bounds of the Roman Empire, called Dacia Antiqua, and Gothia from the time that the Goths ſeated themſelves in it. Epiphanius ſpeaks of one Silvanus Biſhop of Gothia beyond Scythia, taking Scythia for the Roman Scythia on this ſide the Danube, whereof Tomi was the Metropolis. Whence Holſtenius rightly concludes that Gothia was the Region which is now called Tranſilvania or Walachia. But what Epiſcopal Sees they had, or whether they had in all this Region any more than one Biſhop, as the Scythians and Saracens, and ſome other ſuch barbarous Nations, is uncertain. Carolus a Sancto Paulo thinks, Zarmizegethuſa was the Seat of their Biſhop, becauſe Ptolemy makes it the Royal Seat and Metropolis of the Kingdom. And this he ſuppoſes to be the ſame with Gothia mentioned in the Notitia of Leo Sapiens among the Autocephali, or ſuch Biſhops as had no Suffragans under them. But theſe being Matters involved in obſcurity, I leave them to farther Enquiry.

SECT. XVI. Of the Six Provinces in the Dioceſe of Illyricum Occidentale. Of Dalmatia.

OUT of Illyricum Orientale, we paſs next to the Civil Dioceſe of Illyricum Occidentale, which was under the Government of the Præfectus Prætorio of Italy. In this Dioceſe were ſix Provinces, Dalmatia, Savia, Pannonia ſuperior, Pannonia inferior, Noricum Mediterraneum, and Noricum Ripenſe. In Dalmatia, Carolus a Sancto Paulo reckons four Epiſcopal Dioceſes. 1 Salona the Metropolis. 2 Jadera, now called Zara. 3 Epidaurus, now Raguſa. 4 Scodra or Scutari. But Scodra is wrong placed in Dalmatia, for, as has been noted before, it was rather the Metropolis of Prævalitana. But Holſtenius adds two more in the room of it, Doclea, and Senia, now called Segna, a City upon the Liburnian Shore.

SECT. XVII. Of Savia.

THE next Province to this was Savia, which ſeems to be ſo nam'd from the River Savus running through the middle of it. It is ſometimes called Pannonia Sava, being Part of Pannonia on the Savia, and ſometimes Pannonia Sirmienſis and Cibalienſis, from the Cities Sirmium and Cibalis which lay in this Part of it. But here we conſider it as a diſtinct Province from Pannonia, from which it was ſeparated by the River Dravus, and is what we now call Sclavonia, and Part of Boſnia and Servia. In this Province were ſix Epicopal Dioceſes. 1 Sirmium the Metropolis, near the Confluence of the Savus and the Danube. 2 Singidunum. 3 Murſa, now called Eſſek. 4 Cibalis. 5 Noviodunum. 6 Siſcia.

SECT. XVIII. Of Pannonia ſuperior and inferior.

BETWEEN the River Dravus and the Danube lay the two Pannonia's, ſuperior and inferior, which are now the Southern Part of Hungary. In the former of theſe, Carolus a Sancto Paulo out of Lazius ſpeaks of four Dioceſes: Vindobona or Vienna, Sabaria, Scarabantia and Celia. To which Holſtenius adds Petavia, now called Petow, which the other confounds with Petavia or Batavia Caſtra in Noricum, now called Paſſaw in Bavaria. Victorinus Martyr was Biſhop of this City, though Baronius and many others commonly ſtyle him Pictavienſem, as if he had been Biſhop of Poictiers in France; whereas he was Biſhop of this City in Pannonia prima, called Petavia or Petow, as is obſerved by Spondanus, and Pagi, and Du Pin, in their Critical Remarks upon the Life of that antient Writer. In the lower Pannonia there were but three Dioceſes, Curta, Carpis, and Stridonium, the Birth-place of St. Jerom.

SECT. XIX. Of Noricum Mediterraneum and Ripenſe.

MORE Weſtward from Pannonia was the Province of Noricum, confined on the North with the Danube, and on the South and Weſt with Venetia and Rhætia, two Italick Provinces. This the Romans divided into two, Noricum Mediterraneum and Ripenſe, in both which Lazius mentions but four Dioceſes, Laureacum, now called Lork, Juvavia or Saltsburg, Ovilabis and Solva. Carolus a Sancto Paulo by miſtake adds a fifth, Petavia, Petow; but that, as was ſaid before, belongs to another Province. And the reſt were not erected till the ſixth Century, when that Part of Germany was firſt converted, which is now Carniola and Carinthia, with part of Bavaria, Stiria, Tirol and Auſtria. By which it is eaſy to judge of what vaſt Extent thoſe Dioceſes antiently were, as they are now at this Day; two of them, as I obſerved, being as large as ten or twenty in ſome other Parts of the World, particularly in Paleſtine and Aſia Minor; which have been already conſidered; and the Obſervation will be more fully verified by taking a particular View of Italy, whoſe Epiſcopal Dioceſes come now in Order in the next place to be conſidered.

CHAP. V.

A Particular Account of the Dioceſes of ITALY.

SECT. I. Of the Extent of the Dioceſe of the Biſhop of Rome.

ITALY, in the Senſe we are now to ſpeak of it, as it was taken for the whole Juriſdiction of the Præfectus Urbis & Vicarius Italiæ under the Roman Emperors, was of ſomewhat larger Extent than now it is: For not only the Iſlands of Sicily, Sardinia and Corſica, were taken into the Account, but alſo Rhætia ſecunda, which is that part of Germany, that lies from the Alpes to the Danube. In this Extent it was divided into two large civil Dioceſes, containing ſeventeen Provinces of the Roman Empire, as has been ſhewed before [a]; and in theſe Provinces there were about three hundred Epiſcopal Dioceſes, the Names of which are ſtill remaining, but the Places themſelves many of them demoliſhed or ſunk into Villages, and other new Biſhopricks ſet up in their Room. I ſhall not concern my ſelf with the Number or Extent of the modern Dioceſes, but only thoſe that were antient, and erected within the firſt ſix hundred Years, of which I am to make the ſame Obſervation in general, as I have done upon thoſe of Paleſtine and Aſia minor, that here were ſome of the largeſt, and ſome of the ſmalleſt Dioceſes, for extent of Ground, of any in the World, and yet the ſame Species of Epiſcopacy retained in all without any Variety or Diſtinction. The Dioceſes of the Suburbicary Provinces, that lay next to Rome, were generally ſmall, in compariſon of thoſe that lay farther to the North and Weſt in the Italick Provinces. For about Rome the Country was extreamly populous, and Cities much thicker ſpread, which occaſioned ſo many more Epiſcopal Sees to be erected in thoſe Provinces above the other. This will plainly appear by taking a View of each particular Province, and comparing the Dioceſes one with another: Of which we ſhall be able to give a more exact Account, becauſe ſo much Pains has been taken by learned Men in all Ages, eſpecially Cluver and Holſtenius, Ferrarius and Baudrand in the laſt Age, to deſcribe minutely and exactly the ſeveral Places of this Country, and their diſtance from Rome and one other. To begin with Rome it ſelf: This was a very large Dioceſe in one reſpect, and very ſmall in another. In reſpect of the City it ſelf, and the number of People that were

therein, it might be called one of greateſt Dioceſes in the World. For Pliny [b] ſpeaks of it as the moſt populous City in the Univerſe, in the time of Veſpaſian, when it was but thirteen Miles about. But [c] Lipſius in his Book de Magnitudine Romana, and Mr. Mede [d] and ſome others think, that is meant only of the City within the Walls; for otherwiſe it was but forty two Miles in compaſs when St. John wrote his Revelations in the time of Domitian. And afterward it received conſiderable Additions; for in the Days of Aurelian, the Hiſtorian [e] ſpeaks of it as no leſs than fifty Miles in Circumference. And before this time the Chriſtians made a conſiderable Figure in it: For Cornelius, who lived in the middle of the third Century, ſpeaks of forty ſix Presbyters [f], beſide Deacons, Sub-Deacons, and other inferior Clergy, belonging to the Church in his time. And within half an Age more we find an Account of above forty Churches in it. For ſo many Optatus [g] ſays there were, when Victor Garbienſis the Donatiſt Biſhop was ſent from Africk to be the Antibiſhop there: Though there were forty Churches and more in the City, yet he could not obtain one of them to make his handful of Sectaries look like a Chriſtian Congregation. This, as Baronius and Valeſius have rightly obſerved, was ſpoken by Optatus not of his own Times, but of the time when Victor Garbienſis came to Rome, which was in the beginning of the Diocletian Perſecution. Whence it may be rationally inferred, that if there were above forty Churches in Rome before the laſt Perſecution, there would be abundance more in the following Ages, when the whole City was become Chriſtian. But as by the vaſt Increaſe of this City the Dioceſe was very large within, ſo for the ſame Reaſon it became very ſmall without. For that which was at firſt the Territory of Rome, ſeems afterward to have been ſwallowed up in the City it ſelf by the prodigious Increaſe of it. Inſomuch that ſome have thought, that in the time of Innocent I. the Dioceſe of Rome had no Country Pariſhes belonging to it, but that they were all within the City: Becauſe in his Epiſtle to Decentius Biſhop of Eugubium [h] he ſeems to make this difference between other Dioceſes and that of Rome, that in the Roman Dioceſe the Cuſtom was to ſend the Sacrament from the Mother Church to the Presbyters officiating in other Churches, becauſe all their Churches lay within the City; but this was not proper to be done in other Places, which had Country Pariſhes [i], becauſe the Sacraments were not to be carried to Places at too great a diſtance. But however this was (for learned Men are not exactly agreed upon it, and I conceive it to be a Miſtake) this is certain, that the Dioceſe of Rome could not extend very far any way into the Country Region; becauſe it was bounded on all Sides with neighbouring Cities, which lay cloſe round it. On the North it had Fidenæ, a Biſhop's See in thoſe times, though as Cluver [k] and Ferrarius [l] ſhew out of Dionyſius Halicarnaſſeus, it lay but forty Stadia, or five Miles diſtant from it. On the Eaſt it was bounded with the Dioceſe of Gabii, which ſome by miſtake place ſeventy Miles from Rome, but Holſtenius [m] and Cluver, who are more accurate, tell us, it lay in the middle way between Rome and Prænesſte, about twelve or thirteen Miles from each. In the ſame Coaſt lay Tuſculum, but twelve Miles from Rome. A little inclining to the South lay the Dioceſe of Subauguſta cloſe by Rome. Here Helena the Mother of Conſtantine was buried, whence it was called Subauguſta Helena. Holſtenius [n] ſays, the Remains of it are ſtill viſible at the Place called Turris Pignatara. It was ſo near Rome, that the Writers which ſpeak of Helena's Interment, commonly ſay ſhe was bury'd at Rome in the Church of St. Marcelline in Via Lavicana; which is to be underſtood of Marcelline's Church in Subauguſta, which lay in the Way betwixt Rome and Lavici, whence the Way was called Via Lavicana. If we look to the South of Rome down the River Tiber toward the Sea, there we find three Dioceſes in three Cities, none of them above three Miles from each other, nor above ſixteen Miles from Rome. Theſe were Oſtia, Portus Auguſti, and Sylva Candida. The firſt and ſecond of which lay within two Miles of each other, Oſtia on the Eaſt-ſide, and Portus on the Weſt-ſide of the River Tiber; and Sylva Candida a little more Weſt from Portus. The Site and Diſtance of Oſtia and Portus from Rome we have exactly delivered both from antient and modern Geographers. In Antonine's Itinerary it is call'd eighteen; but Holſtenius [o] obſerves that the antient Miles were ſhorter than the modern, and therefore both he and Ferrarius, and others, reckon theſe Places preciſely but ſixteen Miles from Rome. Now theſe being Sea-ports, had probably the chief extent of their Dioceſes toward Rome, which takes off from the largeneſs of the former. On the Weſt it was bounded with the Dioceſe of Lorium, which lay in Tuſcia in the Via Aurelia betwixt Rome and Turres, which Holſtenius [p] ſays, was but twelve Miles from Rome, and ten from Turres. And many other Dioceſes lay in the ſame Circle about Rome, not at much farther diſtance. For Nepe in Tuſcia was but twenty Miles from Rome, and Sutrium but four from Nepe. Nomentum among the Sabines in Valeria, was but twelve Miles from Rome, and Tibur in the ſame Tract about ſixteen. Lavici in Campania or Latium was but fifteen, and Tres Tabernæ, according to ſome Accounts, but twenty one, and Velitræ ſo near that, that Gregory the Great united them together. But we ſhall ſee more of this in ſpecifying the Dioceſes of each particular Province, and aſſigning the Bounds of ſuch as were moſt remarkable for their nearneſs one to another.

SECT. II. Of Tuſcia and Umbria.

I ſhall begin with thoſe Provinces which are properly called Roman, in Contradiſtinction to the reſt of the Italick Dioceſes; and in each of theſe aſſign both the Names and Number of the antient Epiſcopal Dioceſes, that the Reader who is curious in this matter, may exerciſe his Geographical Knowledge in a more particular Search into the State of them. The firſt of theſe in order is Tuſcia and Umbria, which the Civil and Eccleſiaſtical Account always joins together as one Province, tho' had they diſtinct Bounds upon other Occaſions. Tuſcia was the ſame that was antiently called Etruria, bounded with the Tiber on the Eaſt, and the River Marca on the Weſt, the Apennine Hills on the North, and the Tuſcan Sea on the South; and includes now St. Peter's Patrimony in the Eaſtern Part, and the Dukedom of Florence or Tuſcany in the Weſt. In this Province Carolus a Sancto Paulo finds thirty five antient Dioceſes. 1 Portus Auguſti, now called Porto. 2 Sylva Candida, now Sancta Ruffina. 3 Nepe, vulgo Nepi. 4 Aqua Viva, al. Carpenatum Urbs. 5 Phalaris, now Citta Caſtellana. 6 Ferentium, Ferento. 7 Polymartium, Bomarſo. 8 Hortanum, Horti. 9 Blera, now Bieda. 10 Sutrium. 11 Tarquina. 12 Salpis. But Holſtenius thinks this is miſtaken for Sæpinum in the Province of Samnium. 13 Tuſcani, Tuſcanello. 14 Balneum Regis, Bagnarea. 15 Peruſia, now Perugia. 16 Urbs Vetus, Orvieto. 17 Cluſium, Chiuſa. 18 Cortona. 19 Aretium, Arezzo. 20 Volſinium, Bolſena. 21 Centumcellæ, now Civita Vecchia. 22 Graviſca, now Montalto. 23 Cornetum. 24 Forum Claudii, now Oriolo. 25 Piſa. 26 Luca. 27 Luna. 28 Sena. 29 Florentia. 30 Feſulæ, now Fiezoli. 31 Suana. 32 Manturanum. 33 Ruſella, Roſella. 34 Populonia, Porto Baratto. 35 Volaterræ: To which Holſtenius adds Volſcæ, or Civitas Bulcentina, Caſtrum Valentini and Lorium. Now ſome of theſe, as has been already obſerved, were very near Neighbours to Rome, and they were yet nearer to one another. Nepi was but four Miles from Sutrium, as Ferrarius [q] computes, and ſo they were afterwards united together, as the ſame Author informs us. Portus Auguſti was bounded on one Side with Oſtia, which was but two Miles from it, as Ferrarius [r] and Cluver inform us; and on the other ſide with Sylva Candida, which Carolus a Sancto Paulo places about the ſame diſtance from it. Faleria or Phalaris is reckoned by Cluver [s] about five or ſix Miles from Nepe, and four Miles from Hortanum by Ferrarius [ſs], who ſays Hortanum lay upon the Tiber oppoſite to the Ocriculi in Umbria, and not above four Miles to the Weſt of it. Holſtenius [t] ſhews out of the Jeruſalem Itinerary, that Aqua Viva was but twelve Miles from Ocriculi, and Phaleria lay between them. Polymartium was but five Miles Weſt from Hortanum, as Ferrarius [u] computes, and Ferentium about the ſame diſtance from Polymartium; which two laſt were united into one before the Council of Rome under Martin, An. 649, as Carolus a Sancto Paulo collects from the Subſcriptions of that Council. Blera was but nine Miles from Forum Claudii, as Holſtenius [w] ſhews from the old Itineraries; and Forum Claudii not above five from Sutrium according to Cluver's reckoning. Lorium was but twelve Miles from Rome in the way to Civita Vecchia; as has been ſhewed before. Tarquina is reckon'd by Ferrarius [x] about five Miles from Cornetum, and about the ſame diſtance from Graviſca, by Cluver's Tables. Which is the more probable, becauſe Holſtenius [y] obſerves, that theſe three Dioceſes were at laſt united into one. Centumcellæ or Civita Vecchia lay upon the Sea, 12 Miles from Graviſca, as appears from the Jeruſalem Itinerary in Holſtenius [z]. Tuſcania and Volſinium, and Urbs Vetus, now called Orvieto, and Balneum Regis, had much about the ſame diſtances from one another. And all theſe lay within that little compaſs of Land, which is now call'd St. Peter's Patrimony, hemmed in on the Eaſt and North with the River Tiber, on the Weſt with the River Marta, and on the South with the Tuſcan Sea. A Country that is not much above fifty Miles ſquare, as Cluver rightly deſcribes it. For from Rome to Centumcellæ or Civita Vecchia, which lies but ten Miles from the River Marta, which now divides St. Peter's Patrimony from Caſtro Ducato, Cluver and Holſtenius [†] out of Antonine's Itinerary, in the direct Courſe of the Via Aurelia, reckon but forty ſeven Miles, which do not exceed forty Miles according to the preſent Eſtimation. So that there being in this compaſs twenty Biſhopricks, including Rome in the Number; if we will ſuppoſe all the Dioceſes to be equal, each Dioceſe will be about ten or 12 Miles ſquare, which confirms the Account that has been given of the diſtance of the ſeveral Cities from each other. And hence it appears, that as in ſome Parts of the Kingdom of Naples, Dioceſes have been multiplied above what they were in former

Ages,

Ages, ſo in this and other Parts of the Pope's Dominions they have as ſtrangely decreaſed. For now there are not near half the Number, there being ſometimes two or three or four united into one. For Ferrarius informs us, that Viterbo was raiſed, An. 1074, out of the Ruins of three old ones, Ferentum, Tuſcany and Polymartium. So Citta Caſtellana aroſe from the decay of Faleria and Hortanum. Sutrium was united to Nepe; Tarquina and Graviſca to Cornetum; not to mention any more of this kind, which concern not the preſent Enquirty. As to thoſe Dioceſes which lay in the Weſtern part of Tuſcia, now called the Dukedom of Tuſcany, they were much larger in Proportion than the former, for excepting Feſulæ, which lay but three Miles [a] from Florence, all the other Dioceſes were of greater Extent. Of which I need only give this Evidence, that this Part of Tuſcia is reckoned [b] above two hundred Miles in length, and near a hundred in breadth, excluding the Pope's Dominions. Which being divided among fifteen or ſixteen Dioceſes, will afford a large Territory to every one: So that it is needleſs to look farther for a particular Account of them.

But if we return back again into Umbria, nearer Rome, there we ſhall find Dioceſes of the ſame Size and as thick as in the Patrimony of St. Peter. For it was but a little Tract of Ground, bounded with the Rivers Nar and Tiber and the Apennine Hills, and only a Part of the Old Umbria, which reach'd beyond the Apennine to the Adriatick Sea. In the preſent Umbria, Carolus a Sancto Paulo reckons eighteen Biſhopricks. 1 Ocriculum. 2 Narnia. 3 Tuder, now Todi. 4 Mevania, now Bevagna. 5 Tifernum Tiberinum, now Citta di Caſtello. 6 Interamnia, now Terni. 7 Ameria, Amelia. 8 Trebia, Trebi. 9 Spoletum, Spoleto. 10 Fulginum, Fulgino. 11 Camerinum. 12 Hiſpellum. 13 Aſſiſium. 14 Forum novum, now Veſcovio. 15 Forum-Flaminii, now For-flammo. 16 Vettonium, Bittona. 17 Nuceria, Nocera. 18 Eugubium, Gubbio. To which Holſtenius adds Tadinum [c] and Martula. Now five of theſe, Fulginum, Hiſpellum, Aſſiſium, Forum-Flaminii, and Mevania, lay ſo cloſe together, that none of them was above ten Miles diſtance from any of the other. Fulginum had on the North towards Nuceria, Forum-Flaminii to bound it, which Ferrarius [d] ſays, was but 3 Miles removed from it. Hiſpellum was but the ſame diſtance in the way to Aſſiſium. Trebia on the Eaſt was but ſix Miles from Fulginum, and nine from Spoletum, as Ferrarius alſo informs us [e], who ſays alſo it was but fifteen Miles from Fulginum to Spoletum; ſo that Trebia muſt lie exactly in the way betwixt them. On the South Fulginum was bounded again with Mevania, which was but ſix Miles from it [f]. On the Weſt lay Aſſiſium, famous in modern Stories for the Birth of St. Francis the Father of the Franciſcans; and this Ferrarius ſays was but ten Miles [g] from Fulginum, and about twelve from Perufia in Tuſcia. If we look a little more Northward, from Forum-Flaminii to Nuceria is computed nine Miles [h] by Ferrarius. From Nuceria to Tadinum (the Remains of which, Holſtenius [i] ſays, are yet to be ſeen in the Via Flaminia near Gualdo on the top of the Apennine) is computed no more than eight Miles by Holſtenius [k] and Baudrand. And from Tadinum to Eugubium muſt be about thirteen. But here the Dioceſes began to inlarge toward the Weſtern Parts of this Province, as was obſerv'd before of Tuſcia. For Weſtward of Eugubium there was no City betwixt it and Tifernum Tiberinum, which was twenty Miles from it. Nor had Tifernum Tiberinum any nearer Neighbours than Aretium, which is reckon'd 18, and Callium 22, and Perufia 24 Miles from it, as Baudrand [l] and Ferrarius have computed. But then if we look towards Rome again, and deſcend from the Apennine to the Southern Parts of this Province toward the Rivers Nar and Tiber, we there firſt meet with Martula on the River Nar, which Holſtenius [m] aſſures us, was but ſix Miles to the Eaſt of Spoleto. Down the ſame River lay Interamnia about the ſame Diſtance from Martula. And below that was Narnia, which Cluver [n] from the Jeruſalem Itinerary reckons to be nine Miles from Interamnia; but Holſtenius, who was at the Pains to meaſure it, ſays [o] it was but five Miles and $\frac{2}{3}$ from the Gate of the one City to the Gate of the other. A little to the Weſt of Narnia lay Ameria, which Ferrarius [p] ſays, was not quite ſix Miles from it. And to the South of Narnia, more down the River Nar toward Rome, there was Ocriculum, which the Jeruſalem Itinerary in Cluver [q] makes to be twelve Miles from Narnia; but Ferrarius from the modern Account reckons but eight, and four from Hortanum in Umbria, as has been noted before in ſpeaking of Hortanum. In the middle of this Province upon the Confluence of the Rivers Tinia and Aſius, between Mevania and Perufia lay Vettonium, which Ferrarius [r] accounts ſix Miles from Mevania, and eight from Perufia in Tuſcia. So that all the Dioceſes of this Province, except two or three, were very ſmall, and one with another not to be reckon'd above eight or ten Miles in length, ſince there was ſcarce ſo much diſtance from one City to another. And upon this account, as the Cities decayed, ſeveral of theſe Dioceſes were united together in After-ages. For Tadinum is joyn'd to Nuceria, as Holſtenius [s] informs us. Hiſpellum and Forum-Flaminii are ſwallow'd up in Fulgino. So Mevania and Trebia and Martula are ſunk and united to other Dioceſes; and in all this Province, that I can learn, there is not one new See erected.

SECT. III. Of the Province of Valeria.

OUT of Umbria our next Step toward the Eaſt, is into the Province of Valeria, ſo called, Holſtenius thinks, from the Via Valeria, which ran directly through it. It was bounded on the North with the Apennine, on the Weſt with the River Nar, which divided it from Umbria, on the South with the Tiber and the Anio, which divided it from Latium, or that which is now call'd Campagna di Roma. On the Eaſt it border'd upon Samnium, from which it was divided by a Line drawn from the River Aternus to the Head of Anio. It was anciently the Country of the Sabines and Marſi, and Part of Old Latium, and is now called Sabina in that Part which runs toward Rome, the reſt being now Part of the Dukedom of Spoleto and Abruſſo. In this Province Carolus a Sancto Paulo reckons eleven Dioceſes. 1 Fidenæ, now called Caſtel Jubileo. 2 Nomentum, now Lamentana. 3 Tibur, Tivoli. 4 Nurſia, Norza. 5 Marſi, al. Marruvium, and Valeria. 6 Prænestе, now Paleſtrina. 7 Furconium, Forconio. 8 Amiternum, now S. Vittorino. 9 Reate, Rieti. 10 Cures, Cureſe. 11 Liſta. But Holſtenius [t] obſerves, that the laſt of theſe is miſtaken for Liſſum, or Aleſſio, as it is now called, in Prævalitana on the other ſide of the Adriatick Sea; and Prænestе belongs to Latium: Inſtead of which he ſubſtitutes two others, Pitinum and Forum novum, or Sabinum, now Veſcovio, once a chief City among the Sabines. Now of theſe, Fidenæ was but five Miles from the Gates of Rome, as has been noted before. Nomentum was about eight from Fidenæ, and twelve from Rome, as Baudrand [u] ſhews out of Sanſon and Brietius; though others place it beyond Tibur ten Miles, and twenty ſix from Rome. Tibur it ſelf was but ſixteen Miles [w] from Rome, and twelve from Prænestе. But it was a pretty large Dioceſe for all that. For Holſtenius [x] obſerves that Sublaqueum was a Dependent on it, till it became a Monaſtery exempt from all Epiſcopal Juriſdiction; and Ferrarius [y] ſays, that Abbey had fourteen Villages belonging to it. Prænestе was thirteen Miles from Gabii, and fourteen from Anagnia, and not ſo much from Nomentum. Cures, now called St. Anthimo, was only ten Miles from Reate, according to Ferrarius [z], and probably ſomething nearer to Nomentum, becauſe Carolus a Sancto Paulo [a] obſerves out of an Epiſtle of Gregory [b] the Great, that it was united in his time to Nomentum. Some confound Cures with Sabinum, or Forum novum; but Holſtenius [c] ſhews, that Sabinum was a diſtinct City, and ſtood in the place which is now called Veſcovio, where the Ruins of the Cathedral Church are ſtill remaining: Which Baudrand ſays [d], was but three Miles from Reate, and eleven from Interamnia; but the Site of this Place may be paſs'd over as a little uncertain. The Ruins of Amiternum are ſtill to be ſeen, Cluver ſays [e], near where Aquila now ſtands. Ferrarius [f] thinks, it was only five Miles from it. Pitinum was but two Miles from Aquila, and conſequently, as Holſtenius obſerves [g], muſt be near Amiternum. Furconium was another See in that Neighbourhood, but eight Miles from Aquila, as Ferrarius [h] acquaints us. So that theſe three Dioceſes lay in a ſmall compaſs, and are now ſwallowed up in the new Dioceſe of Aquila, which aroſe out of the Ruins of them all united together. The largeſt of theſe Dioceſes in this Tract, were Reate, Nurſia, and Marruvium or Marſi. For from Reate to Nurſia, Baudrand [i] calls it thirteen Miles, Ferrarius twenty: To Aquila twenty five Miles, and as much to Narnia. But Interamnia and Furconium were ſomething nearer to Reute. Marruvium or Marſi on the Lake Fucinus was at a conſiderable diſtance from Furconium and Sulmo, which Cities lay the neareſt to it. But the exact diſtance is not ſo certain, becauſe 'tis not agreed on which ſide the Lake Fucinus Marruvium was.

SECT. IV. Of Picenum Suburbicarium.

OUT of Valeria and Umbria croſs the Apennine we come into the Province of Picenum Suburbicarium, ſo called to diſtinguiſh it from Picenum Annonarium, which belonged to the Italick Dioceſe. This lay betwixt the Apennine on the South, and the Adriatick Sea on the North, and was divided from Picenum Annonarium by the River Æſis on the Weſt, and from Samnium by the River Aternus, now called Peſcara, on the Eaſt; and it is now the Provinces of Marca di Ancona and Abruſſo Ultra. In this Province Carolus a Sancto Paulo reckons fourteen Dioceſes. 1 Pinna, now Penna. 2 Interamnia, now Teramo. 3 Aſculum, Aſcoli. 4 Firmum, Fermo. 5 Tolentinum, Tolentino. 6 Septempeda, now S. Severino. 7 Matelica. 8 Cingulum, Cingulo. 9 Auximum, Oſmo. 10 Potentia. 11 Numana, now Humana. 12 Ancona. 13 Hadria, Adri. 14 Aternum, now Peſcara: To which Holſtenius [k] adds five more, Truentum, Auſinia, Faleronia, Urbs Salvia, now called Urbiſaglia, and Pauſola, or Pauſulæ, as Ferrarius calls it, which now goes by the Name of Monte del Olmo. The moſt Eaſtern City of this Province was Aternum on the Mouth of the River

Aternus or Peſcara, which (as Ferrarius [l] and Baudrand compute) was but eight Miles from Teate, and eleven from Ortona, two Cities in the Province of Samnium, and not above eleven from Adria, and twelve from Pinna. Pinna was the ſame diſtance from Teate and Adria. Interamnia is reckon'd by Ferrarius twenty Miles from Aſculum; but Baudrand ſays only thirteen. In the Weſtern Parts of the Province, Matelica is computed but nine Miles from Septempeda; and Septempeda ſix from Tolentinum, and ten from Camerinum, and twelve from Cingulum; Cingulum is reckon'd but eight from Æſium in Picenum Annonarium, and twelve from Auximum; Auximum twelve from Æſium, and the ſame from Ancona; Ancona twelve from Numana; Numana twelve from Potentia; the Remains of which laſt, Holſtenius ſays [m], are ſtill to be ſeen, not far from Portus Ricanaticus and Laureto. Urbs Salvia, according to Ferrarius's Account, was but ten Miles from Tolentinum, and by Baudrand's but ſix. Firmum, Truentum, and Aſculum lay at a greater diſtance: For Ferrarius reckons them near twenty Miles from each other: But then he ſays, that Pauſulæ was in Comitatu Firmano, and therefore not far from Firmum; and if Faletonia and Aufinia (whoſe Situation is uncertain) lay in thoſe Parts alſo, they might bring the Dioceſes of Aſculum and Truentum to the ſame Pitch with the reſt of the Province. So that few Dioceſes in this Province could be much above ten Miles in Extent, and the largeſt not above twenty, as appears from Ferrarius and other Geographers Computation.

SECT. V. Of Latium and Campania.

FROM the Adriatick Sea we muſt again croſs the Apennine to take a View of Latium and Campania, the antient Glory of Italy along the Tuſcan Sea Eaſtward to the River Silarus from the Tiber and the Gates of Rome. This in the Civil and Eccleſiaſtical Account is reckoned but one Province: But ſince Latium is commonly diſtinguiſhed from Campania, I will ſpeak firſt of the Dioceſes that were in that, as being the neareſt Neighbours to Rome. This Country was antiently bounded with the Rivers Tiber, Anio, and Liris, which laſt divided it from Campania properly ſo called. It now contains Campagna di Roma, and part of Lavoro in the Realm of Naples. It had antiently twenty three Dioceſes, as Carolus a Sancto Paulo and Holſtenius have computed. 1 Subauguſta. 2 Oſtia. 3 Gabii. 4 Albanum. 5 Alba. 6 Antium. 7 Tres Tabernæ. 8 Velitræ. 9 Tuſculum. 10 Lavici. 11 Præneſte. 12 Signia. 13 Anagnia. 14 Ferentinum. 15 Aletrium. 16 Verulæ. 17 Tarracina. 18 Fundi. 19 Formiæ. 20 Aquinum. 21 Caſſinum. 22 Atina. 23 Sora. Of theſe, as has been obſerved before, Subauguſta lay cloſe by Rome, Oſtia ſixteen Miles from Rome and two from Porto; Gabii thirteen from Rome and as many from Præneſte. Tuſculum, which ſome miſtake for Tuſculanum, where Cicero wrote his Tuſculan Queſtions, was a City now call'd Freſcati, and Ferrarius ſays but twelve Miles from Rome. Signia, now called Segni, lay between Tuſculum and Anagnia, ſix Miles from each, nine from Præneſte, and thirty from Rome, as Baudrand informs [n] us from Holſtenius. The ſame Author ſays [o], Ferentinum was but five Miles from Anagnia, and four from Aletrium; and Ferrarius [p] places Verulæ between Anagnia and Sora, nine or ten Miles from each. Lavici is reckoned by Holſtenius [q] but fifteen Miles from Rome, and yet the Dioceſe of Subauguſta came between them: For it was in the Via Lavicana, the direct way that leads from Rome to Lavici. Albanum and Alba are by ſome Authors confounded together, but Holſtenius [r] reckons them diſtinct Cities, and Ferrarius ſays [s] the one was fourteen, and the other ſixteen Miles from Rome. But perhaps the one might only ariſe out of the Ruins of the other, for they were not above two Miles from each other. Velitræ was but four Miles from Alba, and twenty from Rome; Antium on the Tuſcan Shore fourteen from Velitræ and twenty from Oſtia, as the ſame Ferrarius [t] informs us. Between Antium and Velitræ lay Tres Tabernæ, the Place whither the Criſtians came to meet St. Paul from Rome. Carolus a Sancto Paulo thinks it is the ſame which is now called Ciſterna, but Holſtenius ſays [u], it was at ſome diſtance from it in the Via Appia, ſo near Velitræ, that Gregory the Great united theſe two Dioceſes together. Ferrarius ſays [x] it was but five Miles from Velitræ, and twenty ſix (or as Baudrand computes twenty one) from Rome, five from Aricia, and twenty two from Appii Forum, the other Place whither the Brethren came to meet St. Paul. Indeed neither Aricia nor Appii Forum are mention'd as Epiſcopal Sees by any antient Writer: But Ferrarius [y] ſeems to make them both ſo: For he ſays, Aricia was a famous City and a Roman Colony, which by the common Rule of the Church had thereby a Title to an Epiſcopal See: Nor is it any Objection againſt it that it was but ſixteen Miles from Rome, and four or five from Alba, Tres Tabernæ, and Velitræ; for we have ſeen already that many Cities in this Tract were at no greater diſtance from one another. Of Appii Forum he ſpeaks more poſitively, and ſays it was antiently [z] an Epiſcopal See, though from what Authority he tells us not: But there is ſome Reaſon to believe it, becauſe it was a City at a good diſtance from any other. For Tarricina on the Eaſt was near twelve Miles from it, and Tres Tabernæ Weſtward above twenty; so that either Tres Tabernæ and Tarracina must have Dioceses of more than ordinary Extent in these Parts, or else Apii Forum must come between them. But I let this pass, because in Matters of doubtful nature, where we are destitute of antient Authorities, nothing can certainly be determined. I go on therefore with those that are more certain. From Tarracina to Fundi the modern Accounts [a] reckon but ten Miles, though the Jerusalem Itinerary [b] calls it thirteen, and Antonine's Itinerary sixteen. From Fundi to Formiæ the same Itineraries reckon twelve and thirteen, which Ferrarius from the modern Geographers esteems but ten; cautioning his Reader here [c] against a great Error in Strabo, who makes it four hundred Stadia, that is fifty Miles from Tarracina to Formiæ, when indeed it was not half the distance. If we look a little upward from the Sea to the North-eastern part of Latium, there we find Aquinum and Cassinum but five Miles from one another, and Atina the same distance from Cassinum, and Sora twelve Miles from Atina, twelve from Ferentinum, sixteen from Cassinum, and sixty from Rome. So that in the Compass of seventy old Italian Miles, which are not quite sixty of the modern, there were betwixt twenty and thirty Bishopricks, answerable to the number of Cities in Latium in the most flourishing times of the Roman Empire.

From Latium we must pass into Campania, where we first meet with Minturnæ, now called Scaffa del Garigliano, not far from the Mouth of the River Liris, which Ferrarius [d] computes nine Miles from Formiæ, and as many from Sinuessa. A little above these lay Teanum, now called Tiano, eight Miles from Suessa, twelve from Capua; and Calenum was the same distance from Capua, and but six from Suessa, and six from Sinuessa, as Ferrarius [e] reckons. Carolus a Sancto Paulo takes Calenum for Cagli, and others for Cales; but Holstenius [f] shews it to be the same with Carniola, which is now a Bishop's Seat, and as Baudrand computes, but four Miles from Suessa, and as many from the Tuscan Shore. Next beyond these lay Vulturnum, now called Castel di Bitorno, at the mouth of the River Vulturnus, eight Miles from Sinuessa, and nine from Linternum, and ten from Capua. Five Miles beyond Linternum on the same Shore was Cumæ, and three Miles below that Misenum, from whence to Puteoli was but three Miles likewise, and from Puteoli to Naples six, according to Ferrarius's Computation. About eighteen Miles beyond Naples was Stabiæ, and six from that Surrentum on the same shore, beyond which was Amalphia and Salernum, the last of which is reckon'd by Ferrarius but twenty four Miles from Naples. On the North and East of Naples lay Nola, which could not be above twelve Miles from it: For Holstenius observes [g], that Octavianum, the Village where Octavius Augustus dy'd under Mount Vesuvius, was in the way between them, five Miles from Naples, and seven from Nola. Between Nola and Capua lay Acerræ, six Miles from Nola, and eight from Naples, and ten from Capua: For from Nola to Capua was but twenty old Italian Miles, as we learn from Paulinus Bishop of Nola [h], who could not be mistaken. Naples and Capua were but sixteen Miles asunder, and yet Atella, now called S. Arpino, or S. Elpidio, lay between them, which Ferrarius [i] says, was eight Miles from each. Calatia was but the same distance to the North of Capua; Venafrum but ten Miles from Cassinum; Abellinum was the largest Diocese in all Campania, sixteen Miles from Beneventum, and as much from Nola, Salernum, and Frequentum in the Province of Samnium, to which Baudrand [k] says, it was afterward united. If now we put all these Italian Dioceses hitherto enumerated together, they amount to above one hundred and ten, whereof twenty were in that little part of Tuscia, which is now call'd St. Peter's Patrimony, twenty in Umbria, eleven in Valeria, nineteen in Picenum Suburbicarium, and forty three in Latium and Campania. And yet all this Country put together, was not in the longest part of it above two hundred Miles on the Tuscan Shore: For from the River Marta, on which lay Tarquina and Graviscæ, to Rome is reckon'd fifty modern Miles; from Rome, to Naples a hundred twenty five; and from Naples to Salernum, the utmost Diocese in Campania, but twenty four, according to the Computations of Ferrarius. On the Adriatick Shore it was only the Length of Picenum Suburbicarum between the Rivers Æsis and Aternus, which is not above a hundred and twenty Miles. The Breadth of it in the widest part of it, from Ancona on the Adriatick Sea to Ostia on the Tuscan Sea, was but a hundred and sixty four Miles, and in the narrower Parts from the Mouth of the River Aternus to the Mouth of the Liris, not above a hundred and twenty Miles. Which the Curious may divide among a hundred and ten Dioceses, and then examine whether they exceed the Proportions which I have before assign'd them.

SECT. VI. Of Samnium.

I will not stand so nicely to examine the rest of the Italian Dioceses, but only recount the Number in each Province, and make a few Remarks upon the largest, as I have hitherto done upon the smallest; that the Reader may pursue this Enquiry farther at his own Pleasure, and see that the Greatness or Smallness of a Diocese antiently bred no Division or Disturbance in the Catholick Church. The next Province then in order to be spoken of is Samnium, which lay on the Coaſt of the Adriatick Sea, between Picenum Suburbicarium on the Weſt, from which it was divided by the River Aternus or Peſcara, and Apulia on the Eaſt, from which it was ſeparated by the River Frenta. In this Province Carolus a Sancto Paulo reckons but ten Dioceſes. 1 Beneventum. 2 Sæpinum. 3 Sulmo. 4 Bovianum, now called Boiano. 5 Theatea, now Chieti. 6 Ortona. 7 Frequentum, Fricenti. 8 Alipha. 9 Samnium. 10 Corfinium, or Valva: To which Holſtenius adds Iſtonium and Æclanum, but Baudrand thinks Æclanum was the ſame with Frequentum. However it was, Holſtenius [l] obſerves, that it had the Name of Decimum Quintum, becauſe it was fifteen Miles from Beneventum. Corfinium and Sulmo were nearer to one another, and were afterward united together. Ortona, Theatea, Sæpinum, Bovianum and Iſtonium, were ſome ten, ſome twelve Miles from one another. So that theſe Dioceſes were neither ſo little as thoſe about Rome, nor ſo large as thoſe of the weſtern Provinces in the Italick Dioceſe.

SECT. VII. Of Apulia and Calabria.

NEXT to Samnium lay Apulia, and beyond that Calabria in the utmoſt Corner of Italy to the Adriatick Sea. Theſe two Regions made but one Province in the Civil and Eccleſiaſtical Account, and therefore I joyn them together. In Apulia, Carolus a Sancto Paulo reckons twelve Dioceſes. 1 Ignatia, now call'd Ignazzo. 2 Barium, Barri. 3 Tranum, Trani. 4 Cuperſanum, Converſano. 5 Canuſium, Canoſa. 6 Sipontum, Siponto. 7 Arpi, now Sarpi. 8 Melphia, Melfi. 9 Venuſia, Venoſa. 10 Acherontia, Acerenza. 11 Vigiliæ, Biſeglæ. 12 Cannæ: To which the Diligence of Holſtenius has added five more. 13 Bivinum, Bovino. 14 Herdona, Ardona. 15 Rubiſium, Ruvo. 16 Salapia, Salpe. 17 Æcæ, or Æquana, ſince call'd Troja. In Calabria, Carolus a Sancto Paulo found but ſeven Dioceſes, but Holſtenius makes them ten. 1 Brundiſium, Brindiſi. 2 Aletium, Lecci. 3 Hydruntum, Otranto. 4 Callipolis, Gallipoli. 5 Tarentum, Taranto. 6 Uria, Oira. 7 Lypia, or Luſpiæ. 8 Neritum, Nardo. 9 Uxentum, Ugento. 10 Alexanum, before called Leuce, now Aleſſano.

SECT. VIII. Of Lucania and Brutia.

NEXT to theſe toward the lower Sea, lay the Regions of Lucania and Brutia, which are reckon'd together likewiſe as one Province. In Lucania, Carolus a Sancto Paulo could find but five Biſhopricks, but Holſtenius augments them to eight. 1 Potentia, Potenza. 2 Buxentum, which Carolus a Sancto Paulo takes to be Piſciota, but Holſtenius and others Polycaſtro. 3 Pæſtum, Peſto. 4 Acropolis, Agropoli. 5 Blanda, which ſome take for Belvedere, but Holſtenius calls it Porto di Sapri. 6 Grumentum, Agrimonte. 7 Velia. 8 Cocilianum, the Biſhop of which is ſometimes ſtyl'd alſo Marcilianenſis, as Holſtenius [m] obſerves, from Marcianum, a Seat or Suburbs belonging to the Dioceſe of Cocilianum. In Brutia, Carolus a Sancto Paulo reckons up ſixteen Dioceſes. 1 Rhegium, now Rezo. 2 Taurianum, Seminara. 3 Vibo-Valentia, now call'd Bivona. Out of theſe two Dioceſes, Holſtenius [n] obſerves, that Roger Earl of Calabria rais'd the new Dioceſe of Mileto, An. 1087. 4 Tropæa. 5 Nicotera, Nicodro. 6 Temeſa, now S. Marco. 7 Thurium, Terra Nova, al. Buffalora. 8 Cerillus, Cerilla. 9 Conſentia, Conſenza. 10 Crotona. 11 Scyllatium, Squillaci. 12 Locri, Gieraci. 13 Muranum, Morano. 14 Portus Oreſtis, Porto Ravaglioſo. 15 Carina, united to Rhegium by Gregory the Great. 16 Bova. To theſe Holſtenius adds two more, Paternum and Turres; the firſt of which Sees, he ſays [o], was tranſlated to Umbriatico, and the other united to Taurianum. So that the new Dioceſe of Mileto, which was made out of Taurianum and Vibo, muſt be at leaſt three old Dioceſes united into one. Whence we may conclude, that though ſome of the Dioceſes in this part of Italy are leſs than they were antiently, yet others are larger by being united: And the ſame Obſervation may be made upon Campania, where the Dioceſes are now more numerous than in any other part of Italy; though ſome of them are now ſo ſmall, as not to extend beyond the Walls of their Cities, yet others are larger than formerly for the Reaſon mentioned, becauſe they were made up of two or three old Dioceſes put together, as has been noted in its proper place.

SECT. IX. Of the Iſles of Sicily, Melita and Lipara.

TO theſe ſeven Provinces which lay in Italy, we muſt add the Iſlands of Sicily, Sardinia and Corſica, with the leſſer Iſlands that lay about them, which make up the ten Provinces of the Roman Dioceſe, or City-Prefecture. In Sicily, Carolus a Sancto Paulo counts thirteen Dioceſes. 1 Syracuſæ. 2 Tindarium, Tindaro. 3 Leontini, Lentini. 4 Lilybæum, now called Marſala. 5 Tauromenium, Taormina. 6 Meſſana. 7 Thermæ. 8 Catana. 9 Trocala. 10 Agrigentum, Grigenti. 11 Panormus, Palermo. 12 Alæſa, now Caronia. 13 Camarina, Camarana. To which are added the two Iſlands of Lipara, and Melita or Malta, which had each their Biſhop in the time of Gregory the Great. The later Notitia's ſpeak of ſeven more in Sicily, and Baudrand takes notice of others, which he ſays were old Epiſcopal Sees, as Charinum, Drepanum, Gela nova, Myle, now called Melazzo, and Trojanopolis or Troyna; but where he found thoſe Names he does not inform us. However, theſe muſt be large Dioceſes; for this was the greateſt Iſland in all the Mediterranean Sea: Baudrand ſays, Cluver was at the Pains to meaſure it, and his Account is [p], that it is six hundred Miles in compass. Which being divided between thirteen or eighteen Bishopricks, will easily prove them to be large Dioceses, without standing to examine the distances of particular Places. The Isle of Malta, Ferrarius [q] says, was twenty Miles long, and eleven broad; but Baudrand makes it twenty five one way, and fifteen another: By either of which Accounts it was larger than some four or five Italian Dioceses. Lipara, the chief of the seven Vulcanian or Æolian Islands, was not so large; for it was but eighteen Miles in compass: But here was a City and several Appendant Villages, which with the lesser Islands were enough to make a considerable Diocese, larger than many of those about Rome.

[p], that

SECT. X. Of Sardinia and Corsica.

Sardinia is sometimes reckoned to the African Diocese, and sometimes to the Roman. In the Notitia of the African Church publish'd by Sirmondus, there are said to be five Dioceses, and Carolus a Sancto Paulo speaks but of six. 1 Caralis. 2 Sulchi. 3 Tegula. 4 Turris Libisonis, now called Porto di Torre. 5 Forum Trajani. 6 Phausania, now Terra nova. For Sanafer he makes to be a little uncertain. Baudrand [r] says they were once augmented to eighteen, but now they are again reduced to seven. However the Country appears to be large enough for eighteen: For Ferrarius [s] reckons it two hundred Miles long and an hundred and seventy broad; Baudrand brings it into a little narrower Bounds, making it only an hundred and seventy Miles in length, and eighty in breadth, and four hundred and fifty in Circumference: Which will make five or six large Dioceses, and eighteen much greater than those which lay in the Neighbourhood of Rome.

In Corsica, Carolus à Sancto Paulo finds four antient Dioceses, Holstenius five. 1 Aleria. 2 Urcinium, al. Adiacium. 3 Nebium. 4 Tamita. 5 Mariana. Now this Island by the lowest Computation of Baudrand was an hundred and six Miles in length, and fifty in breadth, which will allow forty Miles to every Diocese. So that these may be reckoned the largest Dioceses of all the ten Provinces, which belonged to the Prefecture of Rome.

SECT. XI. Of Picenum Annonarium, and Flaminia.

WE are now to return into Italy again, and to take a short View of the seven Provinces, which made up that which is properly called the Italick Diocese, in Contradistinction to that of Rome. The first of these, which lay nearest to Rome, was Picenum Annonarium, divided from Picenum Suburbicarium by the River Æsis. Carolus a Sancto Paulo by mistake makes it a Province of the Roman Diocese, but in the old Notitia of the Empire it is joyned with Flaminia, and both together make but one Province of the Italick Diocese. In this Picenum there were antiently but nine Dioceses. 1 Æsis, now called Iesi. 2 Senogallia, Sinigaglia. 3 Fanum Fortunæ, now Fano. 4 Pisaurum, Pesaro. 5 Ariminum, Rimini. 6 Urbinum. 7 Tifernum Metaurense, so called to distinguish it from the other Tifernum upon the Tiber, from which it was sixteen Miles distance. It is now call'd St. Angelo in Vado, and is only a part of another Diocese called Urbanea from its Founder Pope Urban VIII. 8 Forum Sempronij, Fossembruno. 9 Callium, Cagli. In Flaminia, which lay westward of Picenum between the Rubicon and the Padus, or Po, Carolus a Sancto Paulo names eleven Dioceses. 1 Ravenna. 2 Sarsina. 3 Cæsena. 4 Forum Popilij. 5 Ficoclæ, now called Cervia. 6 Forum Livij, Forli. 7 Faventia, Faenza. 8 Forum Cornelij, now Imola. 9 Vicohabentia, Vicovenza. 10 Hadria, Adri. 11 Comacula, Comacchio. Of all which Dioceses, I shall stand to make no other Observation but this, That they were larger than those about Rome, and less than many others in the western Provinces, which lay at a greater distance from it. Ferraria was as yet no Diocese of it self, but first made one by Pope Vitalian in the latter end of the VIIth Century, as Ferrarius [t] informs us.

SECT. XII. Of Æmylia.

THE second of these seven Provinces, was Æmylia, divided on the East from Flaminia by the River Idex, on the North from Liguria by the Po, on the West from Alpes Cottiæ by the River Trebia, and on the South from Tuscia by the Apennine. Carolus a Sancto Paulo reckons here but six Dioceses. 1 Bononia, Bologna. 2 Mutina, Modena. 3 Brixellum, Bressello. 4 Regium Lepidi, Reggio. 5 Parma. 6 Placentia, Piacenza. These were all very large Dioceses. For Bononia, the most Eastern in Situation, is reckoned twenty Miles from Mutina, and as much from Forum Cornelij in Flaminia, twenty eight from Ferraria, which was in the next Diocese Northward, and on the South it had no nearer Neighbour than Fesulæ beyond the Apennine within three Miles of Florence. Mutina was fifteen Miles from Regium Lepidi, and Regium as much from Parma, and Parma thirty five from Placentia according to Ferrarius's Computation. Brixellum on the Po was but eight Miles from Parma, but on other sides it might have a larger Diocese. For Ferrarius says, it was twenty four Miles from Regium Lepidi, and thirty from Cremona. So that these six Dioceses were larger than twenty of those about Rome.

SECT. XIII. Of Alpes Cottiæ.

OUT of Æmylia we pass over the River Trebia into one of the Alpine Provinces, called Alpes Cottiæ, which was divided also from Liguria by the Po, from which it extended to the Tuscan Sea, including part of Piedmont and Montferrat, and the whole Republick of Genua, and part of the Dutchy of Milan on this ſide the Po. In this Province Carolus a Sancto Paulo finds ten Dioceſes. 1 Auguſta Taurinorum, Turin. 2 Aſta, Aſti. 3 Dertona, Tortona. 4 Alba Pompeia, Alba. 5 Aquæ Statiellæ, Acqui. 6 Albingaunum, Albenga. 7 Vigintimilium, Vintimiglia. 8 Bobium, Bobio. 9 Genua. 10 Savona. To which Holſtenius [u] adds Nicæa, Nizza. Theſe were large Dioceſes, for Bobium had no nearer Neighbour than Placentia, which Ferrarius reckons [x] twenty five Miles from it, and Genua and Dertona thirty five. Savona was twenty ſix Miles from Genua, according to the moſt accurate Computation of Holſtenius [y]; Ferrarius [z] ſays, it lay in the middle way between Genua and Albingaunum, at thirty Miles diſtance. Aquæ Statiellæ was alſo twenty two Miles from Savona, as Baudrand computes; but not ſo far from Aſta and Alba Pompeia: For Alba was but eight Miles to the North of Aquæ, and Aſta twelve more beyond that; but Eaſt and Weſt theſe Dioceſes might extend very wide; for Turin the neareſt Neighbour Weſtward was twenty Miles from Aſta and twenty eight from Alba, and Dertona as much to the Eaſt, according to Ferrarius's Computation. Vigintimilium was twenty Miles from Nicæa, and Albingaunum forty from Vigintimilium, and Savona between twenty and thirty from Albingaunum. The whole Province was a hundred and fifty Miles in length, and half as much in breadth, which made thoſe eleven Dioceſes equal to fifty of thoſe about Rome and Naples.

SECT. XIV. Of Liguria.

OUT of this Province paſſing over the Po, we come into Liguria, the Province whereof Milan was the Metropolis; though the Reader muſt note, that the laſt-mentioned Province in the Roman Hiſtorians is more commonly called Liguria, and this Inſubria; but we now ſpeak of them as they ſtood divided under the Chriſtian Emperors. This was a large Province, including all that lay between the Fountain of the Addua and the Po, and the Alps and the Atheſis, which divided it from Venetia. Yet here were but ten Dioceſes to be diſcovered by Carolus a Sancto Paulo, and the inquiſitive Diligence of Holſtenius after him. 1 Mediolanum, Milan. 2 Eporedia, Jurea. 3 Vercellæ, Vercelli. 4 Novaria. 5 Ticinum, Pavia. 6 Laus Pompeia, Lodi. 7 Cremona. 8 Brixia, Breſcia. 9 Bergomum, Bergamo. 10 Comum, Como. Of theſe Milan was reckoned the largeſt City in Italy next after Rome. Ferrarius ſays, it is now computed to have three hundred thouſand People in it; but that is much ſhort of its antient Greatneſs: For Procopius [a] ſays, in Juſtinian's time when it was taken by the Goths, there were three hundred thouſand Men put to the Sword. When St. Ambroſe was Biſhop there, it had ſeveral Chriſtian Churches, ſome of which are nam'd by him in his Epiſtles, as the Baſilica Portiana [b] without the Walls, and the Baſilica Major or Nova within the City, the Baſilica Fauſtæ [c], and Baſilica Ambroſiana: And when it was all become Chriſtian, we muſt ſuppoſe a great many Churches more under one Biſhop; for it never had two, except in the times of the Arian Perſecution. Without the Walls it might alſo have a large Dioceſe: For no other City among thoſe forementioned was within leſs than twenty Miles of it; and there were ſome thirty, and ſome forty Miles remov'd from one another, only Novaria and Vercellæ were but ten Miles aſunder, being nearer Neighbours than any other in this Province. Cremona was eighteen Miles from Placentia, thirty from Brixia, forty from Ticinum, and if Ferrarius compute right, no leſs from Mantua; and yet the Territories of Cremona and Mantua join'd together, as we may gueſs from that Complaint of Virgil, Mantua væ miſeræ nimium vicina Cremonæ, That Mantua was a little too near to Cremona; becauſe when Auguſtus ſent his Colony of Veterans to ſettle at Cremona, and the Territory of Cremona proved too little for them, he ordered fifteen Miles to be taken from the Territory of Mantua, to make up the Deficiency of the former. Whence it is eaſy to infer, that the Dioceſes of this Province were exceeding large, ſince the Cities were ſo far removed from one another.

SECT. XV. Of Rhœtia prima and ſecunda.

IN the two next Provinces, Rhœtia prima and ſecunda, the Dioceſes were yet larger: For in the former, which lay next to Liguria in the middle of the Alpes, and is now the Country of the Griſons, Carolus a Sancto Paulo could find but one Dioceſe, which was Curia, now called Coire: And in the other but three. 1 Auguſta Vindelicorum, Ausburg. 2 Quintanæ, or Colonia Auguſta Quintanorum, now Kyntzen in Bavaria on the Danube. 3 Ratiſpona, or Regium, and Caſtra Regina, now Regenſpurg, or Ratisbone: To which Holſtenius adds, Auguſta Prætoria, now called Aoſta, which is reckoned to Piedmont; and Brixino, now Brixen in the County of Tirol: For, as I obſerved before, all that Part of Germany which reaches from the Alpes to the Danube, was antiently called Rhœtia, and reckoned among the Provinces of Italy, and the Dioceſes therein were ſo large, that theſe five or ſix were equal for Extent of Ground, though not for Number of People, to thirty or forty of thoſe near Rome.

SECT. XVI. Of Venetia and Hiſtria.

THE laſt of theſe ſeven Italick Provinces, was Venetia and Hiſtria, which were always join'd together as one Province. Venetia was divided from Rhœtia and Liguria by the River Atheſis, from Æmylia and Flaminia by the Po, and from Noricum Mediterraneum by a Line drawn from the Fountain of the River Atheſis to the Riſe of the Savus, where Iſtria was joined to it, lying between the Sinus Tergeſtinus on the Weſt, and Sinus Flanaticus on the Eaſt, which is the utmoſt Bounds of the North-Eaſt Part of Italy. In Hiſtria, Carolus a Sancto Paulo reckons but five Dioceſes. 1 Forum Julii, now Friuli. 2 Tergeſtum, Trieſte. 3 Parentium, Parenzo. 4 Pola. 5 Æmonia, which he takes to be the ſame that is now called Citta nova, but Holſtenius ſays it is Lubiana or Labach on the Save. In Venetia he recounts eighteen Dioceſes. 1 Aquileia. 2 Patavium, Padua. 3 Torcellum. 4 Altinum, Altino. 5 Acelum, Aſolo. 6 Tarviſium, Treviſo. 7 Marianum. 8 Verona. 9 Gradus, Grado. 10 Nova. 11 Caprulla, Cahorla. 12 Ceneta, Ceneda. 13 Tridentum, Trent. 14 Feltria, Feltri. 15 Bellunum, Belluno. 16 Sabiona, Siben. 17 Opitergium, Oderzo. 18 Celina, Celine. Some of theſe were very large Dioceſes: Trent was above thirty Miles from Verona; and Sabiona and Forum Julii and Æmonia and Tergeſtum Parentium and Pola were no leſs from one another. The reſt were ten or twenty Miles removed from any other neighbouring City; only Altinum and Torcellum, Ferrarius [d] ſays, were but five Miles a-part, but he queſtions whether they were both Biſhop's Sees at the ſame time, and thinks rather that Torcellum came only in the room of Altinum, when that was deſtroyed by Attila toward the middle of the fifth Century. However, the greateſt Part of theſe Dioceſes were one way or other of large Extent, as moſt of the Northern Dioceſes in Italy were, in compariſon of thoſe which lay round about Rome. And now, I think, the Obſervation made in the beginning of this Chapter has been fully verified, that in Italy there were antiently ſome of the ſmalleſt, and ſome of the largeſt Dioceſes in the World; and yet the ſame Species of Epiſcopacy preſerved in them all: The Biſhop of Eugubium, as St. Jerom words it, being ejuſdem Meriti, and ejuſdem Sacerdotii, of the ſame Merit, and equal as to his Prieſthood with the Biſhop of Rome. A larger or ſmaller Dioceſe made no Diviſion in the Unity of the Catholick Church.

CHAP. VI.

Of the Dioceſes in FRANCE, SPAIN, and the BRITISH Iſles.

SECT. I. Of the antient Bounds and Diviſions of Gallia into ſeventeen Provinces.

I Have now gone through all Parts of the Chriſtian World, except France, Spain and Britain, which made up three civil Dioceſes, and twenty nine or thirty Provinces of the Roman Empire: But I ſhall not need to be ſo nice and particular in enquiring into the Bounds and Extent of Epiſcopal Dioceſes in theſe Countries, becauſe their Number being but ſmall in Proportion to the Largeneſs of the Countries, it will eaſily appear to any Man, that the Dioceſes were large, as they continue to be at this Day, though ſome Alterations have been made in their Bounds ſince the original Settlement of them. France, as it now ſtands, is but a Part of old Gallia, which included alſo ſome of the Belgick, Helvetick, and German Provinces. It was at firſt divided by Auguſtus into four Parts, Narbonenſis, Aquitanica, Lugdunenſis, and Belgica. Afterwards about the time of Adrian, or Antoninus, as de Marca thinks, theſe four were made fourteen; Narbonenſis was divided into four; Narbonenſis, Viennenſis, Alpes Maritimæ, and Alpes Graiæ, or Penninæ: Aquitanica was made three, two Aquitains, and Novempopulania; Lugdunenſis likewiſe three, Lugdunenſis prima and ſecunda, and Maxima Sequanorum. And Belgica was turned into four, Belgica prima and ſecunda, and Germania prima and ſecunda. Laſt of all, about the time of the Emperor Gratian, three more Provinces were made out of theſe. For Lugdunenſis tertia, otherwiſe call'd Turonia, was taken out of Lugdunenſis ſecunda; and Lugdunenſis quarta, or Senonia, out of Lugdunenſis prima; and the new Province of Narbonienſis ſecunda, out of the Province of Vienna. And about this time or a little after Viennenſis ſecunda, otherwiſe called Arelatenſis, was made a Province alſo. Some think alſo, that Gallia had once the Name of Septem Provinciæ, The Seven Provinces, becauſe it was divided into ſo many: But de Marca [a] proves this to be a vulgar Error; for it never was divided into Seven Provinces, but ſometimes we meet with the Diſtinction of Gallia and the Five Provinces, and Gallia and the Seven Provinces, and in the Notitia of the Empire, the Word Seven Provinces is once put for Seventeen, which occaſioned the Miſtake. Now the Five Provinces were either nothing but ſo many Parts of the old Gallia Narbonenſis, viz. Narbonenſis prima and ſecunda, Viennenſis, Alpes Maritimæ and Alpes Graiæ; as Berterius and de Marca and Queſnellus account them; or elſe the four firſt of thoſe mentioned with the Province of Novempopulana or Aquitania prima inſtead of Alpes Graiæ; which Mr. Pagi [b] ſhews to be the more probable Opinion. So that when the Council of Valence, An. 374, inſcribe their Synodical Epiſtle, Epiſcopis per Gallias &

Quinque

Quinque Provincias, these five Provinces are to be understood. As also in Philastrius [c], where he speaks of the Priscillianists, the Remains of the Manichees, sculking in Spain and the Five Provinces. The like Distinction occurs in the Letter of the Emperor Maximus to Pope Siricius, and some of Symmachus's Epistles, which de Marca mentions. Afterward we meet with the Distinction of Gallia and the Seven Provinces, which occurs in the Letters of Pope Zosimus and Boniface, and is thought to owe its Name to the Emperor Honorius, who order'd seven Provinces to meet in the Convention of Arles, viz. Narbonensis prima and secunda, Viennensis, Alpes Maritimæ, Aquitania prima and secunda, and Novempopulania. These are sometimes distinguish'd from Gallia by the Name of Septem Provinciæ, which occasioned the Mistake of those who take Gallia in the largest Extent and the seven Provinces to be the same; whereas it appears, that there were not only seven, but seventeen or eighteen Provinces in it. The Names of the Bishopricks in each Province, because they occur not in any modern Notitia, I will here subjoyn out of Carolus a Sancto Paulo, who has collected them out of the Acts of the antient Councils.

SECT. II. Of the Dioceses in the Province of Alpes Maritimæ.

THE first of these Provinces was that of the Maritime Alpes next to Italy, which had seven Dioceses. 1 Ebrodunum, Ambrun, made the Metropolis of this Province in the Fifth Century, for before it was not so, when it was laid to the Charge of Armentarius Bishop of this See, that he was ordain'd without the Consent of the Metropolitan [d], which had been a frivolous Accusation, had he himself then been Metropolitan of the Province. 2 Dinia, Digne. 3 Nicæa, Nice. 4 Cemelene, Cimies, which was afterwards united to Nice: For in the fifth Council of Orleans, Magnus subscribes himself Bishop of both Churches. Some say, it was only six, others thirty Miles from Nice. 5 Sanicium, Senez. 6 Glandata, Glandeve, which Baudrand says is now translated to Intervallium, Entrevaux. 7 Ventio, Vence.

SECT. III. Alpes Graiæ, or Penninæ.

IN the second Province, called Alpes Graiæ or Penninæ, were but three Bishopricks. 1 Tarantasia, the Metropolis, which See is now translated to Monasterium, or Moutiers en Tarantaise. 2 Octodurum, Martenach. 3 Sedunum, Syon en Valez, the Bishop of which Place is now Prince of the City, as Baudrand informs us.

SECT. IV. Viennensis prima and secunda.

THE next Province Westward was Viennensis, divided into prima and secunda. In the first were six Dioceses. 1 Vienna, the Metropolis. 2 Geneva. 3 Gratianopolis, Grenoble. 4 Civitas Albensium, al. Vivaria & Alba Augusta, Viviers. 5 Mauriana, St. Jean de Maurienne. 6 Valentia, Valence. In the second, called also Provincia Arelatensis, were ten Dioceses. 1 Arelate, Arles, the Metropolis. 2 Massilia, Marseilles. 3 Avenio, Avignon. 4 Cabellio, Cavaillon. 5 Carpentoracte, Carpentras. 6 Tolonium, al. Telonium, Toulon. 7 Arausio, Orange. 8 Vasio, Vaison. 9 Dia, or Dea Vocontiorum, Die. 10 Tricastini, or Augusta Tricastinorum, now called St. Paul de Trois Chasteaux, which Baudrand reckons three Leagues from Avignon, and four from Vaison.

SECT. V. Narbonensis prima and secunda.

OUT of the Province of Vienna Eastward was also taken another Province call'd Narbonensis prima, or Aquensis, from the Metropolis of it Aquæ Sextiæ, Aix; beside which there were six other Dioceses in the Province. 2 Apta Julia, Apt. 3 Reij, Riez. 4 Forum Julii, Frejuz. 5 Vapincum, Gap. 6 Segestero, Cisteron. 7 Antipolis, Antibe, since translated to Grasse in Provence. On the West of Viennensis secunda, lay the Province of Narbonensis prima, which had ten Dioceses. 1 Narbo. 2 Tolosa. 3 Bætiræ, Beziers. 4 Nemausum, Nismes. 5 Luteva, Lodeue. 6 Ucetia, Uzes. 7 Carcaso, Carcassone. 8 Agatha, Agde. 9 Helena, Elna. 10 Magalona, an Island of the Mediterranean, which See is since translated to Mons Pessulanus, or Montpellier.

SECT. VI. Of Novempopulania.

WESTWARD of Narbonensis prima, lay the Province of Novempopulania along the Pyrenæan Mountains to the Aquitanick Ocean, wherein were eleven Dioceses. 1 Elusa, Eause, the Metropolis, whence the Province was styl'd Elusana. The See is since translated and joyn'd to Augusta Ausciorum, which was a second See, now call'd Aux. 3 Lactoratium, Lectoure. 4 Convenæ, Cominges. 5 Consoranni, Conserans. 6 Vasatæ, Bas. 7 Tarba, Tarbes. 8 Aturum, al. Vico-Julia, Aire. 9 Lascara, Lescar. 10 Olero, Oleron. 11 Aquæ, Acs.

SECT. VII. Of Aquitania prima and secunda.

NORTHWARD of these Provinces from the Garumna to the Ligeris, lay the two Provinces of Aquitania prima and secunda, the latter of which bordering upon the Ocean, had six very large Dioceses. 1 Burdigala, Bourdeaux, the Metropolis. 2 Aginnum, Agen. 3 Engolisma, Angoulesme. 4 Santones, al. Mediolanum Santonum, Saintes. 5 Pictavi, Poitiers, where St. Hilary was Bishop. 6 Petrocorium, Perigueux. In the other Province which lay Eastward from this, were nine as large Dioceses. 1 Biturigæ, the Metropolis, now called Bourges. 2 Arverni, Clermont. 3 Rutena, Rhodes. 4 Arisita. 5 Cadurcum, Cahors. 6 Lemovica, Limoges. 7 Gabalum, al. Mimate, now Mande. 8 Vellava, al. Anicium, now le Puy en Vellay. 9 Albiga, or Alba Helviorum, Alby, whence the Albigenses, who flourish'd in these parts, had their Denomination.

SECT. VIII. Of Lugdunenſis prima, ſecunda, tertia, quarta, & Maxima Sequanorum.

NORTH and Eaſt of Aquitain, lay Gallia Lugdunenſis, divided into five Provinces, whereof the firſt had five Dioceſes. 1 Lugdunum, Lyon, the Metropolis. 2 Matiſco, Maſcon. 3 Cabillonum, Chalons on the Saone. 4 Lingones, Langres. 5 Auguſtodunum, Autun. The ſecond, called Lugdunenſis ſecunda, had eight Dioceſes. 1 Rothomagum, Rouen in Normandy. 2 Ebroica, Eureux. 3 Lexovium, Liſieux. 4 Baioca, Baieux. 5 Conſtantia, Coutance. 6 Abrinca, Auranches. 7 Sagium, Siez. 8 Oximum, Hieſmes, ſince united to Sagium, from whence it is four Leagues diſtance. Lugdunenſis tertia, otherwiſe called Turonenſis, had ſeven Dioceſes. 1 Turones, Tours. 2 Andegavum, Angiers. 3 Cenomanum, Le Mans. 4 Redones, Renes. 5 Namnetes, Nantes. 6 Venetia, Vennes. 7 Aletium, Alet, ſince tranſlated to Maclovium, An. 1140. Five others are added by ſome French Writers, viz. Briocum, Dola, Trecora, Oſſiſma, Coriſopitum: But Carolus a Sancto Paulo makes ſome queſtion about their Antiquity, becauſe in the time of Carolus Calvus Britany had but four Biſhopricks in the whole. Lugdunenſis quarta was that Part of France where Paris ſtands, the Metropolis whereof was Senones, Sens. Next to that, 2 Canutum, Chartres. 3 Antiſſiodorum, Auxerre. 4 Trecæ, Troyes in Champain. 5 Aurelia, Orleans. 6 Pariſii, Paris. 7 Melda, Meaux. 8 Nivernum, Nevers. Lugdunenſis quinta was otherwiſe called Maxima Sequanorum; not from Maximus the Tyrant, as Carolus a Sancto Paulo and many others think; for it was call'd ſo long before, in the time of Diocletian, as de Marca [e] ſhews from an antient Inſcription in Gruter. The antient Metropolis of it was Veſontio, or Biſuntio, Beſanſon. 2 Aventicum, Avenche, which See was ſince tranſlated to Lauſanna. 3 Auguſta Rauracorum, Augſt, tranſlated to Baſil. 4 Vindoniſſa, Winich, ſince tranſlated to Conſtance. 5 Bollica, Belley, which de Marca ſays, aroſe out of the Ruins of a more antient one, which was Noiodunum, Nion, formerly call'd Colonia Equeſtris.

SECT. IX. Of Belgica prima and ſecunda.

THE moſt Northern Provinces of Gallia were Belgica prima and ſecunda, and Germania prima and ſecunda, which was all the Country lying North of the River Matrona from near Paris and Meaux to the Rhine. Belgica prima had but four Dioceſes. 1 Auguſta Trevirorum, Treves, or Triers, the Metropolis. 2 Mediomatricum, Metz. 3 Tullum, Toul. 4 Verodunum, Verdun in Lorrain. In the other Belgica there were ten Dioceſes. 1 Remi, Reims. 2 Auguſta Sueſſionum, Soiſſons. 3 Catalaunum, Chalons in Champain. 4 Laudunum, Leon. 5 Auguſta Veromanduorum, Vermand. Which being deſtroy'd by the Huns, the See was tranſlated to Neomagus, or Noviodunum, now called Noyon. 6 Cameracum, Cambray. 7 Tornacum, Tournay. 8 Sylvanectum, Senlis. 9 Bellovacum, Beauvais. 10 Ambianum, Amiens. Some add two more, Teruana, Therouenne, and Bononia, Boulougne. But Carolus a Sancto Paulo thinks theſe were not very antient; for he finds no mention of the former before the time of Pope Zachary, an. 750. And the latter was made out of the former a great many Centuries after in the time of Charles V. an. 1350, when the See of Taruana was divided into three, and tranſlated to Bononia for that part of the Dioceſe which is in France, and to Audomaropolis, or St. Omers, for that part which is in Artois, and to Ipres for the third part in Flanders.

SECT. X. Of Germanica prima & ſecunda.

GERMANICA prima had but four Dioceſes. 1 Moguntiacum, Mayence, or Ments. 2 Argentoratum, Strasburgh. 3 Spira Nemetum, Spire. 4 Wormacia Vangionum, Worms. And Germanica ſecunda had but two. 1 Colonia Agrippina, Colen. 2 Tungri, or Aduatuca Tungrorum, Tongres in Brabant: Which See was firſt tranſlated to Trajectum ad Moſam, Maſtricht, and from thence to Leodium, or Liege, where it now continues, having the Temporal Juriſdiction joyn'd to the Spiritual, and twenty four Towns or Cities ſubject to its Command. Now I ſuppoſe any one that knows any thing of the ſtate of theſe Countries, will eaſily conclude, that the greateſt part of theſe Dioceſes were large, as they are at this Day: The whole Number being but One hundred twenty two, when the Bounds of France extended much farther than they do at preſent, including ſome parts of Helvetia, Germany and Belgium, which are now reckon'd diſtinct Countries of themſelves.

SECT. XI. The antient Diviſion of the Spaniſh Provinces.

OUT of France, paſſing over the Pyrenæan Mountains, we come into Spain, which with the Province of Tingitana in Africk, and the Iſlands call'd Baleares, made up another great civil Dioceſe of the Roman Empire under the Præfectus-Prætorio Galliarum. The whole Country of Spain then was divided only into five Provinces, Tarraconenſis, Carthaginenſis, Bætica, Luſitania and Gailæſia, and in theſe Provinces there were never above ſeventy four or ſeventy ſix Epiſcopal Dioceſes, when they were moſt numerous, and they are almoſt as many at this Day.

SECT. XII. Of Tarraconenſis.

IN the large Province of Tarraconenſis, which lay next to France, there were only ſixteen Dioceſes. 1 Tarracona, now Tarragona, the Metropolis. 2 Dertoſa, Tortoſa. 3 Cæſarauguſta, Saragoſſa. 4 Tyraſſona, al. Turiaſſo, now Tarazona. 5 Calagurris, Calahorra. 6 Auca, Oca. 7 Oſca, Hueſca. 8 Pampelona. 9 Ilerda, Lerida. 10 Barcino, Barcelona. 11 Egara, Tarraſſa, raſſa, a Place near Barcelona, about four or ſix Leagues from it, and now united to it. 12 Auſona, al. Auſa, Vich de Auſona. 13 Gerunda, Girone. 14 Emporiæ, Empurias. 15 Orgellum, Urgel. 16 Velia, now Veleia.

SECT. XIII. Of Carthaginenſis.

NEXT to this, on the Coaſt of the Mediterranean, lay the Province called Carthaginenſis from the chief City Carthago, Carthagena, which was the antient Metropolis of the Province, though Toledo afterward gain'd the Privilege of being a new Metropolis, and at laſt ſucceeded to the Dignity of the whole Province. Beſide theſe two, Carolus a Sancto Paulo reckons twenty two more Dioceſes in this Province. 1 Complutum, now Alcala de Henares. 2 Oxoma, Oſma. 3 Pallentia. 4 Voleria, now Valera la Vieja. 5 Saguntum, al. Segontia, Siguenza. 6 Secobia, Segovia. 7 Arcabrica, Arcas. 8 Oretum, Oreto. 9 Valentia, Valencia. 10 Dianium, Denia. 11 Setabis, Xativa. 12 Baſti, Baza. 13 Menteſa, Mentexa. 14 Salaria. 15 Acci, now Guadix. 16 Segobriga, Segorbe. 17 Caſtulo, Gazlona. 18 Bigaſtrum. 19 Illicias, which ſome make the ſame as Alicante, others Origuela, or Elche. 20 Ergavica, a Place of more doubtful Situation, ſome taking it for Alcaniz near Toledo, others for Penna eſcritta, or Santaver. 21 Eliocrota, now Lorca. 22 Urci, al. Virgi, now Orce.

SECT. XIV. Of Bœtica.

THE next Province of Bœtica had but eleven Dioceſes. 1 Hiſpalis, Sevil. 2 Italica, now Sevilla la Vieja. 3 Ilipa, Niebla. 4 Aſtygis, now Ecija. 5 Corduba, Cordoua. 6 Egabrum, Cabra. 7 Eliberis, Elvira. 8 Malaca, Malaga. 9 Aſinda, al. Aſſidonia, now Medina Sidonia. 10 Tucci, now Martos. 11 Abdara, Adra.

SECT. XV. Of Luſitania.

IN the Province of Luſitania there were but nine Dioceſes. 1 Emerita, Merida, the Metropolis. 2 Abula, Avila. 3 Salmantica, Salamanca. 4 Ebora, Evora. 5 Cauria, Coria. 6 Pax Julia, now Beja, which ſome by miſtake confound with Pax Auguſta, now called Badajos, which is but a modern Biſhoprick. 7 Oſſonaba, Eſtoy. 8 Olyſippo, Lisbone. 9 Egita, Eidania.

SECT. XVI. Of Gallecia.

GALLECIA was a large Province, and yet never had above thirteen or fourteen Dioceſes. In the Council of Lucus Auguſti, or Lugo, under King Theodimir, An. 569, a Complaint was made that the Dioceſes here were ſo large, that the Biſhops could ſcarce viſit them in a Year. Upon which an Order was made, that ſeveral new Biſhopricks, and one new Metropolis ſhould be erected: Which was accordingly done by the Biſhops then in Council, who made Lugo to be the new Metropolis, and raiſed ſeveral other Epiſcopal Sees out of the old ones, as is declared [*] in the Acts of that Council. Bracara, now called Braga, was the old Metropolis, which after the Diviſion had no more than ſeven Dioceſes ſubject to it. 1 Dumium. 2 Portus Calenſis, now called El Puerto. 3 Conimbrica, Coymbra. 4 Viſeum, Viſeo. 5 Lamecum, Lamego. 6 Valentia ad Minium, Valenzia al. Menno. 7 Legio, Leon. The other Metropolis, Lucus Auguſti, had but five Suffragans. 1 Iria Flavia, El Padron. 2 Auria, Orenſe. 3 Tude, Tuy. 4 Aſturica, Aſtorga. 5 Brittonia, Bretagna. Of theſe, Legio and Aſturica are thought by many learned Men to have been but one Dioceſe in the time of Cyprian, becauſe he joins them together in the ſame Epiſtle [†], writing to the Church in both Places: But I think the Argument is hardly cogent, becauſe he joins Emerita with them in the ſame Inſcription. There is another Place, which ſome ſay had no Dioceſe but a Monaſtery, that is Dumium near Braga. But this is a great Miſtake. For though there be an Inſtance or two in ancient Hiſtory [f] of Biſhops being ordained in Monaſteries without any Dioceſe at all; yet we no where read that their Monaſtery was their Dioceſe: And in the preſent Caſe it was far otherwiſe. For as a learned Man [g] has ſhewed, Dumium had another Dioceſe beſide the Monaſtery: In the Acts of the Council of Lugo it is ſaid to have Familia Regia, the King's Court belonging to it. For Martin Bracarenſis, commonly called the Apoſtle of Gallecia, having converted Theodimir King of the Suevi from the Arian Hereſy, was created Biſhop in the Monaſtery of Dumium (which he had built) not for the Service of the Monaſtery, but the King's Court, till he was tranſlated to Braccara or Braga the Metropolis of the Province. And farther in the Diſtribution of Dioceſes made by King Wamba, the Bounds of this Dioceſe are marked, from Duma to Albia, and from Rianteca to Adaſa: Which though they be ſuch obſcure Places, as Geographers take no Notice of, yet they argue the Dioceſe to be larger than the Monaſtery; or at leaſt this Monaſtery, like that of Sublaqueum in the Dioceſe of Tibur in Italy, had ſeveral Villages under its Juriſdiction. And ſo it might have a ſufficient Dioceſe, tho' not ſo large as the reſt of the Province of Gallecia, which were ſo vaſtly great as to need the Wiſdom and Conſideration of a Council to contract them.

SECT. XVII. Of the Iſlands Majorica, Minorica, &c.

TO theſe Spaniſh Provinces we muſt join the Spaniſh Iſlands, Majorica, Minorica and Ebuſus, which Carolus a Sancto Paulo by miſtake places with Sardinia as Appendants of the Roman Dioceſe. Majorica the largeſt of the Baleares was an hundred and ten Miles in Circuit, yet it never had above one Episcopal Diocese, whose chief Seat was Palma, now called Mallorca, which is the Name that the Inhabitants at present give to the whole Island, by others call'd Majorca. Minorica, Minorque, is sixty Miles in compass, and anciently enjoyed a Bishop of its own, whose See was Jamna, now called Citadella, the capital City of the Island. Ebusus, now call'd Yvica, was less than these, yet large enough to make a distinct Diocese, being forty two Miles in compass, having a City of the same Name, with several Villages under its Jurisdiction. So that in all the Spanish Provinces the Dioceses were generally very large, and not one among them whose Bounds did not far exceed the Limits of a single Congregation.

SECT. XVIII. The State of the Spanish Church evidenced from some of her most antient Councils.

AND that this was the true State of the Spanish Church in antient Times, appears from some of her most early Councils. The Council of Eliberis, which was held An. 305, in the beginning of the Diocletian Persecution, has a Canon which plainly supposes the Dioceses to have Country Parishes, when it says [h], If any Deacon who has the Care of a People, shall baptize any one without a Bishop or Presbyter, the Bishop shall consummate him by his Benediction. The same is more plainly intimated by a Canon of the first Council of Toledo, An. 400, which directs the Presbyters of every Church [i] throughout each Diocese to send to the Bishop before Easter for Chrism, to be used in Baptism at Easter, and other solemn times when Baptism was to be administred. This supposes the Spanish Dioceses to have Country Parishes, where Presbyters and Deacons resided without the Bishop, and it serves to confirm the Account that has been given of the original State and Division of those Churches.

SECT. XIX. Of Ireland and Scotland.

OUT of Spain, we come at last to the British Isles, part of which only was under the Roman Government, and called the Britannick Diocese; for Ireland and the greatest part of Scotland never came under that Denomination: Yet in our Passage it will not be amiss to say something of them, as well as England, if it were for no other Reason but to set aside and censure some fabulous Reports that are made of them. When Ireland was first converted, or by whom, is not very material here to be enquired, since before the time of St. Patrick, An. 433, there is little mention of Bishops or Dioceses in this Kingdom; and after him the Accounts of them are so uncertain and dark, that Carolus a Sancto Paulo does not pretend to give any other Catalogue of them, but what he has from Cambden and the Provinciale Romanum, both of which are modern Accounts: For they make mention of the Diocese of Waterford, which as Dr. Cave and other learned Men have observed out of Eadmerus, [k] was not erected till the Year 1097, when King Murchertacus and the Clergy of his Kingdom petitioned Anselm Archbishop of Canterbury, who was then Primate of that part of Ireland, to let Waterford be made a Bishop's See; to which Petition he consented, and ordained one Malchus, whom they had elected, first Bishop of the Place. Nay both these Catalogues also take notice of four Archbishopricks in Ireland, which Number of Metropolitans was first introduced by Pope Eugenius, An. 1151, as Baronius has observed out of Roger Hoveden; and the same thing is noted by Matthew Paris, Simeon Dunelmensis, Gervasius Chronicon, and others of our English Writers. Yet because we have no Catalogues of Irish Dioceses older or more authentick than these, it will not be amiss to insert them in this place. That in Cambden has the four Archbishopricks and their Suffragans in this Order.

This ſeems to have been the greateſt Number of Biſhops that ever Ireland had ſince it was a Chriſtian Nation. For as to the pretence of ſome modern Writers, that there were at one time no leſs than three hundred ſixty five Biſhops ordain'd by St. Patrick, it is ſolidly refuted by Dr. Maurice, who ſhews [l] plainly, that the Story is not to be underſtood of ſo many Biſhops at once, but of that Number in the Reign of four Kings ſucceſſively, and in the compaſs of one hundred Years: Which any one that carefully reads Biſhop Uſher's Antiquities [m], whence the ground of the Story is fetched, will eaſily diſcern. And it is no hard matter to conceive then, how there might be three hundred and fifty, or as Nennius tells the Story, three hundred and ſixty five Biſhops in the compaſs of a whole Century, though there were not above fifty or threeſcore at any one Time living together. Another Error committed by Carolus a Sancto Paulo in reference to the Biſhops of this Nation, which makes the whole Number of them ſubject to a ſingle Abbot, has been already rectify'd in ſpeaking of the Aſceticks, where I have ſhew'd [n] he miſtakes Hibernia for the little Iſle of Huy in the North of Scotland, where a Monaſtery was founded by Columbanus, the Abbots of which by an unuſual Cuſtom, as Bede calls it, had ſome ſort of Superiority over the Province of the Northern Picts, and the Provincial Biſhops too; but this has no relation to Ireland, nor any other part of Scotland than what has been now mention'd.

As to the original State of Dioceſes in Scotland, Carolus a Sancto Paulo, for want of Light from antient Hiſtory, could give no account of them, and therefore he only ſets down the modern Names. Under the Archbiſhop of St. Andrews eight Dioceſes: 1 Dunkeld. 2 Brechin. 3 Aberdeen. 4 Roſſe. 5 Moravia, or Muray. 6 Caithneſs. 7 Dumblain. 8 The Iſlands call'd Orchades. Under the Archbiſhop of Glaſcow three; Candida Caſa, or Whitern, Liſmore, and the Iſlands, that is, the Hebrides, or Weſtern Iſlands, whereof Jona was one of the Chief. The principal Town of this Iſland, call'd Sodora, was made a Biſhop's See by Gregory IV. An. 840, whence the Biſhop of all thoſe forty four Iſlands, together with the Iſle of Man, which then was but a part of that Dioceſe, had the Name of Epiſcopus Sodorenſis. But when the Iſle of Man fell into the Hands of the Engliſh, the Weſtern Iſlands withdrew their Obedience from their antient Biſhop, who commonly liv'd in this Iſland, and ſet up another Biſhop of their own, who for a long time retain'd the Title of Sodorenſis, but at laſt he relinquiſh'd that Title to the Biſhop of the Iſle of Man, and took the Name of Inſulanus, Biſhop of the Iſles, which he ſtill retains. The Provinciale Romanum makes no mention either of this Dioceſe of theſe Iſlands, or that other of the Orchades; but ſpeaks of one call'd Dearegarchel, belonging to the Pope, and makes Glaſcow only a Suffragan to St. Andrews. By which it appears that it is not many Ages ſince Glaſgow was made an Archbiſhoprick, the Biſhop of St. Andrews being then the only Metropolitan among them. But about antient Dioceſes we muſt not be very ſollicitous: For whatever fabulous Writers affirm, it is certain from Bede, that no part of this Nation poſſeſs'd by the Picts, was converted till the fifth Century, when firſt in the Time of Arcadius and Honorius, the Southern Picts were converted by Ninias a Briton, who built a Church at Candida Caſa, which was the firſt Cathedral in that part of Scotland, and which gave Denomination of Whitern to the Place, as Bede obſerves [o], becauſe the Church was built of Stone, which was not a very uſual thing among the Britons in thoſe Days. The Northern Picts were not converted till above an hundred and fifty Years after this. For their Apoſtle was Columbanus the famous Monk, who came out of Ireland in the Time of Juſtin Junior, An. 565, to preach the Goſpel to them, as Bede informs us in the ſame place. So that it would be in vain to ſearch after Epiſcopal Dioceſes, before we have any Certainty that Chriſtianity was planted among them. In the following Ages we have no particular Account of any other Dioceſe, ſave this of Candida Caſa, in Bede, or any other authentick Writer. For though they ſpeak of Biſhops both among the Southern and the Northern Picts, yet they take no notice of the Names of their Sees. Whence ſome have concluded, that the Scottiſh Biſhops had no proper Sees, but were ordained at large for the whole Country: And others, that there was but one Biſhop for all the Region. The firſt of which Opinions is incredible, becauſe it is againſt the known Rule of the Catholick Church, which forbad any Biſhop to be ordained at large: And the other is expreſly refuted by Bede [p], who ſpeaks of ſeveral Biſhops in the Province of the northern Picts; and by the Writer of the Life of Ninias in Biſhop Uſher's Antiquities, who ſays [q], That Ninias having converted the Southern Picts, ordain'd them Presbyters, and conſecrated them Biſhops, and divided the whole Region into certain Parochiæ, or Dioceſes, and ſo return'd to its own Church again, meaning Candida Caſa before-mentioned. Whence it is evident, there were Biſhops both among the Northern and Southern Picts, though the Names of their Dioceſes be not mention'd. As for the Dioceſe of Candida Caſa, Biſhop Uſher truly obſerves, that it was not properly in any part of the Picts Dominions, but in that Part or Province of the Romiſh Britain, which was call'd Valentia, and afterwards Bernicia by Bede, when it was under the Dominion of the Saxons. Biſhop Uſher [r] thinks it was alſo ſometimes call'd the Kingdom of Cambria or Cumberland; and that the Dioceſe of Caſa Candida was ſometimes of equal extent with that Kingdom, reaching from Glaſcow on the River Clota or Cluyd to Stanmore Croſs in the Borders of Weſtmerland: and that in the time of Kentigern the See was remov'd to Glaſcow. But when the Iriſh-Scots had ſeiz'd this Country, and given it the Name of Galloway, this, and the neighbouring Regions were all ſubjected to the Biſhop of Sodora, whoſe Reſidence was in the Iſle of Man, till Malcolm the third, King of Scots, made Candida Caſa a Biſhop's See again, and aſſign'd it the Country of Galloway for its Dioceſe, which continues to be ſo to this Day. I cannot give any ſuch particular Account of any other Dioceſe in the Kingdom of Scotland, for want of certain Records; but this is certain, That from the firſt Converſion of it, firſt by Ninias, and then by Columbanus, they had ſeveral Biſhops among the Picts; part of whoſe Country being made tributary, as well as Valentia, to the Saxon Kings of Northumberland, their Biſhops conſequently became ſubject to the Metropolitan of York, from whoſe Hands they ſometimes had their Ordination.

SECT. XX. Of the Britiſh Church in England and Wales.

THERE remains only one Country more to be examin'd, which is our own Part of the Britiſh Nation: A Country that embraced the Chriſtian Faith as early as any of the Weſtern Parts of the World, and therefore may be preſum'd to have receiv'd the ſame Form of Government that we have found in all other Churches. It has been noted before, that the Britannick Dioceſe was divided by the Romans at firſt into three Provinces, and then into five: But by the Injury of Time, we have no compleat Account of what Biſhopricks were erected in every Province. They who ſpeak of a preciſe Number of Flamens and Arch-Flamens turn'd into ſo many Archbiſhops and Biſhops, ſeem rather to deliver their own Fancies, than relate true Hiſtory. That which is certain in the caſe, is this: There were here in the Beginning of the Fourth Century ſuch Epiſcopal Churches as were in all other Nations: For the Biſhops of theſe Churches were ſummon'd to Councils as others were. There were Britiſh Biſhops in the Council of Arles, Eborius [a] de Civitate Eboracenſi, Reſtitutus de Civitate Londinenſi, Adelphus de Civitate Colonia Londinenſium. The laſt of which Holſtenius [b] following Cambden and Selden in his Notes upon Eutychius, thinks, ought rather to be read Colonia Camalodunenſium; which ſome take to be Colcheſter, others Maldon, others Walden in Eſſex. But a late learned Antiquary [c] in his poſthumous Obſervations upon Antonine's Itinerary of Britain has happily diſcover'd that the true Reading ſhould in all probability be Colonia Lindi, which is the old Roman Name for Lincoln, as he ſhews not only out of Antonine and Ptolemy who call it Lindum, but out of the anonymous Geographer of Ravenna, who more expreſly ſtyles it Lindum Colonia; which with a little Variation is the Name that is given it alſo by Bede [d], who calls it Lindocolina, and the Region thereabout Provincia Lindiſi, whence I preſume comes the Name of Lindſey Coaſt, which is the Name of one part of that Province to this day. But to return to the ancient Biſhops of this Nation: Some Authors ſay, there were Britiſh Biſhops in the Council of Nice; but that does not ſo evidently appear from antient Hiſtory. It is more certain there were three Biſhops from Britain in the Council of Ariminum, as Sulpicius Severus [e] informs us. And Athanaſius alſo [f] takes notice of Britiſh Biſhops in the Council of Sardica, An. 347. And Hilary inſcribes his Book de Synodis to the Biſhops [g] of the Britiſh Provinces, among many others. Yet none of theſe Authors tell us preciſely the Number of the whole College, and therefore we can only conjecture from the Remains of thoſe Britiſh Biſhops which continu'd in Wales after the Saxon Conqueſts, and were there at the coming of Auſtin into England. Bede [h] takes notice of ſeven of thoſe, which came to the Synod of Worceſter, or Auſtin's Oak, to confer with Auſtin about the Settlement of the Church. And over theſe was alſo a Metropolitan, to whom they profeſs'd Subjection in the Council, which was the Archbiſhop of Menevia, or St. David's, or as they term him, the Archbiſhop of Caerleon upon Uske, becauſe that was the antient Metropolitical See, before it was tranſlated to St. David's. The Names of the other Suffragans, as ſome of the Britiſh Hiſtorians [i] record them in Latin, were then Herefordenſis, Tavenſis, Paternenſis, Banchorenſis, Elvienſis, Viccienſis, Morgarenſis, that is, Hereford, Landaff, Lan-Patern, Bangor, St. Aſaph, Worceſter, and Morgan. Now if the Number of Biſhops in other Provinces were anſwerable to this, we may conclude, there were more Biſhops before the Invaſion of the Saxons than there are at this Day. But when Auſtin came into England, he found none except the forementiond. However Gregory the Great gave him Orders to ſettle twenty ſix Biſhops, twelve Biſhops Suffragans to the Biſhop of London, and as many ſubject to the Metropolitan of York, and reſerve to himſelf the Primacy [k] over the whole Nation. Yet this was rather a Scheme laid for future Ages, when the whole Nation ſhould be converted, than any preſent Settlement or Conſtitution of the Church. For above fifty Years after this, there were not above ſeven Biſhops in all the Heptarchy, or ſeven Saxon Kingdoms, as appears from the Account which Bede gives of the Council of Herudford, An. 673, where were preſent Theodore Archbiſhop of Dorovernia or Canterbury [l], Biſi Biſhop of the Eaſt-Angles, Wilfrid Biſhop of the Northumbrians, Putta Biſhop of Rocheſter, Leutherius Biſhop of the Weſt Saxons, and Winfrid Biſhop of the whole Province of the Mercians. In which Council [m] a Canon was made, That the Number of Biſhops ſhould be augmented, as the Number of Converts ſhould increaſe. But nothing was done for the preſent, ſave that Biſi or Bifus Biſhop of the Eaſt-Angles being grown old, two others, Ecca and Badwin, were conſecrated in his room: And from that Time to the Age in which Bede liv'd, that Province had two Biſhops, as our Author notes in the ſame place. Theſe were the Biſhops of Elmham and Dunwich, which were afterward united, and the See remov'd to Thetford, and from thence to Norwich, whoſe Biſhops ſucceed to the whole Kingdom of the Eaſt-Angles. So that in that Age a Kingdom and a Dioceſe were almoſt commenſurate. In the Kingdom of Northumberland there were at firſt but two Biſhops, whoſe Sees were York and Lindisfarne. But not long after, An. 678, Egfrid King of Northumberland having expell'd Wilfrid Biſhop of York from his See, four or five Biſhops were ordain'd in his Room: One in the Province of Deira; another in the Province of Bernicia; a third at Hagulſtade or Hexam in Northumberland; a fourth in the Province of the Picts, which was then ſubject to the Engliſh; and a fifth in the Province of Lindiſſi, as Bede [n] calls it, which was lately taken out of the Dioceſe and Kingdom of Mercia, and not long after laid to it again. The great Kingdom of Mercia (comprehending the Counties of Gloceſter, Hereford, Worceſter, Warwick, Leiceſter, Cambridge, Rutland, Northampton, Lincoln, Nottingham, Bedford, Buckingham, Oxford, Darby, Stafford, Shropſhire, Cheſhire, and part of Hertfordſhire) was at firſt but the Dioceſe of one Biſhop, whom Bede commonly calls the Biſhop of the Angli-Mediterranei, or Mercians, whoſe See was Litchfield, the Royal Seat and Metropolis of the Kingdom of Mercia; till about the Year 678, a new See was erected at Sidnaceſter in Lincolnſhire, and ſome time after another at Dorcheſter in Oxfordſhire, which were afterwards united and remov'd to Lincoln. Out of this large Dioceſe alſo the Sees of Worceſter and Hereford were taken, as Ely was out of that part which fell to Lincoln: Not to mention the Dioceſes of Cheſter, Peterborough, Oxford and Gloceſter, which had their Riſe out of the ſame at the Reformation. The Dioceſe of Wincheſter was alſo very large at firſt, containing all the Kingdoms of the Weſt Saxons, till it was divided by King Ina between Wincheſter and Sherborn, An. 705. The latter of which was afterward ſubdivided into the Dioceſes of Cornwall, Devonſhire, Somerſetſhire, Wiltſhire and Dorſetſhire, ſome of which being united again, made up the Dioceſes of Exeter, Wells, Salisbury and Briſtol, as they now ſtand in the preſent Frame and Conſtitution of the Church. I think it needleſs to carry this Enquiry any farther, ſince what has been already ſuggeſted, ſufficiently ſhews, that the Dioceſes in England were anciently much larger than they are now, and that it has ever been the Wiſdom of the Church to multiply and contract them. Though many of them ſtill remain ſo large, that if they be compar'd with ſome of the antient Italian Dioceſes, one of them will be found to be equal to ten or twenty of thoſe which lay round about Rome.

Remains

SECT. XXI. The whole Account confirmed from ſome antient Canons of the Church.

I ſhall conclude this Chapter with a few antient Canons, which confirm the Account that has been given of Epiſcopal Dioceſes throughout the World, as ſuppoſing them generally to have Country Regions and Country Pariſhes belonging to them. The Council of Neocæſarea, which was held ſome Years before the Council of Nice, makes expreſs mention [o] of πρεσβύτεροι ἐπιχώριοι, Country Presbyters, who are forbidden to officiate in the City Church, ſave only in the Abſence of the Biſhop or City Presbyters. The Council of Antioch has two Canons of the ſame Import. The one deſcribes a Biſhop's Dioceſe [p] to be a City and all the Region that was ſubject to it, wherein he might ordain Presbyters and Deacons, and order all Things according to his own Judgment without conſulting his Metropolitan. The other is a Proviſion concerning the Chrorepiſcopi [q], who were ſeated in the Villages and Regions about the City, that they ſhould govern the Churches committed to them, and content themſelves with that Care, ordaining Readers, Subdeacons and Exorciſts; but not Presbyters or Deacons, unleſs commiſſioned to it by the City Biſhop, to whom both they and their Region were ſubject. A like Proviſion is made by the Council of Nice [r] in caſe a Novatian Biſhop ſhould return to the Unity of the Catholick Church, that then the Catholick Biſhop might provide him the Place of a Chorepiſcopus in ſome Part of his Dioceſe, that there might not be two Biſhops in one City. And indeed all the Canons that mention the Chorepiſcopi, are full Proof that a Dioceſe was not only a City, but a Country Region, over which thoſe Chorepiſcopi preſided, under the Inſpection of the City Biſhop, to whom they were accountable. The Canons of Sardica [s], and Laodicea [t], do plainly ſuppoſe the ſame thing, when they prohibit Biſhops to be ordained in ſmall Cities or Villages, becauſe a Presbyter or Itinerant Viſiter might be ſufficient to take care of them. So in the African Canons, one orders the ſame as the Council of Toledo, that every Presbyter [u] throughout the Dioceſe, who has the Care of a Church, ſhall have recourſe to his own Biſhop for Chriſm to be uſed at Eaſter. And another [w] ſays, no Biſhop ſhall leave his Principal Church, to go to reſide upon any other Church in the Dioceſe. Which Canons ſpeak plain Nonſenſe, unleſs it be ſuppoſed that there were then other Churches in the Dioceſe beſide the Mother Church.

SECT. XXII. And from the Biſhop's Obligation to viſit his Dioceſe once a Year, and confirm.

THE Biſhop's Obligation to viſit his Dioceſe, is a farther Proof of the ſame Thing. For this was a neceſſary Conſequent of having ſeveral Churches at a Diſtance under his Juriſdiction: Such as he could not perſonally attend himſelf, he was obliged to viſit, and ſee that they were provided of a proper Incumbent, and that every thing was performed in due Order. St. Auſtin and St. Baſil [x], who had pretty large Dioceſes, ſpeak often upon this account of their being imployed in their Viſitations. And the Rule in ſome Places was to viſit ordinarily once a Year, as appears from the Council of Tarraco in Spain, which lays this Injunction on Biſhops [y], becauſe it was found by Experience, that many Churches in their Dioceſes were left deſtitute and neglected, therefore they were obliged to viſit them once a Year. And if a Dioceſe was ſo large, that a Biſhop could not perform this Duty annually, that was thought a reaſonable Cauſe to divide the Dioceſe, and lay ſome Part of the Burden upon a new Biſhop; which was the Reaſon aſſigned in the Council of Lugo for dividing the large Dioceſe of Gallecia, as has been obſerved before [z] in ſpeaking of the Spaniſh Churches. St. Jerom has a Remark upon the Exerciſe of Confirmation, which alſo mightily confirms this Notion of antient Epiſcopal Dioceſes. He ſays [*], it was the Cuſtom of the Churches, when any Perſons were baptized by Presbyters or Deacons in Villages, Caſtles or other remote Places, for the Biſhop to go to them and give them Impoſition of Hands in order to receive the Holy Ghoſt; and that many Places lay at ſo great a diſtance, that the Parties baptized dyed before the Biſhop could come to viſit them. Which is a plain Deſcription of ſuch Dioceſes as we have generally found in every Part of the Catholick Church, ſome few Provinces excepted, where the Number of Cities and Populouſneſs of the Country made Dioceſes more numerous and of leſs Extent than in other Places.

CHAP. VII.

The Notitia, or Geographical Deſcription of the Biſhopricks of the Antient Church, as firſt made by the Order of Leo Sapiens, compared with ſome others.

FOR the fuller Proof of what has been aſſerted in the laſt Chapters, and to give the Reader a clear View of the State of the antient Church, I ſhall here ſubjoin one of the Notitia's, or Catalogues of Biſhopricks contained in the five greater Patriarchates, Conſtantinople, Rome, Antioch, Jeruſalem, and Alexandria, according to the Account that was taken firſt by the Order of the Emperor Leo Sapiens about the Year 891. For tho' this does not come up to the Antiquity of thoſe other Records, which I have generally made uſe of in this Work; yet being the moſt antient and perfect Account we have in the kind, and agreeing with the ſcattered Remains of Antiquity of this nature, it will be uſeful as a collateral Evidence, to corroborate the Account that has been given of the Diviſion and Extent of Dioceſes in the Primitive Church. And I the rather chuſe to inſert it here, to ſatisfy the Curioſity of many of my Readers, to whoſe View perhaps this Notitia may not otherwiſe come, being ſcarce to be met with but in Books of great Rarity or great Price, which fall not into the Hands of every ordinary Reader. The firſt of this Kind was publiſhed by Leunclavius in his Jus Græco-Romanum [a], An. 1596, in Greek and Latin, under the Name of Leo Sapiens the reputed Author of it. After which ſome others, but imperfect, were ſet forth by Carolus a Sancto Paulo [b] in his Geography of the antient Church. The Defects of which were ſupplied by Jacobus Goar, from a MS in the French King's Library, which he publiſhed at the End of Codinus [c] among the Byzantin Hiſtorians, An. 1648; and by Biſhop Beverege from a MS in the Bodleian Library publiſhed in his Notes [d] upon the Pandects, An. 1672. The laſt of which being acknowledged to be the moſt perfect in the Kind, has been ſince reprinted by the learned Schelſtrate [e], with ſome Notes and Obſervations upon the Defects and Variations of all the former; which, having reviſed and compared them together, I ſhall here preſent to the curious Reader, that he may have them all together in one View.

After the Metropolitans, follow the Autocephali, or Independent Biſhops, which the Notitia in Leunclavius calls Archbiſhops. They were ſuch as had neither Metropolitans above them, nor Suffragans under them, being immediately ſubject to the Patriarch only, as Goar's Notitia informs us. In Biſhop Beverege's Notitia they are as follows.

Provinces.	Autocephali.
1 Myſia.	1 Odyſſus.

To theſe, in Goar's Notitia are added two more, Delca or Derce, and Reni in Armenia. But that in Leunclavius has but thirty-nine, whereof ſixteen are different Names, viz. Nice, Meſſana, Garella, Briſis, Carabyzia, Lemnus, Leucas, Cudræ, Soteropolis, Pedachthoa, Eroina, Gotthia, Sugdaia, Phullæ, Pharſala and Matrach. And ſeveral of thoſe which in the Bodleian Notitia are called Autocephali, are in Leunclavius reckoned among the Metropolitans, as Trapezus, Smyrna, Cotyaium, Mitylene, Amaſtris, Pompeiopolis, Ænus and Apamea. Whence it is eaſy to conclude, that Archbiſhops and Autocephali were then a ſort of Titular Metropolitans, who had the Privilege of being Independent, though they had no Suffragan Biſhops under them.

Now follow the particular Provinces, with the Number of Biſhopricks contained in each of them.

Province of Cappadocia.

1 Cæſarea, the Metropolis. 2 Thermæ Regiæ. 3 Nyſſa. 4 Methodiopolis Armeniæ. 5 Camuliana. 6 Ciſciſſus, or Ciſſus: To which are added in Leunclavius. 7 Euaiſſa. 8 Serias. 9 Arathia. 10 Æpolia.

Province of Aſia.

1 Epheſus, the Metropolis. 2 Hypepæ. 3 Tralles. 4 Magneſia ad Mæandrum. 5 Elea. 6 Adramyttium. 7 Aſſus. 8 Gargara. 9 Maſtaura. 10 Caloe. 11 Bryulla. 12 Pittamne. 13 Myrine. 14 Phocia. 15 Aurillopolis, al. Aureliopolis. 16 Niſa, al. Nyſſa. 17 Maſchacoma. 18 Metropolis. 19 Baretti. 20 Magneſia. 21 Aninantes. 22 Pergamus. 23 Anea. 24 Priene. 25 Arcadiopolis. 26 Novæ Aulæ. 27 Templum Jovis. 28 Augaza. 29 Sion. 30 Colophon. 31 Levedus, al. Lebedus. 32 Teus. 33 Erythræ. 34 Clazomenæ. 35 Attadri, al. Antandri. 36 Theodoſiopolis, al. Peperine. 37 Cymæ. 38 Palæopolis: To which are added in Leunclavius, Thryæa and Chliara; but Phocia, Magneſia and Clazomenæ are wanting.

Here the Province of Thracia and Macedonia is interpos'd in Leunclavius.

1 Heraclea, the Metropolis. 2 Theodoropolis. 3 Rhœdeſtus. 4 Panium. 5 Hexamilium. 6 Calliopolis. 7 Periſtaſis. 8 Chariopolis. 9 Chalcis. 10 Daoneum. 11 Madyta. 12 Pamphilus. 13 Medea. 14 Lizicus. 15 Sergentza. 16 Metra. 17 Tzurolloe. 18 Athyra.

In the other Notitia's the Province is called the Province of Europa; but it has but ſix Biſhopricks aſſign'd to it, viz.

Province of Galatia.

Province of Lydia.

1 Sardes, the Metropolis. 2 Philadelphia. 3 Tripolis. 4 Thyatria. 5 Seta. 6 Arilliapolis, al. Aureliopolis. 7 Gordi. 8 Troalli. 9 Sala. 10 Silandus. 11 Mœonia. 12 Fanum Apollinis. 13 Hyrcanis. 14 Muſtina. 15 Arcuſtus, al. Acaraſus. 16 Apollonias. 17 Attalia. 18 Baga. 19 Balandus. 20 Meſotymolus. 21 Hierocæſarea. 22 Dale. 23 Stratonicea. 24 Ceraſia. 25 Sattala. 26 Gabbala. 27 Hermocapelia.

Province of Bithynia.

1 Nicomedia. 2 Pruſa, or Theopolis. 3 Prænetus. 4 Helenopolis. 5 Baſilinopolis. 6 Daſchylium. 7 Apollonias. 8 Adriana. 9 Cæſarea. 10 Gallus, or Lophi. 11 Daphnuſia. 12 Eriſte.

The ſame Province.

1 Nice. 2 Modrina, al. Mela, or Melian. 3 Linoe. 4 Taius. 5 Gerduſervæ. 6 Numericæ. 7 Maximianæ. It is added in Leunclavius, that Chalcedon in the ſame Province had no Sees under it, as being only an Autocephalus, or Honorary Metropolis.

Province of Pamphylia.

1 Scida. 2 Aſpendus. 3 Ettena. 4 Orymna. 5 Caſſa. 6 Semnea. 7 Corallia. 8 Coraciſſus. 9 Syethra, al. Synedra. 10 Mylone, or Juſtinianople. 11 Anamanda. 12 Daliſandus, al. Duldaſus. 13 Isbi. 14 Lybra. 15 Colybraſſus. 16 Manæa.

Province of Armenia.

Province of Galatia Secunda.

1 Amorium. 2 Philomelium. 3 Docimeum. 4 Claneus. 5 Polybotus. 6 Piſſia. Note, This Province is called Phrygia in Leunclavius; but the Cities are the ſame.

Here it is remarked in all the Notitia's, That the following Metropolitans and their Suffragans were taken from the Roman Dioceſe, and added to Conſtantinople, viz. 1 Theſſalonica. 2 Syracuſe. 3 Corinth. 4 Rhegium. 5 Nicopolis. 6 Athens. 7 Patræ. 8 Novæ Patræ. As alſo the Metropolitan of Seleucia in Iſauria, or as Leunclavius calls it, Pamphylia, with twenty three Biſhops under him. Which conclude the Notitia in Leunclavius: For it only contains the Account of the Patriarchate of Conſtantinople. Carolus a Sancto Paulo alſo wholly omits the Roman Patriarchate, becauſe his Mannſcript here, he ſays, was ſo corrupt that there was no Senſe to be made of it: But this Defect is ſupply'd by Goar and Biſhop Beverege, in whoſe Notitia's the following Account is given.

The Province under the moſt glorious Eparch of Rome, or Italy.

Concerning this the Author only remarks, that it is an Autocephalus, or independent Country, not ſubject to any Apoſtolical Throne, but honoured in reſpect to St. Gregory of Armenia, having two hundred Cities and Caſtles.

Province of Cyprus.

The Author makes the ſame Obſervation upon this Country, that it is an Independent alſo, in Honour of St. Barnabas the Apoſtle who was found here, having the Goſpel of St. Mark laid upon his Breaſt. The Cities in this Province are,

1 Conſtantia the Metropolis. 2 Citium. 3 Amathus. 4 Curium. 5 Paphus. 6 Arſenæ. 7 Soli. 8 Lapithus, the Birth-place of Georgius Cyprius, who wrote the Book out of which theſe were taken. 9 Cyrenia. 10 Tamaſus. 11 Cythri. 12 Trimithus. 13 Carpaſin.

There is added at the End of Goar's Notitia: "This Account was taken An. 6391, in the Reign "of the Emperor Leo Sapiens, and under the Pa"triarch Photius:" that is, An. 891.

In this Deſcription of the Church, the Reader may obſerve, that the Author being a Greek, is much more accurate in his Account of the Greek and Eaſtern Churches, than of the Weſtern and Latin: For here is no Account of France, Spain, Britain, Illyricum; and ſuch confus'd and imperfect Accounts of the Provinces of Italy and Africk, as ſhew plainly, that the Author was not rightly acquainted with the ſtate of the Church in thoſe Countries; at leaſt not in Italy; For in all Italy and Sicily here are not mention'd above an hundred Dioceſes, and yet it is clear from the Accounts that have been given before out of the Subſcriptions of antient Councils, that there were nearer three hundred Dioceſes in thoſe Regions. Above one hundred and fifty Italian Biſhops of diſtinct Sees are found ſubſcrib'd in one Age in the Roman Councils held under Hilary, Felix and Symmachus, and there were almoſt as many more not mentioned in thoſe Councils, but to be found in other Councils and antient Records. And though when theſe Notitia's were made, ſeveral of the antient Dioceſes might be united together, yet it appears from the Subſcriptions of the Roman Councils under Eugenius II. and Leo IV. in the ninth Century, that there were above double the Number to what the Notitia's mention. So that it muſt be own'd, that they give but an imperfect Account of the Latin or Weſtern Church. But the Account of the Greek and Eaſtern Churches is more compleat, and agrees very well with the Subſcriptions collected out of the antient Councils. And ſo they one confirm another, and both together fully make out the Account that has been given both of the Number and Extent of Dioceſes in the antient Church.

CHAP. VIII.

Of the Diviſion of Dioceſes into Pariſhes, and the firſt Original of them.

SECT. I. Of the antient Names of Pariſh-Churches.

THERE remains but one thing more to be enquir'd into on this Head, which is the Diviſion of Dioceſes into ſuch leſſer Precincts as we now call Pariſhes, and Pariſh Churches. Concerning which I ſhall here need to ſay the leſs, becauſe ſo much has already been ſaid incidentally in ſpeaking of the Extent of antient Dioceſes, which we have generally found too large to be confin'd to a ſingle Congregation. All that I ſhall add upon this Subject therefore in this Place, is only to make a few Remarks upon the antient Names of Pariſhes (becauſe ſome of them are a little ambiguous) and ſhew when, and upon what account, and by what degrees Dioceſes were divided into Pariſhes, to bring them to the preſent State and Form of the Church. As to the antient Names, I have had occaſion to ſhew before, that the Words παροικία, & διοίκησις for the three firſt Ages were of the ſame Importance, denoting not what we now call a Pariſh Church, but a City with its adjacent Towns or Country Region. But in the fourth and fifth Ages we find both Names promiſcuouſly given as well to Country Pariſhes, as Epiſcopal, or City Churches. For now theſe leſſer Diviſions of Dioceſes began to be call'd Parochiæ, as may be ſeen in the Council of Chalcedon [a], which order'd, that in every Church ſuch Country Pariſhes as belong'd of old time to any Biſhop, ſhould continue in his Poſſeſſion without any Moleſtation. And in the Council of Vaiſon, an. 442, a Decree was made [b] that Country Pariſhes ſhould have Presbyters to preach in them, as well as the City Churches. And ſo the Word Parochia is often us'd by St. Jerom [c], Sulpicius Severus [d], Theodoret [e], Innocentius [f] and other Writers of thoſe Ages. Though ſtill the Name Parochia continu'd to ſignify properly an Epiſcopal Dioceſe, from which it was transfer'd to denote thoſe leſſer Parochiæ, becauſe they were a ſort of Imitation of the former. Which is the Account that Socrates [g] ſeems to give of them, when ſpeaking of the Villages of the Region of Mareotes that were ſubject to the Biſhop of Alexandria, he ſays, they were as ſo many παροικίαι, or leſſer Dioceſes under his City. And upon the ſame Reaſon the Name Diœceſis was ſometimes given to a Pariſh Church alſo, though it moſt properly belongs to an Epiſcopal Dioceſe. Thus Sidonius Apollinarius [h] ſpeaks of his own viſiting his Dioceſes, meaning only the Pariſh Churches under his Epiſcopal Juriſdiction. And ſo in the Collation of Carthage it is ſaid [i] of one Place that there was perfect Unity not only in the City, but in all the Dioceſes, that is, the Country Pariſhes or Villages belonging to it. Baluzius has obſerv'd the ſame [k] in Ruricius Lemovicenſis [l], and Gregory of Tours [m], and ſome other Writers. The reaſon of this Appellation being, as I ſaid before, for that theſe Churches whereupon ſingle Presbyters were fix'd, were a ſort of leſſer Dioceſes, as the Author of the Pontifical [n] under the Name of Damaſus terms them; and ſome Canons give them [o] the Name of Eccleſiæ Diœceſanæ, Dioceſan Churches; and others Country or Village-Churches, whence the Presbyters reſiding on them were term'd ἐπιχώριοι πρεσβύτεροι, Country-Presbyters, by the Council of Neocæſarea [p], in oppoſition to the City-Presbyters in the Cathedral or Mother-Church. Pariſh-Churches were alſo peculiarly call'd Tituli, as has been noted before [q], in contradiſtinction to the Biſhop's Church; being ſuch Churches as had particular Presbyters and Deacons aſſign'd to them, who upon that account are ſaid to have a Title. And ſome learned Perſons [r] are of Opinion, that Cardinal Presbyters and Deacons, at firſt were no more but Presbyters and Deacons ſo deputed and affix'd to the Service of particular Pariſh Churches, and that as well at Rome as other Places.

SECT. II. The Original of Pariſh Churches owing to Neceſſity, and founded upon the Apoſtolical Rules of Chriſtian Communion.

As to the Original of Pariſh-Churches, there is no doubt but it was Neceſſity, and the Conveniences of celebrating Chriſtian Offices, and holding Chriſtian Communion with greater Eaſe, that firſt gave occaſion to them. For when the Multitude of Believers increas'd ſo in large and populous Cities, that one Church could not contain them, there was a Neceſſity of dividing the Aſſembly, and erecting other Churches, where all the Solemnities of the Chriſtian Worſhip and the uſual Offices of Divine Service might be perform'd, as well as in the Mother-

Mother-Church, to anſwer the Apoſtolical Ordinance of holding Chriſtian Communion one with another; which was according to what we read Acts ii. 42. That Men ſhould continue ſtedfaſtly in the Apoſtle's Doctrine, and Fellowſhip, and in breaking of Bread, and in Prayers. The Author of the Pontifical under the Name of Damaſus, in the Life of Marcellus, ſeems to ſay, That ſeveral of the Roman Tituli, or Pariſh Churches, were erected [s] for the Conveniency of baptizing great Multitudes that were converted from Paganiſm, and for burying the Martyrs. But if there was any Neceſſity upon that Account, there was doubtleſs a greater Neceſſity upon another. For in thoſe Days the whole Body of the Chriſtian Church was us'd to communicate weekly at the Lord's Table; and it being impoſſible that one Church ſhould ſuffice in large Cities for this purpoſe, there was an abſolute Neceſſity of building more, that Chriſtians might live in Communion one with another. And ſo Pariſh Churches muſt be as antient as the Neceſſities of the Church, and he that knows how to date the one, may eaſily date the Original of the other for any particular City or Dioceſe in the Univerſe.

SECT. III.
Some of them probably as antient as the Times of the Apoſtles.

BUT as Cities and their Appendant Dioceſes differed very much in their Size and Extent, ſo it is reaſonable to believe, that ſome of them were obliged to build Pariſh-Churches much ſooner than others. And in ſuch Places as Jeruſalem and Rome, there is great Probability from ſeveral Paſſages in the Acts and St. Paul's Epiſtles, that there were more Churches than one from the Days of the Apoſtles. However, it is undeniably evident from Optatus, as I have ſhewed before, that Rome had above forty Churches in it before the End of the third Century, or in the Beginning of the Diocletian Perſecution. As for the leſſer Cities, it will be no wonder to find ſome of them which had but one Church whilſt the Perſecution laſted; ſuch as that City in Phrygia, which Lactantius ſpeaks of, where he ſays, The Church and all the People were burnt [t] together by one of the barbarous Prefects in the laſt Perſecution. Valeſius thinks, Euſebius ſpeaks of the ſame City, who ſays [u], it was all Chriſtian at that time, both Magiſtrates and People, and therefore an Army was ſent againſt them, which burnt them all together, Men, Women and Children, as they were making their Supplications to Chriſt their God. From which it may be concluded, that there were ſome Cities which were but what Euſebius calls this, πολίχνια, ſo very ſmall as to need no other Church beſide the Biſhop's Cathedral, even when all the Members of them were become univerſally Chriſtian. And this may ſeem an Argument to ſome, that there were antiently many Epiſcopal Dioceſes that never had any Pariſh-Churches.

SECT. IV.
Some leſſer Cities had Country Pariſhes even in Times of Perſecution.

BUT here it muſt be remembred, what has been abundantly proved before, That generally the antient Cities had their Suburbs or Country Region belonging to them; and ſome that were very ſmall Cities, as Cyprus in Comagene, where Theodoret was Biſhop, had upon this account very large Territories under their Juriſdiction. And we find a great many Inſtances of ſuch Country Regions having Country Pariſhes, and Country Preſbyters and Deacons reſiding on them, even in the hotteſt times of Perſecution; as appears from the Canons of the Council of Eliberis [x], and thoſe of Neocæſarea [y], the former of which was held while the Diocletian Perſecution laſted, and the latter immediately after it was over, and yet both of them ſpeak of Country Preſbyters and Deacons, to whom the Care of Chriſtian Aſſemblies was committed. Epiphanius alſo [z] ſpeaks of Village Presbyters belonging to the City Caſchara in Meſopotamia in the middle of the third Century; and Dionyſius, Biſhop of Alexandria, about the ſame time frequently mentions ſuch in the Regions of Arſinoe, Alexandria and other Cities of Ægypt and Libya, in ſeveral Fragments of his Epiſtles, recorded in Euſebius, which have already been alledg'd, and need not here be repeated. From theſe and many other ſuch Inſtances it is evident, that as ſoon as the Chriſtian Religion began to ſpread it ſelf from the Cities into the Country Regions in any conſiderable manner, Village Churches were erected, and Country Presbyters fix'd on them; the Neceſſities and Convenience of the Church requiring it ſo to be, for the greater Benefit and Edification of the whole Community. Thus Pariſh-Churches had their Original both in City and Country, not all at one Time, nor by any general Decree, but as the Exigencies of every Dioceſe requir'd, the Biſhop of which was always the propereſt Judge, how many Aſſiſtants he needed to help him to diſcharge the ſeveral Offices belonging to him as chief Super-intendent of the City and Territory under his Juriſdiction. In France, the Council of Vaiſon ſpeaks of Country Pariſhes in the beginning of the fifth Century, as I have noted before in the firſt Section of this Chapter. But in England we have not ſo early an Account of them, becauſe the Records we have remaining of the antient Britiſh Church, make no mention of Pariſhes: And after the Saxon Converſions were begun, it was ſome time before our Dioceſes were divided into Pariſhes, and longer before they had appropriated Revenues ſettled upon them. Some think Honorius

the fifth Archbiſhop of Canterbury divided ſo much of the Nation as was converted, into Pariſhes about the Year 640. So Biſhop Godwyn and Dugdale. But others think, this Diviſion is rather to be underſtood of Dioceſes than Pariſhes: For Parochia in Bede commonly denotes a Biſhop's Dioceſe, according to the antient Style and Language of the Church; as is evident from that Canon of the Council of Herudford mention'd in Bede [a], which was held above thirty Years after this ſuppos'd Diviſion of Honorius, in the Time of Archbiſhop Theodore, An. 673; where it is decreed, That no Biſhop ſhall invade another's Parochia, or Dioceſe, but be content with the Government of the People committed to him. Biſhop Andrews [b] indeed brings this very Canon for a Proof of Pariſhes being now ſettled all over the Nation: But I conceive the other Senſe of the Word Parochia to be more proper to that Place. Though I will not deny but that toward the latter End of this Archbiſhop's Time, who liv'd to the Year 690, the Diviſion of Pariſhes might be made. For Bede obſerves [c] that Religion and the Affairs of the Church made a greater Progreſs in his time than ever they had done before. And Mr. Wheelock [d] in his Obſervations upon the Place cites an antient Manuſcript, which ſpeaks of the Diviſion of Pariſhes as made under him. Now Chriſtianity had ſpread it ſelf into the Country, and Churches were built, and Presbyters fixed upon them, and Firſt-fruits, and other Revenues were ſettled by King Ina [e] among the Weſt-Saxons, and by Withred King of Kent in the Council of Beconceld, An. 694; and Patrons, when they founded Churches, endowed them with Lands for proper Maintenance: All which ſeem to imply, that the Original of Country Pariſhes was about the latter End of the ſeventh Century in this Nation, and in the next Age they were fully ſettled.

SECT. V.

The City Pariſhes not always aſſigned to particular Presbyters; but ſerved in common by the Clergy of the Biſhop's Church. This otherwiſe in Country Pariſhes.

BUT to return to the former Times: It is farther to be noted concerning the antient manner of ſerving the City Pariſh Churches, that they were not uſually committed to any particular Presbyters, as thoſe in the Country Regions were, but were ſerved in common by the Clergy of the Biſhop's Church. Learned Men conclude this from a Paſſage in Epiphanius, who ſeems to note it as a particular Cuſtom at Alexandria, that all the Churches there had their own particular Presbyters aſſigned them, who dwelt near their own Churches, every one in their own Streets or Diviſions [f], which the Alexandrians in their own Language called Laura. Petavius indeed [g] thinks, Epiphanius was miſtaken, and that it was not the peculiar Cuſtom of Alexandria, but common to all great Cities, to have Presbyters fixed upon all their Churches. But Valeſius [h] and other learned Men defend Epiphanius againſt his Cenſure, and ſhews this to have been ſo ſingular a Cuſtom at Alexandria, that perhaps no other City in the World in that Age, no not Rome it ſelf, which had above forty Churches, had any one Church appropriated to any particular Presbyter, but they were all ſerved in common by the Clergy of the Biſhop's Church. Valeſius obſerves, that it was ſo at Rome to the time of Innocent I, who ſpeaks of his ſending the Bread of the conſecrated Euchariſt to the Preſbyters miniſtring in the Pariſh Churches on the Lord's-day, that they might not on that Day think themſelves [i] ſeparated from his Communion. So that they ſeem to have been the Clergy of the great Church, ſent forth by Turns only, to miniſter in the ſeveral Tituli on the Lord's-day; and then their having a Title, or the Care of a Church, muſt mean no more but their being deputed in common to the Service of the Tituli, or Pariſh Churches, in Contradiſtinction to the Cathedral Church. Something of this Cuſtom continu'd at Conſtantinople to the time of Juſtinian. For in one of Novels [k] he takes Notice of three Churches, St. Mary's, Theodore's, and Irene's, which had no appropriated Clergy belonging to them, but were ſerved by the Miniſters of the great Church, who officiated in them according to their Courſes. It is obſerved alſo by ſome, that a peculiar Cuſtom prevailed at Rome, to have two Presbyters officiate in every Church, whereas in other Places there was but one. Dr. Maurice [l] infers this from a Paſſage in the Comments of Hilary the Roman Deacon, who commonly goes under the Name of St. Ambroſe, who ſays, that though there were but ſeven Deacons in all Rome, yet there was ſuch a Number of Presbyters as to have two to officiate in every Church [m], becauſe the Inhabitants communicated twice a Week, and there were Sick Perſons to be baptized almoſt every Day. But whether this Cuſtom was ſo peculiar to Rome, as to belong to no other Church, is what I had rather the Reader ſhould believe upon that learned Man's Judgment, than my own Aſſertion. As to Country Churches the caſe is very plain, that Presbyters were more early fixed and appropriated peculiarly to them, there being not the ſame Convenience of ſerving them in common by the Presbyters of the City Church. Therefore we may obſerve, that the Council of Neocæſarea [n] makes a Diſtinction between the ἐπιχώριοι πρεσβύτεροι, the Country Presbyters, and thoſe of the City, forbidding the former to officiate in the City Church, except in the Abſence of the Biſhop and City Presbyters: Which plainly implies, that Country Pariſhes were then ſerv'd by fixed Presbyters of their own, who had nothing to do with the Service of the City Church. And the ſame appears from the Account which Athanaſius gives of the Presbyters of the Villages of Mareotis under Alexandria, and many other Paſſages of the antient Writers.

SECT. VI.

Settled Revenues not immediately fix'd upon Pariſhes at their firſt Diviſion, but paid into the Common Stock.

BUT we are to obſerve, that the being ſettled in a Pariſh Cure, whether in City or Country, did not immediately intitle a Man to the Revenue ariſing from that Cure, whether in Tythes or Oblations, or any other kind. For antiently all Church Revenues were delivered into the common Stock of the Biſhop's Church; whence by the Direction and Approbation of the Biſhop, who was the chief Adminiſtrator of the Revenues of his Dioceſe, a monthly or an annual Diviſion was made among the Clergy under his Juriſdiction, as has been ſhewed before in giving an Account of Eccleſiaſtical Revenues [o] and their Diſtribution. Where among other things it has been obſerved out of Theodorus Lector [p], that at Conſtantinople no Pariſh Church had any appropriated Revenues till the time of Gennadius in the middle of the fifth Century, An. 460, when Marcian's OEconomus firſt ordered the Clergy of every Church to receive the Offerings of their own Church, whereas before the great Church received them all. In the Weſtern Church, particularly in Spain, in the middle of the ſixth Century, it appears from the firſt Council of Bracara that the Biſhop and City Clergy had ſtill all their Revenues in a common Fund, which was divided into four Parts, one for the Biſhop [q], another for the Clergy, a third for the Fabrick and Lights of the Church, and a fourth for the Relief of the Poor, to be diſpenſed by the Hands of the Arch-presbyter or Arch-deacon, with the Biſhop's Approbation. But the Country Clergy, as to their Revenues, were now or ſhortly after upon a different Foot: For in the ſecond Council of Barcara, which was held but nine Years after the firſt, An. 572, we find a Canon [r] forbidding Biſhops to have any Share in the Oblations of the Parochial Churches, and aſſigning that third Part to maintain the Fabrick and Lights of the Church; only allowing them to receive two Solidi by way of Honorary Acknowledgment, (Honor Cathedræ, the Canon terms it) in their Parochial Viſitations. So that at leaſt from this time we may date the Appropriation of Revenues in Spain to the Country Parochial Churches. In the ſame Council there is another Canon which corrects an Abuſe, that plainly implies ſuch an appropriate Settlement upon Country Churches. For ſome Patrons [s], it ſeems, would build Churches on their own Lands, not for Piety, but for Lucre's ſake, that they might go halves with the Clergy in whatever was collected of the Oblations of the People. To remedy which Inconvenience the Council orders, that no Biſhop ſhould conſecrate any Church for the future, that was built upon ſuch an abominable Contract and Tributary Condition. This is a farther Evidence, that the Revenues of Country Churches were then appropriated to them, elſe ſuch Abuſes as theſe could not have had any Foundation. But in Germany and France the Revenues of the Parochial Churches ſeem to have continued in the Hands of the Biſhop, at leaſt he had his Dividend of a fourth Part, for ſome Ages longer. For there are Rules in the Capitulars of Baluzius and Goldaſtus's Editions, which order [t] Tithes and Oblations to be divided into four Parts, according to antient Canon, and one fourth to be given to the Biſhop. And ſome learned Perſons [u] who have narrowly examined our Engliſh Conſtitution, ſeem to be of Opinion, that the Biſhops had their Portion of the Eccleſiaſtical Revenues with the Parochial Clergy for ſome conſiderable time after the firſt Deſignation and Settlement of Pariſh Churches. For they ſuppoſe that originally the Biſhop's Cathedral was the only Church in a Dioceſe, from whence Itinerant or Occaſional Preachers were ſent to convert the Country People, who for ſome time reſorted to the Cathedral for ſolemn Divine Worſhip. Afterwards by degrees ſome other Churches were built among them, firſt private Oratories or Chappels, without any Pariſh-bounds, for the Conveniency of ſuch as being at too great diſtance from the Cathedral, might more eaſily reſort to them. Then Pariſh Churches with certain Limits were erected, ſome by the Liberality of the People themſelves in more populous and wealthy Places, others by the Biſhops, and others by the Saxon Kings; but chiefly the Lords of Manor, the Thanes, as they then called them, were the great Inſtruments in this Work of founding Pariſh Churches. Whence it was that Pariſh Bounds were conformed to the Limits and Extent of a Manor, as I have ſhewed that the Bounds of an antient Dioceſe were to the Territory of a City: And hence the Lord of a Manor had his original Right of Patronage and Preſentation. Yet this did not deſtroy the Biſhop's Right to a Share in the Revenue of his whole Dioceſe. But Time made an Alteration in this Matter: For our Biſhops ſeem voluntarily to have relinquiſhed their Title to Parochial Revenues, as the Spaniſh Biſhops had done before them; though whether they made any Canon about it, as the other did, I am not able to inform the Reader. But Dr. Kennet has obſerved [x] out of Dugdale [y], that notwithſtanding the Alteration that was made in this Matter, the Biſhops of the Iſle of Man continued to have their Tertiana, or third Part of all Church Revenues in that Iſland. Which, I ſuppoſe, was becauſe they were not liable to any Alterations made here, as not being then of the Engliſh Juriſdiction. Thus I have given a ſhort Account of the Original and antient State of Parochial Churches, but it is beyond my Deſign to carry this Enquiry any farther. They who would know by what Steps and Encroachments Pariſh Churches loſt their Revenues again, firſt by the Confuſion of Pariſh Bounds, and a Liberty granted to Men to pay their Tithes and Oblations where they pleas'd, and then by Appropriations to Monaſteries, and Impropriations granted to Laymen, may find theſe Things handled at large in Dr. Kennet's Elaborate Diſcourſe of Impropriations and Augmentation of Vicarages, to which I refer the Inquiſitive Reader.

The CONCLUSION.

Wherein is propoſed an Eaſie and Honourable Method for eſtabliſhing a Primitive Dioceſan Epiſcopacy, (conformable to the Model of the ſmaller Sort of antient Dioceſes) in all the Proteſtant Churches.

ALL I have farther to add upon this Subject, is only to make one ſeaſonable and uſeful Reflexion upon what has been diſcourſed in this laſt Book, with relation to the long-wiſhed-for Union of all the Churches of the Reformation in the ſame Form of Epiſcopal Government, agreeable to the Model and Practice of the Primitive Church. One great Objection againſt the preſent Dioceſan Epiſcopacy, and that which to many may look the moſt Plauſible, is drawn from the vaſt Extent and Greatneſs of moſt of the Northern Dioceſes of the World, which makes it ſo extreamly difficult for one Man to diſcharge all the Offices of the Epiſcopal Function. To take off the main Force of which Objection, I have been at ſome Pains to ſhew, that for the Preſervation of Epiſcopacy, there is no Neceſſity that all Dioceſes ſhould be of the ſame Extent, ſince there was ſo great difference in the Bounds and Limits of the antient Dioceſes, but not the leaſt difference about the Forms or Species of Epiſcopal Government for all that, in any part of the Primitive Church. And therefore if ever it ſhall pleaſe God to diſpoſe the Hearts of our Brethren, in the Churches of the Reformation, to receive again the Primitive Form of Epiſcopacy (which is much to be wiſhed, and there ſeems in ſome of them to be a good Inclination and Tendency toward it) there needs be no Difficulty from this Objection to hinder ſo uſeful and peaceable a Deſign; becauſe every Church is at Liberty to contract her own Dioceſes, and limit them with ſuch Bounds, as ſhe judges moſt expedient for the Edification and Benefit of the whole Community; there being no certain Geometrical Rule preſcribed us about this, either in the Writings of the Apoſtles, or in the Laws and Practice of the Primitive Church, any farther than that every City, or Place of civil Juriſdiction, ſhould be the Seat of an Eccleſiaſtical Magiſtracy, a Biſhop with his Preſbytery, to order the Spiritual Concerns of Men, as the other does the Temporal. That this was the General Rule obſerved in the Primitive Church, I think I have made it appear beyond all Diſpute, and that upon this Ground there was ſo great a difference in the Extent of Dioceſes ſometimes in the ſame Countries, as in Paleſtine, Aſia Minor, and Italy eſpecially, becauſe the Cities differed ſo much in the Extent of their Territories, and the Bounds and Limits of their Juriſdiction. Now it is not very material in it ſelf, whether of theſe Models be follow'd, ſince they are both Primitive and allowed in antient Practice. The Church of England has uſually followed the larger Model, and had very great and extenſive Dioceſes: For at firſt ſhe had but ſeven Biſhopricks in the whole Nation, and thoſe commenſurate in a manner to the ſeven Saxon Kingdoms. Since that time ſhe has thought it a Point of Wiſdom to contract her Dioceſes, and multiply them into above twenty: And if ſhe ſhould think fit to add forty or an hundred more, ſhe would not be without Precedent in the Practice of the Primitive Church. Archbiſhop Cranmer was very well apprized of this, and therefore he adviſed King Henry VIII. to erect ſeveral new Biſhopricks, as a great Means among other Things for reforming the Church. In purſuance of which Advice the King himſelf drew up a Liſt of near twenty new Biſhopricks which he intended to make, and a Bill was paſſed in Parliament, An. 1539, to empower the King to do this by his Letters Patents. The whole Tranſaction and the Names of the intended Sees may be read at large in Biſhop Burnet's Hiſtory of the Reformation, Vol. I. p. 262. The Thing indeed miſcarry'd afterward, and by ſome Accident was never effected; but notwithſtanding it ſhews us the Senſe of the leading Men in the Reformation. What therefore has been, and ſtill is allowable in this Church, is allowable in others; that is, to multiply Dioceſes as Neceſſity requires, and divide the great Care and Burden of the Epiſcopal Function into more Hands, for the greater Benefit and Advantage of the Church. Whenever therefore any of the Foreign Churches of the Proteſtant Communion ſhall think fit to re-aſſume again the antient Epiſcopal Form of Government among them, they may both with Honour and Eaſe frame to themſelves ſuch a Model of ſmall Dioceſes, as will not much exceed the Extent of one of their Claſſes, nor much alter its Form, and yet be agreeable to the Model of the leſſer ſort of Dioceſes in the Primitive Church. A temporary Moderator, or Superintendent of a ſmall Diſtrict, ſuch as our Rural Deaneries, will eaſily be made a Biſhop, by giving him a ſolemn Ordination to the perpetual Office of governing the Churches of ſuch a Diſtrict, as chief Paſtor, under whom all other inferior Paſtors of the ſame Diſtrict muſt act in Subordination to him, deriving their Authority from his Impoſition of Hands, and doing nothing without his Conſent and Approbation. As this will ſecure the juſt Authority and Veneration of Epiſcopal Superintendency, whilſt, according to the Rule of Ignatius, nothing is done without the Biſhop in the Church; ſo will it be agreeable to the Model of the antient Church, which had many ſmall Dioceſes as well as large ones, particularly in Italy, where many Epiſcopal Sees were not above five or ſix Miles from one another, and their Dioceſes not above ten or twelve Miles in Extent, ſuch as Narnia and Interamnia, Fidenæ, Fulginum, Hiſpellum, Forum Flaminii, and many others, that have been particularly ſpoken of in the foregoing Book. There are now a great many ſuch Dioceſes in Italy in the Realm of Naples, where the whole Number is an hundred forty ſeven. Twenty of which are Archbiſhopricks; and ſome of them ſo ſmall as not to have any Dioceſe beyond the Walls of the City, as is particularly noted by Dr. Maurice [*] and others, of Campana and Veſta, out of Ughellus's Italia Sacra, whence it is obſerved alſo, that Cava in the ſame Kingdom had but five hundred Communicants belonging to it. And there are ſome Dioceſes at preſent in the Southern Parts of France, which I am told do not very much exceed that Proportion. The Biſhoprick of the Iſle of Man has now but ſeventeen Pariſhes, and in Bede's time [†] the whole Iſland had but the meaſure of three or four hundred Families, according to what was then the Engliſh way of Computation, though the Iſle of Angleſey had thrice that Number. So that tho' Dioceſes in the Proteſtant Churches ſhould be thus contracted, yet no other Church, where Epiſcopacy is already ſettled, can have any juſt Reaſon to complain of ſuch an Epiſcopacy as this, ſo long as it appears to be agreeable to the Original State, and exactly conformable to antient Practice. Nor can any Churches then have ground for Diſpute with one another about external Polity and Government, though the Dioceſes of one Church happen to be larger or ſmaller than thoſe of another; ſo long as they have each their Precedents in the antient Church, they may treat one another with the ſame Catholick Charity as the antient Churches did, among whom we never find the leaſt Footſtep of a Diſpute upon this foundation. Nor is there now any Diſpute between the two Siſter Churches of England and Ireland upon this Head, though the one has enlarged, and the other has contracted her Dioceſes ſince the Reformation. For in Ireland there are not now above half the Number of Dioceſes that there were before, and conſequently they muſt needs be larger by uniting them together. In England there are more in Number than formerly, ſome new ones being created out of the old ones, and at preſent the whole Number augmented to three times as many as they were for ſome Ages after the firſt Converſion. Beſide that we have another way of contracting Dioceſes in Effect here in England appointed by Law, which Law was never yet repealed, which is by devolving part of the Biſhop's Care upon the Chorepiſcopi, or Suffragan Biſhops, as the Law calls them. A Method commonly practiſed in the antient Church in ſuch large Dioceſes as thoſe of St. Baſil and Theodoret, one of which had no leſs than fifty Chorepiſcopi under him, if Nazianzen rightly informs us; and it is a Practice that was continued here all the Reign of Queen Elizabeth, and even to the End of King James; and is what may be revived again, whenever any Biſhop thinks his Dioceſe too large, or his Burden too great to be ſuſtained by himſelf alone. From hence I conclude, that the multiplying Biſhops, and contracting Dioceſes in the Proteſtant Churches, can give no juſt Offence to any other Epiſcopal Churches, ſince it was ever practiſed in the antient Church, and is now practiſed in ſome of the Churches of the Reformation, where ſtill the Dioceſes remain ſo great, as to be capable of being divided each into ten, without altering the Species of Epiſcopacy, or infringing any Rule of the Catholick Church. If this Conſideration may contribute any thing toward the Settlement of a Primitive Epiſcopacy in ſuch Churches of the Reformation as are ſtill without it, (which may be done by ordaining a Supreme Paſtor in every great Town, where there is a Civil Magiſtracy, with leſſer Towns and Villages in its Dependence, which was the antient Notion of a City, when Epiſcopacy was firſt ſettled by the Apoſtles) I ſhall then think my Pains and Labour, which have not been ſmall, in diſcovering the Extent and Meaſure of ſo many antient Dioceſes, to be ſtill ſo much the more uſeful, not only as opening a Way to a clear Underſtanding of the State of the antient Church, but as promoting the Unity and firmer Settlement of the preſent Church, whoſe general Intereſt, and not that of any particular Church or Party interfering with it, I have propoſed to my ſelf in this whole Work to proſecute and ſerve. The God of Peace and Truth proſper the Endeavours of all thoſe who have no other Deſign.

and

APPENDIX.

HAVING given no particular Catalogue of the antient Dioceſes in the ſix African Provinces, in the foregoing Book, as of all other Provinces in the World; leſt it ſhould be thought an Omiſſion, I have here ſubjoined an Account of them, as collected by Carolus a Sancto Paulo and Holſtenius, out of the antient Councils, and the Collation of Carthage, and the Notitia of Africk, publiſhed by Sirmondus among his Miſcellanies, and the Works of St. Auſtin, and Victor Vitenſis, who ſpeaks of a hundred and ſixty four Biſhops in the firſt of theſe Provinces, called Zeugitana, or the Proconſular Africk; tho' Carolus a Sancto Paulo could find the Names only of a hundred and two Dioceſes, and ſome of theſe named twice or thrice over. For Bolita and Vallis and Vol, are but three Names for the ſame City. So Abdera, and Abbirita and Abbir Germaniciorum are the ſame. As alſo Sicca and Zigga. Duaſſedemſai and Duæſenepſalitinæ, two corrupt Names for the City Selemſal, as Holſtenius obſerves in his Remarks upon them.

But then he reckons ſome Names unneceſſarily repeated, as Miriciana and Maracia, which are but two Names for the ſame City; ſo Boana and Bana; and Gurgaita the ſame with Gurges in Mauritania Cæſarienſis.

So Ruſtonium and Ruſgonia differ only in the manner of Pronunciation. Timida belongs to the Proconſular Africk; and Labdia is the ſame as Lapda in the ſaid Province. Herpis is put for Irpiniana in Byzacena; Metagonium for Mutugenna in Numidia; and Macania for Macriana in Byzacena.

Holſtenius adds one more, called Zenita or Zemta in the Collation of Carthage, from whence the greateſt Part of the fore-mentioned Names are taken. But the Reader muſt not imagine, that ſo many Biſhopricks, as have been ſpecified in all the ſix African Provinces, and among theſe of uncertain Poſition, were all extant at one and the ſame time. For there never was quite five hundred at one time in Africk, as has been ſhewed before out of St. Auſtin and the Notitia publiſhed by Sirmondus, and yet here are above ſix hundred and eighty recounted by Carolus a Sancto Paulo and Holſtenius, after ſixty are rejected, which are named twice over. So that from firſt to laſt there was a Change of almoſt two hundred Dioceſes in Africk, or at leaſt a Change in their Names: Which I note, leſt any ſhould think there were more Dioceſes than St. Auſtin mentions.

To His Most Sacred Majesty,

GEORGE,

By the Grace of God King of Great-Britain, France and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, &c.

Most Gracious Sovereign,

Humbly beg leave to lay at Your Majesty's Feet a Part of a larger Work, which was at first designed to promote those Great and Worthy Ends, which Your Majesty in Your Princely Wisdom, by your Royal Declarations, has lately thought fit to recommend to Your Universities and Clergy: That is, The Promotion of Christian Piety and Knowledge, and such Useful Learning, as may instill good Principles into the Minds of younger Students; upon which the Prosperity of Church and State will in this, and all succeeding Ages, so much depend. The Practice of the Primitive Ages of the Church, when reduced into one View, seems to be one of the most proper proper Means to effect theſe Honourable DESIGNS; And with that Conſideration I have hitherto proceeded in this Laborious Work, not without the Countenance and Approbation of many Worthy Men, and now hope to finiſh it under Your MAJESTY's Favour and Protection: Humbly beſeeching Almighty GOD to bleſs Your MAJESTY's Great Deſigns for the Good of this CHURCH and NATION, and the PROTESTANT INTEREST Abroad: Which is, and ever ſhall be, the hearty Prayer of

Your MAJESTY's

Moſt Loyal and Obedient Subject,

JOSEPH BINGHAM.

THE ANTIQUITIES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH,

BOOK X.

Of the Inſtitution of the CATECHUMENS, and the Firſt Uſe of the CREEDS of the CHURCH.

CHAP. I.

Of the ſeveral Names of CATECHUMENS, and the Solemnity that was uſed in admitting them to that State in the CHURCH. Alſo of CATECHISING, and the Time of their Continuance in that Exerciſe.

SECT. I. The Reaſon of the Names, Κατηχούμενοι, Novitioli, Tyrones, &c.

HAVING hitherto diſcourſed of the ſeveral Orders of Men which made up the Great Body of the Chriſtian Church, and of Churches themſelves, or Places of Worſhip, and of the ſeveral Diſtricts into which the Body diffuſive was divided, I come now to conſider the Service of the Church, or its Publick Offices and Exerciſes, by which Men were diſciplined and trained up to the Kingdom of Heaven. And to ſpeak of theſe in their moſt natural Order, it will be neceſſary to begin with the Inſtitution of the Catechumens, who were the loweſt Order of Men that had any Title to the common Name of Chriſtians, and their Inſtruction was the firſt Part of the Church's Service. Some Things relating to theſe, have been already touched upon in ſpeaking of the Difference between them and the πιστοὶ, or perfect Chriſtians, in the firſt Book [a]. The Office of the Catechiſt has alſo been conſidered, in ſpeaking of the inferior Orders [b] of the Clergy: And the Places of Inſtruction, or Catechetick Schools, have been treated of in the Account [c] that has been given of the antient Churches. So that omitting theſe Things, I ſhall only ſpeak in this Place of ſuch Rites and Cuſtoms as were obſerved in the Practice of the Church in training up the Catechumens, and preparing them for Baptiſm; premiſing ſomething concerning the ſeveral Names that were given them. They were called Catechumens from the Greek Words κατηχέω and κατήχησις, which ſignify in general the Inſtruction that is given in the firſt Elements or Rudiments of any Art or Science; but in a more reſtrained Eccleſiaſtical Senſe, the Inſtruction of Men in the firſt Principles of the Chriſtian Religion. Hence they had alſo the Names of Novitioli, and Tyrones Dei, new Soldiers of God, as we find in Tertullian [d] and St. Auſtin [e], becauſe they were juſt entring upon that State, which made them Soldiers of God and Candidates of eternal Life. They are ſometimes alſo called Audientes, Hearers, from their Inſtruction: Though that Name more commonly denotes one particular ſort of them, ſuch as were allowed to hear Sermons only, but not to partake in any of the Prayers of the Church; of which more hereafter in the following Chapter.

SECT. II Impoſition of Hands uſed in the firſt Admiſſion of Catechumens.

I have already obſerv'd in another place [f], That the Catechumens, by vertue of their Admiſſion into that State, had ſome Title to the common Name of Chriſtians alſo; being a Degree higher than either Heathens or Hereticks, though not yet conſummated by the Waters of Baptiſm. And upon this account, they were admitted to this State not without ſome Ceremony and Solemnity of Impoſition of Hands and Prayer. Which appears evidently from what [g] Sulpicius Severus says of St. Martin, That passing thro' a Town, where they were all Gentiles, and preaching Christ unto them, and working some Miracles, the whole Multitude profess'd to believe in Christ, and desired him to make them Christians: Upon which, he immediately, as he was in the Field, laid his Hands upon them, and made them Catechumens; saying to those that were about him, That it was not unreasonable to make Catechumens in the open Field, where Martyrs were used to be consecrated unto God. Where we may observe, that to make Christians, and to make Catechumens, is the same thing; and that this was done by Imposition of Hands and Prayer. Which Observation will help us to the right understanding of some obscure Canons and difficult Passages in antient Writers, which many learned Men have mistaken. In the first Council of Arles [h] there is a Canon, which orders Imposition of Hands to be given to such Gentiles as in time of Sickness express an Inclination to receive the Christian Faith. And in the Council of Eliberis [i] there is another Canon to the same purpose, which says, That if any Gentiles, who have led a tolerable moral Life, desire Imposition of Hands, they should have it allowed them, and be made Christians. Now the question is, What is here meant by Imposition of Hands, and being made Christians? Mendoza [k] and Vossius [l] take it for Imposition of Hands in Baptism; and Albaspiny [m] for Imposition of Hands in Confirmation. But the true Sense is no more than this Imposition of Hands used in making Catechumens, which in some sort gave Gentile Converts an immediate Title to be call'd Christians. And so I find Valesius [n], and Basnage [o], and Cotelerius [p], understand it. And this must be the meaning of that Passage in Eusebius [q], where speaking of Constantine's Prayers in the Church of Helenopolis a little before his Death, he says, It was the same Church where he had first been admitted to Imposition of Hands and Prayer; that is, had been made a Catechumen with those Ceremonies: For no other Imposition of Hands can here be meant, since it is now agreed on all hands, that Constantine was not baptized till he had left Helenopolis, and was come to Nicomedia, a little before his Death. By this also we may understand the meaning of those Canons of the first general Council of Constantinople [r], and the Council of Trullo [s], where speaking of the Reception of such Hereticks as the Eunomians, and Montanists, and Sabellians, who had not been truly baptized, they say, They should be received only as Heathens, viz. The first Day be made Christians, the second Day Catechumens, the third Day be exorcised, then instructed for a considerable time in the Church, and at last baptized. Here being made Christians, evidently signifies no more than their being admitted to the lowest degree of Catechumens by Imposition of Hands and Prayer; after which came many intermediate Ceremonies of exorcising, catechising, &c. before they were made compleat Christians by Baptism. So that, as Theodosius observes [t] in one of his Laws, there were two sorts of Men that went by the Name of Christians, one called Christiani ac Fideles, Christians and Believers, and the other Christiani & Catechumeni tantum, Christians and Catechumens only: The former whereof were made so by Baptism, and the other by Imposition of Hands and Prayer. Which was a Ceremony used in most of the Offices of Religion, in Baptism, Confirmation, Ordination, Reconciling of Penitents, Consecration of Virgins, curing the Sick, and as we have now seen, particularly in the first Admission of new Converts to the State of Catechumens.

SECT. III. And Consignation with the Sign of the Cross.

HERE also, as in most other Offices of the Church, they used the Sign of the Cross. St. Austin joins all these Ceremonies together, when he says, That Catechumens [u] were in some sort sanctify'd by the Sign of Christ and Imposition of Hands and Prayer; meaning, that these Ceremonies were used as Indications of their forsaking the Gentile State, and becoming Retainers to the Christian Church. The same Rite is mentioned also by St. Austin in his Confessions [x] as used upon himself during his being a Catechumen; but whether he means there his first Admission, or his continuance in that State, is not certain. But in the Life of Porphyrius Bishop of Gaza, written by his Disciple Marcus, 'tis more plainly expressed: For that Author speaking of some new Converts, says, they fell down at the Bishop's Feet, and desired the Sign of Christ. Upon which, he signed them with the Sign [y] of the Cross, and made them Catechumens; commanding them to attend the Church. And so in a short time after, having first instructed them in the Catechism, he baptized them.

SECT. IV. At what Age Perſons were admitted to be Catechumens.

THE circumſtance of Time here mention'd, may lead us in the next place to enquire, At what Age Perſons were admitted Catechumens? And how long they continued in that State before they were baptiz'd? The firſt Queſtion concerns only Heathen Converts: For, as for the Children of believing Parents, it is certain, that as they were baptized in Infancy, ſo they were admitted Catechumens as ſoon as they were capable of Learning. But the Queſtion is more difficult about Heathens. Yet I find in one of the Reſolutions of Timothy Biſhop of Alexandria, that Children before they were ſeven Years old, might be Catechumens. For he puts the Queſtion thus; Suppoſe a Child of ſeven Years old, [s] or a Man that is a Catechumen, be preſent at the Oblation, and eat of the Euchariſt; What ſhall be done in this caſe? And the Anſwer is, Let him be baptiz'd. By which it is plain, he ſpeaks of Heathen Children, and not of Chriſtians, who received not only Baptiſm, but the Euchariſt in their Infancy, by the Rule and Cuſtom of the Church then prevailing, as will be ſhew'd in their proper Place.

SECT. V. How long they continued in this State.

AS to the other Point, How long they were to continue Catechumens: There was no certain General Rule fix'd about that: But the Practice vary'd according to the difference of Times and Places, or the readineſs and proficiency of the Catechumens themſelves. In the Apoſtolical Age and the firſt Plantation of the Church, we never read of any long Interval between Mens firſt Converſion and their Baptiſm. The Hiſtory of Cornelius, and the Ethiopian Eunuch, and Lydia, and the Jaylor of Philippi, in the Acts of the Apoſtles, to mention no more, are ſufficient Evidence that in thoſe Days Catechiſing and Baptiſm immediately accompanied one another. And there were good Reaſons for it: The Infant-State of the Church, and the Zeal of the Converts both requir'd it. But in After-ages the Church found it neceſſary to lengthen this Term of Probation, leſt an over-haſty Admiſſion of Perſons to Baptiſm ſhould either fill the Church with vicious Men, or make greater numbers of Renegado's and Apoſtates in time of Perſecution. For this reaſon the Council of Eliberis [t] appointed two Years Tryal for new Converts, that if in that time they appeared to be Men of a good Converſation, they might then be allowed the Favour of Baptiſm. Juſtinian in one of his Novels, [u] appointed the ſame Term for Samaritans, becauſe it was found by Experience, that they were wont frequently to relapſe to their old Religion again. The Apoſtolical Conſtitutions [x] lengthen the Term to three Years, but with this Limitation, that if Men were very diligent and zealous, they might be admitted ſooner; becauſe it was not Length of Time, but Men's Converſation and Behaviour, that was to be regarded in this caſe. The Council of Agde, Anno 506, reduced the time for Jewiſh Converts [y] to eight Months, giving the ſame Reaſon, why they made the time of Probation ſo long, becauſe they are often found to be perfidious and returned to their own Vomit again. In other Places the time is thought by ſome to be limited to the forty Days of Lent; for ſo ſome learned Men conjecture from a Paſſage or two in St. Jerom and Cyril's Catechetick Diſcourſes. St. Jerom [z] ſays, it was cuſtomary in his Time to ſpend forty Days in teaching Catechumens the Doctrine of the Bleſſed Trinity. And St. Cyril ſeems to imply as much, when he asks the Catechumens, Why they ſhould not think it reaſonable [a] to ſpend forty Days upon their Souls, who had ſpent ſo many Years upon their own Vanities and the World? The time of Lent is not expreſly mentioned in either Place, but it ſeems to be intended, becauſe in thoſe Ages Eaſter was the general time of Baptizing over all the World. But I underſtand this only of the ſtrict and concluding Part of this Exerciſe. In ſome caſes the Term of catechizing was reduced to a yet much ſhorter compaſs, as in caſe of extreme Sickneſs, or the general Converſion of whole Nations. Socrates obſerves, that in the Converſion of the Burgundians, the French Biſhop that converted them, only took ſeven Days time to catechize them, [b] and on the eighth Day baptized them. So in caſe of deſperate Sickneſs, the Catechumens were immediately baptiz'd with Clinick Baptiſm; as appears from the foremention'd Council of Agde, which though it preſcribes eight Months time for the Catechizing of Jews, yet in caſe of extreme Danger, [c] if their Life was deſpaired of, it allows them to be baptized at any time within the Term preſcribed. Cyril of Alexandria [d], in one of his Canonical Epiſtles, gives the ſame Orders concerning Catechumens who had lapſed, and were for their Crimes expelled the Church, that notwithſtanding this, they ſhould be baptized at the Hour of Death. St. Baſil takes Notice, that Arintheus the Roman Conſul [e] being converted by his Wife, and in danger of Death, was immediately baptized. And there are infinite numbers of ſuch Examples to be met with in Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, to verify the general Obſervation which

BUT excepting theſe Caſes, a longer Time was generally thought neceſſary to diſcipline and train Men up gradually for Baptiſm; partly for the Reaſon already mentioned, that ſome juſt Experiment might be made of their Converſation during that time; and partly to inſtruct them by degrees, firſt in the more common Principles of Religion, to wean them from their former Errors, and then in the more recondite and myſterious Articles of the Chriſtian Faith: Upon which account they uſually began their Diſcourſes with the Doctrine of Repentance and Remiſſion of Sins, and the neceſſity of good Works, and the Nature and Uſe of Baptiſm, by which the Catechumens were taught, how they were to renounce the Devil and his Works, and enter into a new Covenant with God. Then followed the Explication of the ſeveral Articles of the Creed, to which ſome added the Nature and Immortality of the Soul, and an Account of the Canonical Books of Scripture; which is the Subſtance and Method of St. Cyril's eighteen famous Diſcourſes to the Catechumens. The Author of the Apoſtolical Conſtitutions (g) preſcribes theſe ſeveral Heads of Inſtruction, Let the Catechumens be taught before Baptiſm the Knowledge of the Father unbegotten, the Knowledge of his only begotten Son, and Holy Spirit; let him learn the Order of the World's Creation, and Series of Divine Providence, and the different ſorts of Legiſlation; let him be taught, why the World, and Man, the Citizen of the World, were made; let him be inſtructed about his own Nature, to underſtand for what End he himſelf was made; let him be informed how God puniſhed the Wicked with Water and Fire, and crowned his Saints with Glory in every Generation, viz. Seth, Enos, Enoch, Noah, Abraham, and his Poſterity, Melchiſedech, Job, Moſes, Joſhua, Caleb, and Phineas the Prieſt, and the Saints of every Age; let him alſo be taught, how the Providence of God never forſook Mankind, but called them at ſundry times from Error and Vanity to the Knowledge of the Truth, reducing them from Slavery and Impiety to Liberty and Godlineſs, from Iniquity to Righteouſneſs, and from everlaſting Death to eternal Life. After theſe, he muſt learn the Doctrine of Chriſt's Incarnation, his Paſſion, his Reſurrection and Aſſumption; and what it is to renounce the Devil, and enter into Covenant with Chriſt. Theſe were the chief heads of the ancient Catechiſms before Baptiſm: In which it is obſervable, there is no mention made of the Doctrine of the Euchariſt, or Confirmation, becauſe theſe were not allowed to Catechumens till after Baptiſm: And the Inſtruction upon the former Points, was not given all at once, but by certain degrees, as the Diſcipline of the Church then required, which divided the Catechumens into ſeveral diſtinct Orders or Claſſes, and exerciſed them gradually, according to the Difference of their Stations: Of which I ſhall give a more particular Account in the following Chapter.

SECT. VII. The Catechumens allowed to read the Scriptures.

HERE I ſhall only remark farther, That they allowed 'em to read ſome Portions of the Scriptures; for the Moral and Hiſtorical Books were thought moſt proper at firſt for their Inſtruction; and the chief Uſe of thoſe which are now called Apocryphal Books, was then to inſtill Moral Precepts into the Catechumens. Upon this account Athanaſius [h] ſays, Though they were not Canonical Books, as the reſt of the Books of the Old and New Teſtament; yet they were ſuch as were appointed to be read by thoſe who were new Proſelytes, and deſirous to be inſtructed in the Ways of Godlineſs: Such were The Wiſdom of Solomon, The Wiſdom of Sirach, Eſther, Judith, Tobit; to which he alſo adds, the Book called, The Doctrine of the Apoſtles, and The Shepherd, that is, Hermas Paſtor. The Author [i] of the Synopſis of the Holy Scripture alſo, under the Name of Athanaſius, has much the ſame Obſervation, That beſides the Canonical Books there were other Books of the Old Teſtament, which were not in the Canon, but only read to or by the Catechumens. But this was not allowed in all Churches: For it ſeems to have been otherwiſe in the Church of Jeruſalem, at the time when Cyril [k] wrote his Catechetical Diſcourſes. For he forbids his Catechumens to read all Apocryphal Books whatſoever, and charges them to read thoſe Books only which were ſecurely read in the Church, viz. thoſe Books which the Apoſtles and ancient Biſhops (who were wiſer than the Catechumens) had handed down to them. Then he ſpecifies particularly the Canonical Books of the Old and New Teſtament, all the ſame as are now in our Bibles, except the Revelations, becauſe I preſume it was not then read in the Church: And at laſt concludes with this Charge to the Catechumens, That they ſhould not read any other Books privately by themſelves, which were not read publickly in the Church. whence whence I conclude, that as the Books which we now call Apocryphal were not much read in the Church of Jeruſalem, ſo neither were they allowed to be read by the Catechumens, tho' they were read both publickly and privately in many other Churches. I know ſome learned Perſons are of a different Opinion, and think that Cyril by Apocryphal Books, means not thoſe which we now call Apocryphal, viz. Wiſdom, Eccleſiaſticus, &c. but other pernicious and heretical Books, which were abſolutely reprobated and forbidden to all Chriſtians. But if that had been his Meaning, he would not have ſaid, that the Canonical Books were the only Books that were read in the Church of Jeruſalem, but would have diſtinguiſh'd, as other Writers in other Churches do, between Canonical, Eccleſiaſtical, and Apocryphal Books, and have intimated, that the Eccleſiaſtical Books were ſuch as were allow'd to be read in the Church, as well as the Canonical, for Moral Inſtruction, though not to confirm Articles of Faith. Whereas he ſays nothing of this, but the expreſs contrary, That none but the Canonical Books were read publickly in the Church; nor were any other to be read privately by the Catechumens. Which, at leaſt, muſt mean thus much, that in the Church of Jeruſalem, there was a different Cuſtom from ſome other Churches; and that though in ſome Churches the Catechumens were allow'd to read both the Canonical Books and the Apocryphal, or as others call them, the Eccleſiaſtical; yet in the Church of Jeruſalem they were allow'd to read only the Canonical Scriptures, and no other. However it is obſervable, that no Church anciently deny'd any Order of Chriſtians the Uſe of the Holy Scriptures in the Vulgar Tongue, ſince even the Catechumens themſelves, who were but an imperfect ſort of Chriſtians, were exhorted and commanded to read the Canonical Books in all Churches, and the Apocryphal Books in ſome Churches for Moral Inſtruction. Nay, if we may believe Bede, they were obliged to get ſome of the holy Scriptures by heart, as a part of their Exerciſe and Diſcipline, before they were baptiz'd. For he commends it as a laudable Cuſtom in the Ancient Church [l], that ſuch as were to be Catechiz'd and Baptiz'd, were taught the beginnings of the four Goſpels, and the Intent and Order of them, at the time when the Ceremony of opening their Ears was ſolemnly uſed; that they might know and remember, what and how many thoſe Books were, from whence they were to be inſtructed in the true Faith. So far were they from locking up the Scriptures from any Order of Men in an unknown Tongue, that they thought them uſeful and inſtructive to the meaneſt Capacities; according to that of the Pſalmiſt, Thy Word giveth Light and Underſtanding to the Simple. And therefore they allowed them to be Vulgarly read, not only by the more perfect and complete Chriſtians, but even by the very Catechumens; among whom, as St. Auſtin and others have obſerv'd, thoſe were commonly the moſt tractable and the beſt Proficients, who were the moſt converſant in the holy Scriptures. For which Reaſon they made it one Part of the Catechumens Care, to exerciſe themſelves in the Knowledge of them, and did not then fear that Men ſhould turn Hereticks by being acquainted with the Word of Truth.

CHAP. II.

Of the ſeveral Claſſes or Degrees of Catechumens, and the gradual Exerciſes and Diſcipline of every Order.

SECT. I. Four Orders or Degrees of Catechumens among the Ancients.

THAT there were different Orders or Degrees of Catechumens in all ſuch Churches, as kept to the Term of Catechizing for two or three Years together, is acknowledged on all hands by learned Men: But what was the preciſe Number of theſe Orders, is not ſo certainly agreed. The Greek Expoſitors of the ancient Canons uſually make but two ſorts, the ἀτελέσεροι and the τελειώτεροι, the Imperfect and the Perfect; the Beginners and the Proficients, who were the immediate Candidates of Baptiſm. So Balzamon [a] and Zonaras [b], Alexius Ariſtenus [c] and Blaſtares. And in this Opinion they are followed by many Modern Writers. Dr. Cave [d] makes no other Diſtinction but this, of the Perfect and Imperfect; and ſays of the Imperfect, that they were as yet accounted Heathens; which, for the Reaſons given in the foregoing Chapter, I cannot ſubſcribe to: For I have ſhew'd, that from the time that they receiv'd Impoſition of Hands to make them Catechumens, they were always both called and accounted Chriſtians, though but in an imperfect State, till they were completed by Baptiſm. Biſhop Beveridge [e] makes but two ſorts of Catechumens likewiſe, the ἀκροώμενοι, and the εὐχόμενοι, or γονυκλίνοντες, that is, The Hearers, who only ſtay'd to hear the Sermon and the Scriptures read, and the Kneelers or Subſtrators, who ſtay'd to receive the Miniſters Prayers and Benediction alſo. Suicerus [f] and Baſnage [g] go much the ſame way, dividing them into two Claſſes, the Audientes and Competentes. Maldonate [h] adds to theſe a third Claſs, which he calls Catechumeni Pœnitentes, ſuch Catechumens as were under the Diſcipline and Cenſures of the Church. Cardinal Bona [i] augments the Number to four Kinds, viz. The Audientes, Genuflectentes, Competentes, and Electi. And indeed it appears, that there were four Kinds of them; yet not exactly the ſame as Bona mentions. For the Competentes and Electi were but one and the ſame Order. But there was another Order antecedent to all theſe, which none of theſe Writers mention, which we may call the ἐξωθούμενοι, that is, ſuch Catechumens as were inſtructed privately, and without doors, before they were allow'd to enter the Church.

SECT. II. Firſt the ἐξωθούμενοι, or Catechumens inſtructed privately without the Church.

THAT there was ſuch an Order or Degree of Catechumens as this, is evidently deduced from one of the Canons of the Council of Neocæſarea, which ſpeaks of ſeveral ſorts of Catechumens, and this among the reſt, in theſe Words; If any Catechumen, who [k] enters the Church, and ſtands amongſt any Order of Catechumens there, be found guilty of Sin; if he be a Kneeler, let him become an Hearer, provided he ſin no more: But if he ſin while he is an Hearer, let him be caſt out of the Church. Here it ſeems pretty evident, that there was an Order of Catechumens not allowed to enter the Church, to which ſuch of the ſuperior Orders as had offended, were to be degraded by way of Puniſhment, which the Canon calls Expulſion from the Church. Which does not mean, utterly caſting them off as Heathens again, but only reducing them to that State in which they were before, when they firſt received Impoſition of Hands to make them Catechumens; which was a State of private Inſtruction, before they were allowed to enter the Church. Maldonate calls theſe, The Order of Penitents among the Catechumens; and Balzamon and Zonaras, on this Canon, ſtyle 'em Mourners; which expreſſes ſomething of this Order, but not the whole: For there were Catechumens privately inſtructed out of the Church, who were not properly Mourners or Penitents, as Perſons caſt out of the Church by any Cenſure, but they were ſuch as never had yet been in the Church, but were kept at a Diſtance for ſome Time from that Privilege, to make 'em the more eager and deſirous of it. And till we can find a better Name for theſe, I call them from this Canon, the ἐξωθούμενοι, which is a general Name, that will comprehend both this loweſt Order of Catechumens privately inſtructed out of the Church, and alſo ſuch Delinquents of the ſuperior Orders as were reduced back again to it by way of Puniſhment for their Faults.

SECT. III. Secondly, The ἀκροώμενοι, Audientes or Hearers.

THE next Degree above theſe, were the Hearers, which the Greeks call ἀκροώμενοι, and the Latins Audientes. Who were ſo called from their being admitted to hear Sermons and the Scriptures read in the Church, but they were not allowed to ſtay any of the Prayers, no, not ſo much as thoſe that were made over the reſt of the Catechumens, or Energumens, or Penitents; but before thoſe began, immediately after Sermon, at the Word of Command then ſolemnly uſed, Ne quis Audientium, Let none of the Hearers be preſent, they were to depart the Church. As appears from the Author of the Apoſtolical Conſtitutions [l], who orders the Deacon to diſmiſs the Hearers and Unbelievers with that ſolemn Form of Words, before the Liturgy or Prayers of the Church began. Upon which account the Council of Nice [m] calls them, ἀκροωμένους μόνον, Hearers only, to diſtinguiſh them from ſuch Catechumens as might not only hear Sermons, but alſo attend ſome particular Prayers of the Church, that were eſpecially offered up for them, whilſt they were kneeling upon their Knees, and waiting for Impoſition of Hands, and the Miniſter's Benediction.

SECT. IV. Thirdly, The γονυκλίνοντες, or Genuflectentes, The Kneelers.

HENCE aroſe a third ſort of Catechumens, which the Greeks call γονυκλίνοντες, and the Latins, Genuflectentes and Proſtrati, that is, Kneelers or Proſtrators. Theſe ſometimes have the Name of Catechumens more ſpecially appropriated to them, as in the forementioned Canon of the Council of Nice, which runs in theſe Terms, "It is decreed by the great "and holy Synod concerning the Catechumens "that have lapſed, that they for three Years "ſhall be Hearers only; and after that, pray "with the Catechumens again." Hence that Part of the Liturgy which reſpected them, was particularly called Κατηχουμένων Εὐχή, The Prayer of the Catechumens, which came immediately after the Biſhop's Sermon, together with the Prayers of the Energumens and Penitents, as we learn from the Council of Laodicea [n], which orders the Method of them: And the Forms of theſe Prayers are recited both in the Apoſtolical Conſtitutions [o] and St. Chryſoſtom [p], which I do not here inſert, becauſe they will have a more proper Place in the Liturgy of the Church. Together with theſe Prayers they always received Impoſition of Hands, kneeling upon their Knees: Whence the Council of Neocæſarea [q] and others diſtinguiſh them by the Name of γονυκλίνοντες, The Kneelers; the Prayer is called Oratio Impositionis Manûs, The Prayer of Imposition of Hands, which was frequently repeated both in the publick and private Exercises of the Catechumens.

SECT. V. Fourthly, The Competentes and Electi; the immediate Candidates of Baptism.

ABOVE these was a fourth Order, which the Greeks call Βαπτιζόμενοι and φωτιζόμενοι; and the Latins, Competentes and Electi. All which Words are used among the Ancients to denote the immediate Candidates of Baptism, or such as gave in their Names to the Bishop, signifying their Desire to be baptized the next approaching Festival. Their petitioning for this Favour, gave them the Name of Competentes. And from the Bishop's Examination and Approbation or Choice of them, they were styled Electi. St. Cyril of Jerusalem in his Catechetick Discourses [r] always terms them φωτιζόμενοι, which though it frequently signifies Persons already baptiz'd, or illuminated by the Sacrament of Baptism; yet in his Style, it denotes Persons yet to be baptized, or such as had only the Illumination of Catechetical Instruction antecedent to Baptism. And so the Name Βαπτιζόμενοι, in the Author of the Apostolical Constitutions [s] is taken, not for Persons actually baptized, but for those Catechumens who were desirous to be baptized. Whence in the same Author, the Prayer that is said over the Catechumens in the Church, is call'd Βαπτιζομένων and φωτιζομένων εὐχή, The Prayer for those that were about to be illuminated and baptized. Which also shews, that the Substrati and Competentes were different Orders or Degres of the Catechumens, (contrary to what Mr. Basnage and some others have asserted) since different Prayers, at different Times in the Church, were offer'd up for them.

SECT. VI. How this last Order were particularly Disciplined and prepared for Baptism.

THESE Competentes, as I said, were so called from their petitioning for the Sacrament of Baptism, as we learn from St. Austin, who often gives this Reason [t] for it, telling us, That upon the approach of the Easter-Festival, it was usual for the Catechumens to give in their Names in order to be baptized, whence they were called Competentes, Petitioners or Candidates for Baptism. When their Names were given in, and their Petition accepted, then both they and their Sponsors were registred in the Books of the Church; as is noted by the Author under the Name of Dionysius [u] the Areopagite, who brings in the Bishop commanding the Priests to register both the Catechumen and his Sponsor or Susceptor together. And in the Council of Constantinople, under Mennas, [x] there is mention made of an Officer in the Church particularly appointed to this Business, one whose appropriated Office it was to register the Names of those who offered and presented themselves to Baptism. These Registers were called their Diptychs; but as they had several sorts of Diptychs, some for the Dead and some for the Living, these were particularly called Δίπτυχα ζώντων, the Diptychs or Books of the Living, as is observed by Pachymeres [y] in his Comment upon the foresaid Place of Dionysius.

SECT. VII. Partly by frequent Examinations, in which such as approved themselves had the Name of Electi.

WHEN their Names were thus registred, then followed a Scrutiny or Examination of their Proficiency under the preceding Stages of the catechetical Exercises. And this was often repeated before Baptism, according to the Direction given in this case by the Fourth Council [z] of Carthage. They that were approved upon such Examination, were sometimes called Electi, the Chosen, as we find in the Decrees of Pope Leo Magnus, who speaks of them under this Appellation [a], because they were now accepted and chosen as Persons qualified for Baptism at the next approaching Festivals of Easter or Whitsuntide, which were the usual times of Baptizing. Cardinal Bona makes these Electi a distinct Order from the Competentes: But there seems to be no ground for such a Distinction, because their Exercises were all the same henceforward till they arrived at Baptism.

SECT. VIII. Partly by Exorcism, accompanied with Imposition of Hands, and the Sign of the Cross, and Insufflation.

FOR as they were all examined, so they were all exorcised alike for twenty Days before Baptism. This Custom is often mentioned by the ancient Writers, both of the Greek and Latin Church. St. Austin more than once speaks of it as the common Practice of the African Church; joyning Examination [b], Catechizing and Exorcism together, and telling us that the Fire of Exorcism, as his Phrase is, always preceded Baptism. We learn the same from Cyprian and the Council of Carthage, held under him about the Validity of Heretical Baptism: For there it is often said, That Hereticks [c] and Schismaticks were first to be Exorcized with Imposition of Hands, and then baptized, before they could be admitted as true Members of the Catholick Church. And we learn from thence also, that the Practice was so universal that the Hereticks themselves did not omit it, though it was esteemed of no Effect by the Catholicks when done by them, but looked upon only as a Mock-Practice, where one Demoniack [d] Exorcized another, as Cæcilius à Bilta phrases it in the same Council. Ferrandus Diaconus [e] also speaks of this Exorcism, which immediately followed the Scrutiny or Examination of the Competentes. And the like Testimonies may be seen in Petrus Chrysologus [f] and the second Council of Bracara [g] for the Practice of the Italick and Spanish Churches. In the last of which, it is particularly specified that these Exorcisms shall continue for twenty Days before Baptism. Gennadius of Marseilles [h] testifies not only for the French Church, but the Universal Church throughout the whole World, that Exorcisms and Exsufflations were uniformly used both to Infants and Adult Persons, before they were admitted to the Sacrament of Regeneration and Fountain of Life. And for the Greek Church in particular (though the Author of the Apostolical Constitutions, for a peculiar Reason, makes no mention of this Ceremony, because he represents the Business of an Exorcist not as a standing and ordinary Office in the Church, but as an extraordinary and miraculous Gift of God [i], as it was in the Age of the Apostles;) yet Gregory Nazianzen and Cyril of Jerusalem are undeniable Evidences of the Practice: For Nazianzen, in his Oration upon Baptism, [k] thus bespeaks his Catechumen: Despise not thou the Medicinal Office of Exorcism, neither grow weary of the length or continuance of it; for it is a proper Tryal of a Man's Sincerity in coming to the Grace of Baptism. Cyril in like manner [l] bids his Catechumen to receive Exorcism with diligence in the time of catechizing. For whether it was Insufflation or Exorcism, it was to be esteemed salutary to the Soul; for as mixed Metals could not be purged without Fire, so neither could the Soul be purged without Exorcisms, which were Divine, and gathered out of the Holy Scriptures. He adds a little after, That the Exorcists did thus, by the Power of the Holy Spirit, cast a Terror upon the Evil Spirit, and make him fly from the Soul, and leave it in a salutary State and Hope of Eternal Life. Where we may observe two Things that give great Light in this Matter: 1. Why it is so often called by the Ancients the Fire of Exorcism; because it purges the Soul, and as it were fires the Evil Spirit from it. 2. That these Exorcisms were nothing but Prayers, collected and composed out of the Words of the Holy Scriptures, to beseech God to break the Dominion and Power of Satan in new Converts, and to deliver them from his Slavery by expelling the Spirit of Error and Wickedness from them. Therefore Cyril [m] in another place calls them λόγοι δυχῆς, the Words of Prayer, by which a Devil or a Demoniack, who could not be held in Chains of Iron by many, was often held by one, through the Power of the Holy Ghost working in him; and the bare Insufflation of an Exorcist, was a Fire of sufficient Force to expel the invisible Spirits. So that the whole Business of Exorcism, and the Power of it, is to be resolved into Prayer, some Forms of which are now extant in the Euchologium [n] or Rituals of the Greek Church, published by Goar, and the Rituals of the ancient Gallican Church, published by [o] Mabillon. From whence also it appears, that the Insufflation, and Imposition of Hands, and the Sign ☩ of the Cross, (which was used at the same Time, as we find in the Writings of St. Austin [p] and St. Ambrose [q],) were only looked upon as decent Ceremonies or Concomitants of Prayer; to whose Energy, and not to the bare Ceremonies, the whole Efficacy and Benefit of this part of the Catechumens Discipline is to be attributed. For tho' the Ceremonies be sometimes only mentioned, yet Prayer is always to be understood, and to be taken for the Substance of the Action, whilst the other were only the Circumstances of it.

SECT. IX. Partly by the Exercises of Fasting and Abstinence, and Confession, and Repentance.

DURING this same Term of twenty Days the Catechumens were also exercised with Abstinence and Fasting, as a suitable Preparation for their ensuing Baptism. The 4th Council of Carthage has a Canon which joyns all these things together: Let such as give in their Names to be baptized [r], be exercised a long time with Abstinence from Wine and Flesh, and with Imposition of Hands, and frequent Examination, and so let them receive their Baptism. In like manner St. Austin [s] puts Abstinence, Fastings, and Ex-orciſm together, and particularly mentiones Abſtinence from the Marriage-Bed, during this time of Preparation for Baptiſm. So Socrates tells us [t], when the Burgundians deſired Baptiſm of a French Biſhop, he firſt made them faſt Seven Days. And when a certain Jewiſh Impoſtor, who had been baptized by the Arians and Macedonians, came at laſt to Paul the Novatian Biſhop, to deſire the like Favour of him, the ſame Author [u] obſerves, that Paul would not admit him, till he had firſt exerciſed him with Faſting many Days, and taught him the Rudiments of the Chriſtian Faith. Theſe Faſtings are alſo mentioned by Juſtin Martyr and Tertullian, where they ſpeak of Mens Preparation for Baptiſm. As many, ſays Juſtin Martyr [x], as believe the Things to be true which we teach, and promiſe to conform their Lives to the Laws of our Religion, they firſt of all learn to ask Pardon of their by-paſt Sins of God by Prayers and Faſtings, we joyning our Prayers and Faſtings with theirs. So Tertullian [y], They that are about to receive Baptiſm, muſt firſt uſe frequent Prayers and Faſtings, and Geniculations and Watchings, and make Confeſſion of all their former Sins, in Imitation of John's Baptiſm, taking it for a Favour, that they are not obliged to make publick Confeſſion of their flagitious Crimes and Offences. Whence we may conclude, that theſe Confeſſions were ſometimes publick, and ſometimes private, as directed by the Wiſdom of the Church. They who would ſee more of this matter, may conſult St. Cyril's Catechetick Diſcourſes [z], and Gregory Nazianzen's Oration [a] about Baptiſm, who to Confeſſion, and Prayers, and Faſting, add Humicubations, and Groans and Tears, and forgiving of Enemies, as proper Indications of a penitent Mind, before Men came to receive the Seal of Forgiveneſs at God's Hand by the Miniſtry of his Church.

SECT. X. Partly by Learning the Words of the Creed and the Lords Prayer.

AT this time alſo the Competentes were taught the Words of the Creed, which they were obliged to get by Heart, in order to repeat it before the Biſhop at their laſt Examination before Baptiſm. This part of Catechiſing was often performed by the Biſhop himſelf, as we may learn from thoſe Words of St. Ambroſe [b], where he thus diſtinguiſhes the Competentes from the other Catechumens: When the Catechumens were diſmiſſed, I recited the Creed to the Competentes in the Baptiſteries of the Church. This was done in ſome Churches twenty Days before Baptiſm; for ſo the Second Council of Bracara ordered [c] for the Spaniſh Churches. But the Council of Agde in France [d] ſpeaks only of eight Days before Eaſter, appointing Palm-Sunday to be the Day when the Creed ſhould be publickly taught the Competentes in all their Churches. But perhaps we are to diſtinguiſh betwixt the Publick and Private Teaching of the Creed; and ſo one might be done privately twenty Days before by the Catechiſts in the Baptiſteries or Catechetick Schools, and the other publickly eight Days before, by the Miniſters of the Church. However this was, there was a certain Day appointed for theſe Catechumens to give an Account of their Creed, and that was the Paraſceue, or Day before our Saviour's Paſſion, which the Council of Laodicea [e] calls the fifth Day of the Great and Solemn Week, when ſuch as were to be baptized, having learnt their Creed, were to repeat it before the Biſhop or Presbyters in the Church. And this was the only Day for ſeveral Ages, that ever the Creed was publickly repeated in the Greek Churches, as Theodorus Lector [f] informs us, who ſays, It was uſed to be recited only once a Year, and that was on the Paraſceue, or Day of Preparation to our Saviour's Paſſion, now called Holy-Thurſday; at which time the Biſhop was always wont to catechize the Competentes in the Church. When they had learn'd the Creed, they were alſo taught the Lord's-Prayer, which was not allowed ordinarily to the Catechumens till immediately before their Baptiſm. For this Prayer was uſually called, Εὐχὴ πιστῶν, The Prayer of the Faithful, as being peculiarly uſed only by Perſons baptized, who were made Sons of God by Regeneration, and had a Title as ſuch, to addreſs God under the Denomination of their Father which is in Heaven: Which Catechumens, at leaſt thoſe of the firſt Orders, could not ſo properly do: But when they arrived at this laſt Degree of Competentes, and ſtood as immediate Candidates of Baptiſm, then this Form was part of their Inſtruction, and not before. As we learn from Ferrandus Diaconus, who ſpeaks firſt of their repeating the Creed, and then learning [g] the Lord's-Prayer. And the ſame is evident from Chryſoſtom, Auſtin and Theodoret, of whom I ſhall have Occaſion to ſpeak more particularly in Chapter V. n. 9. where I treat of the ancient Diſcipline in concealing the Sacred Myſteries from the Catechumens.

Bap-

vil, and Covenanting with Christ, and other Responses to be used in Baptism.

Baptism; particularly the Form of Renouncing the Devil and his Works, and Pomps, his Worship, his Angels, his Inventions, and all Things belonging to him; and the contrary Form of Covenanting with Christ, and engaging themselves in his Service: For though these Acts in their highest Solemnity did properly appertain to the Substance of Baptism itself; yet it was necessary to instruct the Catechumens beforehand, how they were to behave themselves in these Matters, that they might not through Ignorance be at a loss when they came to Baptism. And therefore the Author of the Apostolical Constitutions [b] orders it to be one special Part of the Catechumens Instruction, just before their Baptism, that they should learn what related to the Renunciation of the Devil, and Covenanting with Christ. And these Engagements they actually entred into, not only at their Baptism, but before it, as a just Preparation for it: For, says that Author, they ought first to abstain from the Contraries, and then come to the Holy Mysteries, having purged their Hearts beforehand of all Spot and Wrinkle and Habits of Sin. And the same thing is intimated by Tertullian and Ferrandus the Deacon of Carthage; for Ferrandus says expresly [i], That the Catechumens, at the same time that they were Exorcized, made their actual Renunciation of the Devil, and then were taught the Creed. And Tertullian means the same thing, when he says, that this Renunciation was made twice; first in the Church, [k] under the Hands of the Bishop, and then again when they came to the Water to be baptized. And hence it became one Part of the ancient Office of Deaconnesses, to instruct the more ignorant and rustick sort of Women, how they were to make their Responses at the time of Baptism to such Interrogatories as the Minister should then put to them, as I have had occasion to shew from a Canon of the Fourth Council of Carthage [l], in discoursing of the Office of Deaconnesses in another [m] Place.

SECT. XII. What meant by the Competentes going veiled some time before Baptism.

BESIDE these Parts of useful Discipline and Instruction, there were some other Ceremonies of less Note used toward the Catechumens, which I must not wholly pass over. Among these was the Ceremony of the Competentes going veiled, or with their Faces covered, for some Days before Baptism: Which Custom is taken notice of by Cyril of Jerusalem [n], together with the Reason of it; Your Face, says he to the Catechumens, was covered, that your Mind might be more at Liberty, and that the wandring of your Eyes might not distract your Soul. For when the Eyes are covered, the Ears are not diverted by any Impediments from hearing and receiving Saving Truths. St. Austin and Junilius give a more Mystical Reason for it: For they suppose the Catechumens were veiled in Publick, as bearing the Image of Adam's Slavery after his Expulsion out of Paradise; and that these Veils being taken away after Baptism [o] were an Indication of the Liberty of the Spiritual Life, which they obtained by the Sacrament of Regeneration. However it be, the Evidences are plain, that there was such a Ceremony used to the Catechumens: But, as Valesius [p] rightly observes, it did not respect them all, but only that Order of them that were peculiarly called the Competentes.

SECT. XIII. Of the Ceremony called Ephphata, or opening of the Ears of the Catechumens.

ANOTHER Ceremony of this Nature, was the Custom of touching the Ears of the Catechumens, and saying unto them Ephphata, be opened: Which Petrus Chrysologus [q] joyns with Imposition of Hands and Exorcisms; making it to have something of mystical Signification in it, to denote the opening of the Understanding to receive the Instructions of Faith. And St. Ambrose [r], or an Author under his Name, describes the same Custom, deriving the Original of it from our Saviour's Example, in saying Ephphata, be opened, when he cured the Deaf and the Blind. But this Custom seemed not to have gained any great Credit in the Practice of the Church; for besides these two Authors, there is scarce any other that so much as mentions it; and whether it was used to the first or last Order of the Catechumens, is not very easy to determine.

SECT. XIV. Of putting Clay upon their Eyes. What meant by it.

THE like may be said of another Ceremony, which is mentioned in St. Ambrose, which was the Custom of anointing the Eyes with Clay, in Imitation of our Saviour's Practice,

tice, when he cured the blind Man by making Clay of his Spittle, and anointing his Eyes with it, John ix. 6. The Design of this Ceremony, as that Author explains it, [s] was to teach the Catechumens to confess their Sins, and to review their Consciences, and repent of their Errors, that is, to acknowledge what state and condition they were in by their first Birth. St. Austin seems also [t] to refer to this Practice in his Discourse upon the blind Man cured by our Saviour, where he says, the Catechumens were anointed before Baptism, as the blind Man was by Christ, who was thereby perhaps made a Catechumen.

SECT. XV. Whether the Catechumens held a lighted Taper in their Hands in the Time of Exorcism.

Vicecomes [u] and Mr. Basnage [x], mention another Custom, which was peculiar in their Opinion to the African Church, viz. the use of a lighted Taper put into the Hands of the Catechumens in time of Exorcism, to signify (as Mr. Basnage explains it) the Illustration of the Holy Ghost; or, as Vicecomes would have it, the power of Exorcism in expelling Satan. But their Observation, I think, is grounded upon a mere Mistake, interpreting some Words of St. Cyprian and St. Austin in a literal Sense, which are only Figurative and Metaphorical. Cyprian speaking of the Power of Christians over unclean Spirits, says [y] among many other things, that they could oblige them by their powerful Stripes to forsake the Persons they had possessed; that they could put them to the Rack, and make them confess, and cry out, and groan; that they could scourge them with their Whips, and burn them with their Fire. Where it is plain enough to any unprejudiced Reader, that the Fire of Exorcism here spoken of, is of the same kind with the Whips, and Stripes, and Rack; that is, the spiritual and invisible Power of the Holy Ghost, as Cyprian himself immediately explains them, when he says, all this was done, but not seen; the Stroke was invisible, and the Effect of it only appeared to Men. So that it was not a material Fire, or a lighted Taper in the Hands of the Catechumens, that Cyprian speaks of, as Vicecomes fancies, but the invisible Fire or Power of the Holy Ghost. And it is the same Fire that St. Austin means, whose Authority only is urged by Mr. Basnage to found this Custom on. He speaks of a Fire indeed in the Sacraments [z], and in catechizing, and in exorcizing. For whence otherwise should it be, says he, that the unclean Spirits so often cry out, I burn, if there be not a Fire that burns them? From the Fire of Exorcism we pass to Baptism, as from Fire to Water, and from Water to a place of Rest. There is nothing in all this that can signify a lighted Taper in the Hands of the Catechumens, which certainly has no Power to burn an unclean Spirit: But the Fire of Exorcism is the invisible Fire of the Holy Ghost, that is, the Energy and powerful Operation of God's Spirit, which casts out Devils with a Word, and makes Satan fall like Lightning from Heaven. Though I deny not but that this Custom might come into the Church in After-ages: For Albinus Flaccus, a Ritualist of the VIIIth Century, speaks of a Custom like to it [a], as used at least the Night before the Catechumens were to be baptized. For describing the Ceremonies of the Vigil of the great Sabbath before Easter, he says, a Wax Taper was used to be carried before the Catechumens, which signified the Illumination wherewith Christ enlightened that Night, by the Grace of his Resurrection, and the Catechumens coming to Baptism. And this was it that deceived Vicecomes, who would have all modern Customs appear with a Face of Antiquity, and therefore wrested the Words of St. Cyprian and St. Austin to patronize a novel Ceremony, which in their Days was not so much as thought of.

SECT. XVI. What meant by the Sacrament of the Catechumens.

THERE is another Mistake which runs through the Writings of many modern Authors, concerning what the Ancients call the Sacrament of the Catechumens. They suppose, that though the Catechumens were not allowed to participate of the Eucharist, yet they had something like it, which they call Eulogiæ, or Panis Benedictus, consecrated Bread, taken out of the same Oblations, out of which antiently the Eucharist itself was taken. Baronius [b] was the first that maintained this Opinion, and after him Bellarmin [c], and Vicecomes [d], Albaspiny [e], Petavius [f], Bishop Beveridge [g], Estius, Maldonat, and many others, follow him in the same Assertion. But the Opinion is wholly grounded upon a mistaken Passage in St. Austin, who speaks indeed of something that according to the Language of his Age was then called the Sacrament of the Catechumens; but he does not say, that it was consecrated Bread, or part of the same Eulogiæ out of which the Euchariſt was taken. His Words are theſe; [b] That which the Catechumens receive, though it be not the Body of Chriſt, is yet an holy thing, and more holy than the common Meat which ſuſtains us, becauſe it is a Sacrament. He gives it the name of Sacrament according to the cuſtom of that Age, which was to call every thing a Sacrament, that had any thing of Myſtery, or of ſpiritual ſignification in it. But that this Sacrament was not the conſecrated Bread, but only a little taſte of Salt, we may learn from the ſame St. Auſtin, who ſpeaking of himſelf as a Catechumen, ſays, At that time [i] he was often ſigned with the Croſs of Chriſt, and ſeaſoned with his Salt. And that it was this and no more, appears farther from a Canon of the third Council of Carthage, at which St. Auſtin was preſent, which orders [k], that no other Sacrament ſhould be given to the Catechumens on the moſt ſolemn Days of the Paſchal Feſtival, except their uſual Salt; giving this Reaſon for it, that for as much as the Faithful did not change their Sacraments on thoſe Days, neither ought the Catechumens to change theirs. From whence it is eaſy to be inferred, that the Sacrament of the Catechumens means no more than this Ceremony of giving them a little taſte of the Salt, like Milk and Hony that was given after Baptiſm, as Cardinal Bona [l], and Mr. Aubertine [m], and Baſnage [n], have rightly concluded: The Deſign of the thing being not to give them any thing in imitation of the Euchariſt, or introductory to that, which they always kept hid as a Secret from them; but that by this Symbol they might learn to purge and cleanſe their Souls from Sin; Salt being the Emblem of Purity and Incorruption.

SECT. XVII. How the Catechumens were puniſhed, if they fell into groſs Sins.

I have but two things more to obſerve concerning the Diſcipline uſed towards the Catechumens. The one relates to thoſe Eccleſiaſtical Cenſures and Puniſhments, which were uſually inflicted on them, in caſe they were found to have lapſed into any groſs and ſcandalous Offences. Theſe being not yet admitted into full Communion with the Church, could not be puniſhed as other Offenders, by being ſubjected to thoſe ſeveral Rules of Penance as other Offenders were; nor did the Church think fit to be ſo ſevere upon them, as upon other Penitents that lapſed after Baptiſm: But their Puniſhment was commonly no more but a Degradation of them from one degree of Catechumenſhip to another, or at moſt a Prorogation of their Baptiſm to the hour of Death. This appears plainly from the fifth Canon of the Council of Neocæſarea, which ſpeaks thus of the ſeveral degrees of Catechumens and their Puniſhment: If any Catechumen, who comes to Church, and ſtands in any Order of Catechumens there, be found guilty of Sin; if he be a Kneeler or Proſtrator, let him become an Hearer, if he ſins no more: But if he ſin while he is an Hearer, let him be caſt out of the Church. After the ſame manner it was decreed by the great Council [o] of Nice, that if any of the Catechumens (by whom they more eſpecially mean the Kneelers) were found guilty of Sin, they ſhould be degraded to the Claſſis of the Hearers for three Years, and after that be admitted to pray with the Catechumens again. In the Council of Eliberis there are ſeveral Canons to this purpoſe. For whereas the ordinary time of continuing Catechumens was but two Years, as appointed by that [p] Council; yet in caſe of lapſing, they were obliged to continue Catechumens ſometimes three Years, ſometimes five, and ſometimes to the hour of Death before they were baptized, according to the Nature and Quality of their Offences. If a Catechumen took upon him the Office of an heathen Flamen, and did not ſacrifice [q], but only exhibit the uſual Games, he was to be puniſhed with the Prorogation of his Baptiſm for three Years from the time of his lapſing. If a Woman who was a Catechumen, divorced herſelf from her Husband [r], her puniſhment was five Years Prorogation. But if ſhe committed Adultery, and after Conception uſed any Arts to deſtroy her Infant in the Womb, then her Baptiſm was to be deferred to the hour [s] of Death. And this was the higheſt Puniſhment that ever was inflicted upon Catechumens. For though in this Council many times Communion, even at the hour of Death, be denied to Believers that had lapſed after Baptiſm; yet we meet with no Inſtance or Command, in this or any other Place, prohibiting Catechumens to be baptized at their laſt Hour. The ſixty-ſeventh Canon of this Council [t] orders them for ſome Crimes to be caſt out of Communion; which is the ſame as the Council of Neocæſarea calls caſting out of the Church, or reducing them back to the loweſt rank of private Catechumens, who were not allowed to enter the Church: But when this was done, if ever after [u] they ſhewed the true Signs of Repentance, and a Deſire to be baptized, they were admitted to this Privilege at the hour of Death, if not before: And this Council gives a Reaſon for this Moderation toward them in compariſon of others, becauſe their Sins were committed whilſt they were unregenerate in the Old Man, and therefore were more eaſily pardoned than Crimes committed by Believers after Baptiſm. This was the Diſtinction univerſally obſerved between the Puniſhments of the Catechumens, and thoſe that had arrived to greater Perfections in the Church.

SECT. XVIII. How they were treated by the Church, if they died without Baptiſm.

BUT in caſe the Catechumens died without Baptiſm by Neglect or their own Default, then they were puniſhed as other Malefactors, who unqualified themſelves for the Solemnities of a Chriſtian Burial. They were put into the ſame rank as thoſe who laid violent hands on themſelves, or were publickly executed for their Crimes. The firſt Council of Bracara joins all theſe [x] together, as Perſons unworthy to be interred with the uſual Solemnities of ſinging of Pſalms, or to be commemorated amongſt the Faithful in the Oblations and Prayers of the Church. For in ancient times, Prayers, and Oblations, and Thankſgivings were ſolemnly made in the Communion-ſervice for all that died in the Faith of Chriſt and in full Communion with the Church: But ſuch as neglected their Baptiſm were none of this number; and therefore they were buried in ſilence, and no mention was ever after made of them among others in the Prayers of the Church. Chryſoſtom [y] ſays expreſly, This was the peculiar Privilege of thoſe that died in the Faith, but Catechumens were excluded from this Benefit and all other Helps, except that of Alms and Oblations for them.

THIS Diſcipline plainly reſpected thoſe who put a Contempt upon the holy Ordinance of Baptiſm, and neglected to receive it, when the time of their Catechumenſhip perhaps was expired, and they were under an Obligation by the Laws of the Church to have received it. But in caſe there was no Contempt, but only an unforeſeen and unavoidable neceſſity hindered their Baptiſm, whilſt they were diligently preparing for it: in that caſe they were treated a little more favourably by the Ancients, who did not generally think the mere want of Baptiſm in ſuch circumſtances to be ſuch a piacular Crime, as to exclude Men abſolutely from the Benefit of Church-communion, or the hopes of eternal Salvation. Some few of them indeed are pretty ſevere upon Infants dying without Baptiſm, and ſome others ſeem alſo in general terms to deny eternal Life to adult Perſons dying without it: But yet when they interpret themſelves, and ſpeak more diſtinctly, they make ſome allowance, and except ſeveral caſes, in which the want of Baptiſm may be ſupply'd by other means, when the want of it proceeded not from Contempt, but from ſome great Neceſſity and Diſability to receive it. They generally ground the Neceſſity of Baptiſm upon thoſe two Sayings of our Saviour, He that believeth and is baptized, ſhall be ſaved; and, Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God: But then in their Expoſition of theſe Texts, they limit the Senſe to the ordinary method of Salvation, and ſuch caſes wherein Baptiſm may be had. And as for extraordinary caſes, wherein Baptiſm could not be had, though Men were deſirous of it, they made ſeveral Exceptions in behalf of other things, which in ſuch circumſtances were thought ſufficient to ſupply the want of it.

SECT. XX. The Want of Baptiſm ſupplied by Martyrdom.

THE chief of theſe excepted Caſes was Martyrdom, which commonly goes by the Name of Second Baptiſm, or Baptiſm in Mens own Blood, in the Writings of the Ancients, becauſe of the Power and Efficacy it was thought to have to ſave Men by the inviſible Baptiſm of the Spirit, without the external Element of Water. Tertullian [z] upon this account not only dignifies it with the title of Second Baptiſm, but ſays, It was that which Men deſired to ſuffer, as that which procured the Grace of God and Pardon [a] of all Sins by the Compenſation of their own Blood: For by this Act all Sins were pardoned. This was that Second Baptiſm [b] in Mens own Blood, with which our Lord himſelf was baptized, after he had been baptized in Water. This Baptiſm was of force both to compenſate for want of Baptiſm, and to reſtore it when Men had loſt it. Cyprian treads in the ſteps of his Maſter Tertullian: For ſpeaking of the Catechumens who were apprehended and ſlain for the Name of Chriſt, before they could be baptized in the Church, he ſays, Theſe were not deprived [c] of the Sacrament of Baptiſm, ſeeing they were baptized in the moſt glorious and celebrated Baptiſm of their own Blood; to which our Lord had reference, when he ſaid, I have another Baptiſm to be baptized with. And, ſays he, that they who are thus baptized in Blood, are alſo ſanctified and conſummated by their Paſſion, and made Partakers of the Grace which God hath promiſed, is farther declared by our Saviour in his Goſpel, in that he ſaid to the Thief, who believed and confeſſed him upon the Croſs, To day thou ſhalt be with me in Paradiſe. Cyprian has many other noble Encomiums and Flights upon this Second Baptiſm, and he excepts no ſort of Men from the benefit of it, but only one, that is, Hereticks and Schiſmaticks, becauſe they wanted the Grace of Charity, and died out of the Communion of the Church without Repentance; in which caſe he thought Martyrdom itſelf not ſufficient [d] to expiate their Crimes; though it was available to purge away any others. Origen was wont to ſpeak of this kind of Baptiſm, under the name of Baptiſm by Fire, as that which often tranſlated even Catechumens to Heaven, though they wanted Baptiſm by Water. For ſo Euſebius repreſents both Origen's Senſe and his own, when ſpeaking of the Martyrs that ſuffer'd out of the School of Origen, he ſays, Two of them were only Catechuments; Heraclides among the Men, and Herais among the Women [e] were in this Claſs only, when they died, but they received Baptiſm by Fire, as Origen was uſed to phraſe it. And that this Baptiſm did purge away Sins, as well as Baptiſm by Water, Origen himſelf declares: for he argues thus, That Martyrdom [f] is rightly called Baptiſm, becauſe it procures Remiſſion of Sins, as Baptiſm by Water and the Spirit doth; and that by vertue of Chriſt's Promiſe, who aſcertains Pardon of Sins to all that ſuffer Martyrdom, ſaying, Whoſoever ſhall confeſs me before men, him will I confeſs before my Father which is in heaven. And that this was then the general Doctrine of the Chriſtians in that Age, appears farther from this, that it was ſo common and well-known, that the Heathens themſelves were not ignorant of it. For in the Acts of the Martyrdom of St. Felicitas and Perpetua, who ſuffer'd about the time of Origen and Tertullian, one Saturus a Catechumen [g] is ſpoken of as being thrown to a Leopard, who by the firſt Bite of the wild Beaſt was ſo waſh'd all over in Blood, that the People, as he return'd, gave him the Teſtimony of the ſecond Baptiſm, crying out, Salvum lotum, ſalvum lotum: Baptized and ſaved, baptized and ſaved. This they ſaid only by way of ridicule of the Chriſtian Doctrine of Martyrdom's being eſteemed a ſecond Baptiſm, and a means of Salvation: But the Author of the Acts rightly obſerves, that he was ſaved indeed, who was ſo baptized.

NOR was this only the Doctrine of the more ancient Writers, who liv'd in the times of Perſecution and Martyrdom, but of thoſe that followed after, and who are commonly imagined more rigid Defenders of the Neceſſity of Baptiſm. For even St. Auſtin and all his Cotemporaries, who were engaged againſt Pelagius, made the ſame allowance in the caſe of Martyrdom. St. Auſtin declares himſelf [h] wholly of Cyprian's Opinion, that Martyrdom does many times ſupply the room of Baptiſm; and he thinks Cyprian argued well from the inſtance of the Thief upon the Croſs, to whom it was ſaid, though he was not baptized, To day thou ſhalt be with me in Paradiſe. St. Auſtin often argues from the ſame [i] Example of the Thief in other places, telling us, that by the ineffable Power and Juſtice of God, Baptiſm was imputed to the Thief upon his Faith, and it was accounted to him as if he had received it, becauſe he had a good Mind and Will toward it, though he could not actually receive it in his Body by reaſon of his Crucifixion. Therefore he reckons him [k] among thoſe who are ſanctified by the inviſible Grace without the viſible Sacrament, as he thinks many were both under the Old and New Teſtament: From whence yet it does not follow, that the viſible Sacrament may be contemned by any; for the Contemner of it cannot by any means be ſanctified by the inviſible Grace thereof. In his Book De Civitate Dei, he ſpeaks more generally [l] of all thoſe that ſuffer Martyrdom, that though they have not been waſhed in the Laver of Regeneration, yet their dying for the Confeſſion of Chriſt avails as much toward the Remiſſion of Sins, as if they had been waſhed in the holy Fountain of Baptiſm. For which he alledges thoſe Sayings of our Saviour, He that loſes his life for my ſake, ſhall find it: And, He that confeſſes me before men, him will I confeſs before my Father which is in heaven. This Paſſage is repeated and approved by Proſper in his Collection of Sentences [m] out of St. Auſtin's Works: To which he adds an Epigram of his own, expreſſing his Senſe to this purpoſe: They are not [n] deprived of the holy Baptiſm of Chriſt, who inſtead of a Font are waſhed in their own Blood: For whatever Benefit accrues to any by the myſtical Rite of the ſacred Laver, is all fulfilled by the glory of Martyrdom. Fulgentius is as ſevere as any Man, yet he allows Martyrdom [o] to compenſate for the want of Baptiſm. Though he pronounces peremptorily of all others, that die without the Sacrament of Faith and Repentance, which is Baptiſm, that they ſhall not inherit eternal Life; yet he excepts thoſe that are baptized in their own Blood for the Name of Chriſt. And Gennadius, after he has ſaid, that none but Perſons [p] baptized are in the way of Salvation; and that no Catechumen, though he die in good Works, can have eternal Life, yet he excepts the caſe of Martyrdom, becauſe in that all the Myſteries of Baptiſm are fulfilled. A Martyr, as the Author of the Apoſtolical Conſtitutions [q] expreſſes it, may rejoice in the Lord, and leave this Life without Sorrow, though he be but a Catechumen; becauſe his Paſſion for Chriſt is a more genuine Baptiſm: He really and experimentally dies with his Lord, whilſt others only do it in figure. It were eaſie to add many other ſuch Teſtimonies out of St. Chryſoſtom [r] and St. Jerom [s], St. Baſil [t], Gregory Nazianzen [u], Cyril of Jeruſalem [x] and St. Ambroſe [y]: But enough has been already ſaid to ſhew this to be the general Senſe of the Ancients, That Catechumens were not to be deſpair'd of, though they dy'd without Baptiſm, if they were baptized in their own Blood.

SECT. XXI.

And by Faith and Repentance in ſuch Catechumens as were pioufly preparing for Baptiſm.

NOR was it only the caſe of Martyrs they ſpeak ſo favourably of, but of all other Catechumens, who whilſt they were preparing for Baptiſm by the Exerciſes of Faith and Repentance, and a pious Life, were ſuddenly cut off, before they could have Opportunity to put their Deſires in execution. St. Ambroſe joins theſe two caſes together, and makes them in a manner parallel. For in his Funeral Oration upon the younger Valentinian, who was thus ſnatch'd away before he could attain to his deſired Baptiſm, he thus makes Apology for him: If any one [z] is concern'd that the holy Rites of Baptiſm were not ſolemnly adminiſtred to him, he may as well ſay, that the Martyrs are not crown'd, if they happen to die whilſt they are only Catechumens: but if the Martyrs are waſhed in their own Blood, then this Man alſo was waſhed by the Piety and Deſire of Baptiſm. St. Auſtin was entirely of the ſame Opinion, That not only Martyrdom [a] but Faith and Repentance joined with a Deſire of Baptiſm, was ſufficient to ſave a Man in the Article of Neceſſity, when there was otherwiſe no opportunity to receive it. Conſidering, ſays he, over and over again the caſe of the Thief upon the Croſs, I find that not only ſuffering for the Name of Chriſt may ſupply that which was wanting of Baptiſm, but alſo Faith and true Converſion of Heart, if want of time in extreme Neceſſity would not ſuffer the Sacrament of Baptiſm to be adminiſtred. For that Thief was not crucified for the Name of Chriſt, but for the merit of his own Crimes; nor did he ſuffer becauſe he was a Believer, but he became a Believer whilſt he was a-ſuffering. Therefore his Caſe declares how far that Saying of the Apoſtle avails, without the viſible Sacrament of Baptiſm, With the heart man believeth unto Righteouſneſs, and with the mouth confeſſion is made unto Salvation: But then only this inviſible Operation is performed, when the Miniſtry of Baptiſm is excluded purely by the Article of Neceſſity, and not any contempt of Religion. Therefore when theſe Writers ſpeak in general terms of the abſolute Neceſſity of Baptiſm, they muſt be allowed to interpret themſelves with theſe two Limitations and Reſtrictions. As when St. Ambroſe [b] ſays, No Man aſcends into the Kingdom of Heaven, but by the Sacrament of Baptiſm, he muſt be underſtood to except Martyrs, SECT XXII.

The Caſe of Hereticks returning to the Unity of the Church. How far Charity in that caſe was thought to ſupply the want of Baptiſm.

Cyprian alſo had a very charitable Opinion concerning all ſuch Hereticks and Schiſmaticks, as forſook their Errors and returned to the Unity of the Catholick Church. For though, according to his Principles [who denied the Validity of their Baptiſm] none of theſe could be really and truly baptized, unleſs they were re-baptized upon their return to the Church; yet if any ſuch dy'd in the Unity of the Church without being re-baptized, he did not think their Condition deplorable, [though in his Opinion they died without Baptiſm] but charitably hoped they might find Mercy and Favour with the Lord. For he thus anſwers the Objection that was made againſt his own Opinion about Re-baptization: Some Man [f] will ſay, What then becomes of all thoſe, who in times paſt came over from Hereſy to the Church, and were admitted without Baptiſm? The Lord, ſays he, is able of his Mercy to grant them Indulgence, and not exclude them from the Gifts of his Church, who are ſimply admitted into the Church, and die in the Communion of it. Firmilian Biſhop of Cæſarea delivers himſelf much after the ſame manner in anſwer to the ſame Objection: What ſhall become [g] of thoſe, who returning from Hereticks, are admitted without the Baptiſm of the Church? If they depart out of the World, ſays he, in that condition, we reckon them in the number of ſuch Catechumens among us as die before they are baptized. So that in his Opinion two ſorts of Perſons might be ſaved without Baptiſm, that is, Catechumens in the Church, and ſuch Hereticks as returned to the Peace and Unity of the Church, though according to his Sentiments they were not baptized. St. Auſtin often mentions and approves this Opinion [h] of Cyprian; nay, and urges it in favour of the Church againſt the Donatiſts: For ſuppoſing the Catholicks did err in admitting Hereticks without Baptiſm, yet they were in the number of thoſe, whom Cyprian preſumed capable of Pardon for the ſake of Unity and Charity, which covers a multitude of Sins. St. Baſil alſo, as Voſſius [i] has rightly obſerved, ſeems to have been of Cyprian's Opinion, that God in his Mercy was able to ſave ſuch Schiſmaticks as returned to the Peace and Unity of the Church, even without Baptiſm. For though he thought their Baptiſm null and void, as Cyprian did, yet he adviſes Men to comply with the Cuſtom of receiving [k] ſuch to Communion in thoſe Churches which received their Baptiſm, rather than break the Peace and Unity of the Church upon it. Which Advice he would hardly have given, had he not thought ſuch Men in ſuch circumſtances capable of Salvation by God's Mercy without Baptiſm.

SECT. XXIII.
The Caſe of Perſons communicating with the Church without Baptiſm. How far that was thought to ſupply the want of Baptiſm.

I find one Caſe more in which ſome of the Ancients made an Allowance for the want of Baptiſm; and that was when the Church, preſuming a Perſon to have been truly baptized (he himſelf bona fide preſuming ſo too) admitted him to communicate conſtantly at the Altar for many Years, though it appeared at laſt that either he had not been baptized at all, or at leaſt with a very doubtful and ſuſpicious Baptiſm: Yet in this caſe conſtant communicating with the Church, was thought to ſupply this defect or want of Baptiſm. A ſingle Act of communicating indeed in a Child or a Catechumen, happening only by ſome Surpriſe or Miſtake, was not deemed ſufficient to compenſate for Baptiſm: for in that caſe the Canons provided, that whenever any ſuch thing happened, the Party ſhould be immediately baptized. Thus in the canonical Determinations of Timothy Biſhop of Alexandria, the Queſtion being put, What ſhould be done in caſe a Youth of ſeven Years old, or a Man that was only a Catechumen, being preſent at the Oblation, had communicated through Ignorance or Miſtake? The Anſwer [l] is, Let him be baptized. And ſo the Author of the Apoſtolical Conſtitutions brings in the Apoſtles making this Decree [m], That if any unbaptized Perſon ſhould through Ignorance partake of the Euchariſt, they ſhould immediately inſtruct and baptize him, that he might not go away a Deſpiſer. But in caſe a Man, upon Preſumption of his being truly baptized, when he was not ſo, had been allowed to communicate with the Church for many Years, his communicating at the Altar was thought to ſuperſede the Neceſſity of Baptiſm, and ſuch an one was allowed to continue in the Church without rebaptizing. There is a famous Inſtance in Euſebius of ſuch a Caſe, that happened at Alexandria in the time of Dionyſius, which Euſebius relates out of an Epiſtle of Dionyſius to Xyſtus Biſhop of Rome, where he asks the Biſhop of Rome's Advice upon it. A certain Perſon, who for many Years had aſſembled and communicated [n] with the Church, both in his own time, and in the time of his Predeceſſor Heraclas, happening to be preſent at the Baptiſm of ſome who were lately baptized, upon hearing the Interrogatories and Anſwers that are uſually made in that Solemnity, came to me weeping and lamenting himſelf, and falling down at my Feet, confeſſed with a moſt ſolemn Proteſtation, that the Baptiſm which he had received among Hereticks was not like this, nor had any thing common with it: For it was full of Blaſphemy and Impiety: And therefore he ſaid his Soul was full of trouble, and he had no Confidence to lift up his Eyes unto God, being initiated with ſuch impious Words and Ceremonies. He prayed therefore that I would give him our ſincere Baptiſm, and admit him to the Adoption and Grace of the Church. Which thing I durſt not do, but told him, his communicating for ſo long time at the Altar was ſufficient to this purpoſe. For I durſt not rebaptize one, who had ſo often heard the ſolemn Thankſgiving, and joyned with the reſt in ſaying Amen to it; who had ſtood at the Lord's Table, and ſtretched forth his Hand to receive the holy Food; who had taken it, and been ſo long uſed to participate of the Body and Blood of Chriſt. But I bid him be of good Courage, and with a firm Belief and good Conſcience continue to partake of the holy Myſteries. This was a nice Reſolution of a rare and ſingular caſe, and we ſcarce meet with ſuch another Inſtance in antient Hiſtory: But I have mentioned this and all the preceeding Caſes, to ſhew, that the Ancients had not generally that rigid Opinion of the abſolute Neceſſity of Baptiſm (barring the Neglect and Contempt of the Sacred Inſtitution) which ſome would father upon them; ſince they thought the bare want of it might be diſpenſed with and ſupplied ſo many ſeveral ways; either, 1. by Martyrdom; or, 2. by Faith and true Converſion; or, 3. by an immenſe Charity, and Love of Unity and Peace; or, 4. by a conſtant partaking of the Euchariſt in the Boſom of the Church.

SECT. XXIV. The Caſe of Infants dying unbaptized. The Opinion of the Ancients concerning it.

BUT it is to be obſerved, that theſe Allowances were chiefly made to adult Perſons, who could exhibit Faith and Repentance, the eſſential parts of Religion, to make ſome Compenſation for the want of the external Ceremony of Baptiſm: But as to Infants, the caſe was thought more difficult, becauſe there was no perſonal Faith or Repentance could be pleaded in their behalf; ſo that they were deſtitute both of the outward viſible Sign, and the inward Spiritual Grace of Baptiſm. Upon this account, they who ſpoke the moſt favourably of them, would only venture to aſſign them a middle ſtate, neither in Heaven nor Hell. As Gregory Nazianzen [o], who ſays, that ſuch Children as die unbaptized without their own Fault, ſhall neither be glorified nor puniſh'd by the righteous Judge, as having done no Wickedneſs, though they die unbaptized, and as rather ſuffering Loſs than being the Authors of it. Severus Biſhop of Antioch follows Nazianzen in this Opinion: For firſt he ſays [p] that if Children die unbaptized, without partaking of the Laver of Regeneration, they are certainly excluded from the Kingdom of Heaven: But then he adds, that for as much as they have committed no Sin, they ſhall not undergo any Puniſhment or Torment, but be conſigned to a ſort of middle ſtate, which he deſcribes as a ſtate betwixt the Glory of the Saints and the Puniſhment of the Damned. But this Opinion of a middle ſtate never found any Acceptance among the Latins: For they make but two Places to receive Men after the day of Judgment, Heaven and Hell; and concluded, that ſince Children, for want of waſhing away original Sin, could not be admitted into Heaven, they muſt of neceſſity be in Hell, there being no third Place between them. St. Auſtin frequently inſiſts upon this againſt the Pelagians, who diſtinguiſh between the Kingdom of God and eternal Life, aſſerting, that Children dying unbaptized might be admitted to eternal Life and Salvation, though not to the Kingdom of God: Whom he oppoſes after this manner in his Books about the Merits and Remiſſion of Sin: Though, he ſays, the Condemnation [q] of thoſe ſhall be greater, who to original Sin add actual Sins of their own; and every Man's Condemnation ſo much the greater, by how much greater Sins he commits; yet original Sin alone does not only ſeparate from the Kingdom of God, whither Children dying without the Grace of Chriſt cannot enter, as the Pelagians themſelves confeſs; but alſo it excludes them from eternal Life and Salvation, which can be no other than the Kingdom of God, into which our Communion with Chriſt alone can introduce us. A little after [r] he ſays plainly, that Children dying without Baptiſm are under Condemnation, tho' theirs be the mildeſt of any other. But he is very much deceived, and deceives others, who teaches that they are in no Condemnation at all,

whilſt the Apoſtle declares, that Judgment was by one offence to Condemnation: And again, that by the offence of one, Judgment came upon all men to Condemnation. He tells us [s], upon this account the Punick Chriſtians were uſed to call Baptiſm by the name of Salvation, and the Sacrament of the Body of Chriſt, Life. And therefore, ſince no one could hope for Salvation and eternal Life without Baptiſm and the Body and Blood of the Lord, it was in vain to promiſe Children Salvation without them. In the ſame Book [t] he declares peremptorily againſt the Doctrine of a middle State for Infants or any other. There is no middle place for any, ſays he, he muſt be with the Devil, who is not with Chriſt. For our Lord himſelf intending to take away this Opinion of a middle State, which ſome erroneouſly endeavour to aſſign to Children dying unbaptized, as if by vertue of their Innocence they might be in eternal Life, though not with Chriſt in his Kingdom, ſo long as they wanted Baptiſm, pronounced this definitive Sentence to ſtop the Mouths of theſe Men, ſaying, He that is not with me, is againſt me. He argues againſt this middle State in many other places [u] againſt the Pelagians, and urges the neceſſity of Baptiſm to take away original Sin in Children, and bring them by Regeneration to eternal Life: Therefore, he ſays, Men ran with their Children to be baptized, becauſe they verily believed they could not otherwiſe be made alive in Chriſt. Fulgentius [x] is rather more peremptory and ſevere than St. Auſtin: He ſays, It is to be believed without all doubt, that not only Men, who are come to the uſe of Reaſon, but Infants, whether they die in their Mother's Womb, or after they are born, without Baptiſm in the Name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt, are puniſhed with everlaſting Puniſhment in eternal Fire; becauſe though they have no actual Sin of their own, yet they carry along with them the Condemnation of original Sin from their firſt Conception and Birth. The Author under the Name of Juſtin Martyr [y] alſo ſpeaking of Infants, ſays, there is this difference between thoſe that die baptized, and thoſe that die unbaptized, that the one obtain the Benefits that come by Baptiſm, which the other do not obtain. And the Author of the Hypognoſticks [z], under the Name of St. Auſtin, who is ſuppoſed by learned Men to be either Marius Mercator, or Sixtus Biſhop of Rome, diſputing againſt the Pelagians, treads exactly in the Steps of St. Auſtin; for he ſays, there is no middle State between Heaven and Hell; a third Place for unbaptized Infants is no where mentioned in Scripture. This was only an Invention forged in the Shop of the Pelagians, to find out a place where Infants might have Reſt and Glory without the Grace of Chriſt. Theſe are pretty ſevere Expreſſions, and yet conſidering the ſtate of the Controverſy between the Catholicks and Pelagians, there ſeems to have been pretty good Reaſon for them. For Pelagius ſaid, there was no original Sin, nor any need of Baptiſm to waſh away the Guilt of it, but Children might obtain Salvation and eternal Life, diſtinct from the Kingdom of God, without it. In oppoſition to this, the Catholicks maintained the Neceſſity of Baptiſm for Infants, as well as adult Perſons, to purge away original Sin, and procure eternal Life for them. But they have not ſo plainly told us, whether there be any excepted Caſes as to what concerns Infants, as they have concerning adult Perſons; whether a bare want of Baptiſm in the Child, when there was no Contempt or Neglect of Baptiſm in the Parent, by an unavoidable Neceſſity and ſudden Death intervening, debars the Child from the Kingdom of Heaven? Among all the Ancients, only Fulgentius has declared abſolutely againſt the Salvation of Infants dying before the Birth in the Mother's Womb. But others ſeem to ſpeak more favourably, except where the Parents were guilty of a Contempt or Neglect of Baptiſm, in not bringing their Children to be baptized when they had Time and Opportunity to do it, in which caſe the Child might fail of Salvation for the Parents Fault, and there be no Impeachment of God's Juſtice or Mercy in the Puniſhment. This ſeems to have been the Judgment of that excellent Author, who wrote the Book De Vocatione Gentium, which goes under the Name of Proſper or St. Ambroſe. For he gives this Reaſon, why the Doctrine about the Neceſſity of Baptiſm for the Salvation of Infants was ſo earneſtly preſſed upon Men, that Parents might not be remiſs or negligent in bringing their Children to Baptiſm; which they certainly would be, if they were once

poſſeſſed with an Opinion that there was no Neceſſity of Baptiſm to Salvation. We ought not to believe, ſays he [a], in general Terms, that they who obtain not the Sacrament of Regeneration, can appertain to the Society of the Bleſſed. For every one muſt be ſenſible, how eaſily Sloth and Negligence would creep into the Hearts of the Faithful, if in the Buſineſs of baptizing Infants nothing was to be feared from the Parents Careleſneſs, or the Mortality of their Children. This Author preſſes the Neceſſity of baptizing Infants, as all good Chriſtians do, upon Suppoſition of ſome Benefit which the Parents Care may bring to the Child; and contrary-wiſe, an irreparable Damage and Loſs which the Child may ſuſtain by the Parents Default and Negligence. And this is ſufficient to quicken the Care and Watchfulneſs of Parents, though it be allowed, that in Caſes of extreme Neceſſity Children may be ſaved without Baptiſm. Nor is it improbable, that the Ancients intended no more, though their Expreſſions run in ſevere and general Terms without ſtanding preciſely to make Exceptions. For it cannot be denied but that Infants may be Martyrs as well as Adult Perſons; ſuch were the Children which Herod ſlew at Bethlehem: Parents may likewiſe deſire Baptiſm for their Children, Vowing Faith and Repentance in their Name, when ſome extreme Neceſſity only, and not any culpable Neglect hinders the obtaining of it. And in ſuch Caſes, if Adult Perſons may be ſaved without Baptiſm [as all the Ancients agree] there ſeems to be a Parity of Reaſon to extend the ſame Charity and Indulgence to little Children. Hincmar, Archbiſhop of Rheimes, a Man of great Reputation and Learning in his Time, and one well verſed in the Writings of the Ancients, gives this Solution of the whole Matter upon a remarkable Caſe that happened in his Time. A certain Biſhop of the ſame Country, Hincmar Biſhop of Laon, had for ſome unjuſt Cauſe hindered the Baptiſm of Infants in his Dioceſe, when their Parents or Godfathers deſired they might be baptized; by which means many Children died without Baptiſm. Now the Queſtion was concerning the future State of theſe Infants, whether the Parents deſire and preſenting them to Baptiſm was ſufficient for the Salvation of their Children? This without any Scruple [b] Hincmar reſolves in the Affirmative, that as Children who are ſubject to original Sin, which is the Sin of other Men, are ſaved by the Faith of others, that is, their Godfathers anſwering for them in Baptiſm; ſo thoſe Infants, who by the Command of that perverſe Biſhop were denied Baptiſm, might be ſaved by the Faith and faithful Deſire of their Parents or Godfathers, who had required both in Heart and Words that their Children might be baptized; and this by the Gift of him, whoſe Spirit, that is the Author of Regeneration, bloweth where it liſteth. If we thus interpret the Senſe of the Ancients with Hincmar, then all thoſe Paſſages which condemn Infants dying without Baptiſm, muſt be underſtood not of the bare want of Baptiſm, when it could not be had, but of the Parents Contempt or Neglect in not deſiring or procuring Baptiſm for their Children, when it was in their Power to do it. I have been the longer in explaining and confirming the Truth of theſe Points concerning the Neceſſity of Baptiſm both for Infants and Adult Perſons, becauſe the Ancients are miſtaken by ſome, and accuſed by others as too ſevere in urging the Neceſſity of Baptiſm; when yet it appears their Sentiments about it were exact enough as to what concerned the caſe of Catechumens, and alſo capable of a favourable Interpretation in the caſe of Infants, if we do not over-rigidly force their general Expreſſions beyond the true Deſign and Intention of the Authors.

I Should here have put an End to this Diſcourſe concerning the Inſtitution and Diſcipline of the Catechumens, but only that there are two things that may ſeem to require a little more diſtinct Handling than has been allowed them above: 1. Concerning the original Nature, and Uſe of the antient Creeds of the Church, which were chiefly drawn up for the Inſtruction and Service of the Catechumens, and therefore are moſt proper to be conſidered in this Place. 2. Concerning that part of their Diſcipline which conſiſted in concealing from them for ſome time the diſtinct and full Knowledge of ſome of the higher Doctrines and myſterious Rites of the Church. The Conſideration of which things ſhall be the Subject of the following Chapters.

CHAP. III.

Of the Original, Nature, and Names of the antient Creeds of the Church.

SECT. I. Why the Creed is called Symbolum.

IN ſpeaking of the Creed, it will be proper to ſay ſomething, in the firſt place, of its ſeveral antient Names, and the Reaſons of them, becauſe ſome of them are a little obſcure, and liable to be miſtaken. The moſt uſual Name of the Creed was Symbolum; but why it was called ſo, is not agreed among learned Men. Baronius [a] aſſigns three Reaſons of the Name: 1. He ſuppoſes every Apoſtle caſt in his Symbola, his Article or Part, to the Compoſition of it; and therefore it might be called their Symbol or Collation. But, if the Foundation of this Suppoſition be uncertain, (as we ſhall ſee hereafter that it is) this could not be the Reaſon of the Name. 2. He thinks it might be ſo called, becauſe it was like the Teſſera Militaris among the Roman Soldiers, a ſort of Mark or Badge, by which true Chriſtians might be diſtinguiſhed from Infidels or Hereticks. 3. Becauſe it was a Collation or Epitome of the Chriſtian Doctrine. Suicerus [b] adds to theſe a fourth reaſon of the Name. It might be ſo called, he thinks, not from the military Badge, but the military Oath or Contract, which Soldiers made with the Emperor, when they entered into his Service. For the Creed is a token of the Contract which we make with God at our Baptiſm. For this he alledges the Teſtimony of St. Ambroſe [c], who calls the Creed the Oath or Bond of our Warfare: And Petrus Chryſologus [d], who ſays, an Agreement or Covenant is called Symbolum both in humane and divine Contracts. This laſt Signification is not improbable; but the ſecond is more generally received and approved by Modern [e] Authors, and has alſo the Countenance of ſome antient Writers. For Maximus Taurinenſis [f] ſuppoſes it to be called the Symbol, becauſe it is a Sign or Mark by which Believers are diſtinguiſhed from Unbelievers and Renegado's. And Ruffinus [g] allows this Signification, when he ſays, it was therefore called the Sign or Mark, becauſe at that time (when according to his Opinion, it was made by the Apoſtles) many of the circumciſed Jews, as is related both by St. Paul, and in the Acts of the Apoſtles, did feign themſelves to be the Apoſtles of Chriſt; and to ſerve their own Lucre or their Belly, went forth to preach; naming indeed the Name of Chriſt, but not preaching him according to the true Lines of Tradition. Therefore the Apoſtles laid down this Mark or Teſt, whereby to diſcern him who preached Chriſt truly, according to the Apoſtolical Rules. It is farther reported to be a cuſtomary thing in Civil Wars, that becauſe their Arms, Language, Methods and Manner of Fighting are the ſame, therefore every General, to prevent Fraud, ſhould give his Soldiers a diſtinct Symbol, which in Latin is called a Sign or Token; that if one met another, of whom he had reaſon to doubt, by asking him the Symbol, he might diſcover whether he was Friend or Foe. But this does not ſatisfy a late learned [h] Writer, who thinks, "That this Name was not derived "from Military Cuſtom, but rather to be fetched "from the Sacra, or religious Services of the Hea- "thens, where thoſe who were initiated in their "Myſteries, and admitted to the Knowledge of "their peculiar Services, which were hidden and "concealed from the greateſt part of the Idolatrous "Multitude, had certain Signs or Marks, called "Symbola, delivered unto them, by which they "mutually knew each other, and upon the de-"claring of them, were without Scruple admit-"ted in any Temple to the ſecret Worſhip and "Rites of that God, whoſe Symbols they had "received." The uſe of theſe Symbols among the Heathens is abundantly proved by that learned Author, both from Heathen and Chriſtian Writers: But then he alledges no Authority to prove that the Chriſtians called their Creed by the Name of Symbol, in Imitation of that Heathen Practice: And it is ſome Prejudice againſt it, that no ſuch thing is ſaid or hinted by any antient Writer. Neither is it very likely, that the Chriſtians would have ſo nice a Regard to the abominable and filthy Myſteries of the Heathen, as to chuſe that Signification of the Name Symbol for their Creed, when with much more Decency it might be fetched from the innocent and ordinary Cuſtoms uſed in Military Affairs, or Civil Contracts, from which it is with greater Probability derived, both by Antient and Modern Writers.

SECT. II. Why called Canon, and Regula Fidei.

ANOTHER uſual Name of the Creed was Κανὼν, the Rule, ſo called becauſe it was the known Standard or Rule of Faith, by which Orthodoxy and Hereſy were examined and judged. As when the Council of Antioch [i] ſays of Paulus Samoſatenſis, that he was an Apoſtate from the Rule, it is plain, the meaning is, he had deviated in his Doctrine from the Creed, the Rule of Faith. Agreeably to this, it is commonly ſtyled among the Greeks, [k] ὅρος and ἔκθεσις πίστεως, the Determination or Expoſition of the Faith; and ſometimes ſimply πίστις, the Faith [l]. Which anſwers to the Latin Name, Regula fidei, the Rule of Faith, the common Appellation of it in SECT. III. Why called Mathema.

ANOTHER ordinary Appellation of the Creed in the antient Greek Writers, is μάθημα, the Leſſon, ſo called from the Obligation the Catechumens were under to learn it. This may eaſily be miſtaken by an unwary Reader for a Leſſon in the Bible, unleſs where ſome Note of Diſtinction is added to it. Therefore, when we read in the Council of Conſtantinople, under Mennas, that after the reading of the Goſpel, in time of the Communion-Service, the Holy Leſſon [q] was read according to Cuſtom, we are not to underſtand it of any other Leſſon out of the Bible, but of the Creed, which was then made part of the Communion-Service. And ſo Socrates [r] ſometimes uſes the Word: And Valeſius [s] has obſerved, that in two Manuſcripts of that Author, where the Nicene Creed is recited, the Title of Mathema is ſet before it. But Leontius Byzantinus [t] ſpeaks more explicitely, and calls it by way of Diſtinction, The Decree or Leſſon of Faith, ſpeaking of the Creed which the Fathers of the Council of Chalcedon were about to make.

SECT. IV. Why called γράμμα and γραφή.

Valeſius [u] has alſo obſerved out of Socrates, that it is ſometimes ſtyled ſimply and abſolutely γραφὴ and γράμμα. Which Words, though they are uſually taken to ſignify the holy Scripture, yet here they muſt have another Meaning: For the Creed, properly ſpeaking, is not an inſpired Writing, unleſs in that Senſe as it may be ſaid to be collected out of the inſpired Writings: But here thoſe Words ſignify only in a common Senſe, Letters or Learning; and ſo are uſed, as the foregoing Word, Mathema, with a peculiar reference to the learning of the Catechumens. Some alſo alledge Cyprian for another Name, as if he called the Creed peculiarly the Sacrament of Faith [x]. But I am not ſatisfied that Cyprian's Meaning is ſo to be reſtrained. For he is rather ſpeaking in general againſt prophaning the Myſteries of Religion, which include the Sacraments, or any other religious Rites, as well as the Creed; applying that Text of Scripture to his Purpoſe, Give not that which is holy unto Dogs, neither caſt ye your Pearls before Swine, leſt they tread them under their Feet, and turn again and rent you. Or, if it be limitted to any particular Myſtery, it ſhould rather ſignify Baptiſm than the Creed: For Baptiſm is ſometimes called the Sacrament of Faith by St. Auſtin [y], and the Sacrament of Faith and Repentance by Fulgentius [z] and others, as I ſhall more particularly ſhew, when I come to treat of Baptiſm. For which reaſon I do not take this to be any particular Name given to the Creed by any antient Writer: But the Creed is the Faith itſelf (the Credulitas, as ſome middle-aged Writers [a] call it) and the Sacrament of Faith is Baptiſm.

SECT. V. Whether that which is commonly called The Apoſtles Creed, was compoſed by the Apoſtles in the preſent Form of Words.

THE next Enquiry is into the Original and Nature of the antient Creeds: Which will admit of three Queſtions. 1. Whether that which is commonly called The Apoſtles Creed, was compoſed by the Apoſtles in the ſame Form of Words as now it is uſed in the Church? 2. Whether the Apoſtles made or uſed any Creeds at all for the Inſtitution of Catechumens, or the Adminiſtration of Baptiſm? 3. If they did; what Articles were contained in them? The firſt Queſtion is now generally reſolved in the Negative by learned Men, though many both of the Ancients and Moderns have been of a different Opinion. Some have thought that the twelve Apoſtles in a full Meeting compoſed the Creed in the very ſame Form of Words as now it is uſed in the Church; and others have gone ſo far as to pretend to tell what Article was compoſed by every particular Apoſtle. Dr. Comber is ſo poſitive in the Matter, as to ſay, We have no better Medium to prove the Books [b] were written by thoſe Authors whoſe Names they bear, than the unanimous Teſtimony of Antiquity; and by that we can abundantly prove the Apoſtles were the Authors of this Creed. For this he cites Clemens Romanus, Irenæus, Origen, Tertullian, Ruffinus, Ambroſe, Auſtin, Jerom, Pope Leo, Maximus Taurinenſis, Caſſian and Iſidore. But none of theſe Writers, except Ruffinus, ſpeak home to this purpoſe; but only ſay, the Creeds in general are of Apoſtolical Inſtitution: Which, for the Subſtance, no one denies; for they ſpeak of ſeveral Forms, and yet aſcribe them all to the Apoſtles: Which is an Argument they did not mean this particular Form any more than others. For the Nicene Creed is often called the Apoſtles Creed; and yet no one believes that that Creed was compoſed totidem verbis by the Apoſtles. Ruffinus indeed ſeems to ſay, there was an antient Tradition, that the Apoſtles being about to depart from Jeruſalem [c], firſt ſettled a Rule for their future preaching; leſt after they were ſeparated from one another, they ſhould expound different Doctrines to thoſe whom they invited to the Chriſtian Faith. Wherefore, being all aſſembled together, and filled with the Holy Ghoſt, they compoſed this ſhort Rule of their preaching, each one contributing his Sentence, and left it as a Rule to be given to all Believers. And for this reaſon, he thinks, it might be called the Symbol, becauſe the Word in Greek ſignifies both a Teſt, and a Collation of Opinions together. The Author [d] under the Name of St. Auſtin, is a little more particular in the Story: For he pretends to tell us what Article was put in by each particular Apoſtle: Peter ſaid, I believe in God, the Father Almighty. John, Maker of Heaven and Earth. James, And in Jeſus Chriſt his only Son, our Lord. Andrew added, Who was conceived by the Holy Ghoſt, born of the Virgin Mary. Philip ſaid, Suffered under Pontius Pilate, was Crucified, dead and buried. Thomas, He deſcended into Hell; the third Day he roſe again from the Dead. Bartholomew, He aſcended into Heaven, and ſitteth at the Right Hand of God the Father Almighty. Matthew, From thence he ſhall come to judge the Quick and the Dead. James, the Son of Alphæus, added, I believe in the Holy Ghoſt, the holy Catholick Church. Simon Zelotes, The Communion of Saints, the Forgiveneſs of Sins. Jude, the Brother of James, The Reſurrection of the Body. Matthias, Life Everlaſting.

But now there is an inſuperable Difficulty lies againſt this Tradition, which is this, that there are two or three Articles here mentioned, which are known not to have been in this Creed for three or four Ages at leaſt. For Ruffinus himſelf tells us, the Deſcent into Hell was neither in the Roman [e] Creed, which is that we call, the Apoſtles Creed, nor yet in any Creed of the Eaſtern Churches; only the Senſe of it might be ſaid to be couched in the other Expreſſion, he was buried. Biſhop Uſher and Biſhop Pearſon have demonſtrated the Truth of this Obſervation by a particular Induction from all the antient Creeds, and ſhewed this Article to be wanting in them all for four hundred Years, except the Creed of Aquileia, which Ruffinus expounds, and the Creed of the Council of Ariminum, mentioned [f] in Socrates. Others have made the ſame Obſervation upon the Article concerning the Communion of Saints, which is not to be found either in the Creed of Aquileia, or any antient Greek or Latin Creed for above the ſpace of four hundred Years. Nor is the Article of the Life Everlaſting expreſly mentioned in many Creeds, but only incluſively contained in the Reſurrection of the Body; which is the concluding Article in many antient Creeds. Theſe are plain Demonſtrations, without any other Argument, that the Creed, as it ſtands in the preſent Form, could not be compoſed, in the manner as is pretended, by the Apoſtles. The Silence of the Acts of the Apoſtles, about any ſuch Compoſition, is a collateral Evidence againſt it. The Silence of Eccleſiaſtical Writers, for above three whole Centuries, is a farther Confirmation. The Variety of Creeds in ſo many different Forms, uſed by the Ancients, yet extant in their Writings, ſome with Omiſſions, others with Additions, and all in a different Phraſe, are no leſs evident Proofs, that one univerſal Form had not been pitched upon and preſcribed to the whole Church by the Apoſtles. For then it is ſcarce to be imagined, that any Church ſhould have received any other Form in the leaſt Tittle varying from it. Theſe Reaſons do now generally ſatisfy learned Men, that no ſuch preciſe Form was compoſed, according to that pretended Tradition, by all the Apoſtles. The Reader may find Diſſertations in Voſſius [g], Biſhop Uſher [h], Hammond L'Eſtrange [i], Baſnagius [k], Suicerus [l], and the learned Author of the late Critical [m] Hiſtory of the Creed, to this purpoſe. And it is much to be wondered at, that any knowing Perſon, againſt ſuch convincing Evidence, ſhould labour to maintain the contrary, upon no better Grounds than only this, that the Ancients agree in calling the Creed Apoſtolical. For they do not always intend this particular Form, but call all other Forms Apoſtolical, the Nicene Creed, the Conſtantinopolitan Creed, the Eaſtern Creeds, the Weſtern Creeds, and all others which agree with this in Subſtance, tho' not in Method or Expreſſion, and are all equally Apoſtolical, as being all derived from the Apoſtles preaching, and for Subſtance compoſed by them, and ſome of them perhaps left in the Churches where they preached, as the firſt Rudiments of this Creed ſeem to have been in the Roman Church. So far all the antient Catholick Creeds may be ſaid to be Apoſtolical, as being in Subſtance the ſame with the Creeds uſed in Baptiſm by the Apoſtles.

SECT. VI. That probably the Apoſtles uſed ſeveral Creeds differing in Form, not in Subſtance.

BY all then that has hitherto been ſaid, I intend not to inſinuate, that the Apoſtles uſed no Creeds at all, but rather that they uſed many, differing in Form, but not in Subſtance from one another. All that I contend for, is only this, that none of the preſent Forms are exactly the ſame in Expreſſion with thoſe of the Apoſtles, which is demonſtrated from the variety of Creeds uſed in ſeveral Churches, and from the Addition of ſome Words to that Creed which pretends moſt to be Apoſtolical. But though the Apoſtles compoſed no one Creed to be of perpetual and univerſal Uſe for the whole Church, yet it is not to be doubted but that they uſed ſome Forms in admitting Catechumens to Baptiſm. There are many Expreſſions in Scripture that favour this, particularly Philip's Queſtions to the Eunuch before he baptized him, and St. Peter's Interrogatories, or the Anſwer of a good Conſcience towards God, which was uſed in Baptiſm: And the conſtant Practice of the Church, in Imitation of the Apoſtles, admitting none to Baptiſm but by anſwer to ſuch Interrogatories, is a ſufficient Demonſtration of the Apoſtolical Practice. But then as the Church uſed a Liberty of Expreſſion in her ſeveral Creeds, ſo it is not improbable the Apoſtles did the ſame without tying themſelves to any one Form, who had leſs need to do it, being all guided by Inſpiration. And hence it came to paſs, that there being no one certain Form of a Creed preſcribed univerſally to all Churches, every Church had liberty to frame their own Creeds, as they did their own Liturgies, without being ty'd preciſely to any one Form of Words, ſo long as they kept to the Analogy of Faith and Doctrine at firſt delivered by the Apoſtles: Which ſeems to be the true Reaſon of ſo many antient Forms, differing in Words, not in Subſtance.

SECT. VII. What Articles were contained in the Apoſtolical Creeds.

BUT now the grand Queſtion ſtill remains, concerning the Nature, Subſtance and Extent of the Apoſtolical Creeds, that is, what Articles were contained in them. Some there are who would confine theſe to very narrow Bounds, making them at firſt to be no more than what is contained expreſly in the Form of Baptiſm, I believe in God the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt. So Epiſcopius [n] and his Followers, who would perſuade the World, that for the three firſt Ages, the Doctrine of our Saviour's Divinity was no neceſſary Article of the Chriſtian Faith. But the learned Biſhop Bull [o], and Dr. Grabe [p], have judiciouſly refuted theſe pretences, the one by ſhewing from all the antient Creeds that this Doctrine was a neceſſary Article before the Nicene Council; and the other by evincing from Scripture, that the Lineaments of the Apoſtles Creed, uſed in the Adminiſtration of Baptiſm, were at the firſt much larger than what Epiſcopius pretended; and that in the Apoſtles Age, either by their Authority or Permiſſion, the Creed conſiſted of all the preſent Articles, except only thoſe two, of the Deſcent into Hell, and the Communion of Saints, which are owned to be of later Admiſſion. Mr. Baſnage [q] indeed has a peculiar Opinion, that the Creed was compoſed, and the chief Articles inſerted only in the ſecond Century, in opppoſition to ſeveral Hereſies, which then began to infeſt the Church. The Gnoſticks brought in the Doctrine of a two-fold Deity, the one Good, the other Evil: Againſt this peſtilent Hereſy, the Church put that Article into her Creed, I believe in God, or in one God. Menander, the Diſciple of Simon Magus, aſſerted, that the World was not created by God, but by Angels: This occaſioned the Church to inſert thoſe Words, Maker of Heaven and Earth. Carpocrates taught, that Jeſus was a mere Man, and begotten of both Sexes, as other Men. In Oppoſition to whom, it was inſerted, that Chriſt was conceived by the Holy Ghoſt. The Baſilidians did not believe Jeſus was crucified by the Jews, but only Simon of Cyrene: To refute whom, they put in thoſe Words, he was dead and buried. Carpocrates rejected the Reſurrection of the Fleſh: And upon that, I believe the Reſurrection of the Fleſh, was added to the Creed. Thus, if we will hearken to this learned Perſon, there was no Creed at all made by the Apoſtles, but it was compoſed intirely by the Church, and gradually augmented, only as the Riſe of Sects and Hereſies required ſome Oppoſition to be made to them. The learned Author of the late Critical Hiſtory of the Creed goes the ſame way, only with this difference, that he ſuppoſes (what Mr. Baſnage does not) that ſome Articles were inſerted by the Apoſtles themſelves, and others ſuper-added by the Church, as the Occaſion of Hereſies required. But, when he ſpeaks of the particular Articles, he falls in with Mr. Baſnage's Notion about the chiefeſt: For he ſuppoſes the firſt Article, I believe in one God, not to be made againſt the Polytheiſm of the Gentiles by the Apoſtles, but only by the Church, upon the riſe of the Hereſies of the Valentinians, Cerdonians, Marcionites, and others in After-ages. Which in effect is to ſay, the Creed was made, and not made by the Apoſtles: For, if the principal Articles were not compoſed by them, I ſee not what elſe can entitle them to have been the Authors of it. And therefore I much more readily ſubſcribe to the Opinion of the learned Dr. Grabe, which he maintains againſt this learned Perſon, that the Article of one God the Father, Maker of Heaven and Earth, was originally inſerted into the Creed by the Apoſtles, againſt the capital Error of the Gentiles, who made one God to have Power over Heaven, another over the Earth, another over the Sea, &c. and divided the divine Honour among them. For ſo the Vulgar among the Heathen practiſed their Idolatry; however the Philoſophers among them might be a little more refined in their Theology, and have more agreeable Notions of the Unity of the Supreme God. Therefore it is reaſonable to believe this firſt Article was inſerted to make Men renounce in their Baptiſm this erroneous Opinion of the Gentiles.

The Opinion of Epiſcopius, that nothing more was originally in the Creed about our Saviour, but only the bare Title of the Son, is ſolidly refuted by Dr. Grabe, who proves from Scripture, that he had always this Title with the Addition of his being the Son of God: And that thoſe other Articles, he was crucified, dead, and buried; that he roſe again, and aſcended into Heaven, and ſat at the Right Hand of God, and from thence ſhould come to judge the Quick and Dead, were all original Articles of the Creed; being ſuch Doctrines as the Apoſtles chiefly taught their Catechumens, and ſuch as the Jews and Gentiles either denied or ridiculed: And therefore it was proper to make all new Converts, at their Entrance on Chriſtianity, make a particular Profeſſion of ſuch Articles, in Oppoſition to their former Errors, whether they came over from the Jews or Gentiles. Upon this account he alſo rejects the Opinion of the Author of the Critical Hiſtory, who ſuppoſes the Article of the Aſcenſion of Chriſt into Heaven to have been added to the Creed only in the ſecond Century, and that in oppoſition to Apelles, one of Marcion's Diſciples, who denied the Aſcenſion of Chriſt's Fleſh into Heaven. But, if it had been deſigned againſt him, it would no doubt have been more particularly expreſſed, that his Fleſh aſcended into Heaven; as Dr. Grabe obſerves it is in Irenæus; and not barely that Chriſt aſcended into Heaven. For the ſame Reaſon he concludes, that the following Articles, of his Seſſion at God's Right Hand, and his coming to judge the Quick and the Dead, could not be inſerted into the Creed in oppoſition to the Marcionites and Gnoſticks, as the forementioned Author ſuppoſes: For then they would have been more preciſely worded againſt their reigning Tenets, which were, that Chriſt's Fleſh was void of Senſe in Heaven, and that Chriſt was not the Son of that God who is the Judge of the World: Wherefore it is more reaſonable to ſuppoſe thoſe Articles were originally inſerted by the Apoſtles, to correct the Ignorance and Errors of the Jews and Gentiles.

As to thoſe two Articles, he was conceived by the Holy Ghoſt, and born of the Virgin Mary, Dr. Grabe makes ſome queſtion whether they were as antient as the former, becauſe they do not appear in the common Catechetical Diſcourſes of the Apoſtles; but he thinks, before St. John's Death they were inſerted, againſt the Hereſies of Carpocrates, Ebion and Cerinthus, who denied both Articles, and aſſerted, that Chriſt was born of Joſeph and Mary, after the common way of Mankind.

The Article of the Holy Ghoſt was always a Part of the Apoſtles Creed, by the Confeſſion of Epiſcopius himſelf. And therefore the Opinion of thoſe who maintain, that nothing more was required of Catechumens before Baptiſm, but only the Profeſſion of their Faith in Jeſus Chriſt as the Son of God, is wholly to be rejected.

The Article of Remiſſion of Sins was alſo originally in the Apoſtolical Creeds, becauſe it always appears to have been one principal Point of their Catechetical Inſtitutions. And therefore the Opinion of the learned Author of the Critical Hiſtory, that it was only in ſome Creeds, but not in all, till the Riſe of the Novatian Hereſy, is alſo to be rejected; becauſe it appears from Cyprian, that it was in the Creed which the Novatians themſelves made uſe of in Baptiſm.

The Articles of the Reſurrection of the Dead, and Life Everlaſting, are alſo concluded to have been in the Apoſtles Creed, if not from the very firſt, yet at leaſt when St. Paul wrote his Epiſtle to the Hebrews, becauſe he there mentions the Reſurrection of the Dead, and eternal Judgment, among the Fundamental Doctrines of the Chriſtian Faith, Heb. vi. 2.

The Article of the Church, Dr. Grabe thinks was not originally in the Creed, but added in the latter end of the firſt Century, or beginning of the ſecond, upon occaſion of Hereticks and Schiſmaticks ſeparating from the Church. At leaſt it appears from Tertullian's Book de Baptiſmo, that the Profeſſion of it was required in his time, of Catechumens at their Baptiſm. For he ſays, [r] after they had teſtify'd their Faith in the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt, they alſo added the Church, becauſe where thoſe three were, there was the Church, and it was the Body of the three.

The Article of the Communion of Saints, he readily acknowledges, was never in any Creed before the fourth Century. And that concerning the Deſcent into Hell was not originally in the Creed, but added upon occaſion of Hereticks in After-ages. But the preciſe time of its Addition is not exactly agreed upon, between the Author of the Critical Hiſtory and Dr. Grabe. The former (who is allowed to have explained the genuine Senſe of this Article with as great Exactneſs as the moſt conſummate Divine) ſuppoſes it to have been added againſt the Arians and Apollinarians; (who denied the Soul or Spirit of Chriſt) becauſe the Fathers argued thus againſt them: Chriſt deſcended into Hell either in his Divinity, or his Soul, or his Body: But it is abſurd to aſcribe the Deſcent into Hell either to his Divinity, or his Body; and therefore it muſt be his Soul that deſcended; which proves the reality of his Soul. But Dr. Grabe thinks this Article was of earlier Date, becauſe it is to be found in ſome of the Arian Creeds themſelves, and others, more antient than the Apollinarians: And that if it had been inſerted againſt the Apollinarian Doctrine, it would not have been barely ſaid, he deſcended into Hell; but rather, he deſcended by his [r] Tertul. de Bapt. cap. 6. Cum ſub tribus & Teſtatio fidei & Sponſio ſalutis pignorentur, neceſſariò adjicitur Eccleſiæ mentio; quoniam ubi tres, id eſt, Pater, Filius, & Spiritus Sanctus, ibi Eccleſia, quæ trium Corpus eſt.

Soul

Soul into Hell; which had been directly againſt that Hereſy. Therefore he rather ſuppoſes it to have been added to the Creed in Oppoſition to the Valentinians and Marcionites, who, according to the Account given by Irenæus [s] and Tertullian [t], pretended, that the Souls of all that died of their Sects went immediately to Heaven; when yet Chriſt himſelf went into the State and Place of ſeparate Souls for three Days before his Reſurrection and Aſcenſion.

Upon the whole matter, Dr. Grabe concludes, that all the Articles of the Creed, except theſe three, the Communion of Saints, the Church, and the Deſcent of Chriſt into Hell, were ſolemnly profeſſed by the firſt Chriſtians in their Confeſſions of Faith in the Apoſtles Days, by their Authority, or at leaſt their Approbation: For which Reaſon the Creed, as to thoſe Parts of it, may properly be called Apoſtolical. And it could hardly be, that all Churches in the World ſhould ſo unanimouſly agree in the common Confeſſion of ſo many Articles of it, unleſs it had proceeded from ſome ſuch Authority as they all acknowledged. But the Reaſon why the Confeſſions of particular Churches differed in Words and Phraſes, he thinks, was from hence, that the Creed which the Apoſtles delivered, was not written with Paper and Ink, but in the fleſhly Tables of the Heart, as St. Jerom [u] words it. Whence every Church was at liberty to expreſs their Senſe in their own Terms. But he will not undertake to vindicate the common Tradition of Ruffinus, that it was made by joint Conſent of all the Apoſtles, when they were about to ſeparate from one another; and much leſs, that every one of the twelve Apoſtles caſt in his Symbol to compleat the number of twelve Articles, as the other Story is told by the Author under the Name of St. Auſtin, which he thinks is not in the leaſt to be regarded. I have been a little more particular in repreſenting the Senſe of this great Man upon this Point, both becauſe his Account of the original of the ſeveral Articles of the Creed ſeems to be moſt exact, and becauſe the Diſcourſe where he delivers his Opinion may not yet be fallen into the Hands of every ordinary Reader.

CHAP. IV.

A Collection of ſeveral antient Forms of the Creed out of the Primitive Records of the Church.

SECT. I. The Fragments of the Creed in Irenæus.

I SHALL now in the next place preſent the Reader with ſeveral of the antient Forms of the Creed, as we find them preſerved in the moſt antient Writers, and the moſt authentick primitive Records of the Church. The Uſe of theſe will be, not only to illuſtrate and confirm what has been ſaid in the laſt Chapter, but alſo to declare what was the antient Faith of the Church, and ſhew the Vanity of Modern Hereticks, eſpecially the Arians, who pretend that the Doctrine of our Saviour's Divinity was no neceſſary Article of Faith before the Council of Nice. Biſhop Uſher, in his curious Tract de Symbolo Romano, has already collected a great many of theſe antient Forms; but becauſe this Piece is written in Latin, and become very ſcarce, and ſome things more may be added to it, I will here oblige the Engliſh Reader with a new Account of them, beginning with the Fragments of the Creed which we have in Irenæus, Origen, Cyprian, Tertullian, and other private Writers, which Biſhop Uſher gives no account of. Some fancy the Creed may be found in the Writings of Ignatius, Clemens Romanus, Polycarp, and Juſtin Martyr: But Biſhop Pearſon [a] has rightly obſerved, that theſe Writers, however they may incidentally mention ſome Articles of Faith, do not formally deliver any Rule of Faith uſed in their own times. The firſt that ſpeaks of this is Irenæus, who calls it the unalterable Canon [b] or Rule of Truth, which every Man received at his Baptiſm. And he immediately declares what it was in theſe Words: The Church, tho' it be diſperſed over all the World [c] from one end of the Earth to the other, received from the Apoſtles and their Diſciples, The Belief in one God the Father Almighty, Maker of Heaven and Earth and Sea, and all things in them: And in one Chriſt Jeſus the Son of God, who was Incarnate for our Salvation: And in the Holy Ghoſt, who preached by the Prophets the Diſpenſations of [God], and the Advent, and Nativity of a Virgin, and Paſſion, and Reſurrection from the dead, and Bodily Aſcenſion of the Fleſh of his beloved Son Chriſt Jeſus our Lord into Heaven, and his Coming again from Heaven in the Glory of the Father, to recapitulate all things, and raiſe the Fleſh of all Mankind; that according to the Will of the inviſible Father, every Knee ſhould bow of things in Heaven, and things in the Earth, and things under the Earth, to Jeſus Chriſt our Lord, and God, and Saviour, and King, and that every Tongue ſhould confeſs to him, and that he may exerciſe juſt Judgment upon all, and ſend Spiritual Wickedneſſes, and the Tranſgreſſing and Apoſtate Angels, with all ungodly, unrighteous, lawleſs and blaſpheming Men into everlaſting Fire; but grant Life to all righteous and holy Men, that keep his Commandments, and perſevere in his Love, ſome from the Beginning, others after Repentance, on whom He confers Immortality, and inveſts them with Eternal Glory. This Faith, he ſays, was the ſame in all the World; Men profeſſed it with one Heart and one Soul: For, though there were different Dialects in the World, yet the Power of the Faith was one [d] and the ſame. The Churches in Germany had no other Faith or Tradition than thoſe in Iberia or Spain, or thoſe among the Celtæ, that is, France, or in the Eaſt, or in Ægypt, or in Libya, or in the middle Parts of the World; by which he means Jeruſalem and the adjacent Churches, which were reckoned to be in the midſt of the Earth. But, as one and the ſame Sun enlighteneth all the World; ſo the preaching of this Truth ſhined all over, and enlightened all Men that were willing to come to the Knowledge of the Truth. Nor did the moſt Eloquent Ruler of the Church ſay any more than this: [For no one was above his Maſter] nor the Weakeſt diminiſh any Thing of this Tradition. For the Faith being one and the ſame, he that ſaid moſt of it could not inlarge it, nor he that ſaid leaſt take any thing from it.

that

The Reader will eaſily perceive, that Iræneus by this one Faith did not mean the expreſs Form of Words now uſed in the Apoſtles Creed: For his Words differ much in Expreſſion from that, though in Senſe and Subſtance it be the ſame Faith, and that which was then preached and taught over all the Churches.

SECT. II. The Creed of Origen.

THERE is another ſuch Form of Apoſtolical Doctrine collected by Origen in his Books of Chriſtian Principles [e], where he thus delivers the Rule of Faith: The Things which are manifeſtly handed down by the Apoſtolical Preaching, are theſe; Firſt, that there is one God, who created and made all Things, and cauſed the whole Univerſe to exiſt out of Nothing; the God of all the Juſt that ever were from the firſt Creation and Foundation of all; the God of Adam, Abel, Seth, Enos, Enoch, Noe, Sem, Abraham, Iſaac, Jacob, the Twelve Patriarchs, Moſes and the Prophets: And that this God in the laſt Days, as he had promiſed before by his Prophets, ſent our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, firſt to call Iſrael, and then the Gentiles, after the Infidelity of his People Iſrael. This juſt and good God, the Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, gave both the Law and the Prophets, and the Goſpels, being the God of the Apoſtles, and of the Old and New Teſtament. The next Article is, That Jeſus Chriſt, who came into the World, was begotten of the Father before every Creature, who miniſtring to his Father in the Creation of all things, [for by Him all Things were made] in the laſt Times made himſelf of no Reputation and became Man: He who was God, was made Fleſh, and when he was Man, he continued the ſame God that he was before. He aſſumed a Body in all Things like ours, ſave only that it was born of a Virgin by the Holy Ghoſt. And becauſe this Jeſus Chriſt was born and ſuffered Death common to all, in Truth, and not only in Appearance, he was truly dead; For he roſe again truly from the Dead, and after his Reſurrection converſed with his Diſciples, and was taken up into Heaven. They alſo delivered unto us, that the Holy Ghoſt was joyned in the ſame Honour and Dignity with the Father and the Son.

Thus far Origen ſpeaks of the principal Articles of the Chriſtian Faith as handed down by the Church from the preaching of the Apoſtles. And there goes another Book under his Name, written by way of Dialogue againſt the Marcionites, where he more ſuccinctly delivers the Catholick Faith in oppoſition to the falſe Principles of thoſe Hereticks: "I believe there is one God, [f] the Crea- "tor and Maker of all Things; and One that is "from Him, God the Word, who is Conſub- "ſtantial with Him and Co-eternal, who in the "laſt Times took Human Nature upon him of "the [Virgin] Mary, and was crucified, and rai- "ſed again from the Dead. I believe alſo the "Holy Ghoſt, who exiſts to all Eternity." 'Tis true, learned Men are not certainly agreed who was the true Author of thoſe Dialogues: Wetſtenius, who firſt publiſhed them in Greek, aſcribes them to Origen; but Huetius makes one Maximus the Author, who lived, as he conjectures, in the Time of Conſtantine. But whoever was the Author, they contain a Form of a very Orthodox Creed, for which reaſon I have given it a Place in this Collection.

SECT. III. The Fragments of the Creed in Tertullian.

NEXT after Origen we find ſome Parts of the ancient Creed in Tertullian, who ſpeaks of it as the Rule of Faith common to all Chriſtians.

Chriſtians. There is, ſays he, one Rule [g] of Faith only, which admits of no Change or Alteration, that which teaches us to believe in One God Almighty, the Maker of the World, and in Jeſus Chriſt his Son, who was born of the Virgin Mary, crucified under Pontius Pilate, the Third Day aroſe again from the Dead, received into Heaven, and ſitteth now at the Right Hand of God, who ſhall come again to judge both the Quick and the Dead, by the Reſurrection of the Fleſh.

In his Book of Preſcriptions [h] againſt Hereticks, he has another Form not much unlike this. The Rule of Faith is that whereby we believe One God only, and no other beſide, the Maker of the World, who produced all Things out of Nothing by his Word which He ſent forth before all Things. This Word was called his Son, who at ſundry Times appeared to the Patriarchs, and always ſpake by the Prophets, and at laſt deſcended into the Virgin Mary by the Power and Spirit of God the Father, and was made Fleſh in her Womb, and born of her a Man Jeſus Chriſt; who preached a new Law, and a new Promiſe of the Kingdom of Heaven; who wrought Miracles, and was crucified, and the third Day aroſe again, and was taken into Heaven, and ſitteth at the Right Hand of the Father: Whence he ſent the Power of the Holy Ghoſt in his ſtead, to guide them that believe: Who ſhall come again with Glory, to take the Saints into the Poſſeſſion and Fruition of Eternal Life and the Heavenly Promiſes, and to condemn the Profane to everlaſting Fire, having firſt raiſed both the one and the other by the Reſurrection of the Fleſh. This Rule, he ſays, was inſtituted by Chriſt himſelf [i], and there were no Diſputes in the Church about it, but ſuch as Hereſies brought in, or ſuch as Hereticks made. To know Nothing beyond this, was to know all Things.

In his Book againſt Praxeas he repeats the ſame Creed with a little Variation of Expreſſion: We believe in one God [k], yet under this Diſpenſation, which we call the Oeconomy, That that One God hath a Son, which is his Word, who proceeded from Him, by whom all Things were made, and without whom Nothing was made. We believe that He was ſent by the Father to be born of a Virgin, both Man and God, the Son of Man, and the Son of God, and that He was called Jeſus Chriſt. That He ſuffered, and was dead and buried according to the Scriptures; that He was raiſed again by the Father, and taken up again into Heaven, where He ſits at the Right Hand of the Father, and ſhall come again to judge the Quick and Dead. From whence alſo He ſent from his Father, according to his Promiſe, the Holy Ghoſt the Comforter, who ſanctifies the Faith of thoſe that believe in the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt. This Faith, he ſays, was the Rule of Believing from the Beginning of the Goſpel, and the Antiquity of it was ſufficiently demonſtrated from the Novelty of Hereſies, which were but of Yeſterday's ſtanding in compariſon of it.

Now it is eaſy to obſerve, That Tertullian here ſpeaks not of any certain Form of Words, but of the Subſtance of the Faith: For ſome Articles, as the Deſcent into Hell, and the Communion of Saints, are not here expreſly mentioned, though they may be implied: But the Articles of the Trinity, the Incarnation, &c. are both expreſſed and carefully explained in ſuch a manner, as ſhews the Neceſſity of an explicite Faith in thoſe Points, and how the Doctrine of our Saviour's Divinity was a prime Article of the Creed from the very Foundation of the Church.

SECT. IV. The Fragments of the Creed in Cyprian.

NEXT after Tertullian we have ſome Remains of the Uſe of the Creed in Cyprian: He ſays, Both the Catholicks and Novatians agreed in the ſame Form of Interrogatories, which they always propoſed to Catechumens at their Baptiſm; ſome of which were theſe Queſtions in particular, Whether they believed in God [l] the Father, and in Chriſt his Son, and in the Holy Ghoſt? And, whether they believed the Hunc paſſum, hunc mortuum, & ſepultum ſecundum Scripturas, reſuſcitatum à Patre, & in cœlos reſumptum, ſedere ad dexteram Patris, venturum judicare vivos & mortuos. Qui exinde miſerit ſecundum promiſſionem ſuam à Patre Spiritum Sanctum Paracletum, ſanctificatorem fidei eorum qui credunt in Patrem & Filium & Spiritum Sanctum. Hanc Regulam ab initio Evangelii decucurriſſe, &c. Confer. Tertul. de Bapt. cap. 6, & 11. [l] Cypr. Ep. 69. al. 76. ad Magnum, p. 183. Quod ſi aliquis illud opponat, ut dicat, eandem Novatianum legem tenere, quam Catholica Eccleſia teneat, eodem Symbolo quo & nos baptizare; eundem nôſſe Deum Patrem, eundem Filium Chriſtum, eundem Spiritum Sanctum, ac propter hoc uſurpare eum poteſtatem baptizandi poſſe, quod videatur in Interrogatione baptiſmi à nobis non diſcrepare: Sciat quiſquis hoc opponendum putat, primum non eſſe unam nobis & Schiſmaticis Symboli legem, neque eandem Interrogationem: Nam, cum dicunt, Credis remiſſionem peccatorum & vitam æternam per Sanctam Eccleſiam, mentiuntur in Interrogatione, quando non habeant Eccleſiam.

Remiſſion of Sins and Life Eternal was to be obtained by the Holy Church? For though, as he obſerves, the Novatians did but falſify and prevaricate as it were in theſe Queſtions; there being no true Church among them to grant Remiſſion of Sins; yet however, they obſerved the ſame Form of Words as the Church did in her Creed, and put the ſame Queſtions to all that came to them for Baptiſm. Cyprian repeats this in another Epiſtle, which is written in the Name of the Council of Carthage [m] to the Biſhops of Numidia, where mention is made of the ſame Interrogatories, as generally uſed in the Adminiſtration of Baptiſm. From whence it appears, That not only the Articles of the Trinity, but thoſe other which relate to the Church, and Remiſſion of Sins, and Eternal Life, were Parts of the Creed uſed in Cyprian's Time in all the African Churches. And except the Deſcent into Hell, and the Communion of Saints (which are of later Date in the Creed than the Times of Cyprian or Tertullian) all the other Articles are taken notice of by theſe two Primitive Writers.

SECT V. The Creed of Gregory Thaumaturgus.

NOT long after Cyprian lived Gregory Biſhop of Neocæſarea, commonly called Thaumaturgus. Among his Works, publiſhed by Gerhard Voſſius of Tongres, we have a Creed which he compoſed for the Uſe of his own Church, or rather, as Gregory Nyſſen reports in his Life, a Creed which he received in the Entrance on his Miniſtry by a Viſion from Heaven. The Form is in theſe [n] Words: "There is One God, the "Father of the Living Word, the ſubſiſting "Wiſdom and Power, the Eternal Expreſs Image "of God, who is a Perfect Begetter of a Per"fect, a Father of an only-begotten Son. And "One Lord, One of One, God of God, the "Character and Image of the Godhead, the "Word of Power, the Wiſdom that compre"hends the whole Syſtem of the World, the "Power that made every Creature. The true "Son of the true Father, Inviſible of Inviſible, "Incorruptible of Incorruptible, Immortal of "Immortal, Eternal of Eternal. And one Holy "Ghoſt, who has his Exiſtence from God, who "was manifeſted to Men by the Son, the per"fect Image of the perfect Son, the Living "Cauſe of all Living, the Fountain of Holineſs, "Eſſential Sanctity, who is the Author of Holi"neſs in all others. In whom God the Father "is manifeſted, who is above All and in All, "and God the Son, whoſe Power runs through "all Things. A perfect Trinity, whoſe Glory, "Eternity and Dominion is no way divided or "ſeparated from each other. In this Trinity "therefore there is nothing created or ſervile, "nothing adventitious or extraneous, that did "not exiſt before, but afterward came into it. "The Father was never without the Son, nor "the Son without the Spirit, but the Trinity "abides the ſame, Unchangeable and Invariable "for ever."

This Creed is not a complete Summary of the Faith, but only ſo far as relates to the Doctrine of the Holy Trinity, of which it is one of the moſt convincing Teſtimonies that is to be met with in any of the Ante-Nicene Fathers; it being particularly deſigned againſt the two oppoſite Hereſies of the Samoſatenians and Sabellians, the one of which denied the Divinity of our Saviour, and the other his Perſonal Subſiſtence. Some Modern Arians, following Sandius, have objected againſt it, as not Genuine: But the learned Biſhop Bull has abundantly vindicated the Credit of it [o] from the undeniable Evidences of Gregory Nyſſen and St. Baſil, to whoſe excellent Diſſertation I refer the Reader.

SECT. VI. The Creed of Lucian the Martyr.

IN the ſame Age with Gregory Thaumaturgus lived Lucian the Martyr, who ſuffered in the laſt Perſecution under Diocletian. He was Presbyter of the Church of Antioch, where he wrote a Confeſſion of Faith in Oppoſition to the Sabellians. The Form is recorded both by Athanaſius [p], and Socrates, [q], and Hilary, who comments upon it, and vindicates it from the Objections which ſome made againſt it, becauſe it was produced by the Arians in the Council of Antioch under Conſtantius, An. 341, as if it had favoured their Opinion; which Hilary ſhews it did not, though there were ſome Expreſſions in it againſt the Sabellians, that might be wreſted to an Heretical Senſe [as any Catholick Words may be] contrary to the Mind of the Author. The Form, as delivered by St. Hilary, runs thus: "We be"lieve [r] according to the Tradition of the "Goſpels

" ſiſtence, or Hypoſtatick Subſtance, as the Greeks
" term it, of each Perſon named, ſo as to de" note them to be three in Hypoſtaſis, and one
" by Conſonance."

This Creed was anciently ſuſpected by ſome as an Arian Creed, becauſe of the term three Hypoſtaſes, or three Subſtances, in Hilary's Tranſlation. But Hilary ſufficiently clears it from this Suſpicion, by ſhewing, that theſe Terms were only uſed to oppoſe the Sabellians, who made the three Perſons no more than three Names: and that all other Expreſſions in it are very full and ſignificant againſt the Arian Hereſy. And therefore neither does he cenſure the Council of Antioch as Arians, who only repeated and adopted this Creed from Lucian, but he calls them a Synod of ninety five holy Biſhops, who intended thereby to eſtabliſh the Catholick Faith againſt the Sabellians chiefly, though not without a ſufficient Guard againſt the Anomœans or Arians. His Words are theſe [s]: The holy Synod intending to deſtroy the Impiety of thoſe Hereticks, who eluded the true Faith of a Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt, by the Equivocation of three Names only, that by a triple Appellation, without any real Subſiſtence belonging to each Name, they might under the falſe Shadow of three Names introduce ſuch an Unity, as that the Father alone, though but One and the ſame, ſhould have the Name of the Holy Spirit, and of the Son alſo: Therefore the Synod uſed the Term, Three Subſtances or Hypoſtaſes; meaning by Subſtances, ſubſiſting Perſons, and not intending to introduce ſuch a Diviſion of Subſtance in the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt, as implies a Diſſimilitude and Diverſity of Eſſence: [which was the Hereſy of the Arians, who made the Father only God, and the other Two Perſons only Creatures, ſo dividing the Subſtance by a Diverſity of Nature or Eſſence: Which this Council did not:] And therefore Hilary ſays, They were not to be blamed, though they ſpake of the Divine Perſons as of Three Subſtances or Hypoſtaſes, and One by Conſent, becauſe they meant no more than real ſubſiſting Perſons, in Oppoſition to the Sabellians. Yet notwithſtanding this juſt Defence and Apology made by St. Hilary for this Council, it is condemned by Baronius, Binnius, Hermantius, and many other Modern Writers, as an Arian Council. But the learned Schelſtrate has written an accurate Diſſertation in favour of this Council, wherein he anſwers [t] all the Objections made by Baronius and his Followers, either againſt this Council or the Creed of Lucian the Martyr; which is alſo done by our learned Biſhop Bull [u], to whoſe Diſſertations I refer the curious Reader.

SECT. VII. The Creed of the Apoſtolical Conſtitutions.

ABOUT the time of Lucian the Martyr, in the latter End of the third Century, Cotelerius ſuppoſes the Author or Compiler of the Book called The Apoſtolical Conſtitutions to have lived; which I think more probable, than either the Opinion of thoſe, who thruſt him down to the fifth Century, or the Opinion of Mr. Whiſton, who will needs have this Book not only to be the genuine Work of Clemens Romanus, but the Work of a divine and inſpired Writer. For this reaſon I ſpeak of him in this Place next after Lucian, as one that has left us the Form of an ancient Creed, then moſt probably uſed in ſome of the Eaſtern or Greek Churches. For he brings in the Catechumen making his Profeſſion in theſe Words: "I believe [x], and am baptized in one Unbegotten, "the only true God Almighty, the Father of "Chriſt, the Creator and Maker of all things, "of whom are all things: And in one Lord "Jeſus Chriſt, his only-begotten Son, the Firſt-"born of every Creature, who before all Ages "was begotten, not made, by the good Will "of the Father, by whom all Things were made "in Heaven and in Earth, Viſible and Inviſible, "who in the laſt Times came down from Hea-"ven, and taking Fleſh upon him, was born of "the holy Virgin Mary, and lived an holy Life "according to the Laws of God his Father, "and was crucified under Pontius Pilate, and "died for us, and the third Day after he had "ſuffered, roſe again from the Dead, and aſ-"cended into Heaven, and ſitteth at the Right "Hand of the Father, and ſhall come again with "Glory in the End of the World to judge both "the Quick and Dead, of whoſe Kingdom "there ſhall be no End. And I am baptized "into the Holy Ghoſt, that is to ſay, the Com-"forter, which wrought effectually in all the "Saints from the Beginning of the World, and "was afterward ſent to the Apoſtles by the Fa-"ther, according to the Promiſe of our Lord "and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, and after the Apoſtles "to all others, who in the Holy Catholick "Church believe the Reſurrection of the Fleſh, "the Remiſſion of Sins, the Kingdom of "Heaven, and the Life of the World to come."

Some have ſuſpected this Author of Arianiſm, but there is nothing of it appears in this Creed: For though he gives the Title of ἀγέννητον only to the Father, yet that is no more than what Alexander and Athanaſius, and all the Oppoſers of Arius always did, who never aſſerted δύο ἀγέννητα, as thoſe Words ſignify, two Abſolute, Co-ordinate, Unbegotten Principles, which is the proper Notion of two Gods; but always reſerved the Title of ἀγέννητον, Unbegotten, to the Father only, as the Eternal Principle and Fountain of the Deity; and ſtyled the Son, μονογενῆ Θεὸν, the Only-begotten God, which is the proper Notion of the Son of God, who is neither created, nor unbegotten, but eternally begotten of the Subſtance of the Father; and this Title of μονογενὴς Θεὸς, the only-begotten God, is the ſame as this very Author of the Conſtitutions elſewhere aſcribes [y] to the Son, whom he makes to be no Creature, but God, in this only differing from the Father, that he is not Unbegotten; which is neceſſary to the Notion of a Son; for it were a Contradiction to ſay, He is the Son of God, and yet Unbegotten alſo. I obſerve this, to ſhew, how little Advantage the Modern Arians have from this Author, if we allow him but that favourable Interpretation, which in Juſtice ought to be allowed to all antient Catholick Writers.

We may farther obſerve, That though this Creed be the ſame in Subſtance with the Roman Creed, which is commonly called the Apoſtles Creed, yet it differs from it very much in Phraſe and Expreſſion, and comes nearer the Creed of the Eaſtern Church; and though it be as perfect as any of that Age, yet it has neither the Article of the Deſcent into Hell, nor the Communion of Saints expreſsly mentioned in it: Which ſhews that theſe Articles were not totidem verbis inſerted into the firſt Creeds of the Church.

SECT. VIII. The Creed of Jeruſalem.

THUS far I have collected the ſcattered Remains of the antient Creeds, which were compoſed before the Nicene Creed, for the Uſe of ſeveral Churches; as they are ſtill upon Record in private Writers. But we have ſome more perfect Forms alſo remaining, as thoſe of Jeruſalem, Cæſarea, Antioch, Alexandria and Rome, by comparing which together, the Reader may eaſily perceive, how the Unity of the Faith was exactly agreed upon, and preſerved with ſome Variety of Expreſſion. The Creed of the Church of Jeruſalem we have imperfectly in St. James's Liturgy, and more perfect in the catechetical Diſcourſes of Cyril Biſhop of Jeruſalem, which are an Expoſition upon it. In St. James's Liturgy we have only the beginning of the Creed, "I believe in one God the Father Almighty [z] "Maker of Heaven and Earth, and in One Lord "Jeſus Chriſt, the Son of God." But the remaining Articles are not inſerted, as being vulgarly known without reciting. However, in Cyril's Catechiſms the Articles are rehearſed at full length, and when collected together they run in this Form:

"I believe in one God [a] the Father Almighty, "Maker of Heaven and Earth, and of all "Things Viſible and Inviſible: And in one "Lord Jeſus Chriſt, the only-begotten Son of "God, begotten of the Father before all Ages, "the True God, by whom all Things were "made, who was Incarnate and made Man, who "was crucified and buried, and the third Day "he roſe again from the Dead, and aſcended into "Heaven, and ſitteth on the Right Hand of "the Father, and ſhall come to judge the Quick "and Dead, of whoſe Kingdom there ſhall be

" rection of the Fleſh, and in Life Everlaſt-

That this Creed was neither the Nicene Creed, nor the Conſtantinopolitan, is evident, becauſe it wants the Word Conſubſtantial, and other Titles, which are given to the Son in the Nicene Creed: Nor has it the full Explication of the Character of the Holy Ghoſt, which was afterward made in the Conſtantinopolitan Creed: Which is not to be wonder'd at, becauſe Cyril's Catechiſms were written ſome Years before the Council of Conſtantipople was held. Therefore it muſt be the antient Creed of Jeruſalem, as Learned Men have [b] rightly concluded, and hence alſo obſerved, That the Oriental Creeds had originally the Articles that follow the Holy Ghoſt, viz. The Catholick Church, The Remiſſion of Sins, The Reſurrection of the Fleſh, and Eternal Life. Only the Communion of Saints, and Deſcent into Hell, are wanting in it.

SECT IX. The Creed of Cæſarea in Paleſtine.

AND ſo we find in the Creed of Cæſarea in Paleſtine, in the Profeſſion of which, Euſebius ſays he was baptized, and catechized; the Deſcent into Hell is not mentioned in it. But it differs in Expreſſion from the Jeruſalem Creed, and comes up the neareſt to the Nicene Creed of any other. The Form, as it was propoſed by Euſebius himſelf to the Council of Nice, is in theſe Words: " We " believe in One God, the Father [c] Almighty, " Maker of all Things Viſible and Inviſible: And " in One Lord Jeſus Chriſt, the Word of God, " God of God, Light of Light, Life of Life, " his only-begotten Son, the Firſt-born of every " Creature, begotten of the Father before all A-" ges, by whom all Things were made; who for " our Salvation was Incarnate, and converſed a-" mong Men, and ſuffered, and roſe again the " Third Day, and aſcended unto the Father, and " ſhall come again to judge the Quick and the " Dead. We believe alſo in one Holy Spirit. E-" very one of theſe we believe to be and exiſt; " We confeſs the Father to be truly a Father, " the Son truly a Son, the Holy Ghoſt truly an " Holy Ghoſt, according to what our Lord, " when he ſent his Diſciples to preach, ſaid, Go " teach all Nations, baptizing them in the Name " of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Ho-" ly Ghoſt."

The Articles that follow the Holy Ghoſt are here omitted, only for the ſame Reaſon, as I ſhall ſhew hereafter they were omitted in the Nicene Creed, becauſe then no Diſpute was made about them, and only ſo much of the Creed was now produced as was neceſſary to be mentioned in Oppoſition to the Arian Hereſy.

SECT X. The Creed of Alexandria.

THE Creed of Alexandria was ſomewhat ſhorter than this, and is ſuppoſed by learned Men to be that which Arius and Euzoius delivered in to Conſtantine, when they made a ſort of feigned Recantation before him. The Form is recorded in Socrates [d] in theſe Words: " We believe in " One God the Father Almighty, and in Jeſus " Chriſt his Son our Lord, God the Word, be-" gotten of Him before all Ages, by whom all " Things were made that are in Heaven and in " Earth; who came down from Heaven, and was " Incarnate, and ſuffered, and roſe again, and aſ-" cended into Heaven, and ſhall come again to " judge the Quick and the Dead. And in the " Holy Ghoſt, and in the Reſurrection of the " Fleſh, and in the Life of the World to come, " and in the Kingdom of Heaven, and in one ca-" tholick Church of God extended from one End " of the Earth to the other."

SECT. XI. The Creed of Antioch.

THE Creed of the Church of Antioch ſeems to be that which is recorded in Caſſian, who delivers it as it was probably received in that Church from the time of the Apoſtles, only with the Addition of the Word Conſubſtantial, inſerted from the time of the Council of Nice. " The Text and " Faith of the Creed of Antioch, ſays he, is this: " [e] I believe in the only true God the Father " Almighty, Maker of all Creatures Viſible and " Inviſible: And in Jeſus Chriſt our Lord, his " only-begotten Son, the Firſt-born of every Crea-" ture, born of him before all Ages, and not made, " very God of very God, Conſubſtantial with the " Father, by whom the World was framed, and " all Things made. Who for our Sakes came " and was born of the Virgin Mary, and was cru-" cified under Pontius Pilate, and buried, and the " third Day roſe again according to the Scrip-" tures, and aſcended into Heaven, and ſhall come " again to judge the Quick and the Dead."

Caſſian here repeats not the whole Creed, but only thoſe Articles that were proper to be urged againſt Neſtorius, who had been Baptized into this Faith, and by this Creed at Antioch, from which he ſhews his Prevarications, and how he had ſtarted from the Profeſſion which he himſelf had made in the Words of this Creed both at his Bapttſm and Ordination, leaving the remaining Articles unrecited.

SECT. XII. The Roman Creed, commonly called the Apoſtles Creed.

THE Reader may eaſily perceive, by comparing the forementioned Creeds, that the Articles of the Communion of Saints, and the Deſcent into Hell, are not expreſly mentioned in any of them: Nor were they originally in the Roman Creed, which is commonly called the Apoſtles Creed, as appears not only from the Teſtimony of Ruffin, but from ſome antient Copies of this Creed ſtill remaining. Biſhop Uſher [f] met with two Copies here in England, which wanted theſe Additions, and alſo that of Life Everlaſting. The one was in Greek, though written in Saxon Characters, at the End of King Athelſtan's Pſalter, about the Year 703. And the other in Latin, but both exactly in the ſame Form of Words: "I believe in God the Father Almighty; and in Jeſus Chriſt his only-begotten Son "our Lord, who was born of the Holy Ghoſt "and the Virgin Mary, and was crucified under "Pontius Pilate, and was buried, and the third "Day roſe again from the Dead, aſcended into "Heaven, ſitteth on the Right Hand of the Father, whence He ſhall come to judge the Quick "and the Dead. And in the Holy Ghoſt, the "Holy Church, the Remiſſion of Sins, and "the Reſurrection of the Fleſh. Amen.

The Variations of theſe antient Forms from the preſent Form of the Apoſtles Creed, in the want of ſeveral Words that have ſince been added, are noted by Biſhop Uſher, who alſo obſerves, that this Creed is delivered by ſeveral antient Authors with ſome Variety of Expreſſion. For in ſome Authors, which uſe this Creed, Life Everlaſting is added after the Reſurrection of the Fleſh. As in the Homilies of Petrus Chryſologus [g] Biſhop of Ravenna, where he expounds this Creed. And in the Author of the Book De Symbolo ad Catechumenos, in the Ninth Tome of St. Auſtin's Works. And in the Creed which Marcellus Biſhop of Ancyra preſented to Pope Julius, which is recorded in Epiphanius [h]. But others conclude this Creed with the Reſurrection of the Fleſh, and make no expreſs mention of Life Everlaſting; not that they ſuppoſed it to be no Article of Faith, but becauſe it was included in the other Article of the Reſurrection, as they rightly expound it. St. Jerom ſays plainly [i], That the Creed was concluded with the Reſurrection of the Fleſh. And Maximus Taurinenſis [k], who expounds every Article of it diſtinctly, ſays the ſame. And St. Auſtin alſo [l] concludes the Creed with the Reſurrection of the Fleſh, but then he includes Eternal Life in the Expoſition of it. For, ſays he, when the Reſurrection of the Body is effected, we ſhall be freed from the Conditions of Time, and enjoy Eternal Life with Ineffable Charity and Stability without Corruption. And ſo the Author of the Sermons De Tempore [m] under his Name: The Reſurrection of the Fleſh is the End of all, but it is an End without End. For there is no Death after that. Therefore they made it the Concluſion of the Creed, becauſe it was the Concluſion of all Things in this World.

SECT. XIII. The Creed of Aquileia.

AND thus it was in the Creed of the Church of Aquileia, which differed in other Points both from the Roman and Oriental Creeds. For Ruffinus, who wrote an Expoſition upon it, concludes it with the Article of the Reſurrection, and neither mentions nor expounds the Article of Eternal Life, but only tacitly, as it is implied in the Reſurrection. In other Articles ſome Additions were made to this Creed, which were not in the Roman: For here the Deſcent into Hell is particularly mentioned; and not only the Reſurrection of the Fleſh in general, but the Reſurrection of this Fleſh in particular; and in the firſt Article, after the Word Almighty, were added, Impaſſible and Inviſible, as peculiar Appellations of God the Father. For it was thus conceived: "I believe in God the "Father Almighty, Inviſible and Impaſſible [n]: "And in Jeſus Chriſt his only Son our Lord, "who was born by the Holy Ghoſt of the Virgin Mary, was crucified under Pontius Pilate, "and buried; he deſcended into Hell, and the "third Day roſe again from the Dead, and aſcended into Heaven, and ſitteth on the Right "Hand of the Father, whence He ſhall come to "Judge the Quick and the Dead. And in the "Holy Ghoſt, the Holy Catholick Church, the "Remiſſion of Sins, and the Reſurrection of this "Fleſh."

The Reaſon of adding the Words, Inviſible and Impaſſible, to this Creed, which were not in the Roman, was to obviate the Sabellian or Patripaſſian Hereſy, which aſſerted, That God the Father was born of the Virgin, and ſo made Viſible and Paſſible in the Fleſh. In Oppoſition to which Impiety, Ruffinus [o] ſays, their Forefathers ſeem to have added thoſe Words, profeſſing the Father to be Inviſible and Impaſſible, that is, That He never was Incarnate, as the Son only was, and not the Father. The Deſcent into Hell is alſo almoſt peculiar to this Creed: For excepting this and the Creed of the Council of Sirmium or Ariminum mentioned by Socrates [p], this Article was not expreſly mentioned in any other Creed of this Age; though Ruffinus thinks it was always implied in the word Buried, which he reckons of the ſame Importance. When it firſt came into the Roman Creed, the Reader may find a particular Account in Biſhop Pearſon, who ſpeaks of it as done about the Year Six Hundred.

SECT XIV. The Nicene Creed, as firſt publiſhed by the Council of Nice.

I have hitherto given an Account of all ſuch Creeds as might be reckoned of Uſe in the Church before the Time of the Nicene Council. I ſhall now give the like Account of the firſt forming of the Nicene Creed, and how it was afterward compleated and put into a new Form by the Council of Conſtantinople. The Creed as firſt publiſhed by the Council of Nice, was in theſe Words: "We believe in One God Almighty "[q], Maker of all Things, Viſible and Inviſible: "And in one Lord Jeſus Chriſt, the Son of God, "begotten of the Father, the only-begotten, that "is, of the Subſtance of the Father, God of God, "Light of Light, very God of very God, be- "gotten not made, of one Subſtance with the "Father, by whom all Things both in Heaven "and Earth were made. Who for us Men and "our Salvation came down from Heaven, and "was Incarnate and made Man, and ſuffered, and "the third Day roſe again, and aſcended into "Heaven, and ſhall come again to judge the "Quick and the Dead. And in the Holy Ghoſt. "And thoſe who ſay, There was a Time when "the Son of God was not, or that he did not "exiſt before he was made, becauſe he was made "out of Nothing, or of another Subſtance or "Eſſence, or that he was created or mutable, "the Catholick and Apoſtolick Church Anathematizes them."

This Creed often occurs in the Writings of the antient Fathers and Councils in this very Form. As in Athanaſius Epiſt. ad Jovian. Tom. 1. p. 247. Hilar. de Synodis, p. 114. Leo, Ep. 95. ad Leonem Imperat. The Council of Rome under Julius, An. 337. The Council of Epheſus, Epiſt. ad Neſtor. The Council of Chalcedon, Act. 2. The Council of Hippo, the 6th Council of Carthage, the Preface to the African Code, the 3d Council of Bracara, the 3d and 13th of Toledo, the 5th General Council of Conſtantinople, Act 17. and many others.

Now ſome Learned Perſons have been of Opinion, That the ancient Creeds before the Council of Nice, had none of the Articles which follow after the Holy Ghoſt, but all ended as that does, with thoſe Words, And in the Holy Ghoſt. This was the Opinion of Voſſius and Eraſmus; and Biſhop Uſher ſays, he was once inclined to think ſo himſelf, but upon better Conſideration, he profeſſes [r] he found it neceſſary to alter his Judgment. For it plainly appears from moſt of the Forms before recited, That ſeveral of the Articles which follow after the Holy Ghoſt, were always a Part of the Creed: And the Reaſon why the Council of Nice repeated them not, was only becauſe there was then no Diſpute about them, and they only rehearſed ſo much of the former Creeds as there was then Occaſion for, to oppoſe the Hereſy of the Arians, leaving the reſt to be ſupplied from the former Creeds then generally receiv'd in the Church. This is evident both from the Creeds uſed by the Arians, and thoſe that were uſed by the Church, before the Council of Conſtantinople had ſettled and new-modelled the Form of the Nicene Creed that was afterwards generally received in the Church. Thus in the Creed of the Separating Biſhops in the Council of Sardica related by St. Hilary [s] and others, after the Article of the Holy Ghoſt, there follows, We believe in the Holy Church, and in Remiſſion of Sins, and Eternal Life. Or, as it is more perfectly in his Fragments [t], The Holy Church, the Remiſſion of Sins, the Reſurrection of the Fleſh, and Eternal Life. So again, the Euſebians in their firſt Creed, which they publiſhed in the Council of Antioch, mentioned both by Athanaſius and Socrates [u], after the Article of the Holy Ghoſt, add, We believe the Reſurrection of the Fleſh, and Eternal Life. Now it were abſurd to think the Arians ſhould retain theſe Articles in their Creeds, and in the mean time the Church reject or neglect them. Therefore it is plain the Nicene Creed was only one Part of the ancient Creed, that was uſed at full length in Baptiſm, though not here ſo recited. And what has been obſerved before out of Cyril's Catechiſms, is a manifeſt Proof of it.

SECT. XV. The Creeds of Epiphanius.

THIS is farther evident from the two Creeds, a ſhorter and a longer, recited in Epiphanius, who wrote his Anchorate ſome Years before the Council of Conſtantinople. The ſhorter Creed, which he ſays every Catechumen repeated at his Baptiſm from the Time of the Council of Nice to the tenth Year of Valentinian and Valens, An. 373, was in theſe Words: "We believe [x] in one God the "Father Almighty, Maker of Heaven and Earth, "and of all things Viſible and Inviſible. And in "One Lord Jeſus Chriſt, the only-begotten Son "of God, begotten of the Father before all A- "ges, that is, of the Subſtance of his Father, "Light of Light, very God of very God, be- "gotten not made, of one Subſtance with the "Father by whom all Things were made which "are in Heaven and in Earth. Who for us "Men and our Salvation came down from Heaven "and was incarnate of the Holy Ghoſt and the "Virgin Mary, and was made Man, and was "crucified for us under Pontius Pilate, and ſuf- "fered and was buried, and the third day roſe a- "gain according to the Scriptures, and aſcended "into Heaven, and ſitteth on the Right Hand of "the Father. And ſhall come again with Glory "to judge both the Quick and the Dead, of

And in " the Holy Ghoſt, the Lord and Giver of Life, " who proceedeth from the Father, who with " the Father and the Son together is worſhipped " and glorified, who ſpake by the Prophets. And " in one Catholick and Apoſtolick Church. We " confeſs one Baptiſm for the Remiſſion of Sins, " and we look for the Reſurrection of the Dead, " and the Life of the World to come. But they " who ſay, there was a Time when the Son of " God was not, or that he was not before he " was begotten, or that he was made out of No- " thing, or of any other Subſtance or Eſſence, " or that he is mutable or changeable, thoſe the " Catholick and Apoſtolick Church anathema- " tizes. "

This, ſays Epiphanius, is the Faith which was delivered by the Holy Apoſtles, and received by the Church in the Council of Nice, where Three Hundred and Eighteen Fathers were preſent. By which he does not mean that theſe Articles were delivered in this very Form either by the Apoſtles or the Council of Nice, but that the Church agreed upon this Form to be uſed at Baptiſm, in purſuance of the Doctrine delivered by the Apoſtles and the Nicene Fathers. And afterwards upon occaſion of the Apollinarians and other Hereticks, which infeſted the Church about the Tenth Year of Valentinian and Valens, and the 6th of Gratian, and the Ninetieth Year of the Diocletian Account, that is, An. 373, She enlarged her Creed with a more particular Explication of ſome certain Articles in Oppoſition to thoſe Hereſies. And then the Form appointed to be uſed in Baptiſm was in theſe Terms, as he informs us in the ſame Place.

" We believe in One God the Father Almigh- " ty, Maker of all Things, Viſible and Inviſible; " and in one Lord Jeſus Chriſt, the Son of God, " begotten of God the Father, the only-begot- " ten, that is, of the Subſtance of the Father, " God of God, Light of Light, very God of " very God, begotten not made, being of one " Subſtance with the Father, by whom all " Things were made, as well in Heaven as in " Earth, Viſible and Inviſible. Who for us Men " and for our Salvation came down from Heaven, " and was incarnate, that is, was born in perfect " manner of the Holy Virgin Mary, by the Ho- " ly Ghoſt, and was made Man, that is, took " upon him Perfect Man, Soul and Body and " Mind, and whatſoever is in Man, Sin only ex- " cepted; not by the Seed of Man, nor merely " by exiſting in Man, but by framing Fleſh to " Himſelf into one Holy Unity; not after the man- " ner as He inſpired the Prophets, and ſpake and " wrought in them, but by being perfectly made " Man. For the Word was made Fleſh, not by " undergoing any Change, or transforming the " Godhead into Manhood, but by making one " Perfect and Divine Union. For there is but " one Lord Jeſus Chriſt, not two, the ſame God, " the ſame Lord, the ſame King. Who ſuffer- " ed in the Fleſh, and roſe again, and aſcended " with his Body into Heaven, and ſitteth in Glo- " ry at the Right Hand of the Father; whence " he ſhall come with Glory in the ſame Body to " judge the Quick and Dead, of whoſe King- " dom there ſhall be no End. We believe in the " Holy Ghoſt, who ſpake in the Law, and " preached by the Prophets, and deſcended " at Jordan; who ſpake by the Apoſtles, and " dwells in the Saints: And thus we believe of him, " that he is the Holy Spirit, the Spirit of God, the " Perfect Spirit, the Comforter, uncreated, pro- " ceeding from the Father, receiving from the " Son, in whom we believe. We believe in one " Catholick and Apoſtolick Church, in one Bap- " tiſm of Repentance, in the Reſurrection of the " Dead, in the juſt Judgment of Body and Soul, " in the Kingdom of Heaven, and Life everlaſt- " ing. And thoſe that ſay, There was a Time " when the Son or the Holy Ghoſt was not, or " that they were made out of Nothing, or of a- " nother Subſtance or Eſſence; that ſay, the Son " of God, or the Holy Ghoſt are mutable or " changeable; thoſe the Catholick and Apoſto- " lick Church, the Mother of us and you, ana- " thematizes. And again, we anathematize thoſe " that confeſs not the Reſurrection of the Dead, " and all Hereſies which accord not to this Holy " Faith. "

Now if theſe Creeds were in Uſe in the Church at the Time which Epiphanius mentions, then it is certain the Nicene Creed was completed by the Church for the Uſe of her Catechumens long before the General Council of Conſtantinople: And what was done by that Council, was rather to contract the Form, than to augment or lengthen it, as any one may eaſily perceive, that will compare the Conſtantinopolitan Creed with either of thoſe that have now been recited out of Epiphanius.

SECT. XVI. The Nicene Creed, as completed by the Council of Conſtantinople, An. 381.

FOR the Creed that was drawn up in the Second General Council of Conſtantinople, is no other but the Nicene Creed, with the Addition of ſuch Articles as were always uſed by the Church in their Interrogatories of Baptiſm, though not inſerted in the particular Form uſed by the Nicene Council. I need not here repeat the Form, becauſe it is the ſame with that which is commonly call'd the Nicene Creed in our Liturgy. Only the Word Filioque, expreſſing the Proceſſion of the Holy Ghoſt from the Father and Son together, was added afterward by the Latin Church. For the firſt Copies of this Creed in the Council of Conſtantinople [y] and the Councils of Epheſus and Chalcedon [z] have it only, Proceeding from the Father, ἐκ τοῦ πατρὸς ἐκπορευόμενον, without any mention of the Son: But in the Latin Councils the Word Filioque is commonly added, as in the firſt Council of Bracara, An. 411; and the third Council of Toledo [a], An. 589, where the Conſtantinopolitan Creed is recited.

SECT. XVII. Of the Uſe of the Nicene Creed in the Ancient Service of the Church. And when firſt it was taken in to be a part of the Liturgy in the Communion-Office.

As to the Uſe of the Nicene Creed, it is certain, it was uſed in the Greek Church much after the ſame manner as the Apoſtolical and other Creeds were uſed in the Latin Church; firſt in the Office of Baptiſm; afterward it was taken in to be a Part of the Liturgy in the Communion-ſervice. Some learned Perſons, I know, are of Opinion, That the Nicene Creed was never uſed in the Adminiſtration of Baptiſm, but only the Apoſtolical Creed ſtill throughout the whole Church. But this is a very plain Miſtake. 1. Becauſe it does not appear, that the Apoſtolical Creed, which is the Roman Creed, was ever uſed in the Greek Church, even before the Nicene Creed was made: For they had ſeveral Creeds of their own, agreeing indeed with the Roman Creed in Subſtance, but differing from it in Words and Expreſſion; and thoſe Creeds were uſed by the Greek or Eaſtern Church in the Adminiſtration of Baptiſm. 2. When the Nicene Creed was formed, it is very evident, that very Form was uſed by many Churches in the Eaſt, as a Creed of Baptiſm. For the Fathers of the Council of Conſtantinople under Mennas, An. 536, do frequently call it the Creed in which both they themſelves were baptized [b], and alſo baptized others. And ſo it is ſaid in the Synodical Epiſtles of the Councils of Tyre and Jeruſalem, which are related [c] in the Acts of the ſame Council. As alſo in the Acts of the General Councils of Epheſus [d] and Chalcedon [e], in the former of which an Order was made, That Catechumens ſhould be taught the Nicene Creed, and no other. The like may be obſerved in the Edict of the Emperor Baſiliſcus mentioned by Evagrius [f], who ſpeaking of the Nicene Creed, calls it the Creed in which both he and all his Anceſtors were baptized. And it is remarked by Epiphanius [g], of the two Creeds which he recites, that they were the Creeds which every Catechumen repeated at his Baptiſm; which were nothing but the Nicene Creed, with the Addition of ſuch Articles as the Church ſupplied to make it a complete Summary of the Faith. So that nothing can be more evident, than that the Nicene Creed was the Creed they generally made uſe of in all the Eaſtern Churches for the Inſtruction of Catechumens at their Baptiſm.

But as yet it was not made a Part of the common Liturgy of the Church, to be repeated daily in Divine Service. St. Ambroſe [h] indeed ſpeaks of it as uſed in private Devotion, and gives Directions to the holy Virgins ſo to uſe it in their Morning Retirements, and upon other proper Occaſions. And Habertus [i] thinks it was alſo required of Biſhops at their Ordination; which is not improbable, becauſe they were obliged to make a Profeſſion of their Faith. But all this did not yet make it a Part of the daily Liturgy of the Church. For it is agreed among learned Men, both of the Romiſh and Proteſtant Communion, that the Creed was not uſed to be repeated in the daily Service till about the middle of the fifth Century in the Greek Church, and not till ſome time after in the Latin Church. So Valeſius [k], Cardinal Bona [l], Schelſtrate [m], Pagi [n], Chriſtianus Lupus [o], Hamond L'Eſtrange [p], and Voſſius [q]. Theodorus Lector [r] obſerves, that Peter Fullo, who was Biſhop of Antioch about the Year 471, was the firſt that ordered the Creed to be repeated in the Church ἀναβάσῃ σωμάξῃ, in every Church-Aſſembly. And the ſame Author reports [s], that Timotheus Biſhop of Conſtantinople, An. 511, was the firſt that brought in this Cuſtom into that Church; which he did in Hatred to his Predeceſſor Macedonius, and with an Intent to repreſent him as diſaffected to the Nicene Creed, which before that time was uſed to be rehearſed in the Church only once a Year, on the Paraſceue, or great day of Preparation before the Paſſover, now called Maundy-Thurſday, when the Biſhop was wont to catechize ſuch as were to be baptized at Eaſter. From the Oriental Churches the Cuſtom was brought into the Weſt, firſt in Spain and Gallicia, at the Petition of King Recaredus, by the Order of the third Council [t] of Toledo about the Year 589, when thoſe Churches were newly recovered from the Inundation of the Arian Hereſy, this Practice was then thought a proper Antidote to preſerve them from relapſing into their antient Error. Lupus and Pagi ſay, it was not brought into the French Churches till the time of Charles the Great, and then Pope Leo the 3d adviſed them to lay it aſide again, becauſe it was not yet the Cuſtom of the Roman Church. They concluded yet farther, that in the time of Pope John the 8th, An. 870, it was not yet the Practice of the Roman Church. But at laſt in the Days of Benedict the 8th, An. 1014, as it is collected from Berno Augienſis, the Cuſtom was admitted into the Roman Church; for this Reaſon, to give it in the Words of Lupus, Since the Roman Church could not bring over the French and Spaniſh Churches to her own Way, ſhe reſolves at laſt to comply with their Cuſtom, that there might be no Diſagreement among them: And ſo the Nicene Creed came to be univerſally read throughout the whole Church.

SECT. XVIII. Of the Athanasian Creed.

THERE is but one Creed more, which I need to ſtand to give any Account of, and that is the Creed which is commonly received under the Name of the Athanaſian Creed. Baronius [u] is of Opinion, that it was compoſed by Athanaſius when he was at Rome, and offered to Pope Julius as a Confeſſion of his Faith. Which Circumſtance is not at all likely; for Julius never queſtioned the Faith of Athanaſius. However, a great many learned Men have ſo far embraced the Opinion of Baronius, as to believe this Creed to be of Athanaſius's compoſing; as Cardinal Bona [x] and Petavius [y], and Bellarmin [z], and Rivet [a], with many others of both Communions. Scultetus leaves the Matter in doubt. But the beſt and lateſt Criticks, who have examined the Thing moſt exactly, make no queſtion but that it is to be aſcribed to a Latin Author, Vigilius Tapſenſis, an African Biſhop, who lived in the latter End of the fifth Century, in the time of the Vandalick Arian Perſecution. The learned Voſſius [b] and Queſnel [c] have written particular Diſſertations upon this Subject. Their Arguments are, 1. Becauſe this Creed is wanting in almoſt all the Manuſcripts of Athanaſius's Works. 2. Becauſe the Style and Contexture of it does not beſpeak a Greek, but a Latin Author. 3. Becauſe neither Cyril of Alexandria, nor the Council of Epheſus, nor Pope Leo, nor the Council of Chalcedon, have ever ſo much as mentioned it in all that they ſay againſt the Neſtorian or Eutychian Hereſies. 4. Becauſe this Vigilius Tapſenſis is known to have publiſhed ſeveral others of his Writings under the borrowed Name of Athanaſius, with which this Creed is commonly joyned. Theſe Reaſons have perſuaded ſuch Men as Biſhop Pearſon [d], Archbiſhop Uſher [e], Hamond L'Eſtrange [f], Dr. Cave [g], Schelſtrate [h], Pagi [i] and Du Pin, Criticks of the beſt Rank, to come in to this Opinion, that this Creed was not compoſed by Athanaſius, but by a later and a Latin Writer. Dr. Cave thinks, the firſt that mentions it under the Name of Athanaſius, is Theodulphus Aurelianenſis, who lived about the Year 794, in the Reign of Charles the Great: But in this he is a little miſtaken; for the Council of Autun, which was held above an hundred Years before, An. 670, not only mentioned it under that Name, but ordered every Presbyter, Deacon, Subdeacon, &c. to read it together with the Apoſtles Creed [k], or be liable to the Biſhop's Cenſure for his Omiſſion: Which implies, that it was then eſteemed the genuine Work of Athanaſius, and as ſuch had for ſome time been received in the Church. But whoever was the Author of it, there never was any Queſtion made of its Orthodoxy, except by the Samoſatenians and Arians in theſe latter Ages of the Church. Only as Bp. Uſher and others have obſerved, the Modern Greeks now uſe it with ſome Additions and Alterations. For whereas it is ſaid in the Latin Copies, That the Holy Ghoſt proceedeth from the Father and the Son; the Greeks now read it, from the Father, or the Father only; as Paræus [l] has remarked in his Expoſition of this Creed. And in the Greek Copy lately brought out of the Eaſt, and publiſhed by Biſhop Uſher, there is a long Interpolation by way of Addition, and Explication of thoſe Words, He was Man of the Subſtance of his Mother, Perfect God and Perfect Man, of a Reaſonable Soul and Humane Fleſh ſubſiſting. With ſome other Additions of leſſer note, which the Curious Reader may find marked out in the fore-mentioned Tract [m] of that learned Author.

To all the Creeds that have been related in this Chapter, I think it not improper to add the ſhort Account which Euſebius gives of the firſt Preaching of St. Thaddæus to King Agbarus and the People of Edeſſa, which I had from the Information of my Learned and Judicious Friend Mr. Lowth, to whoſe uſeful Converſation I owe many other curious Remarks and Obſervations, that lye ſcattered throughout the Antiquities of the Church. This is not indeed properly a Creed, but a Summary of his firſt Sermon, or the Heads of his firſt Catechetical Inſtitution to the People. "Concerning the coming of Jeſus into the World, after what Manner it was; and concerning his Miſſion, for what Reaſon he was ſent by the Father; concerning his Power, and the Myſteries which he ſpake in the World, and by what Power he did theſe; then of his new way of Preaching; of his Meanneſs and abject Eſtate, and the Humility of his outward Appearance as a Man; after what manner he humbled himſelf, and ſubmitted to Death, and made a diminutive [n] Appearance of his Divine Nature; What things he ſuffered of the Jews, and how he was crucified, and deſcended into Hell, and brake down the Partition that had been kept up in former Ages; how He aroſe from the Dead, and raiſed with Himſelf thoſe that ſlept in preceding Generations; how he deſcended [from Heaven] alone, but aſcended with a mighty Company to his Father; How he ſits at the Right Hand of God the Father, and ſhall come again with Glory and Power, to judge both the Quick and the Dead." are are two Things very remarkable in this antient Account of the first Principles of Christian Doctrine, viz. The Divinity of our Saviour, and the Descent into Hell; both which are here expressed in Terms, for which Reason I thought it might deserve a Place among the Creeds of the Church. Eusebius says, He had the Account in the Syriack Tongue, as it was preserved in the Archives of the Church of Edessa, signed in the Year 340, which, [according to the Computation of Time then used by the Syrians of Edessa, reckoning from the first Year that Seleucus began to reign in Asia] falls in with the same Year that Christ suffered and arose from the Dead, as Valesius, and Pagi [o] after him have rightly computed in their Observations upon this Passage of Eusebius.

CHAP. V.

Of the Original, Nature, and Reasons of the antient Discipline, in concealing the Sacred Mysteries of the CHURCH from the Catechumens.

SECT. I. The Errors and Pretences of the Romanists upon this Point.

THAT which makes this Enquiry a little more necessary, is the several vain Pretences of the Romanists concerning the Original and Reasons of this Discipline. Bellarmin and others urge it as a mighty Argument for Transubstantiation in particular, as if the concealing the Mystery of the Eucharist from the Catechumens was an Indication of the Belief of the Church concerning the Real Presence of Christ's Body and Blood, which they were so studiously careful to hide from the Knowledge of the Catechumens. But this is abundantly refuted by a more accurate Observation of Albaspinæus, a Learned Bishop of the same Communion, who in the Book of the Antient Polity of the Church [a] relating to the Eucharist, as I find him cited by others [b], rejects this as an incompetent Proof of the Romish Doctrine of the Real Presence. For he rightly observes, That the Ancients concealed not only the Mystery of the Eucharist, but also the Sacrament of Baptism from the Catechumens; yea, and almost all other their sacred Rites and Ceremonies, which in a large Sense are called Sacraments, as the Oyl of Chrism or Confirmation, and the Ordination of Priests, which were as studiously concealed from the Knowledge or Inspection of the Uninitiated, as the Elements of the Holy Eucharist were. So that the bare concealing that Mystery from the Catechumens could no more be an Argument of Transubstantiation in the Bread and Wine in the Eucharist, than it was in the Waters of Baptism, or any other Ceremony where the same Silence and Caution was used.

The Learned Schelstrate with a subtle Invention has made a more general Use of this antient Practice, to palliate and excuse all the novel Doctrines and Practices of his own Church. He wrote a Book which he entitled Disciplina Arcani, a Book highly magnified by Pagi and others of his own Communion [c], as stopping the Mouths of the Protestants, when they ask the Romanists, Why no Footsteps of their Modern Doctrines and Practices appear in the earliest Writers of the Church; The Answer is ready upon all Occasions, from this Disciplina Arcani, That it was because these Doctrines and Practices were kept secret, and only handed down by Tradition, not committed to Writing, lest they should come to the Knowledge of the Uninitiated Jews and Gentiles, and the Catechumens of the Church. This is the Reason, he tells us, why there is no Account of the Seven Sacraments, nor of the Worship of Saints or Images in the first Writers of the Church. The Things were really believed and practised from the Days of the Apostles, as he will have it, but kept secret as the hidden Mysteries of Religion, which were not to be divulged to any but such as were initiated and prepared to know them.

This is an Artifice that would justify as many Errors and Vanities as any Church could be guilty of: It is but working a little with this admirable Instrument and Tool, called Disciplina Arcani, and then all the seeming Contradictions between the antient Doctrines and Practices of the Church Universal, and the novel Corruptions of the Modern Church of Rome will presently vanish and disappear. So that we need not wonder, why Men, whose Interest it serves so much, should magnify this as a noble Invention; when yet in Truth it is only a Veil and a Mist cast before the Reader's Eyes, which may be easily dispelled by giving a true Account of that antient Piece of Discipline and Practice, first in its Original, and then in the Nature, Use, and Reasons of it.

SECT. II. This Discipline not strictly observed in the very first Ages of the Church.

As to its Original, the Learned Albaspinæus has rightly observed, That in the Apostolical Age, and some time after, they were not so very strict in this Discipline of Concealing their Sacred Mysteries from the Knowledge of the Catechumens. For he thus argues againſt the Antiquity of the Book called The Apoſtolical Conſtitutions: The laſt Words, ſays he [d], which forbid the Publication of thoſe eight Books, do plainly ſhew, that they were not written in the firſt Age; for the Chriſtians of the firſt Age did never make any ſcruple of publiſhing their Myſteries, as appears from the Writings of Juſtin Martyr. Mr. Aubertine obſerves [e] the ſame out of Athenagoras and Tatian. And Daille [f] joyns in Opinion with Albaſpinæus, and cites his Authority with Approbation. And Baſnage is [g] ſo far from thinking, that the Apoſtles concealed their Myſteries from the Catechumens, that he rather ſuppoſes they adminiſtred the Sacraments in their Preſence. Upon which Suppoſition, the whole Fabrick which Schelſtrate builds upon the Diſciplina Arcani, is ruined at once. For then it is certain, the Apoſtles had no ſuch Fear or Caution upon them, leſt the Catechumens ſhould come to the Knowledge of the Chriſtian Rites or Doctrines, as is pretended. And indeed any One that looks into the Writings of the Apoſtles may perceive with half an Eye that they were far enough from concealing their Opinion about the Worſhip of Angels, Saints, and Images: For they expreſsly write againſt it. And when they ſpeak of the Myſteries of Baptiſm and the Euchariſt, they do it with the greateſt Freedom, without any Fear or Apprehenſion of giving Offence to the Catechumens.

SECT. III. But introduced about the Time of Tertullian, for other Reaſons than what the Romaniſts pretend.

NAY, and when this Diſcipline was firſt introduced into the Chriſtian Church, it is very evident, it was done for different Reaſons than thoſe which the Romaniſts pretend. The firſt Beginning of it ſeems to have been about the Time of Tertullian; for he is the firſt Writer that makes any mention of it. He ſays [h], There was a Secrecy and Silence obſerved in all Myſteries. And he blames the Hereticks of his own Times for not regarding ſomething of this Diſcipline. They made no Diſtinction, he ſays [i], between Believers and Catechumens, they all met together, they all heard together, they all prayed together. And if Heathens chanced to come in upon them, they gave that which was Holy to Dogs, and caſt their Pearls, ſuch as they were, before Swine. Here it is plain, the Church now made ſeveral Diſtinctions between Catechumens and Believers, which Hereticks did not. The Place of the Catechumens was now in a ſeparate Part of the Church; they heard Sermons, but not all that Believers were allowed to hear; they had Prayers for themſelves, but were not admitted to hear the Prayers of the Faithful, which were peculiar to the Celebration of the Euchariſt, from which Catechumens were excluded. But all this was, and might be done, without favouring in the leaſt the vain Pretences of the modern Arcaniſts: For in all this there was no Deſign to conceal ſuch Myſteries as the Worſhip of Saints, and Angels, and Images, from the Knowledge of the Catechumens; but on the contrary Tertullian ſpeaks openly of theſe kinds of Worſhip, and with Indignation condemns them as ſuperſtitious Practices, belonging only to Heathens or Hereticks, and not to the Myſteries of the Church.

SECT. IV. This proved from a particular Account of the Things which they concealed from the Catechumens. Which were, 1. The Manner of Adminiſtring Baptiſm.

AND in the following Ages, no Writer that mentions this Diſcipline, among all thoſe that give us a more particular Account of what Things were concealed from the Knowledge or Inſpection of the Catechumens, ever ſo much as intimates, that the Worſhip of Saints and Images was in the number of the Myſteries of the Church which they concealed from them. But the Myſteries which they were ſo careful in ſome meaſure to hide from them, were, 1. The Manner of adminiſtring Baptiſm. 2. The Unction of Chriſm or Confirmation. 3. The Ordination of Prieſts. 4. The manner of celebrating the Euchariſt. 5. The Liturgy or Divine Service of the Church. 6. And for ſome time the Myſtery of the Trinity, the Creed and the Lord's Prayer, 'till they became greater Proficients, and were ready for Baptiſm. In the firſt Place, that they were careful to conceal from them the manner of adminiſtring Baptiſm, appears from this, that the Catechumens were never ſo much as ſuffered to enter [k], or look into the Baptiſtery, or Place where Baptiſm was adminiſtred, according to the Order of the firſt Council of Orange. St. Baſil therefore [l] ſays, Baptiſm, the Euchariſt, and the Oyl of Chriſm, were Things that the Uninitiated were not allowed to look upon. And St. Auſtin [m] putting the Queſtion, What Things were kept ſecret, and not made publick in the Church? anſwers, The Sacrament of Baptiſm, and the Sacrament of the Euchariſt. For even Pagans may ſee our good Works, but the Sacraments are kept hidden from them. And as they did not admit Catechumens to ſee Baptiſm adminiſtred, ſo neither did they ordinarily diſ-

courſe of it before them in plain Terms, but in a myſtical Way, or elſe wholly excluded them from ſuch Diſcourſes, as incompetent Hearers. We do not ſpeak openly, ſays St. Cyril [n], of the Sacraments before the Catechumens, but deliver many Things covertly, that the Faithful who know them, may underſtand us, and they who know them not, may receive no Harm. So Theodoret [o], We diſcourſe of Myſteries obſcurely, becauſe of the Unbaptized; but when they are gone, we ſpeak plainly before the Initiated. In like manner Nazianzen [p] ſpeaking of Baptiſm, You have heard, ſays he, ſo much of the Myſtery as we are allowed to ſpeak publickly in the Ears of all, and the reſt you ſhall hear privately, which you muſt retain ſecret within yourſelf, and keep under the Seal of Baptiſm. A great many other Paſſages may be read in Chryſoſtom [q], Theodoret [r], Cyril of Alexandria [s], the Author under the Name of Dionyſius the Areopagite [t], and the Apoſtolical Canons [u], with many others to the ſame Purpoſe. From all which we learn, that, though the Ancients acquainted the Catechumens with the Doctrine of Baptiſm ſo far as to make them underſtand the Spiritual Nature and Deſign of it, yet they never admitted 'em to the Sight of the outward Ceremony, nor ſo much as to hear any plain Diſcourſe about the Manner of its Adminiſtration, 'till they were fitted and prepared for the actual Reception of it.

SECT. V. Secondly, The manner of adminiſtring the Holy Unction or Confirmation.

AND they obſerved the ſame Diſcipline in reference to the Holy Unction of Chriſm, which the Latins call Impoſition of Hands or Confirmation. St. Baſil [x] ſpeaking of the Oyl which was uſed to be conſecrated, and uſed in this Ceremony, ſays, It was one of thoſe Things which the Uninitiated were not allowed to look upon. And Pope Innocent I, writing to another Biſhop about Confirmation, and the Form of Words uſed in the Adminiſtration of it, ſays, He could [y] not repeat the Words, leſt he ſhould ſeem to diſcloſe the Myſtery, rather than anſwer the Queſtion propoſed.

SECT. VI. Thirdly, The Ordination of Prieſts.

A third Thing which they concealed from the Catechumens, was the Ordination of Prieſts. The Council of Laodicea [z] has a Canon to this Purpoſe, That Ordinations ſhould not be performed in the Preſence of the Hearers, that is, the Catechumens. And Chryſoſtom, ſpeaking of this Office, and the ſolemn Prayers uſed at the Conſecration, delivers himſelf in an obſcure and covert way, becauſe of the Catechumens. He that ordains, ſays he, requires the Prayers of the Church [a], and they then joyn their Suffrage, and eccho forth thoſe Words which the Initiated know. For we may not ſpeak them openly before the Uninitiated Catechumens.

SECT. VII. Fourthly, the Liturgy or Publick Prayers of the Church, ſuch as the Prayers for the Energumens, Penitents, and the Faithful.

A fourth Thing which they concealed from the Catechumens, was the Publick Liturgy or ſolemn Prayers of the Church. For one Rank of the Catechumens, the Audientes or Hearers, were only permitted to ſtay and hear the Sermon, but not any Prayers of the Church. Another Sort, called Kneelers or Proſtrators, had the Prayers of the Church particularly for themſelves, but no others. And the Competentes ſtaid only to hear the Prayers offered up for themſelves and the Energumens, and then were diſmiſſed. They might not ſtay to hear ſo much as the Prayers for the Penitents, much leſs the Prayers for the Church Militant, or any others preceding the Communion. But before all theſe, the uſual Word of Command was given by the Deacons, or ſacred Heralds of the Church, Ne quis Audientium, or, Ite, Miſſa eſt, Catechumens depart. From whence it is eaſy to collect farther, That the ſolemn Office of the Abſolution of Penitents was never performed in the Preſence of the Catechumens. For the time of Abſolution was not till all others were diſmiſſed, except the Penitents themſelves who were to be abſolved, which was immediately before their going to the Altar to begin the Communion-Service. As ſeems to be clear from thoſe Words of Optatus, where he ſpeaks of it as the common Cuſtom both in the Church and among the Donatiſts [b], to give Impoſition of Hands for Abſolution immediately before their going to ſay the Lord's Prayer at the Altar. All theſe Things therefore were kept ſecret from the Catechumens: For they were never ſuffered to be Hearers or Spectators of any Part of them.

SECT. VIII. Fifthly, The Manner of Celebrating the Euchariſt.

BUT as the Euchariſt was the higheſt Myſtery in the Chriſtian Service, ſo they were moſt careful to conceal the Manner of its Celebration from the Catechumens. And in this they made a Difference between one Sort of Penitents and the Catechumens. For the higheſt Claſs of Penitents, called Conſiſtentes or Co-ſtanders, were allowed to be preſent at the Communion-Prayers, and ſee the Oblation offered and received by the Faithful, though they might not partake with them. But Catechumens of all Ranks were wholly excluded from all this. They were always diſmiſſed before theſe Prayers began, and the Doors of the Church were locked and guarded by proper Officers, to the intent that no Uninitiated Perſon ſhould indiſcreetly ruſh in upon them. We ſhut the Doors, ſays Chryſoſtom [c], when we celebrate the Holy Myſteries, and drive away all Uninitiated Perſons. This was one of the Secrets of the Church, as we heard St. Auſtin before [d] ſpeak of it. One of the Things which a Catechumen might not look upon, according to St. Baſil [e]. Therefore the Author of the Apoſtolical Conſtitutions [f] makes it a Part of the Deacon's Office not only to command their Abſence, but alſo to keep the Doors, that none might come in, during the time of the Oblation. Epiphanius [g] and St. Jerom [h] bring it as a Charge againſt the Marcionites, that they deſpiſed this Diſcipline, and admitted Catechumens indiſcriminately with the Faithful to all their Myſteries. And Palladius [i] forms a like Charge againſt the Enemies of Chryſoſtom, That in the Tumult they raiſed againſt him, they gave Occaſion to the Uninitiated to break into the Church, and ſee thoſe Things which it was not lawful for them to ſet their Eyes upon. Nay, ſo ſtrict was the Church then in the Obſervation of this Diſcipline, that Athanaſius convicted the Meletians of falſe Witneſs againſt him, when they pretended to prove, by the Teſtimony of ſome Catechumens, that Macarius, one of his Presbyters, had overturned the Communion-table in the Time of the Oblation: He argued, That this could not be ſo; becauſe [k] if the Catechumens were preſent, there could then be no Oblation.

Nor did they only exclude Catechumens from the Sight of theſe Myſteries, but alſo from all Diſcourſes which treated plainly about them. They made a Diſtinction between Moral and Myſterious Subjects, and admitted the Catechumens to the one, but not to the other, as I have had Occaſion formerly to ſhew [l] from the Teſtimonies of Theodoret [m], St. Auſtin [n], and St. Ambroſe [o]. To which we may here add that of St. Cyril of Jeruſalem, You was once, ſays he, a Catechumen, and then we [p] did not diſcourſe of Myſteries to you: And now that you have attained by Experience to the height of thoſe Things which we teach, you will eaſily perceive that Catechumens are not worthy to be Hearers of ſuch things. And that of Gaudentius, Biſhop of Brixia, who in his Sermon [q] to the Neophytes, or Perſons newly baptized, tells them, He would now open to them thoſe Myſteries, which could not be explained in the Preſence of the Catechumens. Sometimes indeed they ſpake of the Euchariſt before the Catechumens in their popular Diſcourſes; but then they did it in ſuch obſcure and figurative Terms as were underſtood only by Communicants, and not by the Catechumens: According to that of St. Chryſoſtom [r], I would ſpeak plainly, but I dare not becauſe of the Unbaptized. For they make our Expoſitions to be more difficult, they compel us to ſpeak obſcurely, or elſe we muſt reveal what is not to be revealed unto them. Upon this account Epiphanius ſpeaking of the Words of Inſtitution before the Catechumens, would not ſay, This Bread is my Body, This Wine is my Blood; but, Hoc meum eſt hoc & hoc, This is my That and That [s], to let the Initiated know his Meaning, and not the Catechumens. And hence it was they ſo often uſed that Phraſe, ἴσασιν οἱ μεμυημένοι, Et nôrunt Fideles, The Initiated know what we ſay; which Phraſe Caſaubon [t] has obſerved to occur no leſs than Fifty times in the Writings of St. Chryſoſtom. Caſaubon makes another good Obſervation upon this Matter, which the learned Albertinus [u] takes from him, and ſtrenuouſly defends, That whereas there are three Things in the Euchariſt; 1. The Symbols or Sacred Elements of Bread and Wine; 2. The Things ſignified by them; and, 3. The Rites of Celebration; That which the Ancients laboured chiefly to conceal from the Catechumens, was not the Things ſignified, but only the Symbols or outward Signs, and the Rites and Manner of Celebration. For they made no Scruple to call the Euchariſt by the Name of Chriſt's Body and Blood before the Catechumens, at the ſame time that they would not call it Bread and Wine, or ſpeak particularly of the Form and Manner of adminiſtring it, as Albertinus proves out of Theodoret and many others. Which ſhews, that the Reaſon of concealing the Myſtery from the Catechumens was not the Belief of Tranſubſtantiation, as the Romaniſts pretend: For then they would have choſen rather to conceal the Names of Chriſt's Body and Blood, than the Names of the outward Symbols, and the myſtical Rites of Celebration, the latter of which they ſtudiouſly concealed, but not the former. He that would ſee more of this, may conſult the elaborate Diſcourſe of that moſt acute and learned Writer, where he anſwers all the Objections of Coffetellus againſt the preſent Aſſertion.

SECT. IX.

Sixthly, The Myſtery of the Trinity, the Creed and the Lord's Prayer from the firſt ſort of Catechumens.

THE laſt ſort of Things which they for ſome Time concealed from the more imperfect Catechumens, were the ſublimer Doctrines of Chriſtianity, ſuch as the Myſtery of the Trinity, and Hypoſtatick Union, together with the Creed it ſelf and the Lord's Prayer, which the Catechumens did not learn till immediately before their Baptiſm. For ſo Theodoret [x] tells us, That they did not teach this Prayer to the Uninitiated, but to the Baptized, or immediate Candidates of Baptiſm. For no one that was not baptized could preſume to ſay, Our Father which art in Heaven, not having yet received the Gift of Adoption. But he that was made Partaker of Baptiſm might call God his Father, as being adopted among the Sons of Grace. St. Chryſoſtom [y] ſpeaks after the ſame manner: This Prayer belongs only to the Faithful, as both the Rule of the Church and the Beginning of the Prayer itſelf teach. For an unbaptized Perſon cannot yet call God his Father. This Prayer was then peculiar to the Communion-Service, and never uſed in the Church, but only at the Altar, where none of the Catechumens could be preſent, but only the Faithful. Whence it was called, ἡ εὐχὴ πιστῶν, The Prayer of the Faithful. And one Petition in it was thought to refer more particularly to the Euchariſt, Give us this Day our daily Bread, ἄρτον ἐπιούσιον our ſuper-ſubſtantial or ſuper-celeſtial Bread, as many of the Ancients render it. For theſe Reaſons they never taught the Lord's Prayer to any of the Catechumens, but the higheſt Rank of them, the Competentes, a few Days before their Baptiſm. As we learn from thoſe Words of St. Auſtin [z], Now learn the Lord's Prayer, which ye muſt repeat eight Days hence, when ye are to be baptized. So they received it only on Saturday before Palm-Sunday, in order to repeat it on Saturday before Eaſter, which was the Day of their Baptiſm.

They obſerved the ſame Diſcipline in reference to the Creed, which they taught to the Catechumens at the ſame time only as they did the Lord's Prayer, a little before their Baptiſm. This they did not always commit to writing, but kept it, as St Jerom [a] words it, in Tables of the Heart, and delivered it by Word of Mouth, that it might not come to the Knowledge of the uninitiated and Unbelievers. Which is the Reaſon that Sozomen [b] gives, why he did not inſert the Words of the Nicene Creed into his Hiſtory, becauſe probably many uninitiated Perſons might read his Book, who ought not to read or hear the Creed. They were as careful not to communicate to new Beginners the profound Myſteries of the Trinity and Incarnation, till they had firſt prepared them by proper preceding Inſtructions for the Reception of them. Therefore, as St. Jerom obſerves [c], it was the Cuſtom of the Church to put off this Part of the Inſtruction of Catechumens to the laſt, and not acquaint them with theſe Doctrines till about forty Days before they were to be baptized, though the Catechetical Inſtruction had continued perhaps for two or three Years before.

This was the whole of that Diſcipline, we read ſo much of among the Ancients, of concealing the Sacred Myſteries from the Catechumens. Among all which we have never the leaſt Intimation given, that the Practice of Image-worſhip, or the Adoration of Saints and Angels, or the Doctrine of Seven Sacraments, were the Myſteries they intended to conceal from them. For in thoſe Days there were no ſuch Myſteries in the Chriſtian Church. And therefore the late Invention of Schelſtrate is a mere Fiction and Sophiſm, to cover the Nakedneſs of the preſent Roman Church. And the Pretence of Bona [d] concerning the Prohibition of Images in Churches, made by the Council of Eliberis, that it was only to conceal the Secrets of Religion from the Knowledge of the Heathen, is an abſurd Suppoſition, which neither Albaſpinæus nor Petavius could digeſt, as I have ſhewed more fully in another Place [e], where I ſpeak of the Ornaments of the antient Churches.

SECT. X. Reaſons for Concealing theſe Things from the Catechumens. 1ſt, That the Plainneſs and Simplicity of them might not be contemned.

As to theſe Things which they really concealed from the Catechumens, the true Reaſons were, Firſt, That the Plainneſs and Simplicity of the Chriſtian Rites might not be contemned by them, or give any occaſion of Scandal or Offence to them, before they were thoroughly inſtructed about the Nature of the Myſteries. For both Jews and Gentiles, out of whom Chriſtian Converts were made Catechumens, were apt to deride the Nakedneſs and Simplicity of the Chriſtian Religion, as void of thoſe pompous Ceremonies and Sacrifices, with which thoſe other Religions abounded. The Chriſtian Religion preſcribed but one waſhing in Water, and one Oblation of Bread and Wine, inſtead of that Multitude of bloody Sacrifices, which the other Religions commanded. Therefore leſt the Plainneſs of theſe few Ceremonies ſhould offend the prejudiced Minds of Catechumens, before they were well inſtructed about them, the Chriſtian Teachers uſually adorned theſe Myſteries with great and magnificent Titles, ſuch as would convey Noble Ideas to the Minds of Men concerning their Spiritual Effects, but concealing their other Names, leſt the Simplicity of the Things ſhould offend them. When they ſpake of the Euchariſt, they never mentioned Bread and Wine, but the Sacrifice of the Body and Blood of Chriſt; and ſtiled Baptiſm, Illumination and Life, the Sacrament of Faith and Remiſſion of Sins, ſaying little in the mean time of the outward Element of Water. This was one plain Reaſon, whey they denied Catechumens the Sight of their Sacraments, and always ſpake in Myſtical Terms before them. We ſhut the Doors, ſays Chryſoſtom [f], when we celebrate our Myſteries, and keep off all Uninitiated Perſons from them, not becauſe we acknowledge any Imperfection in the Things themſelves, but becauſe many are weakly affected towards them. And ſo St. Cyril [g] in the Place mentioned above, We ſpeak not openly of our Myſteries before the Catechumens, but ſay many Things myſtically and obſcurely, that they who know them may underſtand us, and they who know them not may receive no Harm. In like manner the Synod of Alexandria [h] charging the Meletians for publiſhing the Myſtery of the Euchariſt before the Catechumens, and what was worſe, before the Heathens, contrary to thoſe Rules of Scripture, It is good to conceal the Secrets of a King: And, Give not that which is Holy unto Dogs, neither caſt ye your Pearls before Swine; They add, That it is not lawful to bring Myſteries upon the open Stage before the Uninitiated, leſt the Heathen through their Ignorance ſhould deride them, or the Catechumens by their Curioſity ſhould be offended. Therefore there was an antient Rule in the Church, That if any Uninitiated Perſon had by any Miſtake been admitted to partake of the Euchariſt, he ſhould be immediately inſtructed and baptized, that he might not go forth a Contemner or Deſpiſer, as the Author of the Apoſtolical Conſtitutions [i] words it. And the Fourth Council of Toledo gives a like Reaſon [k] why ſuch Jews as had been baptized by Force, ſhould continue in the Chriſtian Profeſſion, leſt the Name of God ſhould be blaſphemed, and the Faith which they had received, ſhould be reputed vile and contemptible. Though they made a ſevere Decree againſt obliging any Jews to be baptized by Force or Compulſion for the future.

SECT. XI. Secondly, to conciliate a Reverence for them.

ANOTHER Reaſon aſſigned for this Diſcipline of Silence, was to conciliate a Reverence in the Minds of Men for the Myſteries which they kept ſo concealed from them. For as St. Baſil obſerves [l], the Veneration of Myſteries is preſerved by Silence. And as things that are trite and obvious are eaſily contemned; ſo thoſe that are uncommon and reſerved are naturally adapted to beget in Men an Eſteem and Veneration. And therefore he thinks, the Apoſtles and Fathers of the Church, who made Laws about theſe Matters, preſcribed Secrecy and Silence, to preſerve the Dignity of the Myſteries. St. Auſtin [m] gives the ſame Reaſon for the Practice, when he ſays, It was the Honour that was due to the Myſteries, which made him paſs them over in Silence, and not explain them.

SECT. XII. Thirdly, to make the Catechumens more deſirous to know them.

ST. Auſtin adds to this a third Reaſon, which is, that the Myſteries of Baptiſm and the Euchariſt were therefore chiefly concealed from the Catechumens to excite their Curioſity, and inflame their Zeal, and make them more earneſt and ſolicitous in haſtening to partake of them, that they might come to an experimental Knowledge of them. Though the Sacraments, ſays he, are not diſcloſed [n] to the Catechumens, it is not always becauſe they cannot bear them, but that they may ſo much the more ardently deſire them, by how much they are the more honourably hidden from them. And again, The Jews acknowledge not the Prieſthood [o] according to the Order of Melchiſedeck. I ſpeak to the Faithful, if the Catechumens underſtand it not, let them caſt away their Slowneſs and haſten to the Knowledge of it. They that do not yet eat of this (p) Banquet, let them haſten upon Invitation. The Feaſt of Eaſter is at hand. Give in your Name to Baptiſm. If the Feſtival does not excite you, let Curioſity draw you, that you may know that which is ſaid, He that eateth my Fleſh and drinketh my Blood dwelleth in me, and I in him.

Theſe were the Reaſons which engaged the Ancients to conceal their Myſteries from the Catechumens: Which, we plainly ſee, have no Relation to ſuch Doctrines as that of Tranſubſtantiation, or the number of Seven Sacraments, or ſuch Superſtitious Practices as the Worſhip of Images, or Saints and Angels, which are mere Novelties, and the Modern Inventions of the Romiſh Church.

I have now gone through all things relating to the Diſcipline of the Catechumens in their Preparation for Baptiſm. We are next to take a View of Baptiſm itſelf, and enquire into the Manner how the Church adminiſtred it, and what Rites and Cuſtoms were obſerved in the Celebration of it.

BOOK XI.

Of the Rites and Cuſtoms obſerved in the Adminiſtration of BAPTISM in the PRIMITIVE CHURCH.

CHAP. I.

Of the ſeveral Names and Appellations of Baptiſm in the Primitive Church.

SECT. I. The Names of Baptiſm moſt commonly taken from the Spiritual Effects of it.

THERE are a great many Queſtions relating to the Doctrine of Baptiſm, which I intend not to make any Part of the Subject of this Book, becauſe they may be found in any Didactical and Polemical Writers upon this Head, and eſpecially in Voſſius his elaborate Diſcourſe de Baptiſmo, where he accurately canvaſſes all Queſtions of this nature, and learnedly determines them from the Doctrine of the Ancients. Here the Reader may find a ſatisfactory Account of all Queſtions relating to the Myſtical Signification and Spiritual Effects of Baptiſm; ſuch as are, 1. Regeneration: 2. Adoption: 3. Reception into the Covenant of Grace. In which alſo is contained Remiſſion of Sins, Renovation of the Spirit, and Eternal Life, which are the noble Effects, conferred on all thoſe that rightly receive it. Here alſo he determines the Queſtions, how it comes to paſs that though Sins are forgiven in Baptiſm, yet Concupiſcence, the Fewel or Incentive of Sin, remains ſtill in the Regenerate? And whence it is, that after Baptiſm, we are ſtill afflicted with Diſeaſes, and that as well Infants as Adult Perſons? How it comes to paſs, that the Magiſtrate has Power to puniſh thoſe Sins which are committed before Baptiſm, even after they are purged away and forgiven in Baptiſm? With many other Queſtions of the like nature, which are not neceſſary to come into this Diſcourſe. I ſhall alſo omit the Queſtion about the indelible Character of Baptiſm, which is pretended to be impreſſed upon the Soul; and the Queſtions about the Adminiſtrator of Baptiſm, and Lay-Baptiſm, and Heretical Baptiſm, becauſe I have lately conſidered theſe diſtinctly and fully in a firſt and ſecond Part of the Scholaſtical Hiſtory of Lay-Baptiſm. What remains therefore to be conſidered in this Place, is only ſuch other Matters in the Practice of the antient Church relating to the Adminiſtration of Baptiſm, as have not yet been ſpoken to. And here, firſt of all, it will be proper to ſay ſomething of the antient Names of Baptiſm; ſome of which were taken from the internal and Spiritual Effects of it; others from the Nature and Subſtance of the Action; others from the Conditions required in the Receivers; others from the external Circumſtances and Rites obſerved in the Adminiſtration.

SECT. II. Hence Baptiſm called Indulgentia, Indulgence, or Abſolution.

FROM one of its noble Effects, it was ſometimes ſtiled Indulgentia, Indulgence, or Abſolution and Remiſſion of Sins. Thus, in the African Council under Cyprian [a], Privatianus à Suffetula terms it, the Divine Indulgence. And in the Roman Council mentioned by Cotelerius [b], it is ſaid, that at the Eaſter Feſtival, Remiſſion of Sins, meaning Baptiſm, may be adminiſtred by either Presbyter or Deacon, in the Preſence of the Biſhop in the Pariſh-Churches. But foraſmuch as Abſolution or Remiſſion of Sins may not always neceſſarily accompany Baptiſm, through ſome Default in the Adminiſtrator or the Receiver, though the Baptiſm be otherwiſe a true Baptiſm; therefore St. Auſtin, in diſputing with the Donatiſts, chuſes rather to call it [c] the Sacrament of Grace, and the Sacrament of Abſolution, rather than Grace or Abſolution itſelf; becauſe wicked Men may receive the Sacrament of Baptiſm, but they cannot receive the Grace of Baptiſm, which is Abſolution or Remiſſion of Sins; for God grants that to none but thoſe that turn to him with a ſincere Faith and true Repentance. Whenever therefore the Ancients call Baptiſm by the Name of Abſolution or Indulgence, they are to be underſtood with this Limitation, that it is ſo only to thoſe who are worthy Receivers of it. And hence we may obſerve, that the true antient proper Notion of an Abſolution or Indulgence, is God's pardoning Sin by the miniſterial Application of his Sacraments, which are the Seals of his Covenant, granting Remiſſion of Sins: Whence Baptiſm, entring Men into that Covenant of Grace, was dignified with the Name of the Sacrament of Abſolution and Indulgence.

SECT. III. And παλιγγενεσία, Regeneration, and χρῖσμα, the Unction.

ANOTHER noble Effect of Baptiſm, was Regeneration, or a new Birth from the Death of Sin to the Life of Righteouſneſs. For every Chriſtian was ſuppoſed to be born again with the Waters of Baptiſm, according that of Tertullian [d], Nos Piſciculi ſecundum ἰχθὺν noſtrum Jeſum Chriſtum in aqua naſcimur, We Fiſhes are born in Water, conformable to the Name of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, ἰχθύς; which, as I have obſerved [e] in another place, was and Acroſtick or Technical Name, made of the initial Letters of our Saviour's ſeveral Titles in Greek, Ἰησοῦς, Χριστὸς, Θεοῦ, υἱὸς, σωτὴρ, which put together, make up the Name ΙΧΘΥΣ, which ſignifies a Fiſh, and is alluded to not only by Tertullian, but by Proſper [f] and Optatus [g]. Hence Baptiſm had the Name of παλιγγενεσία ψυχῆς [h] in Cyril's Catechiſm, the Regeneration of the Soul; and ὕδωρ ζωῆς, the Water of Life, in Juſtin Martyr [i]; and Fons Divinus, in Caſſiodore [k], the divine Fountain, whence comes our Engliſh Name Font; with many other Titles of the ſame Importance. And becauſe this New Birth was wrought by the Power and Influence of the Spirit, therefore it was called the Spiritual Birth, whereby thoſe that were born carnally to the World before, were now born ſpiritually to God. And ſo, as Optatus words it [l], God was hereby made Father of Men, and the Holy Church their Mother. For till Men were baptized, they were not perfect Members of Chriſt's Body, the Church, nor properly adopted into God's Family, and conſequently had as yet no Right to call God their Father, or the Church their Mother. And, becauſe the Divine Operations of the Holy Spirit in ſanctifying Grace are ſometimes in Scripture called the Unction or Anointing of the Spirit, therefore Baptiſm had alſo the Name of Chriſm or Unction, from this noble Effect attending it. Gregory Nazianzen takes notice of this among many other Titles of Honour: We call it, ſays he, the Gift [m], and Grace, and Baptiſm, and Unction, and Illumination, and Garment of Immortality, and Laver of Regeneration, and Seal or Character, and whatever elſe is precious or honourable. And in explaining theſe Terms, he particularly notes, that it had the Name of Unction, becauſe it was a Sacred and a Royal thing, as thoſe things uſually were that were Anointed. Whence every Man was in ſome ſenſe made a King and a Prieſt to God by Chriſt in his Baptiſm, upon which account St. Jerom [n] ſtyles Baptiſm, Sacerdotium Laici, the Layman's Prieſthood, in contradiſtinction to the Clerical Prieſthood, which was only conferred by Ordination.

SECT. IV. And φωτισμὸς, Illumination.

ANOTHER Effect of Baptiſm was the enlightening Mens Underſtandings with divine Knowledge. Hence Baptiſm had the Name of φωτισμὸς, Illumination, as it frequently occurs in Chryſoſtom [o], Nazianzen [p], Dionyſius the Areopagite [q], the Council of Laodicea [r], and many others. The Reaſon of which Name ſeems to be partly from the preceding Inſtruction of the Catechumens in their Preparation for Baptiſm, according to that of Juſtin Martyr, This Laver [s] is called Illumination, becauſe the Minds of thoſe, who learn theſe things, are enlightened. Then again, becauſe it was the Entrance on an enlightned State, and the Introduction to divine Knowledge, which grew by degrees to greater Perfection: For Juſtin's Words may be underſtood of the Knowledge conſequent to Baptiſm. And ſo the Reaſon is given by Clemens Alexandrinus [t], and the Author under the Name of Dionyſius [u], becauſe it confers the firſt Light, and is the Introduction to all other divine illuminating Myſteries, therefore from the Effect, it was dignified with the Name of Illumination. Perhaps it might be ſo called in regard alſo that the baptized were now admitted to all the myſterious parts and recondite Knowledge of Religion, which by the Diſcipline of the Church were kept ſecret from them whilſt they were Catechumens. And perhaps ſome regard might be had to the plentiful Effuſion of the Spirit in the Gift of Tongues, Knowledge and Prophecy, which in the Apoſtolical Age was immediately conferred at Baptiſm, by the Impoſition of the Hands of the Apoſtles.

SECT. V. And Salus, Salvation.

ANOTHER Effect of Baptiſm was eternal Salvation, as it was the ordinary Means, not only of obtaining Remiſſion of Sins, but of bringing Men by the Grace and Blood of Chriſt to the Glory of the Kingdom of Heaven. Whence as St. Auſtin [x] obſerves, it was very common among the Punick or African Chriſtians to call Baptiſm by the Name of Salus, Salvation, as they did the Sacrament of the Body of Chriſt by the Name of Life, becauſe theſe two Sacraments were reputed neceſſary to the obtaining of Salvation or Eternal Life. And upon this account Gregory Nazianzen, introducing a Perſon pleading for Liberty to delay his Baptiſm, makes him ſpeak after this manner: I ſtay only for my Father, or Mother, or Brother, or Wife, or Children, or Friends, or ſome near Relations, and then I will be ſaved, τηνικαῦτα σωθήσομαι [y]; the Meaning of which muſt needs be, that then he would be baptized, in order to obtain Salvation. Such honourable Titles and Appellations did the Ancients give to this Sacrament of Baptiſm, taken from the noble Effects which it was ſuppoſed to confer on all thoſe who were worthy Partakers of it.

SECT. VI. From the Nature and Subſtance of it, it was called Myſterium, Sacramentum, and σφραγίς.

NEXT from the Nature and Subſtance of it, it had the Names of Myſterium, Sacramentum, and σφραγὶς. The two firſt of which are ſo common and ſo well known to every Reader, that I need not here ſpend Time to explain them. Only I ſhall Note, that the Terms Myſtery and Sacrament are ſometimes taken in a larger Senſe, to ſignify any ſacred Ceremony, or any part of Religion that had any thing of Spiritual or Myſtical Signification in it. Of which there will be a more proper Place to diſcourſe, when we come to treat of Confirmation. The Name σφραγὶς, and Signaculum, The Seal of the Lord, is a little more uncommon, as applied to Baptiſm, and therefore has occaſioned ſome Errors among learned Men, who often miſtake it either for the Sign of the Croſs, or the Conſignation and Unction that was uſed in Confirmation. Thus in that famous Diſcourſe of Clemens Alexandrinus, intitled, Quis Dives ſalvetur, Part of which is recorded in Euſebius [z], and the whole publiſhed by Combefis [a], it is ſaid, that the Biſhop, to whoſe Care St. John had committed a certain young Convert, firſt inſtructed or catechized him, and then gave him the perfect Phylactery or Preſervative againſt Sin, namely, the Seal of the Lord, τὴν σφραγῖδα τῦ κυρίυ. Now by the Seal of the Lord, Chriſtopherſon and Bellarmin, and others from him, underſtand Confirmation: Mr. Seller [b], and ſome others, will have it to be the Sign of the Croſs; but Valeſius [c] and Daillé [d], more truly expound it of Baptiſm, which was called, the Seal of the Lord, becauſe in the very nature of it there is contained a Covenant made between God and Man; and Baptiſm being the Seal of this Covenant, it was with the greateſt Propriety of Speech ſtyled, the Seal of the Lord. In this ſenſe the antient Author of the Acts of Paul and Thecla uſes the Name σφραγὶς for Baptiſm. Give me, ſays Thecla to St. Paul, the Seal of Chriſt [e], and no Temptation ſhall touch me. And Hermas Paſtor, in like manner, ſpeaking of ſome that were baptized and gone to Heaven, uſes the ſame Dialect: They that are now dead, were ſealed [f] with the Seal of the Son of God, and are entered into the Kingdom of God. For, before a Man receives the Name of the Son of God, he is conſigned over to Death; but when he receives that Seal, he is freed from Death, and conſigned over to Life. Now that Seal is Water, into which Men deſcend bound over to Death, but riſe out of it marked out or ſealed unto Life. This Seal therefore was preached unto them, and they made uſe of it, that they might enter into the Kingdom of God. In all this Paſſage there is no expreſs mention made of Baptiſm, but it is called the Seal and Name of Chriſt, becauſe it ſets the Mark and Name of Chriſtians on us, and diſtinguiſhes us from Jews and Gentiles, and ſhews that we belong to the Dominion and Poſſeſſion of Chriſt. Hence Tertullian frequently calls it Signaculum Fidei [g], the Signature of our Faith; and ſays, we are diſtinguiſhed from Jews by this Signature [h] in our Bodies, becauſe their Signature was Circumciſion, but ours Baptiſm. In like manner, Gregory Nazianzen accounting for the reaſon of this Name, ſays, it was called the Seal of the Lord, becauſe it was an Indication to whoſe Dominion [i] we belong, and becauſe it was the Conſignation of us to eternal Life. In which reſpect, Conſtantine at the hour of Death desiring the Benefit of Baptism from the Bishops that were about him, is said by Eusebius [k] to ask it in these Words: Now is the Time for me to enjoy the Seal of Immortality; now is the Time for me to obtain the Seal of Salvation. Whence it was also called the Seal of the Spirit, because every worthy Receiver was supposed, together with the outward Element, to receive the Earnest of the Spirit in Baptism: According to that of Chrysostom, as a Mark is set upon [l] Soldiers, so the Spirit is put upon true Believers. And as the Jews had Circumcision for their Character, so we have the Earnest of the Spirit. And this Distinction between the Internal and External Seal of Baptism was necessary to be made, because many Men received the External Seal of Baptism, or outward Form of it, who by their own Default could not receive the internal Seal of the Spirit. Thus the Author of the Apostolical Constitutions [m] observes, that even Simon Magus himself received the Seal of the Lord, meaning the outward Form of Baptism; but neither he nor any other Author ever said, that he received the internal Seal or Grace of the Holy Spirit. In like manner Optatus [n] tells the Donatists, that both they and the Catholicks were sealed with one and the same Seal, which he explains to be the outward Form of Baptism, in which they both agreed and were both alike baptized. But both Optatus and St. Austin and all other antient Writers are agreed, that Heretical and Schismatical Baptism, such as was that of the Donatists, could not confer the internal Seal, or sanctifying Graces of the Holy Spirit, because those were only conferred by the Ministry of the Holy Catholick Church, of which I have given a more ample Account in another Place [o]. So that in this respect it was always thought necessary to distinguish between the internal and external Seal of Baptism, because though they are commonly joyned together, as in all true Believers, yet they are sometimes separated, as in such hypocritical or unworthy Receivers, as Simon Magus, and others of the like Complexion.

ST. Austin commonly uses the Names, Character Regius, and Character Dominicus, the Royal Mark or Character, and the Character of the Lord. By which he does not mean any internal Quality, or spiritual Power, distinct from Baptism, imprinted on the Soul, as the modern Schoolmen now love to word it; but only the external Form of Baptism, which is common to all Receivers both good and bad, who are duly baptized in the Name of the Holy Trinity: They are so far signed by the Mark or Character of the Lord, as thereby to be distinguished from unbaptized Jews and Gentiles, who never made any formal Profession of Christianity, nor ever received so much as the external Character or Indication of it. And this Character is allowed by St. Austin to be so far indelible also, as that an Apostatizing Christian, though he turn Jew or Pagan in Profession, can never need a second Baptism, but only Repentance and Absolution, to reinstate him in all the Privileges of the Christian Church. Of which, because I have spoken largely in a former Book [p], I need say no more in this Place.

ANOTHER sort of Names given to Baptism, were taken from the Conditions required of all those that received it, which were the Profession of a true Faith and a sincere Repentance. Upon which account Baptism is sometimes called the Sacrament of Faith, and the Sacrament of Repentance. St. Austin uses this Name to explain how [q] Children may be said to have Faith, though they are not capable of making any formal Profession by themselves. As the Sacrament of the Body of Christ is in some sort the Body of Christ, and the Sacrament of the Blood of Christ is the Blood of Christ, so the Sacrament of Faith is Faith. And upon this account, when the Answer is made, that an Infant believes, who has not yet the Habit of Faith, the meaning is, that he has Faith because of the Sacrament of Faith, and that he turns to God because of the Sacrament of Conversion. Fulgentius uses the same Terms in speaking of the necessity of Baptism: Firmly believe, and doubt not [r], that excepting such as are baptized in their own Blood for the Name of Christ, no Man shall have eternal Life, who is not here first turned from his Sins by Repentance and Faith, and set at Liberty by the Sacrament of Faith and Repentance, that is, by Baptism. Whence we may observe, what the Ancients mean, when they speak of Penance and Absolution, or Remission of Sins, as a Sacrament: For they themselves explain their own Meaning to be Baptism, which is a Sacrament requiring Repentance as a Condition, and granting Absolution as an Effect and Privilege to all worthy Receivers.

SECT. IX. The Notation of the Names Baptism, Tinction, Laver, &c. That they do not

LASTLY, From the Ceremonies used in the Act of Administration, it took the peculiar Names of Baptism, Tinction, and Laver of Regeneration,

which properly denote either an Immersion in Water, or such a Washing or Sprinkling as was used among the Jews in some cases, and among Christians when they had occasion to baptize sick Persons upon a Death-bed. For then Baptism was administred by Sprinkling only, and not by Dipping or Immersion, as we shall see when we come to speak more particularly of Clinick Baptism. So that it must be noted, that Baptism in the ancient Style of the Church does not absolutely and necessarily import Dipping or Immersion, though that was the more usual Ceremony practised heretofore as well upon Infants as adult Persons, but an Exception was made for the time of Sickness, and such other cases of Necessity, as could not admit of a total Immersion. In which cases, the Substance of Baptism was still supposed to be preserved, though some minuter Circumstances were less regarded.

SECT. X. Of some other Names given to Baptism.

BESIDES these Names, which were taken from things that more immediately related to the Administration of Baptism, there were some others alluding to Circumcision, and others respecting the great Author and Institutor of it, our Saviour Christ, and others taken from the more remote and distant Effects of it, which, because we shall have no farther Occasion to speak of them, it will not be improper just to mention in this Place. Because Baptism succeeds in the room of Circumcision, and is the Seal of the Christian Covenant, as that was the Seal of the Covenant made with Abraham, therefore it is, by way of Analogy, sometimes styled the great Circumcision. As when Epiphanius comparing them both together, says, the carnal Circumcision [s] served for a time, till the great Circumcision came, that is, Baptism; which circumcises us from our Sins, and seals us in the Name of God. So in regard that Baptism had Christ for its Author and not Man, it was antiently known by the Name of Δῶρον, and χάρισμα κυρίε, the Gift of the Lord. As in the antient Acts of Paul and Thecla; when Thecla desired the Seal of the Lord, Paul bids her wait with Patience, and she should receive δωρεὰν τῦ Χριςῦ, the Gift of Christ, which, as the learned Editor observes [t], is but another way of denoting Baptism. Sometimes it was simply called δῶρον, without any other Addition by way of Eminence, because it was both a gratuitous and a singular Gift of Christ. We call it the Gift, says Gregory Nazianzen [u], because it is given to those who offer nothing for it. And St. Basil δέον ἐπιδράμειν τῷ δώρῳ, we ought to run to the Gift [x], meaning Baptism. And Casaubon has also farther observed [y], that because the Spirit was likewise given in Baptism, therefore the Holy Ghost had sometimes the Name of Munus, the Gift. And the Eucharist also, or the Sacramental Oblation of the Body and Blood of Christ, both before and after Consecration, commonly went by this Name, δῶρα and μύσικα δῶρα, of which there are various Instances collected out of the antient Rituals by that learned Writer, which are not proper to be inserted in this Place. Baptism had also the Name of ἐφόδιον or Viaticum, as well as the Eucharist, which denotes properly the Preparation of all things necessary for a Journey: In which respect both the Sacraments were called Viatica, because they were equally esteemed Mens necessary Provision and proper Armour both to sustain and conduct them safe on their Way in their Passage through this World to Eternal Life. St. Basil exhorting Men of all Ages and Conditions to receive Baptism, makes his Address to them in these Words [z]: Art thou a young Man? Then secure thy Youth by the Bridle of Baptism. Art thou past the Flower of thy Age? Then beware thou lose not thy Viaticum, thy Phylactery, which should keep and preserve thee in thy Way to Eternal Life. In Allusion to which Name, Gregory Nazianzen [a], speaking of the Minister's Act in baptizing, terms it ἐφοδιάζειν, giving to Men their Viaticum, or Provision for their Journey to another World. In reference to the making Men compleat Members of Christ's Body, the Church, it had the Name of τελείωσις and τελετὴ, the Consecration and Consummation; because it gave Men the Perfection of Christians, and a Right to partake of the τὸ τέλειον, which was the Eucharist of the Lord's Supper. It had the Name of μύησις, and μυσαγωγία, the Initiation, because it was the Admittance of Men to all the sacred Rites and Mysteries of the Christian Religion. And as the Eucharist, from its representing the Death of Christ by the outward Elements of Bread and Wine, was called the sacred Symbols, so Baptism sometimes had the same Name, as we find in Isidore of Pelusium, and the Author of the Dispute with Arius in the Council of Nice, under the Name of Athanasius. Though the Priest be an ill Liver, [b] says Isidore, the Person initiated receives no Harm by the Symbols of Salvation, but only the Priest himself. And the other [c] thus argues for the Divinity of the Holy Ghost: If the Holy Spirit be not of the Substance of the Father and the Son, why then did the Son of God joyn him together with them in the Symbol of Sanctification, when he said to his Disciples, Go teach all Nations, baptizing them in the Name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost? In both which places, 'tis plain, the Symbols of Sanctification and Salvation, can mean no other than Baptism. And hence it appears, that the same honourable Titles were given to the Waters of Baptiſm, as to the Elements of Bread and Wine in the Lord's Supper; and whatever Change was ſuppoſed to be wrought in the one by the Invocation of the Holy Spirit, was equally aſcribed to the other alſo; and as noble Effects derived from the Font as the Lord's Table, whilſt the Death of Chriſt was equally repreſented, and the Benefits of it alike communicated to all worthy Receivers in Baptiſm and the Lord's Supper. For which Reaſon I have been a little the more curious in Examining and Explaining the ſeveral Titles of Honour which the Ancients gave to Baptiſm, that under theſe eminent Characters we might ſee what Apprehenſions and Ideas the Church of Chriſt always had of this Venerable Myſtery, which ſome now by way of Contempt call Water-Baptiſm, as if the Spirit had no Concern in it; whoſe Doctrines may eaſily be perceived not to proceed from the general Senſe of the antient Catholick Church, but from particular Sects and Hereſies broken off from it, of which it may not be amiſs to give a ſhort Account in the following Chapter.

CHAP. II.

Of the Matter of BAPTISM, with an Account of ſuch Hereticks as rejected or corrupted BAPTISM by Water.

SECT. I. Baptiſm wholly rejected by the Hereticks called Aſcodrutæ, and Marcoſians, and Valentinians, and Quintillians.

THOUGH the Church always maintained an honourable Opinion of Baptiſm, as a divine and heavenly Inſtitution, yet there wanted not Sects and Hereſies, who in the earlieſt Ages ſpake very diminutively and contemptibly of it; and either in whole or in part upon various Reaſons rejected or corrupted it. The Aſcodrutæ, who were a ſort of Gnoſticks, placed all Religion in Knowledge, and under pretence of ſpiritual Worſhip, would admit of no external or corporeal Symbols whatſoever. They aſſerted, as Theodoret [a] deſcribes them, That Divine Myſteries, being the Images of inviſible Things, were not to be performed by viſible Things; nor incorporeal Things by ſenſible and corporeal Things. Therefore they never baptized any that were of their Sect, nor celebrated any part of the Myſtery of Baptiſm among them. For they ſaid, the Knowledge of all Things was their Redemption. Irenæus and [b] Epiphanius obſerve the ſame Thing to be practiſed, upon the ſame Principle of Spiritual Redemption by Knowledge alone, among ſome of them who were called Marcoſian Hereticks, whilſt others of them, who retained a ſort of Baptiſm, invented ſtrange Forms of their own to corrupt it, of which I ſhall give an Account in the following Chapter, n. 8. Irenæus [c] gives a like Account of the Valentinians, ſome of which wholly rejected Baptiſm, and others corrupted it with ſtrange Forms of their own inventing, as the Marcoſians did, who ſeem to have been Branches of the ſame Hereſy under different Leaders. Tertullian [d] brings a like Charge againſt one Quintilla, a Woman-preacher at Carthage a little before his Time, who ſet up to decry Water-baptiſm as uſeleſs, pleading, That Faith alone was ſufficient to ſave Men, as it did Abraham, who pleaſed God without any other Sacrament, but the Sacrament of Faith. Againſt this Hereſy Tertullian wrote his Book of Baptiſm, to eſtabliſh the Neceſſity of it from our Saviour's Inſtitution, and to anſwer the little Sophiſms whereby the Libertines of this new Sect pretended to deſtroy it.

SECT. II. And by the Archontici.

THE Archontici rejected Baptiſm for another Reaſon, as Epiphanius [e] and Theodoret [f] inform us. They had entertained a very monſtrous and blaſphemous Opinion, That the World was not created by the Supreme God of all Things, but by certain Powers, whom they called ἄρχοντες, Rulers, whence they themſelves had the Denomination of Archontici; Theſe Rulers, ſeven or eight in number, they imagined to be in ſo many ſeveral Orbs of the Heavens one above another, with Orders of Angels and Miniſtries under them: And to the chief of theſe they gave the Name of Sabaoth. Now they alſo pretended that Baptiſm was only adminiſtred in the Name of Sabaoth, and not in the Name of the Supreme God, and therefore they rejected both it and the Euchariſt as foreign Inſtitutions, given by Sabaoth, the God of the Jews and the Giver of the Law, whom they blaſphemouſly diſtinguiſhed from the Supreme God.

SECT. III And by the Seleucians and Hermians.

THE Seleucians and Hermians refuſed the uſe of Baptiſm by Water, as St. Auſtin [g] deſcribes them. And the ground of their Refuſal, was a Pretence, that Baptiſm by Water, was not the Baptiſm inſtituted by Chriſt; becauſe St. John Baptiſt comparing his own Baptiſm with the Baptiſm of Chriſt, ſays, I baptize you with Water, but he that cometh after me, ſhall baptize you with the Holy Ghoſt and with Fire [h], they thought the Souls of Men conſiſted of Fire and Spirit, and therefore a Baptiſm by Fire was more ſuitable to their Nature. But what kind of Baptiſm that was, none of the Ancients have told us; unleſs perhaps we may conjecture from what Clemens Alexandrinus [i] tells us out of Heracleon, of ſome who, when they had baptized Men in Water, alſo made a Mark upon their Ears with Fire; ſo joyning Water-baptiſm, and, as they imagined, Baptiſm by Fire, together. Though this was far enough from the fiery Baptiſm St. John ſpeaks of, which ſome of the Ancients underſtand of the ordinary Operations of the Spirit, which conſume our Sins; and others, of that extraordinary Effuſion of the Spirit in the Form of fiery Tongues upon the Apoſtles at the Day of Pentecoſt: And others, of the Fire of the laſt Judgment. A particular Account of which Interpretations the Reader that is curious may find in Suicerus upon this [k] Subject. I only note farther out of the Anonymous Writer about Heretical Baptiſm, publiſhed by Rigaltius and Biſhop Fell at the End of St. Cyprian, that there were a ſort of Hereticks, who pretended, That Baptiſm by Water alone was of itſelf imperfect, becauſe St. John had ſaid, We were to be baptized with the Holy Ghoſt and with Fire. Therefore they boaſted [l], That theirs was the only complete and perfect Baptiſm, and all others curtailed and given only by halves, becauſe when they went down into the Water to baptize, either by ſome curious Art in Philoſophy, like that of Anaxilaus, or by ſome magical Art, they made Fire to appear upon the Surface of the Water, and this they called Baptiſm by Fire. Which they confirmed from an Apocryphal Writing of their own inventing, called the preaching of Peter or Paul, wherein it was ſaid, That when Chriſt was baptized, Fire ſo appeared upon the Water. The Cenſure which this Author paſſes upon this kind of Baptiſm, is, That it is Adulterate, Pernicious, and wholly evacuating the true Baptiſm of Chriſt.

SECT. IV. And by the Manichees and Paulicians.

ANOTHER Sect which rejected Water-baptiſm, were the Manichees, who among many other prodigious Errors, maintained, That baptizing in Water was of no Efficacy to Salvation, and therefore they deſpiſed it, and never baptized [m] any that entred into their Society, as St. Auſtin and the Author of the Prædeſtinatus [n] publiſhed by Sirmondus, inform us. But whether they admitted any other kind of Baptiſm, or upon what ground they rejected this, we are not told: Only we may probably conjecture, that it was upon that general vile Principle of theirs, That material Things were the Work of an Evil God, and therefore to be abhorred as polluted and prophane. One Branch of this Hereſy were afterward called Paulicians, from one Paulus and Johannes the firſt Founders of it. Euthymius out of Photius gives a large Account of them, where he tells us [o] That though they really rejected and deſpiſed Baptiſm, yet they pretended to receive it: But that was only with a deceitful Equivocation; for they maintained, That the Word of the Goſpel was Baptiſm, becauſe our Lord ſaid, I am the living Water. The learned Voſſius [p] is of Opinion, that thoſe Words, Ego ſum Aqua Viva, I am the living Water, was the Form which theſe Paulicians uſed in Baptiſm, inſtead of the Form of the Church: But he plainly miſtakes Euthymius, who does not ſay, that they uſed this as a Form of Words in their Baptiſm; for they had no Baptiſm at all, nor conſequently any Form of Words for baptizing: But their Opinion was, That believing in Chriſt, or the Word, or the Truth of the Goſpel, was all the Baptiſm that was required of Men, and that becauſe Chriſt had ſaid, I am the living Water. Yet ſometimes, as Euthymius relates in the ſame Place [q], they would bring their Children to the Presbyters of the Church to be baptized after the Catholick Way, becauſe they had an Opinion that both Baptiſm and the Croſs were of ſome Advantage to the Body for the Cure of Diſeaſes, but of no other Efficacy, Benefit or Vertue to purge the Soul. And ſuch an Opinion poſſeſſed the Minds of many others, who had no farther regard for Baptiſm, but only as it was of uſe to free the Body of ſome Diſtemper or Uncleanneſs. St. Auſtin [r] puts the Queſtion once or twice concerning ſome ſuch Perſons, who deſired to be baptized with no other View but this. And Matthew Blaſtares [s] mentions a famous Caſe of the Agarenes, who compelled the Chriſtian Clergy that were under their Dominion to baptize their Children before they would circumciſe them, becauſe they conceived this would contribute toward the prevention of thoſe Diſtempers and Noiſomeneſſes, which are occaſioned by Circumciſion. Upon this caſe a Queſtion was made in the Council of Conſtantinople under Lucas Chryſoberges, Whether ſuch Perſons when they came over to the Chriſtian Faith, were to be re-baptized, or only anointed with Chriſm? And it was reſolved, That they ought without Controverſy to be re-baptized, ſince the Baptiſm with which they were waſhed, was not received with any pious Intent, but only as an Amulet or a Charm. Theſe Inſtances make the Account which Euthymius gives of the Paulicians, ſeem very probable, that though they had no Regard for Baptiſm as a Chriſtian Sacrament, yet they might ſometimes make uſe of it, as the Saracens did, as an Inchantment or a ſort of magical Spell, which appears to be the only Uſe they ever made of it, and that not in their own Aſſemblies, (where they had no Sacraments at all, neither Baptiſm nor the Euchariſt) but fraudulently receiving it in the Church at the Hands of the Chriſtian Catholick Prieſts. The Reader may obſerve by the way, that theſe Paulicians were not the Followers of Paulus Samoſatenſis Biſhop of Antioch, who are commonly called Paulianiſts and Samoſatenians [though Balſamon confounds them together]; but they had their Denomination from another Paulus Samoſatenſis and one Johannes, who revived and enlarged the Hereſy of the Manichees; as appears plainly from Euthymius. And Juſtellus [t] and Voſſius [u] have obſerved the ſame out of Cedrenus, Theophanes, Matthew Blaſtares, Nicephorus, and other Modern Greeks, with which it would be needleſs in this Place to trouble the Reader.

SECT. V. What Opinion the Meſſaliani or Euchites had of Baptiſm.

SOME add to the forementioned Sects, who rejected Baptiſm, the Hereſy of the Meſſalians, or Euchites, who were ſo called from the Greek Word Εὐχή, Prayer, and Meſſalians from the Syriack Word Metſalah, which is much of the ſame Signification, becauſe they reſolved all Religion into Prayer. But it does not appear that they wholly rejected the Sacrament of Baptiſm: For then the Church would have ordered them upon their Return to have been baptized as Jews or Pagans; which ſhe never did, but only obliged them to anathematize their Errors in order to be admitted to Communion, as may be collected from the Decree of the General Council of Epheſus [x], made with relation to ſuch of the Clergy or Laity as returned from them. But their Error was in denying the principal Part of the Spiritual Efficacy of Baptiſm: They ſaid indeed it granted Remiſſion of Sins that were paſt, but added no Strength or Ability from the Spirit to withſtand Sin for the future. This we learn from Theodoret, who comparing the Doctrine of the Catholick Church and that of the Meſſalians upon this Point together, delivers himſelf [y] to this purpoſe: Baptiſm, ſays he, is not like a Razor only, as the Meſſalian Enthuſiaſts call it, which takes away Sins that are paſt; though it has this Effect among many others: For, if this were the only Work of Baptiſm, for what Reaſon ſhould we baptize Infants, who have never yet taſted of Sin? For the Sacrament does not only promiſe this Effect, but greater and more perfect Things than that. It is the Earneſt of future Good, the Type of the Reſurrection to come hereafter, the Communication of our Lord's Paſſion, the Participation of our Lord's Reſurrection, the Garment of Salvation, the Clothing of Joy, and the Robe of Light, or rather Light itſelf. So that we muſt allow Theodoret to be his own Interpreter, when he ſeems to give a more harſh Account of theſe Meſſalians in another place, deſcribing them as Men who taught, that no manner [z] of Advantage accrued from Divine Baptiſm to thoſe who received it, but that it was only fervent Prayer that expelled the indwelling Devil out of Mens Minds. For this is to be underſtood with the fore-mentioned Exception, That they allowed Baptiſm ſo far to be uſeful, as to waſh away all former Sins, but not to grant any farther Perfection. And ſo Harmenopulus [a] repreſents their Doctrine, as teaching, That neither Baptiſm nor Participation of the Euchariſt could give a Man the Perfection of a Chriſtian, but only ſuch Prayer as they pretended to. In like manner Euthymius [b] deſcribes them, as maintaining, That Baptiſm did not eradicate Sin. They did not deny that it purged away former Sins, but they would not allow any Efficacy of the Spirit to be joyned with it to reſiſt or overcome Sin for the future. Againſt which Doctrine Euthymius thus argues: Our Lord Jeſus Chriſt ſaid, Except a Man be born of Water and the Spirit, he cannot enter into the Kingdom of God. Now the Holy Ghoſt is a Divine Fire; for he deſcended in the Form of fiery Tongues upon the Diſciples; and the Forerunner of Chriſt ſpake of this to the Multitude, when he teſtify'd of the Excellency of Chriſt, He ſhall baptize you with the Holy Ghoſt and with Fire. As therefore Material Fire, when it catches a Wood, burns all things upon the Surface of the Earth, dries up the Roots, and purges the Place from Filth: So the Holy Spirit does, and much more. For it is a Fire conſuming the Iniquity of thoſe who are baptized. And it not only purges and obliterates the Spots, and Scars, and Filth of the Soul, but alſo illuminates and endows it with many Gifts, as the Apoſtles, eſpecially St. Paul, teach us, where they ſpeak of the Diſtribution of the Graces of the Holy Spirit, which are conferred on thoſe who are baptized. From this Account of the Meſſalians it appears, that they were neither Anabaptiſts, nor Quakers; they neither rejected the Baptiſm of adult Perſons nor Infants: For the true State of the Controverſy between them and the Church, was not about the Uſe of the outward Element of Water in Baptiſm, but about the internal and ſpiritual Effects of it, which the Meſſalians confined to Remiſſion of Sins, but the Church extended to many other Noble Benefits, which were the Gifts and Graces of the Holy Spirit. Upon which account, the Church never rebaptized the Meſſalians, that we read of, as ſhe did the Manichees and ſuch other Hereticks, who rejected the Uſe of Water, which was the outward Element which Chriſt had appointed. If this was either neglected, or any other Element uſed inſtead of it, the Baptiſm was eſteemed not only Irregular, but Null, as wanting one Neceſſary and Eſſential Part, which could not be ſupplied but by a new Baptiſm. And therefore when a certain Jew had been baptized in Sand, for want of Water in the Wilderneſs, Dionyſius Biſhop of Aſcalon ordered him to be rebaptized, as Johannes Moſchus [c] tells the Story. And this was done not becauſe he was baptized by a Layman in extreme Neceſſity, but as Archbiſhop Whitgift [d] after the Centuriators [e] has obſerved, becauſe the Baptiſm wanted Water. Such was the Church's Opinion of the Neceſſity of Water-baptiſm, that where it might be had, She never thought fit to diſpenſe with the Neglect or Contempt of it; and therefore ſhe urged the Neceſſity of it againſt thoſe antient Hereticks who deſpiſed it, even whilſt She judged favourably of ſuch Catechumens as died without Baptiſm, not through Contempt, but unavoidable Neceſſity: Of which I have given a particular Account in the laſt Book, Chap. II. n. 20, &c.

Indeed there is one Exception againſt this in ſome Collections of the Canon Law. For there we have a Decree under the Name of Pope Siricius [f] which ſays, That if an Infant is baptized in Wine inſtead of Water, in caſe of Neceſſity, it is no Crime, and the Baptiſm ſhall ſtand good. But as Antonius Auguſtinus and Baluzius have obſerved, this was no Decree of Siricius, but of Stephen II. about the middle of the Eighth Century. So that it cannot be pleaded as a competent Authority to ſhew what was the antient Practice of the Church. Antonius Auguſtinus is very poſitive, that the Primitive Church had never any ſuch Cuſtom. And it ſeems pretty evident from that Saying of St. Ambroſe [g], That if we take away Water, the Sacrament of Baptiſm cannot ſtand. But among the Moderns, Beza [h], and ſome of the Schoolmen, Tolet and Valentia, determine otherwiſe: Againſt whoſe Reſolution I am not concerned to diſpute, but only to declare what I take to have been the more current and received Opinion of the Primitive Writers of the Church.

CHAP. III.

Of the Antient Form of Baptiſm, and of ſuch Hereticks as altered or corrupted it.

SECT. I. The uſual Form of Baptizing in the Name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt.

NEXT to the Matter of Baptiſm, it will be proper to conſider the Form of Words in which it was antiently adminiſtred. And this was generally ſuch a Form of Words as made expreſs mention of every Perſon of the Bleſſed Trinity, according as our Saviour did at the firſt Inſtitution, when he commanded his Diſciples to baptize in the Name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt. This the antient Author of the Recognitions [a] means, when he ſays, Men were baptized under the Appellation of the Triple Myſtery. And again [b], By invocating the Name of the Bleſſed Trinity. Tertullian [c] refers this to the Inſtitution of Chriſt. The Law of baptizing was impoſed, and the Form preſcribed, Go teach all Nations, baptizing them in the Name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghoſt. In another Place [d] he ſays, Chriſt appointed Baptiſm to be adminiſtred not in the Name of One, but Three, Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt. Therefore we are dipped not once, but thrice, unto every Perſon at the mention of each Name. Cyprian derives this Practice [e] likewiſe from the Inſtitution, ſaying, The Lord after his Reſurrection taught his Disciples after what manner they should baptize, when he said, Go teach all Nations, &c. where he delivered the Doctrine of the Trinity, unto which Mystery or Sacrament the Nations were to be baptized. And he argues [f] farther, against such Heretick's as baptized only in the Name of Jesus Christ, from the same Principle, that Christ commanded the Nations to be baptized, not into one Person, but a compleat and united Trinity. Hence Optatus [g] calls Baptism the Laver which Christ commanded to be celebrated in the Name of the Trinity, and that holy Water which flowed from the Fountain of those three Names. And to mention no more Authorities (which are innumerable), St. Austin [h] observes, That this was not only the general Practice of the Catholick Church, but of most Heresies also. For one might more easily find Heretick's that did not baptize at all, than such as retained Baptism without using those Evangelical Words, of which the Creed consists, and without which Baptism cannot be consecrated.

SECT. II. This Form of words generally thought necessary to be used in Baptism.

AND hence it appears, that St. Austin, and these other Writers, thought this precise Form of Words necessary to be used in the Administration of Baptism, by vertue of the Original Appointment and Institution. And this may be farther evidenced to have been the general Sense of the Ancients, some one or two only excepted. The Apostolical Canons [i] order every Bishop and Presbyter, that shall presume to baptize any other way, than according to the Command of the Lord, in the Name of the Father, Son and Holy Ghost, to be deposed. And Athanasius [k] speaks of such Baptism as null, that is any otherwise delivered. He that takes away any one Person from the Trinity, and is baptized only in the Name of the Father, or only in the Name of the Son, or only in the Father and the Son, without the Spirit, receives nothing, but remains void and uninitiated. For in the Trinity alone, Initiation is given. He says in another Place [l], that Baptism, which is as it were the Compendium of our whole Faith, is not given in the Name of the Word, but of Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. Didimus of Alexandria [m] treads in the Steps of Athanasius: I cannot suppose any one, says he, so mad and void of Understanding, as to think that to be perfect Baptism, which is given in the Name of the Father and Son, without the Assumption of the Holy Spirit; or in the Name of the Father and Holy Ghost, omitting the Name of the Son; or in the Name of the Son and Holy Ghost, without first mentioning the Name of the Father. For though any Man should be of such a stony Heart, as I may say, or so much beside himself, as to leave out one of the appointed Names in Baptism, setting up himself a Lawgiver in opposition to Christ, his Baptism will be imperfect, and altogether insufficient to grant Remission of Sins to those whom he esteems baptized by him. Idacius Clarus [n] asserts the same, arguing thus against Varimundus the Arian, for the Divinity of the Holy Ghost: If the Holy Ghost be not equal to the Father and Son in the Substance of the Deity, why then is that Sacrament of Baptism imperfect which is given without him? St. Basil [o] has a whole Chapter to the same Purpose. The very Title of it is against those, who asserted that it was sufficient to give Baptism only in the Name of the Lord. And whereas they urged, That in several Passages of Scripture Baptism was said to be given only in the Name of Christ; He answers, That in all those Places, though the Name of Christ was only mentioned, yet the whole Trinity was understood. Which he confirms from the like Expressions concerning the Holy Ghost, 1 Cor. xii. 13. By one Spirit we are all baptized into one Body. And, Acts i. 5. Ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost not many Days hence. Where the Apostles seem only to make mention of the Holy Ghost in Baptism. But, says he, no one may from hence conclude, that that Baptism is perfect, wherein the Holy Ghost alone is named. For the Tradition ought to remain inviolable, which was given by the quickening Grace. He means the Form of baptizing, given by the Command of Christ, Matth. xxviii. Upon which he concludes, That as we believe in the Father, and in the Son, and in the Holy Ghost, so we are baptized in the Name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. Therefore both Vossius [o] and Petavius [p] are greatly mistaken to alledge St. Basil as one of those who asserted, That Baptism in the Name of Christ alone was allowable, when he so plainly and directly writes againſt it. Many other Teſtimonies might here be inſerted out of Theodoret [q], Gregory Nazianzen [r] and Nyſſen [s], Theophylact [t] and others, but I ſhall only add farther the Decree of Pope Vigilius, which ſhews both the Practice of the Church and the Severity of her Cenſures againſt any one that ſhould pretend to tranſgreſs this ſettled Rule of baptizing. If any Biſhop or Presbyter, ſays he, baptize not according [u] to the Command of the Lord, in the Name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghoſt, but in one Perſon of the Trinity, or in two, or in three Fathers, or in three Sons, or in three Comforters, let him be caſt out of the Church of God.

SECT. III. Whether Baptiſm in the Name of Chriſt alone was ever allowed in the Church.

INDEED among all the Writings of the Ancients, I have never yet met with any but two, that plainly and directly allow or approve of any other Form of Baptiſm, ſave that which was appointed by Chriſt at the Inſtitution. Gennadius mentions one Urſinus an African Monk, who, he ſays, wrote a Book [which is now loſt] wherein he aſſerted, againſt ſuch as were for Rebaptizing all Hereticks, that it was not lawful to Rebaptize thoſe, who were baptized either ſimply [x] in the Name of Chriſt, or in the Name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt: But it was ſufficient for both ſorts of them, upon Confeſſion of the Trinity, to receive the Biſhop's Confirmation in order to obtain Eternal Life. This Author plainly diſtinguiſhes betwixt the two Forms of baptizing, one with explicite mention of the three Perſons of the Trinity, and the other in the Name of Chriſt alone; both which he makes to be lawful, and equivalent in Senſe, though differing in Words from one another. And St. Ambroſe, I confeſs, ſeems to have been of the ſame Opinion. For he takes all thoſe Expreſſions of Scripture, which ſpeak of being baptized in the Name of Chriſt, to mean, the uſing ſuch a Form as this; I baptize thee in the Name of Chriſt, without any expreſs mention of the three Perſons, though the whole Trinity was implied in it. He that is bleſſed in Chriſt, ſays he [z], is bleſſed in the Name of the Father, and Son, and Holy Ghoſt; becauſe the Name is one, and the Power one. The Ethiopian Eunuch, who was baptized in Chriſt, had the Sacrament compleat. If a Man names only a ſingle Perſon expreſly in Words, either Father, Son, or Holy Ghoſt, ſo long as he does not deny in his Faith either Father, Son, or Holy Ghoſt, the Sacrament of Faith is compleat: As on the other hand, if a Man in Words expreſs all the three Perſons, Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt, but in his Faith diminiſhes the Power either of the Father, or Son, or Holy Ghoſt, the Sacrament of Faith is void. He ſays farther, He that names but one Perſon, deſigns thereby the whole Trinity. He that names Chriſt only, intends both the Father by whom the Son is anointed, and the Son himſelf who is anointed, and the Spirit with which he is anointed. And he that names only the Father, does in like manner intend both his Son and the Spirit of his Mouth, if he truly believe them in his Heart. So that according to St. Ambroſe, it was a ſufficient Baptiſm, though only one Perſon, Father, Son, or Holy Ghoſt, was expreſly mentioned, becauſe in one Name by an Orthodox Believer all the reſt were implied. But this appears to have been a ſingular Opinion in St. Ambroſe, contrary to the general Stream and Current of the antient Writers. For though Petavius joyns St. Baſil with him; and Voſſius after Soto makes Cyprian and Athanaſius, and the Author of the Opus Imperfectum under the Name of St. Chryſoſtom, to be Abettors of the ſame Aſſertion; yet it is clear from what has been alledged before out of Cyprian, Athanaſius and Baſil, that they were of the contrary Opinion, and eſteemed it an Error and Tranſgreſſion againſt the firſt Inſtitution, to give Baptiſm only in the Name of Chriſt. Whence it is alſo farther evident, that they did not underſtand thoſe Paſſages of Scripture, which ſpeak of baptizing in the Name of Jeſus, or the Lord, or Chriſt, as new Forms of baptizing, different from the Original Form delivered by Chriſt; but as Eulogius in Photius [a] has explained them: To be baptized into Chriſt Jeſus, ſignifies to be baptized according to the Command and Tradition of Jeſus Chriſt; that is, In the Name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghoſt. According to which Senſe it follows, that the Form of baptizing delivered by Chriſt, was not changed, as ſome imagine, but preciſely obſerved even by the Apoſtles, and after them by the general Conſent and Practice of the Catholick Church.

SECT IV. Of Alterations made in the Form of Baptiſm. 1ſt, By the Tritheiſts and Priſcillianiſts.

'TIS true indeed, as Sects grew up and increaſed in the Church, ſome Innovations were made in this Matter among them. For though, as St. Auſtin obſerves, the greateſt Part of Hereticks who retained any Baptiſm at all, retained alſo the old Form of the Church; yet ſome there were who varied from it, and brought in new Forms of their own, according as their Fancies or the Genius of their Hereſies led them. There were ſome very early that turned the Doctrine of the Trinity into Tritheiſm, and inſtead of three divine Perſons under the Oeconomy of Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, brought in three Collateral, Co-ordinate, and Self-originated Beings, making them three abſolute and independent Principles, without any Relation of Father or Son, which is the moſt proper Notion of three Gods. And having made this Change in the Doctrine of the Holy Trinity, they made another Change anſwerable to it in the Form of Baptiſm. For inſtead of baptizing in the Name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt, they brought in an unheard-of Form of baptizing in the Name of three Un-originated Prnciples, as we learn from one of thoſe called the Apoſtolical Canons, which is directly levelled againſt them in theſe Words: If any Biſhop [b] or Presbyter baptize not according to the Command of Chriſt, In the Name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt; but in three Un-originated Principles, or in three Sons, or in three Paracletes, or Holy Ghoſts, let him be depoſed. This Canon does not deſcribe theſe Hereticks by any Name, but we may conjecture from another Canon of the firſt Council of Bracara, that they were the Gnoſticks, who firſt introduced this kind of Tritheiſm, or Doctrine of three Gods into the World, which was afterwards taken up by the Priſcillianiſts, and both of them condemned together in that Council. For ſo the Canon words it: If any one ſhall introduce any ſtrange Names [c] of the Divinity beſide the Holy Trinity, ſaying, that in the Godhead there is a Trinity of Trinities, as the Gnoſticks and Priſcillianiſts maintain, let him be Anathema. This was the Conſequence of aſſerting three unbegotten Principles: For hereby they made three Fathers, and three Sons, and three Holy Ghoſts, which was a Trinity of Trinities, as the Council charges them. And in compliance with this grand Error, they ſometimes baptized in the Name of three Fathers, or three Sons, or three Holy Ghoſts. As ſeems pretty evident from that Decree of Pope Vigilius, made againſt all ſuch Heterodox Innovations: If any Biſhop or Presbyter [d] baptize not according to the Command of the Lord, in the Name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt; but in one Perſon of the Trinity, or in two, or in three Fathers, or in three Sons, or in three Paracletes or Holy Ghoſts, let him be caſt out of the Church.

SECT. V. Secondly, By Menander and his Followers.

ANOTHER Corruption of the Form of Baptiſm was introduced by Menander, who was a Diſciple of Simon Magus, and to all his Maſter's Hereſies added this of his own, that no one could be ſaved, except he was baptized in his Name, as Tertullian [e] informs us. The Reaſon of this Innovation is aſſigned by Irenæus [f] and Epiphanius [g], who tell us, that he took upon him to be the Meſſias: For he taught, that he was the Perſon ſent for the Salvation of Men; and to gather a Church by Myſteries of his own appointing, to deliver Men from the Dominion of the Angels and Principalities and Powers that made the World. And Theodoret [h] gives the ſame Account of him. For he ſays, he called himſelf the Saviour of the World, and taught that Men were ſaved by being baptized in his Name, by which means alſo they got Power over the Powers that made the World. But this was ſo abſurd an Hereſy, that, as Epiphanius obſerves, it never prevailed much in the Church. Menander had promiſed his Proſelytes, as Tertullian [i] ſays, that all who would be baptized in his Name, ſhould be Immortal and Incorruptible, and have the Benefit of an immediate Reſurrection: But Experience in a little time confuted this Foolery: For in an hundred Years time none of his immortal Apoſtles appeared, to convince any doubting Thomas of the Truth of ſuch a pretended Reſurrection. And ſo this vain Attempt upon the Baptiſm of Chriſt quickly ſunk by its own Abſurdity.

SECT. VI. Thirdly, By the Elceſeans.

A no leſs abſurd Innovation was made by the Elceſeans, ſo called from their Founder, one Elceſai, who taught them Inchantments and Invocation of Dæmons, and to uſe Baptiſms [k] in the Name or Confeſſion of the Elements, or Letters, as Theodoret repreſents them. Though what ſort of Baptism this was, is not very easy to conjecture, there being scarce any one besides Theodoret that gives any Account of this Heresy. But they were great Admirers of Astrology and Magick, and upon that account perhaps might bring the Elements into their Baptism, by Composition of certain Letters and Numbers used by them in their Magical Operations.

SECT. VII. Fourthly, By the Montanists and Sabellians.

THE Montanists also or Cataphrygians introduced a new Form of Baptism. For Montanus their Founder took upon him to be the Holy Ghost, and made himself two Prophetesses, Priscilla and Maximilla, who pretended to write Books by Inspiration. Therefore their Followers having them in great Esteem, corrupted the old Form of Baptism, and administred it in the Name of Father, Son, and Montanus or Priscilla, as St. Basil acquaints us, who therefore judges their Baptism to be null, and necessary to be repeated [l] when they came over to the Catholick Church. Theophylact [m] gives the same Account of them, telling us, that their foul and stinking Tongues baptized in the Names of Montanus and Priscilla and Maximilla. By which he does not mean, that they used those three Names instead of the Trinity, but that they added the Name of Montanus, or Priscilla, or Maximilla, to the Father and Son, instead of the Holy Ghost. For which Reason, most probably, the Council of Laodicea [n] orders them to be rebaptized, notwithstanding that some of them had received a pretended Ordination, and were advanced not only to the Dignity of Bishops, but to the Title of Patriarchs and Maximi among them, as the Council of Laodicea words it. And the same Decree is made against them in the first General Council of Constantinople [o], and some others also. St. Jerom seems farther to intimate, that these Montanists were as to the Doctrine of the Trinity, really Sabellians. For though they pretended to believe a Trinity of Divine Persons, yet it was but Equivocally, in the same way as Sabellius had done before, whose three Persons were no more but three Names, or different Appearances of one and the same Person. Therefore St. Jerom says [p], the Montanists differed from the Catholicks in the very Rule of Faith. For we assert Father, and Son, and Holy Ghost, every one distinct in his own Person, though united in Substance: But they following the Opinion of Sabellius, bring the Trinity to the narrow Restraints of one Person. That is, as he explains it a little after, they said, that God at first intended to save the World by Moses and the Prophets; but because he could not effect his Design that way, he assumed a Body of the Virgin, and preached in Christ under the Species of a Son, and suffered Death for our sakes. And because by these two Degrees he could not save the World, he at last descended by the Holy Ghost into Montanus, Priscilla, and Maximilla; and made Montanus, who was an Eunuch, and but half a Man, have that Plenitude of Prophecy, which Paul himself could not pretend to have. From this Account of St. Jerom, it is evident the Montanists in point of Doctrine were really Sabellians, and believed but one Person in the Godhead under different Appearances or Manifestations of himself, which they called πρόσωπα, Persons, in an equivocal Sense, whereby they imposed upon many Catholicks, and among the rest upon Theodoret [q], to make them believe them sound and Orthodox Men, when yet they asserted three Persons in no other Sense, than Simon Magus, and Praxeas, and Noetus, and Sabellius, and all the Patripassians had done before them. Now it is very probable the Sabellians had introduced a new Form of Baptism, correspondent to their Principles, for which Reason all the Councils that mention them, order them to be [r] re-baptized: And the Montanists, following the Doctrine of Sabellius, were liable to the same Censure. So that upon all Accounts it must be concluded, they had made Innovations upon the Form of Baptism received in the Catholick Church.

SECT. VIII. Fifthly, By the Marcosians.

ANOTHER very strange Form was conceived by the Marcosians, or Marcites, so called from one Marcus a Sorcerer, who taught his Disciples to baptize in the Name of the unknown Father [s] of all things, in the Name of Truth the Mother of all things, and in Jesus who descended (or as Eusebius [t] reads it, in him who descended into Jesus) for the Union and Redemption, and Communion of the Principalities or Powers; or in the Union and Redemption and Communion of these Powers. For it may be so understood, as if the Names of these Powers were taken into their Form of Baptism. But Irenæus, and Epiphanius from him, tell us, they had several Forms of Baptism, and some of them added certain hard Hebrew Names to astonish their Catechumens and Converts, which the inquisitive Reader may find in those Writers. And some of them wholly rejected Baptism as useless, because the Mysteries of the ineffable and invisible Power were not to be performed by visible and corruptible Creatures, nor intellectual and incorporeal things by those

So also in Irenæus, lib. 1. cap. 18. & in Epiphanius Hæres. 34. [t] Euseb. 4. cap. 11. has it, εἰς τὸν κατελθόντα εἰς τὸν Ἰησοῦν.

that

that are ſenſible and corporeal: But the Knowledge of the ineffable Greatneſs was a perfect Redemption. And in this they agreed with the Aſcodrutæ, of whom we have ſpoken in the laſt Chapter.

SECT. IX. Sixthly, By the Paulianiſts.

THE Paulianiſts, or Followers of Paulus Samoſatenſis Biſhop of Antioch, who denied the Divinity of Chriſt, ſeem alſo to have been guilty of introducing a new Form of Baptiſm, though I do not remember any antient Writer, that tells us particularly what it was. But St. Auſtin concludes it muſt be ſo, becauſe the Council of Nice [u] made an Order to receive them only by a new Baptiſm into the Church: Which he takes to be an Argument, that the Paulianiſts had not kept to the Form or Rule of Baptiſm, which many other Hereticks, when they left the Church, took along with them, and continued ſtill to obſerve. Pope Innocent [x] likewiſe aſſigns this for the Reaſon, why the Council of Nice allowed the Baptiſm of the Novatians, but not the Paulianiſts; becauſe the Paulianiſts did not baptize in the Name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt; but the Novatians in their Baptiſm always made Uſe of thoſe venerable Names, as being in Point of the Divine Power of the Holy Trinity, always Aſſerters of the Catholick Faith.

SECT. X. Seventhly, The Eunomians and others who baptized into the Death of Chriſt.

ANOTHER ſort of Hereticks there were, who inſtead of Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt, uſed this Form, I baptize thee into the Death of Chriſt. Among the Apoſtolical Canons, there is one that particularly reflects upon this as an unlawful [y] Practice: If any Biſhop or Presbyter uſe not three Immerſions in the Celebration of Baptiſm, but one only given in the Death of Chriſt, let him be Depoſed. For our Lord did not ſay, Baptize into my Death: But, Go teach all Nations, baptizing them in the Name of the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Ghoſt. St. Paul indeed ſometimes ſpeaks of being baptized into the Death of Chriſt; but then, as Origen has rightly obſerved, this does not denote any new Form of Baptiſm; for no other Form of Baptiſm was ever thought [z] lawful, beſide that which was given in the Name of the Trinity, according to the Command of Chriſt: And the Apoſtle is not ſpeaking of the Manner of baptizing, but of Chriſt's Death, and our conforming to it, as ſignified in Baptiſm. Where it would not have been convenient to have ſaid, As many of us as have been baptized in the Name of the Father, or of the Holy Ghoſt, have been baptized into his Death: And therefore the Apoſtle in Prudence omitted them in that Place, becauſe it was not proper to mention either Father or Holy Ghoſt, where he was ſpeaking of Death, which did not belong to them, but only to Chriſt Incarnate. Notwithſtanding this juſt Obſervation of Origen's. Eunomius the Arian revived this irregular Practice of thoſe antient Hereticks, and caſt off the old Form of Baptiſm, to make way for others more agreeable to his damnable Errors and Opinions. For becauſe he denied the Divinity of the Son and Holy Ghoſt, he would no longer uſe the Trine Immerſion, nor baptize in the Name of the Trinity, but only into the Death of Chriſt, as Socrates [a] gives an Account of his Practice. Epiphanius [b] obſerves of the Anomæans, who were the peculiar Followers of Eunomius, that they baptized alſo in another Form, in the Name of the Uncreated God, and the Name of the Created God, and the Name of the Sanctifying Spirit, created by the created Son. And ſo ſtiff were they to this Form of their own inventing, that they baptized not only the Catholicks, but all other Sects, and even the Arians themſelves, who had been otherwiſe baptized before them. And Gregory Nyſſen tells us from Eunomius his own Books, that he perverted the Law of Chriſt, the Law or Tradition of the Divine Inſtitution; and taught, that Baptiſm was not to be given in the Name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt, as Chriſt commanded his Diſciples when he firſt delivered the Myſtery, but [c] in the Name of the Creator and Maker, and not Father only, but God of the only-begotten. Upon which he charges him with adding to the Word of God, and corrupting it, becauſe no ſuch Words as Creator or Maker of the Only-begotten, or the Son's being a Creature, or the Servant of God, were to be found in the Words of the Firſt Inſtitution.

SECT. XI. Whether all the Arians were guilty of the ſame Innovation.

Creature, and in the Holy Ghoſt, the Servant of them both. But they do not ſay that the Arians uſed this Form of Baptiſm; but only that their Baptiſm, though it was given in the Name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt, was in Effect no more than if it had been given in the Name of a Creature, becauſe they believed the Son and Holy Ghoſt to be no more than Creatures. The Arians corrupted the Faith, but they ſtill retained the Catholick Form of Baptiſm, till Eunomius brought in another Form among them. And that is the true Reaſon, why both the firſt general Council of Conſtantinople [g], and the Council of Trullo [h], ordered the Eunomians to be rebaptized, at the ſame time that they appointed the other Arians to be received by Impoſition of Hands only, without a new Baptiſm. And the ſecond Council of Arles made a like Decree concerning the Bonoſiaci, or Followers of Bonoſus Biſhop of Sardica, who were a Branch of the Arians, that becauſe they retained Baptiſm in the Catholick Form, as they there [i] ſay the other Arians did, therefore it ſhould be ſufficient, after the Confeſſion of a true Faith, to receive them with Chriſm and Impoſition of Hands without a new Baptiſm. Which is a Demonſtration, that neither the ancient Arians before Eunomius, nor the Bonoſians after him, had made any Alteration in this Matter; but though they had corrupted the Faith, yet they retained the antient Form of baptizing uſed in the Catholick Church. For had it been otherwiſe, there is no Queſtion to be made, but that (as Suicerus [k] out of Voſſius [l] has rightly obſerved) the antient Councils would have rejected their Baptiſm, as they did the Eunomians, and ordered them to have been rebaptized upon their Return to the Catholick Church. For the Obſervation of the Form of Baptiſm was always eſteemed ſo neceſſary a Part of the Inſtitution, and ſo eſſential to the Sacrament, that where it was wanting, the Baptiſm was reputed an imperfect and void Baptiſm, and to be repeated by all the Rules made againſt Hereticks in the Catholick Church.

SECT. XII. Whether any Additions were made to the Form of Baptiſm in the Catholick Church.

THERE is one Queſtion more relating to the Form of Baptiſm, which it may not be improper to reſolve in this Place; that is Whether any Additions were ever allowed to be made to the Form of Baptiſm in the Catholick Church? Some learned Perſons are of Opinion, that ſuch Additions, when they were only by way of Explication, and greater Illuſtration, to confirm the Truth againſt Hereticks, were uſed in the Form of Baptiſm, as well as in the Creed. But I think Voſſius, upon better grounds of Reaſon and Authority, more judiciouſly determines the contrary. Two Authors are commonly alledged in favour of their Aſſertion, viz. Juſtin Martyr and the Author of the Conſtitutions, but neither of them comes fully up to the Thing intended. For Juſtin Martyr, as Voſſius obſerves [m], is only giving a Paraphraſtical Explication of the Words uſed in Baptiſm for the Inſtruction of the Heathens, to whom he is writing, when he tells them how the Chriſtians baptized in the Name of the Father of all Things, who was Lord and God, and in the Name of Jeſus Chriſt our Lord, and of the Holy Ghoſt. And the Author of the Conſtitutions is yet more plain: For firſt of all, he tells every Biſhop and Presbyter, That they ought to baptize [n] preciſely in that Form of Words which our Lord enjoyned us, when he ſaid, Go teach all Nations, baptizing them in the Name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghoſt, teaching them to obſerve all Things which I have commanded you. And then he goes on to explain the ſeveral Names of the Three Perſons concerned, viz. That the Father is the Perſon who ſent, Chriſt the Perſon who came, and the Paraclete or Comforter the Perſon who bears witneſs. So that this was plainly an Explanation or Paraphraſe of the Form of Baptiſm only, and not the very Form that was then in Uſe. Nor can it be made appear, That ever the Catholick Church varied from the Form delivered by our Saviour, though Voſſius thinks a Form with ſuch an Orthodox Addition would not deſtroy the Eſſence of Baptiſm, as thoſe Heretical Forms certainly do, which corrupt the Truth of the Catholick Faith.

CHAP. IV.

Of the Subjects of Baptism, or an Account of what Persons were anciently allowed to be baptized. Where particularly of Infant-Baptism.

SECT. I. Why the Question about the Administrators of Baptism is here omitted.

HAVING spoken of the Matter and Form of Baptism, I should now have considered the Persons by whom this Sacrament was antiently administred: But because I have lately had Occasion to handle this Subject fully in a Scholastical Way in two distinct Discourses [a], it will be sufficient in this Place to give this Summary Account of the Matter. There I have shewed, That Bishops, as the Apostles Successors, were the Persons chiefly entrusted with this Power; That they granted Power to Presbyters to baptize in Ordinary Cases; To Deacons sometimes in Ordinary, and sometimes only in Extraordinary Cases; To Laymen only in Extraordinary Cases of extreme Necessity; That the usurped Baptism of Laymen was allowed to be Valid, so far as not to need Repeating, though given irregularly; That the Baptism of Women was wholly prohibited; That the Baptism of Jews and Infidels was never allowed, though now accepted in the Church of Rome; That the Baptism of Hereticks and Schismaticks was disannulled by the Cyprianists, and some few others, who required a true Faith as well as a true Form, to make a complete Baptism; but that this Opinion was rejected by the great Body of the Catholick Church, who thought the Defects of Heretical Baptism might be supplied by Imposition of Hands without Rebaptizing: That yet it was agreed both by the Cyprianists and all others whatsoever, That Hereticks and Schismaticks had not the Power of Priests, because some of them, as the Novatians, never had a just and legal Call to the Priesthood; and others were deprived of their Power by the lawful Authority of the Church, which first committed that Power to them; that thenceforward they were reputed, not true Christian Priests, but Wolves and Antichrists, instead of true Shepherds and Governors of the Flock of Christ; That the Church had Power not only to suspend the Execution of their Office, but to cancel their Commission, and wholly take away the Power and Authority of the Priesthood from them; and then they were reduced to the State and Condition of Laymen; And sometimes they were not only degraded from the Priesthood, but thrust down one Degree below Laymen, by being anathematized and cast out of the Communion of the Church: And yet notwithstanding all this, the Church did not think fit to cancel or wholly disannul the Baptisms given by such Men, though given by Usurpation and without any Authority of the Priesthood, so long as it appeared, they were given in due Form, in the Name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. All which Things being abundantly proved in the two foresaid Discourses, I think it not proper to repeat or insist any longer upon them: But shall now proceed, as the Order of the Discourse requires, to consider the Persons on whom Baptism was antiently conferred.

SECT. II. Who were anciently reckoned the proper Subjects of Baptism. Where of the corrupt Custom of Baptizing Inanimate Things, as Bells in the Roman Church.

AND here first of all, it is certain, That none but living Persons, whether Adult or Infants, and that in their own Personal Capacity, were ever reckoned Subjects capable of Baptism in the Primitive Church. The Ancients knew nothing of that profane Custom of giving Baptism to inanimate Things, as Bells and the like, by a superstitious Consecration of them. The first Notice we have of this is in the Capitulars of Charles the Great [b], where it is only mentioned to be censured. But afterward it crept into the Roman Offices by degrees (as I have noted in another Place [c] out of Baronius, Cardinal Bona, and Menardus) till at last it grew to that superstitious height, as to be thought proper to be complained of in the Centum Gravamina of the German Nation, drawn up in the publick Dyet of the Empire held at Norimberg, An. 1518, where (after having described the Ceremony of baptizing a Bell with Godfathers, who make Responses, as in Baptism, and give it a Name; and cloath it with a new Garment, as Christians were used to be cloathed, and all this to make it capable of driving away Tempests and Devils) they conclude [d] against it, as not only a superstitious Practice, but contrary to the Christian Religion, and a mere Seduction of the simple People, and an Exaction upon them. For which Reason, they declare, so wicked and unlawful a Custom ought to be abolished. He that would SECT. III. Baptiſm not to be given to the Dead.

AND here we meet with a Practice a little more antient, but not leſs ſuperſtitious than the former: Which was a Cuſtom, that began to prevail among ſome weak People in Africk, of giving Baptiſm to the Dead. The Third Council of Carthage [h] ſpeaks of it as a Thing that ignorant Chriſtians were a little fond of, and therefore gives a ſeaſonable Caution againſt it, to diſcourage the Practice. And this is again repeated in the African Code [i]. Gregory Nazianzen [k] alſo takes Notice of the ſame ſuperſtitious Opinion prevailing among ſome who delayed to be baptized. In his Addreſs to this kind of Men, he asks them whether they ſtayed to be baptized after Death? And doubts upon this Account whether to eſteem them greater Objects of Pity or Contempt. Philaſtrius alſo [l] notes it as the general error of the Montaniſts or Cataphrygians, That they baptized Men after Death. The Practice ſeems to be grounded upon a vain Opinion, that when Men had neglected to receive Baptiſm in their Life-time, ſome Compenſation might be made for this Default by receiving it after Death. And for the ſame Reaſon they gave the Euchariſt alſo to the Dead in the like Circumſtances, which is equally condemned in the forementioned African Canons, as proceeding from groſs Ignorance in ſome Presbyters, and want of a due Underſtanding of the true Intent and Meaning of thoſe Holy Inſtitutions; for whoſe Information they order Provincial Councils to be held twice a Year, that they might be better inſtructed.

SECT. IV. Nor to the Living for the Dead. Where of the Apoſtle's meaning of being baptized for the Dead, 1 Cor. 15. 29.

ANOTHER abſurd Practice prevailing among ſome of the antient Hereticks, was a ſort of Vicarious Baptiſm, which was, That when any one died without Baptiſm, another was baptized in his Stead. St. Chryſoſtom tells us [m], this was practiſed among the Marcionites with a great deal of ridiculous Ceremony, which he thus deſcribes: After any Catechumen was dead, they hid a living Man under the Bed of the Deceaſed, then coming to the dead Man, they ſpake to him, and asked him, Whether he would receive Baptiſm? And he making no Anſwer, the other anſwered for him, and ſaid, He would be baptized in his Stead: And ſo they baptized the Living for the Dead, as if they were acting a Comedy upon the Stage; ſo great was the Power of Satan in the Minds of theſe vain Men. Afterward when any one challenged them upon this Practice, they had Confidence to plead the Apoſtle's Authority for it, Why are they then baptized for the Dead? Againſt which St. Chryſoſtom urges very well, That if this were allowed, in vain had God threatned thoſe that died unbaptized. For by this Means any Jew or Gentle might eaſily be made a Chriſtian, by having another after his Death baptized for him. Tertullian brings the ſame Charge againſt the Marcionites [n], comparing their Practice to the Heathen Luſtrations for the Dead upon the Kalends of February. But he tells them they did but in vain alledge the Apoſtle's Authority for this Practice, as if he had argued from it for the Truth and Confirmation of the Reſurrection. For the Apoſtle ſpeaks but of one Baptiſm, and that was of the Living for themſelves. He reflects upon the ſame Practice in another Place [o], where he calls it the vicarious Baptiſm, which ſome uſed in Hopes of the Reſurrection. Suicerus thinks the Cerinthians were the firſt Authors of this kind of Baptiſm, and that indeed would carry it up to the Apoſtles Time. But Epiphanius, on whoſe Authority he depends, ſays no ſuch Thing, as from any certain Proof, or his own Judgment, but only that there was an uncertain Tradition handed down to him, concerning ſome Hereticks in Aſia in the Apoſtles Days [p], who, when any one died without Baptiſm, ſubſtituted another in his Room to be baptized for hm, leſt in the Reſurrection he ſhould be puniſhed for Want of Baptiſm, and be ſubjected to the Powers which made the World. And the ſame Tradition aſſerted, that the Apoſtle hence took Occaſion to ſay, If the Dead riſe not, Why are they then baptized for the Dead? But Epiphanius wholly rejects this Opinion, nor do we find any of the Ancients ſo interpreting this Paſſage of the Apoſtle, except only the Author under the Name of St. Ambroſe, who is clearly of Opinion, that the Apoſtle had reſpect to ſuch a Cuſtom then in being, and thence drew an Argument from the Example [q] of thoſe who were ſo firmly perſwaded of the Truth of the future Reſurrection, that when any one among them was prevented by ſudden Death, they had another to be baptized in his Name, fearing leſt he ſhould either not riſe at all, or riſe to condemnation. But St. Chryſoſtom gives a much more rational Account of the Apoſtle's Argument; for he ſuppoſes him to refer to the Catholick Cuſtom of making every Catechumen at his Baptiſm with his own Mouth declare his Belief of the Reſurrection of the Dead, by repeating the Creed, of which that was a part, and ſo being baptized into that Faith, or Hope of the Reſurrection of the Dead. And therefore he puts them in mind of this, ſaying, If there be [r] no Reſurrection of the Dead, why art thou then baptized for the Dead, that is, the Body? For therefore thou art baptized for the Dead, believing the Reſurrection of the Dead, that the Body may not remain dead, but revive again. So that baptizing for the Dead is an elliptical Expreſſion, for being baptized into the Faith or Belief of the Reſurrection of the Dead. And ſo I think Tertullian [s] is to be underſtood, when he ſays in Oppoſition to the Error of the Marcionites, that to be baptized for the Dead, is to be baptized for the Body, which is declared to be dead by Baptiſm: That is, we are baptized into the Belief of the Reſurrection of the Body, both whoſe Death and Reſurrection are repreſented in Baptiſm. And the Interpretation of Epiphanius comes pretty near theſe, when he ſays [t] It refers to thoſe who were baptized upon the approach of Death in hopes of the Reſurrection from the Dead; for they ſhewed thereby, that the Dead ſhould riſe again, and that therefore they had need of the Remiſſion of Sins, which is obtained in Baptiſm. The ſame Senſe is given by Theodoret [u], and Theophylact [x], and Balſamon, and Zonaras [y], and Matthew Blaſtares [z] among the Greeks; and it is embraced by Biſhop Patrick [a], and Dr. Hammond [b], as the moſt natural and genuine Expoſition of this difficult Paſſage of the Apoſtle. Some indeed think it may refer to another Cuſtom of baptizing over the Monuments of the Martyrs, who died for the Faith in hopes of a future Reſurrection. But that Cuſtom was hardly antient enough to be alluded to in the Times of the Apoſtles, though Voſſius [c] and ſome other learned Men incline to this Opinion. However it be, it is not likely the Apoſtle ſhould draw an Argument from the abſurd Practice of the worſt of Hereticks: Therefore whatever Interpretation be thought moſt proper and worthy to be received, that is certainly to be rejected, together with the Error of the Marcionites, who founded their vicarious Baptiſm upon the Authority of this Apoſtolical Paſſage, contrary to the Senſe and Practice of the whole Catholick Church, which never allowed of Baptiſm given to the Living for the Dead, or of any Baptiſm but ſuch as was given to Men in their own Perſons.

Now of Perſons who were reckoned capable of receiving Baptiſm, there were two Sorts, Infants and adult Perſons. And Infants were of two Sorts, either ſuch as were born of Chriſtian Parents, or ſuch as were born of Heathens, but by ſome Providential Means became the Poſſeſſion and Property, as I may call it, of the Chriſtian Church: Neither of which ſort were excluded from Baptiſm, when ſufficient Sponſors could be provided for them. This is ſo evident from the antient Records of the Church, that it is to be wondred, how ſome learned Perſons could run into the contrary Opinion, and offer Reaſons from Antiquity, in Prejudice of the Church's conſtant Practice. Mr. Wall, in his elaborate Diſcourſe [d] of Infant-Baptiſm, has juſtly reflected upon abundance of theſe Men, who by their unwary Conceſſions, have given too great Advantage to the Anabaptiſts of this Age: There are ſome others alſo, which he had not ſeen, who advance as unworthy Notions of the antient Practice: For Salmaſius, and Suicerus [e] out of him, deliver it as authentick Hiſtory, that for the two firſt Ages no one received Baptiſm, who was not firſt inſtructed in the Faith and Doctrine of Chriſt, ſo as to be able to anſwer for himſelf, that he believed, becauſe of thoſe Words, He that believeth and is baptized. Which in effect is to ſay, that no Infant for the two firſt Ages was ever admitted to Chriſtian Baptiſm. But afterwards they own Pædo-baptiſm came in, upon the Opinion, that Baptiſm was neceſſary to Salvation. Now I ſhall not think my ſelf obliged to be very Prolix in refuting this Opinion, together with the falſe Suppoſition which is made the Foundation of it, ſince that has ſo often, and ſo ſubſtantially been done by Voſſius [f], Dr. Forbes [g], Dr. Hammond [h], Mr. Walker [i], and eſpecially Mr. Wall [k], who has exactly conſidered the Teſtimony and Authority of almoſt every antient Writer that has ſaid any thing upon this Subject. But that no one who reads theſe Collections, may be wholly at a loſs for want of other Authors, I ſhall here ſubjoin a brief Ac-

SECT. VI. From Clemens Romanus and Hermes Paſtor.

THE moſt antient Writer that we have, is Clemens Romanus, who lived in the Time of the Apoſtles. And he, though he does not directly mention Infant-baptiſm, yet ſays a thing that by Conſequence proves it. For he makes Infants liable to Original Sin, which in effect is to ſay, that they have need of Baptiſm to purge them from it. For ſpeaking of Job, he ſays, though he was a juſt Man, yet he [l] condemns himſelf, ſaying, There is none free from Pollution, though his Life be but of the length of one Day. Now if Children be born in Sin, they have need of a Regeneration to make them capable of the Kingdom of Heaven. Hermes Paſtor lived about the ſame time with Clemens, and has ſeveral Paſſages to ſhew the general Neceſſity of Water, that is, Baptiſm, to ſave Men. In one place he repreſents the Church as a Tower built on the Waters, and ſays, [m] Hear therefore why the Tower is built on the Waters; becauſe your Life is ſaved, and ſhall be ſaved by Water. In another place, he makes Water-baptiſm ſo neceſſary to all, that in a Viſion he repreſents the Apoſtles as going after Death [n] to baptize the Holy Spirits who lived under the Old Teſtament, that they might be tranſlated into the Kingdom of God. It was neceſſary, ſays he, for them to aſcend by Water, that they might be at Reſt: for they could not otherwiſe enter into the Kingdom of God, than by putting off the Mortality of their former Life. They therefore after they were dead, were ſealed with the Seal of the Son of God, and ſo entred into the Kingdom of God. For before any one receives the Name of the Son of God, he is liable to Death: But when he receives that Seal, he is delivered from Death, and is aſſigned to Life. Now that Seal is Water, into which Men deſcend bound over unto Death, but aſcend out of it aſſigned unto Life. For this Reaſon the Seal was alſo preached unto them, and they made uſe of it that they might enter into the Kingdom of God. The plain Deſign of this place is to repreſent the Neceſſity of Baptiſm, without which none can ordinarily enter into the Kingdom of God. And it cannot be doubted, that he who thought it ſo neceſſary even for the Patriarchs, who died before the coming of Chriſt, muſt think it equally neceſſary to all thoſe who lived under the Diſpenſation of the Goſpel. Though whether the Baptiſm here mentioned be to be underſtood in a Literal and Corporeal Senſe, or only in a Metaphorical or Myſtical way, as a Viſion or a Parable may require, is what may admit of ſome Diſpute. And therefore Cotelerius [o] gives his Opinion for the latter Senſe, concluding, That for as much as waſhing in Water properly belongs to Bodies, and not to Spirits, our Author is neceſſarily to be underſtood of Metaphorical and Myſtical Baptiſm, that is, the Spiritual Effects of it, the good things which are conferred by God in Baptiſm, the chief of which is a Title to eternal Life, which the Patriarchs after Death are ſuppoſed to be made Partakers of, by believing the Word of the Goſpel then preached to them. This was that Spiritual Water in which departed Souls were baptized, as the Bodies of the living are baptized in common Water; from the Analogy of which we muſt needs conclude the Neceſſity of Water-baptiſm for all thoſe who are in a Capacity to receive it, that is, for all thoſe who are yet in the Body, in order to be made Partakers of eternal Life. God indeed may, if he pleaſes, give the Baptiſm of the Spirit, and the Baptiſm of Faith, which is the Baptiſm of the Word, without it: And ſo ſome of the Ancients ſuppoſe the Apoſtles to be baptiz'd without Water, from that Saying of our Saviour, Now ye are clean, through the Word which I have ſpoken unto you; ſo Tertullian [p] and others: (Though the more general Opinion (q) is, that they were baptized by Chriſt himſelf.) In like manner God might diſpenſe with the want of Water-baptiſm in Caſes extraordinary, and ſupply this Want either by Martyrdom, or Faith and Repentance, in ſuch Caſes where it could not be had; As I have ſhewed (in the laſt Book) the general Conſent of the Ancients [r] upon this Matter to be: But yet in all ordinary Caſes, where Water-baptiſm might be had, they concluded as generally for the Neceſſity of it, from that Aſſertion of our Saviour, Except one be born of Water and the Spirit, he cannot enter into the Kingdom of God. This was not only a Doctrine of the third or fourth Ages, as Salmaſius and Suicerus repreſent, but the Doctrine of the very firſt Ages, immediately ſucceeding the Apoſtles: For, we ſee, Hermes Paſtor, who lived in the Apoſtolical Age, founds the general neceſſity of Baptiſm upon that very Saying of our Saviour. And therefore they who repreſent this Doctrine of the neceſſity of Baptiſm, as a Novelty or an Error, firſt introduced into the Church in the Age of St. Auſtin againſt the Pelagian Hereticks, do manifeſt wrong both to the Doctrine it ſelf, and to St. Auſtin, and to the Ancients, who embraced and de-

I thought it therefore of ſome uſe to obſerve this againſt Salmaſius and Suicerus, and to add it to the Obſervations which Mr. Wall has made upon Hermes Paſtor.

SECT VII. From Juſtin Martyr.

ANOTHER Antient Writer, who lived within the Compaſs of the Second Century, was Juſtin Martyr, who very plainly ſpeaks of Infant-baptiſm as uſed from the time of the Apoſtles. For in one of his Apologies he takes Occaſion to ſay [s], There were among Chriſtians in his Time many Perſons of both Sexes, ſome ſixty, and ſome ſeventy Years old, who had been made Diſciples to Chriſt from their Infancy, and continued Virgins or Uncorrupted all their Lives. Now Juſtin wrote this Apology about the Year 148, in the middle of the ſecond Century, and therefore thoſe whom he ſpeaks of as baptized 60 or 70 Years before in their Infancy, muſt be Perſons baptized in the firſt Age, while ſome of the Apoſtles were living. In another Place of the ſame Apology [t] he urges theſe Words of our Saviour, Joh. iii. 35. Except ye be Regenerated, or born again, ye cannot enter into the Kingdom of Heaven, to prove the Neceſſity of Baptiſm. And in his Dialogue with Tripho the Jew, he ſpeaks of the whole Progeny of Adam as liable to Death [u] and the Deception of the Serpent, by reaſon of Adam's Sin, beſide the particular Guilt which each Man contracts by actual Sin in his own Perſon. Now if all Mankind be born with Original Sin, this extends to Infants, who have need of Regeneration or Baptiſm to free them from it. And this Aſſertion in Juſtin by conſequence proves the Neceſſity of Baptiſm for Infants, as well as others, that they may have Redemption from Original Sin. In another place of the ſame Dialogue [x] he makes Baptiſm parallel to Circumciſion, ſaying, we have not received that carnal Circumciſion, but the ſpiritual Circumciſion which Enoch and thoſe like him obſerved. And we have received it by Baptiſm, through the Mercy of God, becauſe we were Sinners: and it is incumbent on all Perſons to receive it in the ſame Way. Now if Baptiſm be anſwerable to Circumciſion, and ſucceed in its room, and be neceſſary to be received as the Means to obtain the true Circumciſion of the Spirit; then as Infants were admitted to Circumciſion, ſo they were to be admitted to Baptiſm, that being the ordinary Means of applying the Mercy of the Goſpel to them, and cleanſing them from the Guilt of Original Sin.

SECT. VIII. And the Author of the Recognitions, Co-temporary with Juſtin Martyr.

NEXT after Juſtin Martyr, I ſubjoin the antient Author of the Book called, The Recognitions, or Travels of St. Peter; becauſe tho' it be not the genuine Work of Clemens Romanus, whoſe Name it borrowed, yet it is an antient Writing of the ſame Age with Juſtin Martyr, mentioned by Origen in his Philocalia, and by ſome aſcribed to Bardeſanes Syrus, who lived about the Middle of the ſecond Century. This Author ſpeaks of the Neceſſity of Baptiſm in the very ſame Style as Juſtin Martyr did, making it univerſally neceſſary to purge away Original Sin, and to qualify Men for the Kingdom of Heaven. For putting an Objection by way of Queſtion, What does Baptiſm by Water [y] contribute toward the Worſhip of God? He anſwers, 1ſt, That it is fulfilling that which is the Will and Pleaſure of God. Then 2dly, The Man that is regenerated by Water, and born again to God; is thereby freed from the Weakneſs of his firſt Nativity, which comes to him by Man: And ſo he is made capable of Salvation, which he could not otherwiſe obtain. For ſo the true Prophet (meaning Chriſt) has teſtified with an Oath, ſaying, Verily I ſay unto you, except one be born again of Water, he ſhall not enter into the Kingdom of Heaven. This Author indeed does not ſpeak particularly of the Baptiſm of Infants, but his Reaſons are ſuch, as ſhew his Diſcourſe to extend to them. For if Baptiſm be neceſſary upon theſe two Accounts, Firſt to cut off Concupiſcence, or original Sin, which is the Infirmity of our firſt Birth; and then to qualify us to enter into the Kingdom of God; theſe are general Reaſons for Baptiſm, which make it neceſſary for Infants as well as any other, ſince according to this Author, they are born in Original Sin, and cannot enter into the Kingdom of God, 'till that Sin be purged away by the Waters of Baptiſm. Here then we have another Author within the Compaſs of the two firſt Ages, directly confronting that Aſſertion of Salmaſius and Suicerus, That the Doctrine of the Neceſſity of Baptiſm to Salvation, was not the Doctrine of the two firſt Ages, but only an Opinion taken up afterwards, upon which Foundation the Practice of Infant-baptiſm was introduced into the Church. For no one can, or ever did, declare himſelf plainer for the Neceſſity of Baptiſm to Salvation, than this Author does, from the Words of our Saviour Chriſt, which he interprets, as all the Ancients both before and after him did, of the ordinary Neceſſity of Water-baptiſm to Salvation: So that if Infant-baptiſm was founded, as Salmaſius pleads, upon the Opinion of the Neceſſity of Baptiſm to Salvation; this Author must be an Assertor of Infant-baptism, because he was undeniably an Assertor of the general Necessity of Baptism to Salvation. I have the rather insisted a little upon this Author's Meaning, because I know not whether his Testimony has been produced before in this Cause by any other.

SECT. IX. And Irenæus.

NOT long after the Time of Justin Martyr and the Author last mentioned, lived Irenæus Bishop of Lyons, who, as Mr. Dodwel evidently shews [z], and Dr. Cave from him [a], was born in the latter end of the first Century, about the Year 97, and was a Disciple of Polycarp, who was a Disciple of St. John. About the Year 176, he wrote his Book against Heresies, being then about eighty Years old, and died not many Years after. So that he must needs be a competent Witness of the Church's Sense and Practice upon this Point during the Second Century. Now there are three Things relating to this Matter, which appear very evident from him. 1. That the Church then believed the Doctrine of Original Sin. 2. That the ordinary Means of purging away this Sin, was Baptism. 3. That Children, as well as others, were then actually baptized to obtain Remission of Sins, and apply the Redemption of Christ to them. For the Doctrine of Original Sin; he sometimes calls it the Sin [b] of our first Parents, which was done away in Christ, by his loosing the Bonds wherein we were held and bound over unto Death: The Sin whereby we offended God [c] in the first Adam, by disobeying his Command; but were reconciled to God in the second Adam, by Obedience unto Death. So that Infants as well as others, were under the Guilt of this Sin, and had need of a Redeemer with the rest of Mankind, to deliver them from it. Now the ordinary way of being freed from this original Guilt, he says, is Baptism, which is our Regeneration [d] or new Birth unto God. And this he expressly affirms to be administred to Children as well as adult Persons. For, says he, Christ, [e] came to save all Persons by himself; all, I say, who by him are regenerated unto God, Infants and little ones, and Children, and Youths, and elder Persons. Therefore he went through the several Ages, being made an Infant for Infants, that he might sanctify Infants; and for little ones he was made a little one, to sanctify them of that Age also. No Art can elude this Passage, so long as it is owned, that Regeneration means Baptism. And for this we have the Explication of Irenæus himself, who calls Baptism by the name of Regeneration; and so all the Ancients commonly do, as Suicerus (against whom I am now disputing) scruples not to own, alledging Justin Martyr [f], Chrysostom and Gregory Nyssen to this Purpose. Which fully evinces Infant-baptism in the Age of Irenæus, that is in the 2d Century, to have been the common Practice of the Church.

SECT. X. And Tertullian.

IN the latter End of the second Century, and Beginning of the third lived Tertullian, Presbyter of the Church of Carthage; who though he had some singular Notions about this Matter, yet he sufficiently testifies the Church's Practice. In his own private Opinion he was for deferring the Baptism of Infants, especially where there was no Danger of Death, till they came to years of Discretion: But he so argues for this, as to shew us that the Practice of the Church was otherwise. For, says he, according to every one's Condition [g] and Disposition, and also their Age, the delaying of Baptism is more advantageous, especially in the case of little Children. For what Need is there that the Godfathers should be brought into Danger? Because they may either fail of their Promises by Death, or they may be deceived by a Child's proving of wicked Disposition. Our Lord says indeed, Do not forbid them to come unto me. Let them come therefore when they are grown up: Let them come when they can learn; when they can be taught whither it is they come: Let them be made Christians, when they can know Christ. What need their innocent Age make such haste to the forgiveness of Sins? Men proceed more cautiously in worldly Things: And he that is not trusted with earthly Goods, shall he be trusted with divine? Let them know how to ask Salvation, that you may appear to give it to one that asketh. For no less Reason unmarried Persons ought to be delayed, because they are exposed to Temptations, as well Virgins that are come to Maturity, as those that are in Widowhood by the Loss of a Consort, until they either marry or be confirmed in Continence. The way of Tertullian's arguing upon this Point, shews plainly that he was for introducing a new Practice; that therefore it was the Custom of the Church in his time to give Baptism to Infants, as well as adult Perſons: And his Arguments tend not only to exclude Infants, but all Perſons that are unmarried or in Widowhood, for fear of Temptation. Which are Rules that no one beſide himſelf ever thought of, much leſs were they confirmed by any Church's Practice. But even this Advice of Tertullian, as ſingular as it was, ſeems only calculated for Caſes where there was no Danger or Apprehenſions of Death: For otherwiſe he pleads as much for the neceſſity of Baptiſm as any other, both from thoſe Words of our Saviour [h], Except one be born again of Water and the Spirit, he cannot enter into the Kingdom of Heaven; as alſo from the general Corruption of Original Sin, which renders every Son of Adam unclean 'till he be made a Chriſtian: Which is only done in Baptiſm; for Men are not born Chriſtians, but made ſo. And therefore in caſe of Neceſſity, he thought every Chriſtian had Power to give Baptiſm, rather than any Perſon ſhould die without it. Which ſeems to imply, that his Opinion for delaying Baptiſm, whether of Infants or others, reſpected only ſuch Caſes, where there was no Danger of Death: But even in thoſe Caſes the Practice of the Church was otherwiſe; for ſhe baptized Infants as ſoon as they were born, though without any imminent danger of Death, as appears from Tertullian's Diſcourſe it ſelf, who laboured to make an Innovation, but without any Succeſs; for the ſame Practice continued in the Church in the following Ages.

SECT. XI. And Origen.

Origen lived in the Beginning of the third Century, and nothing can be plainer than the Teſtimonies alledged from him. In one place he ſays, Every one is born in Original Sin; which he thus proves from the Words of David, ſaying, I was conceived in Iniquity, and in Sin [i] did my Mother bear me; Shewing that every Soul that is born in the Fleſh, is polluted with the Filth of Sin and Iniquity: And that therefore it was ſaid, as we mentioned before, That none is clean from Pollution, though his Life be but of the length of one Day. Beſides all this, it may be enquired, What is the Reaſon, why the Baptiſm of the Church, which is given for the remiſſion of Sins, is by the Cuſtom of the Church given to Infants alſo? Whereas if there were nothing in Infants, that wanted Remiſſion and Indulgence, the Grace of Baptiſm might ſeem needleſs to them. In another place [k] he ſays, Infants are baptized for the Forgiveneſs of Sins. Of what Sins? Or when did they commit them? Or how can any Reaſon be given for baptizing them, but only according to that Senſe which we mentioned a little before; none is free from Pollution, though his Life be but the length of one Day upon the Earth. And for that Reaſon Infants are baptized, becauſe by the Sacrament of Baptiſm the Pollution of our Birth is taken away. And, Except one be born of Water and the Spirit, he cannot enter into the Kingdom of Heaven. Where he not only makes Infant-baptiſm the Practice of the Church, but derives it from divine Inſtitution. As he does in another Place [l] from Apoſtolical Tradition; for he affirms, That the Church received the Order of baptizing Infants from the Apoſtles. For they to whom the divine Myſteries were committed, knew that there is in all Perſons the natural Pollution of Sin, which muſt be waſhed away by Water and the Spirit; by reaſon of which the Body it ſelf is alſo called the Body of Sin.

SECT. XII. And Cyprian with the Council of Carthage under him.

IN the middle of this Age lived St. Cyprian, in whoſe time there was a Queſtion moved concerning the Day on which Infants ought to be baptized. For one Fidus an African Biſhop had ſent a Query to him upon this Caſe, whether Infants were to be baptized, if need required, as ſoon as they were born, or not till the eighth Day, according to the Rule given in the caſe of Circumciſion? To this Queſtion St. Cyprian and a Council of Sixty ſix Biſhops returned this Synodical Anſwer: As to the caſe of Infants, whereas you judge [m] that they ought not to be baptized within two or three Days after they are born; and that the Rule of Circumciſion ſhould be obſerved, ſo that none ſhould be baptized and ſanctified before the eighth Day after he is born: We were all in our Council of the contrary Opinion. It was our unanimous Reſolution and Judgment, that the Mercy and Grace of God is to be denied to none as ſoon as he is born. For if the greateſt Offenders, and they that have ſinned moſt grievouſly againſt God before, have afterward, when they come to believe, Forgiveneſs of their Sins; and no Perſon is kept off from Baptiſm and Grace; how much leſs Reaſon is there to prohibit an Infant, who being newly born has no other Sin, ſave that being deſcended from Adam according to the Fleſh, he had from his Birth contracted the Contagion of the Death antiently threatned? Who comes for that Reaſon more eaſily to receive Forgiveneſs of Sins, becauſe they are not his own, but other Men's Sins, that are forgiven him. Here we have both the Practice of the Church, and the Reaſon of it together; Infants were baptized, becauſe they were born in original Sin, and needed Baptiſm to cleanſe them from the Guilt and Pollution of it. To this we may add another Place of Cyprian, where deſcribing the great Wickedneſs of thoſe that lapſed in time of Perſecution, he thus aggravates their Crime: That nothing might be wanting [n] to fill up the Meaſure of their Wickedneſs, their little Infants were either led or carried in their Parents Arms, and loſt that which they had obtained at their firſt coming into the World, meaning the Benefits of their Baptiſm. And therefore he brings them in thus pleading againſt their Parents in an elegant Strain at the Day of Judgment: This was no Fault of ours, we did not of our own Accord forſake the Meat and Cup of the Lord, to run and partake of thoſe prophane Pollutions: 'Twas the unfaithfulneſs of others that ruined us, we had our Parents for our Murderers; they denied us God for our Father, and the Church for our Mother; for whilſt we were little, and unable to take Care of ourſelves, and ignorant of ſo great a Wickedneſs, we were enſnared by the Treachery of others, and by them drawn into a Partnerſhip of their Impieties. Here we may obſerve, that Children were made Partakers of the Euchariſt (which Cyprian calls the Meat and Drink of the Lord) and this is evident from other Paſſages in the ſame Author: Which is a further Evidence for the Practice of Infant-baptiſm; for it is certain that none but baptized Perſons were ordinarily allowed to partake of the Euchariſt at the Lord's Table. I think it needleſs to clog this Diſcourſe with any more Authorities from the Council of Eliberis, Optatus, Gregory Nazianzen, Baſil, Ambroſe, Chryſoſtom, Paulinus, the Councils of Carthage, St. Auſtin, or St. Jerom, or other Writers of the fourth Age, which the Reader may find collected together by Mr. Wall, with ſuitable Obſervations on them. It is ſufficient to my Deſign, againſt Salmaſius and Suicerus, to have proved that Infant-baptiſm was not owing to any new Doctrine begun in the third Century, but was derived from more antient Principles, and handed down through the two firſt Ages from Apoſtolical Practice.

SECT. XIII. Infant-baptiſm not to be delayed to the eighth Day after the Example of Circumciſion. Nor till three Years, as Gregory Nazianzen would have had it.

I ſhall now proceed to remark a few other things relating to the Baptiſm of Infants, among thoſe who allowed them to be capable of it from their Birth. Some there were in the African Church, as we have heard out of the laſt-mentioned Citations from Cyprian, who were ſtrictly for confining Baptiſm to the eighth Day, becauſe ſuch was the Rule in the caſe of Circumciſion. But Cyprian and the Council of Carthage anſwer all the Arguments that were brought in favour of this Novelty, which ſeems only to have been a Queſtion in Theory, and ſcarce ever reduced to Practice. The Abettors of it pleaded, that an Infant in the firſt Days after its Birth is unclean, ſo that any one of us abhors to kiſs it. To which Cyprian anſwers, We judge not [o] this to be any Reaſon to hinder the giving to it the Heavenly Grace. For it is written, to the Clean all things are clean: Nor ought any of us to abhor that which God has vouchſafed to make. To the other Pretence, that the eighth Day was obſerved in the Jewiſh Circumciſion, he anſwers, that this was only a Type going before, a Shadow and Reſemblance, but upon Chriſt's coming it was fulfilled in the Subſtance; for becauſe the eighth Day, that is, the next to the Sabbath Day, was to be the Day on which the Lord was to riſe from the Dead, and quicken us, and give us this Spiritual Circumciſion; this eighth Day, that is, the next Day to the Sabbath, or Lord's Day, was ſignified in the Type before, which Type ceaſed, when the Subſtance came, and the Spiritual Circumciſion was given to us. So that we judge that no Perſon is to be hindred from obtaining the Grace, by the Law that is now appointed; and that the Spiritual Circumciſion ought not to be reſtrained by the Circumciſion that was according to the Fleſh: But that all are to be admitted to the Grace of Chriſt; for as much as Peter ſaith in the Acts of the Apoſtles, The Lord hath ſhewed me, that no Perſon is to be called Common or Unclean. This is the only Place where-ever we read that this Queſtion was made, and after the Reſolution here given we never find that it was propoſed again. So that this Circumſtance of Time ſeems never to have prevailed in the Practice of the Church. Gregory Nazianzen had alſo a ſingular Opinion in relation to the Time of baptizing Children when there was no Danger of Death. For in that Caſe he thought it better to defer it till they were about three Years old, but in caſe of Danger to give it immediately after they were born, for fear they ſhould die unbaptized. His Words are theſe: What ſay you [p] to thoſe that are as yet Infants, and are not in a Capacity to be ſenſible either of the Grace, or of the Loſs of it? Shall we baptize them too? Yes, by all means, if any Danger ſo require it. For it is better that they ſhould be ſanctified without their own Senſe of it, than that they ſhould die unſealed and uninitiated. And the Ground of this is Circumciſion, which was given on the eighth Day, and was a Typical Seal, and was given to thoſe who had not the uſe of Reaſon: As alſo the anointing of the Door-poſts, which preſerved the Firſt-born by Things that have no Senſe. As for others, I give my Opinion that they ſhould ſtay three Years, or thereabouts, till they can hear the myſtical Words, and make Anſwers to them; and though they do not perfectly underſtand them, yet they can then frame to ſpeak them: And then you may ſanctify them in Soul and Body with the great Sacrament of Initiation. But this was a ſingular Opinion of Nazianzen, taken up upon ſome particular Reaſons, which the Church never aſſented to: And therefore I join this with that other of Fidus the African, as peculiar Fancies of private Men, which never gained any Eſteem or Credit in the publick and avowed Practice of the Church.

SECT. XIV. Yet in ſome Churches it was deferred to the Time of an approaching Feſtival.

YET in ſome Churches a Cuſtom had prevailed to defer the Baptiſm of Infants, as well as Adult Perſons, where there was no apparent Danger of Death, to the Time of ſome of the more eminent and noted Feſtivals, which were more peculiarly deſigned and ſet a-part for the ſolemn Adminiſtration of Baptiſm. Socrates [q] ſays, in Theſſaly they only baptized at Eaſter: Upon which account a great many in thoſe Parts died without Baptiſm. He does not ſay expreſly, that this was the caſe of Children: But there are ſome Reaſons to incline one to believe, that it related to them as well as others. For both in the French and Spaniſh Councils there are Canons which order the Baptiſm of Children to be adminiſtred only at Eaſter, except in caſe of Neceſſity and imminent danger of Death. In the Council of Auxerre [r] it was decreed for the French Churches, That no Children ſhould be baptized at any other time ſave on the ſolemn Feſtival of Eaſter, except ſuch as were near Death, whom they called Grabatarii, becauſe they were baptized on a Sick-bed. And if any one contumaciouſly in Contempt of this Decree offered their Children to Baptiſm in any of their Churches, they ſhould not be received. And if any Presbyter preſumed to receive them againſt this Order, he ſhould be Suſpended three Months from the Communion of the Church. The ſecond Council of Bracara [s] alſo ſpeaks of the like Practice in the Spaniſh Churches, ordering that in the middle of Lent, ſuch Infants as were to be baptized at Eaſter, ſhould be preſented twenty Days before to undergo the Purgation, or Preparation of Exorciſm. St. Auſtin alſo ſpeaks of Children, Infants [t], Little ones, Sucklings hanging on their Mothers Breaſts, coming at Eaſter to be baptized among adult Perſons; whence Palm-Sunday, or the Sunday before Eaſter, had the Name of Octavæ Infantium, the Octave of Infants, upon their Account. St. Ambroſe alſo [u] ſpeaks of great numbers of Infants coming at Eaſter to be baptized: This, ſays he, is the Paſchal Gift: Pious Fathers, and holy Mothers bring their newborn Progeny in great Multitudes by Faith to the holy Font, from whoſe Womb being regenerated under the Tree of Faith, they ſhine with the innocent Ornament of Lights and Tapers. Theſe are abundant Proofs, that though in Caſes of Extremity Children might receive Baptiſm at any time, yet in other Caſes where there was no viſible Appearance or Danger of Death, their Baptiſm in many places was deferred till the Eaſter-Feſtival, as well as that of adult Perſons.

SECT. XV. A Reſolution of ſome Queſtions. Whether Children might be baptized, when only one Parent was Chriſtian?

WHILST I am upon the Subject of Infant-baptiſm, it will not be improper to reſolve certain Caſes and Queſtions, that may be put concerning it, ſo far as they are capable of being reſolved from the Practice of the Church, or Judgment of the antient Writers. One is concerning ſuch Children, who had only one Parent Chriſtian, and the other a Jew or an Heathen: Theſe were reckoned capable of Baptiſm upon the Right of one Parent being Chriſtian. For ſo it was reſolved in the fourth Council of Toledo [x], in the Caſe of ſuch Women that had Jews for their Husbands, that the Children that were born of them ſhould follow the Faith and Condition of the Mother: And ſo on the other hand, they who had unbelieving Mothers, and believing Fathers, ſhould follow the Chriſtian Religon, and not the Jewiſh Superſtition.

ANOTHER Caſe was concerning the Children, whoſe Parents were under Excommunication and the Church's Cenſures. St. Auſtin had occaſion to conſider this Caſe upon the account of one Auxilius, a young Biſhop, who in a Fit of ungoverned Zeal, had raſhly Excommunicated one Classicianus, and together with him, laid his whole Family under an Anathema and Interdict. Which was a Practice, that however some later Popes have dealt much in, the Ancients were not acquainted with. He also seems to have forbidden any Children to be baptized, who were born in the Family during this Interdict. Upon which St. Austin took occasion to write to him, and expostulate with him upon the Reasons of these Proceedings, desiring to be informed [y] upon what Grounds and Authority of Reason, or Testimony of Scripture he could confirm his Opinion; by what Right a Son was to be anathematized for the Father's Crime, or a Wife for her Husband's, or a Servant for his Master's; or a Child not yet born, if he happened to be born in the House whilst it lay under such an Interdict; why it should not have the benefit of the Laver of Regeneration in danger of Death. In corporal Punishments, he owns, sometimes it was otherwise: For God thought fit to punish some Despisers, with their whole Families, though they were not accessory to the Contemner's Crimes, that by the death of mortal Bodies, which must otherwise have shortly died, he might strike Terror into the Living: But he never dealt thus in spiritual Punishments, which affect the Soul; but the Soul that sinneth, it shall die. And therefore St. Austin for his own part declares, he never durst use Excommunication to this Purpose, though he was never so highly provoked by the most villainous Actions of any Men against the Church; because if any one should ask him a Reason of such his Practice, and oblige him to shew the Justice of his Proceeding, he freely owns, he could find nothing to answer him. Whence I think we may fairly conclude, that the Excommunication of a Parent did not deprive the Child of his Right to Baptism: And though there were some who made a Stretch upon Church Power in this Case, yet their Actions were so far from being generally approved, or authorized by any Rule, that they were rather thought to deserve a Censure. The Reader that would know how the Reformed Churches have resolved the same Case, about the admission of the Children of excommunicated Persons to Baptism, may consult another Discourse [z] which I have formerly had occasion to write in defence of the Church, where this Case is more particularly considered and resolved, upon the Principles and Practice of some of the most eminent Churches of the Reformation.

ANOTHER Question sometimes agitated in the primitive Church, was concerning such Children who were either exposed, or redeemed from the Barbarians, whose Parents were unknown, and consequently it was utterly uncertain whether they were ever baptized or not. This was a Case that often hapned in Africk, where the Christians bordered upon several barbarous Nations: And it was thus resolved upon a Consultation in one of the Councils of Carthage: That all such Infants [a] as had no certain Witnesses to testify that they were baptized, neither could they testify for themselves, by reason of their Age, that the Sacrament had been given them, that such should without any Scruple be baptized, lest an Hesitation in that case should deprive them of the purgation of the Sacrament. And this Resolution was made at the Instance of the Legates of the Churches of Mauritania, who informed the Council, that many such Children were redeemed by them from the Barbarians. In which case it was uncertain whether their Parents were Heathens or Christians.

BUT (as in some Cases) if it plainly appeared, that the Parents of Infants, who by some providential Means fell into the Hands of Christians, were mere Jews or Pagans: Yet in such Cases, Baptism was not denied to the Infants, because they were now become the possession of Christians, who undertook to be their Sponsors, and answer for their Education. This is evident from St. Austin [b], who says it in express Terms: This Grace is sometimes vouchsafed to the Children of Infidels, that they are baptized, when by some Means through the secret Providence of God they happen to come into the Hands of pious Christians. Sometimes they were bought or redeemed with Money, sometimes made lawful Captives in War, and sometimes taken up by any charitable Persons [c], when they were exposed by their Parents: In all which Cases, either the Faith and Promises of the Sponsors, or the Faith of the Church in general, who was their common Mother, and whose Children they were now supposed to be, was sufficient to give them a Title to Christian Baptism. The holy Virgins of the Church did many times in such Exigencies become their Sureties, and take care of their religious Education. And ſo it happened, as is obſerved by St. Ambroſe, or whoever was the Author of the excellent Book [d] de Vocatione Gentium, that many who were deſerted by the Impiety of their Kindred, were taken care of by the good Offices of others, and brought to be baptized by Strangers, when they were neglected by their neareſt Relations. Which was ſo general and charitable a Practice among the Ancients, that ſome learned Modern [e] Writers ſpeak of it with great Commendation upon that account, and tell us ſuch Children have a Right to Baptiſm, after the ſame manner that Abraham's Servants bought with his Money had to Circumciſion, as well as thoſe that were born in his Houſe. And they concur ſo far in aſſerting it to be the common Practice beyond all Controverſy in the primitive Church, as to ſay, That St. Auſtin made uſe of it as an unconteſted Argument to prove Free-grace and Election againſt the Pelagians. Which I note only here by the way, for the ſake of ſome miſtaken Perſons, who impute the Encouragement of the ſame Practice in the Engliſh Church, not to her Charity, but rather to a Fault and Error in her Conſtitution.

THERE is one Queſtion more concerning ſuch Infants as were born while their Parents were Heathens: But of theſe there was no Doubt ever made; for as ſoon as the Parents were baptized themſelves, they were obliged to take care that their Wives and Children and whole Families ſhould be baptized likewiſe. To which purpoſe there is a Law in the Juſtinian Code [f] inflicting a ſevere Penalty upon them in caſe of Neglect or Prevarication in this Matter. For it is there enacted, That ſuch Pagans as were yet unbaptized, ſhould preſent themſelves, with their Wives and Children, and all that appertained to them, in the Church, and there they ſhould cauſe their little Ones immediately to be baptized, and the reſt as ſoon as they were taught the Scriptures according to the Canons. But if any Perſons for the ſake of a publick Office or Dignity, or to get an Eſtate, received a fallacious Baptiſm themſelves, but in the mean time left their Wives, or Children, or Servants, or any that were Retainers or near Relations to them, in their antient Error, their Goods in that caſe are ordered to be confiſcated, and their Perſons puniſhed by a competent Judge, and excluded from bearing any Office in the Common-wealth. Photius repeats this Law in his Nomocanon, and adds to it another of the ſame nature, concerning the Samaritans, that tho' they themſelves were not to be baptized till they had been two Years Catechumens, yet their little Ones, who were not capable of Inſtruction, might be admitted to Baptiſm without any ſuch Delay or Prorogation. Which Law is now extant among Juſtinian's [g] Novels. From all which it appears, that as ſoon as any Jews or Heathens were either baptized themſelves, or had only taken upon them the State of Catechumens, their Children were made capable of Baptiſm, and accordingly by Law required to be baptized. Thus much of Infants, and the ſeveral Caſes I have met with in the Writings of the Ancients, relating to their Baptiſm.

CHAP. V.

Of the Baptiſm of Adult Perſons.

SECT. I. No adult Perſons to be baptized without previous Inſtruction to qualify them to anſwer for themſelves.

THE other ſort of Perſons on whom Baptiſm was conferred, were adult Perſons, who were grown up to Years of Underſtanding, and who in thoſe Days made up the main Body of the baptized. Theſe were uſually Converts from Judaiſm or Gentiliſm, who before they could be admitted to Baptiſm, were obliged to ſpend ſome Time in the State of Catechumens, to qualify them to make their Profeſſions of Faith and a Chriſtian Life in their own Perſons. For without ſuch perſonal Profeſſions, there was ordinarily no admiſſion of them to the Privilege of Baptiſm. The Time of their Inſtruction, and the Subſtance and Manner of it has already been conſidered particularly in the laſt Book: All therefore I have farther to obſerve concerning them here, is in relation to ſome ſpecial Caſes, which we find determined in the Canons of the antient Councils, when becauſe great Multitudes were baptized at riper Years, the Church had Occaſion to conſider many Caſes which are ſcarce to be met with in the Rules of later Ages.

ONE

SECT. II.
Yet Dumb Perſons allowed to be baptized in ſome certain Caſes.

ONE of theſe doubtful Caſes was in reference to Dumb Perſons, who were incapacitated at the time of Baptiſm from anſwering for themſelves. In this Caſe, if Perſons had deſired to be baptized before this Infirmity came upon them, or if they could by ſufficient Signs ſignify their preſent Deſire, the Church favourably accepted their Requeſt, and admitted them to the Privilege of Baptiſm. The firſt Council of Orange [a] has a Canon in favour of ſuch Perſons, both with reſpect to Baptiſm and Penance; for it decrees, that a Perſon who is ſuddenly ſtruck Speechleſs, may either be baptized, or admitted to Penance, if it appears by the Teſtimony of others, that he had any ſuch Will or Deſire before he became dumb; or if in the time of this Misfortune he could make Signs to expreſs his preſent Deſire and Intention. In the African Code there is a Canon to the ſame purpoſe, that Men [b] ſo ſick that they cannot anſwer for themſelves, may be baptized, if their Friends who attended them in Danger, do teſtify their Deſire of Baptiſm. And among the Canonical Anſwers of Timotheus of Alexandria, there is one of the like nature. For the Queſtion is put [c], Whether if a Catechumen be ſo diſordered in his Mind that he cannot make Profeſſion of his Faith, he may be baptized, notwithſtanding this Infirmity? And the Anſwer is, He may, if he be not poſſeſſed. We have an Inſtance of this Caſe actually verify'd in the Baptiſm of an African Negro-Slave at Carthage, whom his Maſter had cauſed to be inſtructed among the Catechumens, and prepared him among the Competentes for Baptiſm. He had made his Profeſſion of Faith and the uſual Renunciations publickly in the Church, as was cuſtomary for the Candidates of Baptiſm to do, before they came to the Baptiſtery to conſummate the Myſtery. But juſt before the Time of Baptiſm he fell ſick of a Fever, which made him ſpeechleſs. However he was baptized; others anſwering in his Name, as if it had been for an Infant. Ferrandus, who tells the Story, had ſome Doubts concerning this Baptiſm, which he communicated to Fulgentius Biſhop of Ruſpa, who gave him a conſolatory Anſwer to this effect: That this Man [d] had all the Conditions required by our Saviour for Adult Perſons, which were, That they ſhould believe and be baptized. Faith and the Profeſſion of it is the Act of the Man: The baptizing him is only the Act of the Miniſter. And though this Man had not his Senſes when the Miniſter performed his Act, yet he had when he himſelf performed his own. We believe indeed, that none but Infants are ſaved by the Faith of thoſe that bring them, and that at the Age of Reaſon a Man's own Confeſſion is required: But this Man made his Profeſſion whilſt he had his Senſes, and was baptized whilſt he was yet alive. From whence he concludes, that there was no Reaſon to doubt of his Salvation, becauſe he had done all that was neceſſary on his part, and was baptized in the Manner that in this caſe the Canons had appointed. Let me add to all this, how it is that Albaſpinæus and many others underſtand that Canon of the Council of Eliberis [e], which ſpeaks of Catechumens deſerting their Station, and forſaking the Church for a long time, yet at laſt deſiring to be baptized: In this caſe, tho' they were Speechleſs, they might be baptized, if either any of the Clergy, or other faithful Witneſſes could teſtify that they deſired to be made Chriſtians; becauſe their Crimes were committed whilſt they were in the Old Man: Or, as other Copies read it, becauſe they ſeemed to have relinquiſhed and bid adieu to the Old Man: that is, in their former State of Sin and Natural Corruption. And this was but the very ſame Privilege as was allowed Men in the buſineſs of Penance, mentioned in the forecited Council of Orange, and alſo the fourth Council of Carthage, where it is ſaid [f], That if a Lapſer deſires to be admitted to Penance in time of Sickneſs, and unfortunately becomes Speechleſs, or falls into a Phrenzy, while the Prieſt who is ſent for is coming to him, they who heard his Deſire ſhall teſtify for him, and he ſhall be admitted to Penance: And if he ſeems to be at the point of Death, he ſhall be reconciled by the Impoſition of Hands, and have the Euchariſt poured into his Mouth. But if he recovers, the Witneſſes ſhall acquaint him, that his Petition was granted, and then he ſhall ſubmit himſelf to the ordinary Rules of Penance, ſo long as the Prieſt who admitted him to Penance ſhall think fit in his Diſcretion. Now it is probable, that after the ſame manner, Perſons who were baptized in ſuch a Condition, when they recovered were obliged to make their Profeſſions, as was uſual in Baptiſm, when afterwards they received the Impoſition of Hands in Confirmation. But as I cannot affirm this upon the certain Evidence of any Rule or Canon, as in the other case of Penance, but only judge by parity of Reason, I will not be positive, but leave every one to enjoy his own Opinion.

SECT. III. And Energumens in Cases of Extremity.

ANOTHER Question was sometimes raised about the Energumens, or Persons possessed by Evil Spirits, whether during the time of their Possession it was proper to give them Baptism. The Council of Eliberis orders them to be deferred, till they were set free and cured; but yet in case of Extremity and visible Appearance of Death [g] appoints them to be baptized. The first Council [h] of Orange seems to have allowed it not only in absolute Necessity, but in the Remissions and Intervals of their Distemper; for it orders, that such Catechumens as were possessed, should be baptized, according as their Necessity required, or Opportunity permitted. In the Canons of Timothy Bishop of Alexandria, the same Question is put, but resolved a little differently: If Baptism be desired for a Catechumen that is possessed, What shall be done? To which the Answer is, Let him be baptized at the Hour of Death, and not otherwise [i]. So likewise in the Constitutions [k] under the Name of the Apostles: If any one is possessed with a Devil, let him be taught the Principles of Piety, but not be receiv'd to Communion till he is cleansed: Yet if he be under the pressure of imminent Death, let him be received. Some understand this of being received to the Communion of the Eucharist, but it is plain the Author means it of being received to the Communion of the Church by Baptism: For he is there giving Rules concerning Persons to be baptized, and describing their necessary Qualifications; among which this is one, That Energumens shall be cleansed before they be admitted to Communion, except at the Hour of Death, where Necessity gave them a Dispensation. And this was the ancient Rule in the time of Cyprian, who says, that they who were possessed with unclean Spirits, were baptized in time of Sickness: And many times this Benefit followed from it, that though some of those for want of Faith were still vexed [l] with unclean Spirits; the true Energy of Baptism, which was to deliver Men from the Power of the Devil, failing in some by their own Default and Weakness of Faith: Yet in others it was found true by Experience, that they who were baptized in time of Sickness and urgent Necessity, were thereby deliver'd from the unclean Spirit, with which they were before possessed, and thenceforward lived a very laudable and reputable Life in the Church, and made a daily Proficiency and Increase in heavenly Grace by the Augmentation of their Faith. And on the contrary it oftentimes happened, that some of those who were baptized in Health, when they afterward fell into Sin, were tormented with the unclean Spirit returning upon them: Whence it was apparent, that the Devil was excluded in Baptism by the Faith of the Believer, but if afterwards his Faith failed, the Devil returned to his old Possession. From this Discourse of Cyprian we learn, not only that Energumens in time of Extremity were admitted to Baptism, but that Baptism in such Cases was many times a peculiar Benefit to them, whilst it deliver'd them from the Possession of unclean Spirits, which could not before be cast out by any Power of the Exorcists, though in those Days the Power of Exorcism was a miraculous Gift of the Holy Ghost.

SECT. IV. No Slave to be baptized without the Testimony of his Master.

ANOTHER Observation to be made upon the Baptism of Adult Persons, is in relation to such as were Slaves to Christian Masters. For we find by the Author of the Constitutions under the Name of the Apostles, that in the Examination of the several Qualifications of those that offered themselves to Baptism, one part of the Enquiry was, Whether they were Slaves or Freemen: If they were Slaves to an Heathen, they were only taught their Obligations to please their Master, that the Word of God might not be blasphemed; and the Master had no farther concern in their Baptism, as being himself an Infidel: But if the Master were a Christian, then the Testimony of the Master was first to be required [m] concerning the Life and Conversation of his Slave, before he could be admitted to the Privilege of Baptism. If he gave a laudable Account of him, he was received: If otherwise, he was rejected, till he approved himself to his Master. So far in those Days it was thought necessary and serviceable to Religion to grant Chri-ſtian Maſters a Power over their Slaves, that without their Teſtimony and Approbation they could not be accepted as fit Candidates of Baptiſm. Not that this was intended to countenance any tyrannical Power in Chriſtian Maſters, to debar their Slaves of Baptiſm, and deny them the Privilege and Benefits of the Chriſtian Religion (which is a piece of barbarous Cruelty and ſpiritual Tyranny over Mens Souls, unknown to former Ages) but the Deſign was to preſerve the purity of Religion, and keep back hypocritical and prophane Pretenders from the Holy Myſteries; the over-haſty admiſſion of whom might prove a Scandal and Diſgrace to the Profeſſion, if Perſons of a doubtful Life were indiſcriminately and indifferently admitted to the Sacred Rites of it. This Caution wiſely lodged an Uſeful Power in the Hands of Chriſtian Maſters, which Prudence and Charity directed them to uſe ſoberly to Edification, and not to Deſtruction. And Experience prov'd it to be an Uſeful Rule: For it both made the Maſters zealous for the Salvation of their Slaves, as we have ſeen in the Inſtance of the African Negro mentioned in Fulgentius; and alſo made the Slaves ſincere in their Profeſſions and Pretences to Religion, when they knew they could not be accepted as Real Converts, worthy of Baptiſm, without the corroborating Teſtimony of their Maſters. There were alſo Laws of State obliging all Maſters to take Care of their Families, ſo far as to ſee that every individual Perſon, Slaves as well as Children, were made Chriſtians, and in default of this, ſome Penalties were annexed, depriving the Maſters of certain Privileges in the Common-wealth, if they were found either remiſs, or acting by Colluſion in this part of their Duty [n]. So that all imaginable Obligation was laid upon Maſters, both in point of Intereſt, Duty, and Charity, to take Care of the Inſtruction of their Slaves, and bring them with their own Teſtimonials to Chriſtian Baptiſm.

SECT. V.

Yet Baptiſm to be a voluntary Act, and no One to be compelled by Force to receive it.

YET becauſe Baptiſm was to be a voluntary Act in Adult Perſons, ſome Laws were made againſt compelling any one by Force to receive it. In the Fourth Council of Toledo a Canon was made to this purpoſe concerning the Jews, who had ſometimes been drawn by Force to be baptized againſt their Will, and it was order'd by the Synod, That thenceforth no one ſhould be compelled by Force to profeſs [o] the Chriſtian Faith. For God hath Mercy on whom He will have Mercy, and whom he will He hardeneth. For ſuch are not to be ſaved againſt their Will, but of their own free Conſent, that the Form or Method of their Juſtification may be perfect. For as Man periſhed by his own free Will, obeying the Serpent, ſo every Man is ſaved (when he is called by the Grace of God) by his own voluntary Act of Faith, and Converſion of his own Mind. Therefore they are not to be compelled by Force, but to be perſuaded by their own free Will to be converted. But as to thoſe who have heretofore been forced to embrace Chriſtianity, as was done in the Time of the Religious Prince Siſebutus, or Siſenandus, for as much as they have been Partakers of the Sacraments, and have received the Grace of Baptiſm, and the Unction of Chriſm, and the Communion of the Body and Blood of the Lord, therefore they ought to be obliged to hold the Faith which they were compelled by Force or Neceſſity to receive, leſt the Name of the Lord ſhould be blaſphemed, and the Faith which they have received be vilified and expoſed to Contempt. By this we learn that Baptiſm was always to be a voluntary Act in Adult Perſons, and none were to be compelled againſt their own Wills to receive it: And though the Church did not reſcind ſuch Actions as were done againſt this Rule, yet ſhe did not approve them, but thought them worthy of Her Cenſure, and unfit to be made a Precedent for the future. That which looks moſt like Force in this caſe allowed by Law, was the Orders of Juſtinian mentioned [p] before, one of which appoints the Heathens, and the other the Samaritans to be baptized, with their Wives and Children and Servants, under pain of Confiſcation. But even theſe Laws did not compel them to be baptized againſt their Wills, but allowed them two Years time to be Catechumens, and admitted none but ſuch as made a voluntary Profeſſion of their Faith and Repentance. For the Penalties were only deſigned to prevent Fraud and Prevarications, in ſuch as pretended to receive Baptiſm themſelves, but in the mean time took no Care to have their Families made Chriſtian: Againſt whom the Wiſdom of the State then thought no Laws ſevere enough could be enacted. So that theſe Laws were tempered with the greateſt Prudence, between the Extreams of Rigor and Remiſneſs, that Men might be made ſenſible on the one hand of their Obligations to become Chriſtians, and yet none have Reaſon to complain on the other hand, that they were forced by Violence to embrace a Religion againſt their Wills, which they could not approve and aſſent to. For the Penalties, as I ſaid, were only deſigned to chaſtize the hypocritical Practices and fraudulent Remiſneſs of manifeſt Prevaricators. And it were to be wiſhed, that all Civil Governments and States in all Ages would enact ſuch Laws and put them duly in Execution, againſt ſuch ſort of Chriſtians, who inſtead of encouraging their Slaves to be baptized, are the only Obſtacles to hinder and deprive them of the Benefit of Chriſtian Baptiſm.

SECT. VI.

What Perſons were rejected from Baptiſm: With a particular Account of ſome certain Trades and Vocations, which kept Men from it: Such were Image-makers and Stage-players.

I have one Thing more to note concerning Adult Perſons, who might or might not be admitted to Baptiſm: And that is, That all ſuch Heathens as made their Livelihood out of any ſcandalous Trades or Profeſſions, which could not be allowed by the Rules of Chriſtianity, were rejected from Baptiſm, till they ſolemnly promiſed to bid Adieu, and actually forſook ſuch Vocations. The Author of the Apoſtolical Conſtitutions ſpecifies ſeveral of this nature. Such as the πορνοβοσκοὶ, Panders or Procurers; πόρναι, Whores; εἰδωλοποιοὶ, Makers of Images or Idols [q]; againſt whom Tertullian has alſo a particular Diſſertation, where he cenſures this Trade as inconſiſtent with the Profeſſion of Chriſtianity, telling Men, that by this Art they made the Devils their Alumni, their Pupils, to whom they were a ſort of Foſter-Fathers, whilſt they furniſhed out Materials to carry on their Service. And with what Confidence, [r] ſays he, can any Man exorciſe his own Alumni, thoſe Devils, whoſe Service he makes his own Houſe a Shop or Armoury to maintain? Reflecting on this unlawful Trade of making Images for the Idol-Temples. Next to theſe in the Conſtitutions follow οἱ ἐπὶ σκηνῆς, Actors and Stage-players, who could not ſtick to that Profeſſion, and be admitmitted to Chriſtian Baptiſm, becauſe a great deal both of Lewdneſs and Idolatry was actually committed and encouraged by ſuch as made a Livelihood of that Profeſſion. The Canons therefore forbad all ſuch to be baptized, and excommunicated thoſe that fell to the Trade again after Baptiſm. If a Soothſayer or a Stage-player, ſays the Council of Eliberis [s], have a Mind to become Believers, that is, to be baptized, let them be received, on condition they firſt bid Adieu to their Arts, and return not to them again. Which if they attempt to do againſt this Prohibition, they ſhall be caſt out of the Church. In like manner the third Council of Carthage appoints all ſuch [t] to be excommunicated, and not to be reconciled or received again to favour but upon their Converſion. And in the time of Cyprian, not only publick Actors, but private Teachers and Maſters of this ſcandalous Art were debarred the Communion of the Church: As appears from Cyprian's Anſwer to Eucratius, who put this Queſtion to him, Whether [u] a Stage-player might communicate, who continued to follow that diſhonourable Trade by teaching Children that pernicious Art, which he was Maſter of? To which Cyprian replies, That it was neither agreeable to the Majeſty of God, nor the Diſcipline of the Goſpel, that the Modeſty and Honour of the Church ſhould be defiled with ſo baſe and infamous a Contagion. For if the Law prohibited Men to wear Womens Apparel, and laid a Curſe upon all that did it; how much greater was the Crime, not only to wear their Cloaths, but to expreſs their looſe, and wanton, and effeminate Geſtures, by teaching this Immodeſt Art to others? Indeed, this kind of Life was ſcandalous even among the wiſe and ſober part of the very Heathens; Tertullian obſerves [x], that they who profeſſed theſe Arts were noted with Infamy, degraded and denied many Privileges, driven from Court, from Pleading, from the Senate, from the Order of Knighthood, and all other Honours in the Roman City and Commonwealth. Which is alſo confirmed by St. Auſtin [y], who ſays, No Actor was ever allowed to enjoy the Freedom, or any other honourable Privilege of a Citizen of Rome. Therefore ſince this was ſo infamous and ſcandalous a Trade even among the Heathens, it is no wonder the Church would admit none of this Calling to Baptiſm, without obliging them firſt to bid Adieu to ſo ignominious a Profeſſion. To have done otherwiſe had been to expoſe Herſelf to Reproach, and to have given Occaſion to the Adverſary to blaſpheme, if Men of ſuch lewd and profligate Practices had been admitted to the Privileges of the Church, who were excluded from the Liberties of the City, and Honours of the Commonwealth.

SECT. VII. And Gladiators, Charioteers, and other Gamesters.

THE next that are prohibited in the Conſtitutions are Charioteers and Gladiators [z], and Racers, and Curators of the Common Games, Practiſers in the Olympick Games, Minſtrels, Harpers, Dancers, Vintners, and ſuch like, who are commanded either to quit theſe Callings, or to be rejected from Baptiſm. It may ſeem a little ſtrange, that ſome of theſe Callings, which ſeem indifferent in their own Nature, and are now commonly allowed, ſhould then be thought juſt Reaſons to debar Men from Baptiſm. But it is to be ſuppoſed, that theſe Arts in the Time of Heatheniſm were inſtrumental in carrying on Idolatry, Lewdneſs and Prophaneneſs, and therefore by the Ancients, whoſe Diſcipline was exact, were thought improper to be allowed in the Practice of a Chriſtian. The Circenſian Games were in Honour of the Gods, and therefore to be concerned in them as a Charioteer, was ſtill to partake in Idolatry. Upon which Account the firſt Council of Arles [a] ordered all ſuch to be Excommunicated as continued after Baptiſm in this Service. And there is a remarkable Story told by St. Jerom [b] in the Life of Hilarion, concerning one of theſe Charioteers, an Heathen of the City of Gaza, who being ſtruck by the Devil with a dead Palſie, as he was driving his Chariot, ſo that he could not move his Hand, nor Neck, but only his Tongue to Prayer: In this Condition he was brought in a Bed to Hilarion, who told him, That he could not be healed, unleſs he believed in Jeſus, and promiſed to bid adieu to his former Trade. The Man immediately upon this believed, renounced, and was healed, rejoycing more for the Salvation of his Soul than his Body. This Calling miniſtred to Idolatry, and upon that ſcore a Renunciation of it was ſo preciſely exacted of Men at their Baptiſm. The Gladiators Art was Infamous for its Barbarity and Cruelty, involving Men in Murder and Bloodſhed, and therefore utterly inconſiſtent with the Rules of Chriſtianity. The Racers and Curators of the Publick Games, and Olympick Combatants, were all concerned in Idolatrous Practices: For theſe Games alſo were held in the Name and to the Honour of ſome Idol-God; which Calling was therefore to be renounced, as an Appendage to Idolatry, before Men came to Baptiſm. For the other Trades of Minſtrels, Harpers, Dancers, &c. beſides their miniſtring to Levity, Vanity, and Luxury, they were alſo employed in Idol-Worſhip and other Prophaneneſs, which ſeems to have been the principal Reaſon of making ſuch a ſtrict Prohibition of them in the ſubſequent Life of every Chriſtian.

SECT. VIII. Aſtrologers and Practicers of other curious Arts.

THE next ſort of Perſons mentioned in the Conſtitutions, as unworthy of Baptiſm, are laſcivious Perſons, with all Practiſers of curious Arts [c], as Magicians, Inchanters, Aſtrologers, Diviners, Magical Charmers, Idle and Wandering Beggars, Makers of Amulets and Phylacteries, and ſuch as dealt in Heatheniſh Luſtrations, Soothſayers, and Obſervers of Signs and Omens, Interpreters of Palpitations, Obſervers of Accidents in meeting others, making Divination thereupon, as upon a Blemiſh in the Eye, or in the Feet, Obſervers of the Motion of Birds, or Weeſels, Obſervers of Voices and Symbolical Sounds. All theſe are appointed to be examined and tryed a conſiderable Time, whether they would relinquiſh their Arts or not. If they did, they might be received; if not, they were to be rejected from Baptiſm. The Names of theſe curious Arts, which I have expreſſed in the Margin, are ſome of them difficult to be underſtood. The λώταγες are explained by Chryſoſtom [d] to be idle wandering Beggars, given to ſpend what they got in Gaming and Luxury. But others make them a ſort of Diviners, or Fortune-tellers, like our Gipſies, which is moſt agreeable to this Place. The φυλάμματα were the ſame with the Phylacteria, which were Amulets made of Ribbands, with a Text of Scripture, or ſome other Charm of Words written in them, and hanged about the Neck to cure Diſeaſes, and preſerve Men from Danger, whence they had the Name of Phylacteries or Preſervatives. Now this was a piece of Heatheniſh Superſtition and Idolatry, which ſtuck cloſeſt to new Converts, and was moſt difficult to be cured. Therefore we find the antient Canons and Fathers very ſevere in their Cenſures and Invectives againſt it. The Council of Laodicea condemns Clergymen that pretended to make ſuch Phylacteries, which were truly the Bonds and Fetters of their own Souls, and orders all ſuch as wore them, to be caſt out [e] of the Church. The Council of Trullo [f] decrees Six Years Penance for ſuch Offenders. St. Cryſoſtom [g] declaims againſt it as great Idolatry, whatever little Pleas were brought in Favour of it. The Uſe of Amulets to hang about the Neck, ſays he, is Idolatry, though they that gain by it offer a thouſand Philoſophical Arguments to defend it, saying, We only pray to God, and do nothing more; and, the Old Woman that made them was a Christian and a Believer; with other such like Excuses: Notwithstanding all which he threatens to excommunicate all such as were found to practise it. So that as this was a Crime deserving Excommunication in all that were already baptized, it was thought also a just Reason to prohibit any from coming to Baptism who would not first promise to renounce it.

SECT. IX. Frequenters of the Publick Games and Theatre.

ANOTHER sort of Persons whom the Author of the Constitutions excludes from the Privilege of Baptism, are Frequenters of the Publick Games and Theatre. If any Man's Mind [h] be addicted to the Madness of the Theatre, or Huntings, or Horse-Racings, or other Gymnastical Sports and Exercises, let him either leave them off, or be rejected from Baptism. The Learned Hieronymus Mercurialis [i] has an Observation, that will explain the Reason of this Prohibition. For in his curious Discourse De Arte Gymnastica, he observes these several sorts of Heathen Games and Plays were instituted upon a Religious Account, in Honour of the Gods, and Men thought they were doing a grateful Thing to them, whilst they were engaged in such Exercises. Therefore a Christian could not be present at them as a Spectator, without partaking in some measure in the Idolatry of them. Besides, there was a great deal of Barbarity and Cruelty, as well as Lewdness and Prophaneness committed in many of them, which it did not become a Christian Eye to behold with Pleasure and Approbation. The Theatre was looked upon as the Devil's Propriety, and so he himself termed it, as we learn from that famous Story in Tertullian [k], where speaking of a Christian Woman, who went to the Theatre, and returned possessed with a Devil, he says, the unclean Spirit being asked by the Exorcist, How he durst presume to make such an attempt upon a Believer? replied confidently, That he had a Right to her, because he found her upon his own Ground. For these Reasons the antient Canons and Fathers are so frequently severe in their Invectives against all Theatrical Exercises, not only in the Actors, but also in the Spectators, declaring them to be incompatible with the Piety and Purity of a Christian Life. And upon this account Men were obliged to renounce them before they could be admitted to Baptism. But of this something more when we come to the Form of Renunciation.

SECT. X. In what Cases the Military Life might unqualify Men for Baptism.

THE several sorts of Persons hitherto mentioned, were excluded from Baptism without Exception: But there are two other Kinds or States of Life, that must be considered with some Distinction, that is, the Military Life, and the State of Concubinage, as it is called sometimes in the Civil Law and antient Canons. Some Learned Persons [l] are of Opinion, That the Antients had so much a Dislike to the Military Life, as to excommunicate such as bore Arms after Baptism: Which they affirm upon the Authority of the Nicene Fathers, to whom they impute it as an Error, That they condemned absolutely the Military Life as unlawful, which St. John Baptist had approved. But this Charge is grounded merely upon a Mistake and Misunderstanding of the Meaning of those Fathers, who had no Intent to condemn the Military Life in general, but only as it might happen to be unlawful in some particular Circumstances and Cases. The Words of the Canon referred to are these: If any, who at first by the Grace of God made Confession [m] of the Faith, and cast away the Military Girdle, afterward return to their Vomit again, so as to give Money and buy a Place in the Army, let them be Ten Years among the Prostrators, after they have been three Years among the Hearers. The Generality of Interpreters take this to refer peculiarly to the Times of Licinius the Persecutor, who by an Edict had ordered all such Christian Soldiers to be cashiered, as would not Sacrifice to the Gods; upon which many Christians in the Army threw away their Girdles, and quitted the Military Life. But afterward some of them returned again to it upon the Conditions proposed, doing Sacrifice, and committing Idolatry, and giving Money to regain their Places; against whose Prevarication and Revolt the Discipline of this Canon was intended. So Balsamon and Zonaras among the old Expositors; and so Grotius [n] and Ziegler [o], Silvius and Coriolanus, Binnius, and Bishop Beverege, with many other Modern Writers. Albaspinæus thinks it peculiarly respected such Penitents only, as vowed to renounce all secular Business and Employments, and to live in a State of perpetual Penance, but after [p] returned to a secular Life, and took upon them Civil Offices again, which in the Imperial Law and Canons of the Church are sometimes called by the Name of Militia Palatina. And Salmasius advances [q] an Opinion not much different from this. However it is agreed on all hands, that the Council of Nice made no general Prohibition of the Military Life, but only in some such special Cases. There is therefore no Reason to conclude from hence, that they esteemed the Vocation of a Soldier simply unlawful. Especially considering that Constantine himself allowed the Soldiers who were cashiered by Licinius, to return to their antient Employment again, as is rightly observed by Ziegler out of Theodoret and Eusebius [r]. Nay, the first Council of Arles excommunicated all such as threw away their Arms in time of Peace [s], on pretence that they were Christians. All which abundantly proves, that the antient Canons did not condemn the military Life, as a Vocation simply Unlawful or Antichristian, nor consequently such as Men were obliged to renounce at their Baptism: But all that was required of them was only what St. John Baptist had exacted before, when they came to his Baptism, as appears from the Rule in the Constitutions [t], providing in this Case, That a Soldier when he desired Baptism should be taught to do Violence to no Man, to accuse no one falsly, and to be content with his Wages: If he consented to these Things, he was to be received; if otherwise, to be rejected. This was the standing Rule of the Church, and I believe there is no Instance of any Man being refused Baptism merely because he was a Soldier, unless some unlawful Circumstance, as that of Idolatry, or the like, made the Vocation sinful.

SECT. XI.

Whether Persons might be baptized, who lived in the State of Concubinage.

THE other Case, which has been matter of Doubt, is concerning the State of Concubinage, which in the common Acceptation is a Matter of such ill Fame, that it seems a Wonder to many to hear of any Allowance made to it in the civil Law and antient Canons. But they made a Distinction antiently in this Matter, as the Jews and Patriarchs of old did, among whom there was one sort of Concubines which was permitted, as differing nothing from a Wife, save only that she was not married with all the Solemnities and usual Forms that the other was. And this sort of Concubines the antient Canons received both to Baptism and the Communion. The Rule in the Constitutions [u] about this Matter, is given thus: A Concubine that is a Slave to an Infidel, if she keep herself only to him, may be received to Baptism; but if she commit Fornication with others, she shall be rejected. A like Decree was made in the Council of Toledo [x] concerning the Admission of Persons to the Communion: If any Christian who has a Wife, have also a Concubine, let him not communicate. But if he have no Wife, but only a Concubine instead of a Wife, he may not be repelled from the Communion, provided he be content to be joyned to one Woman only, whether Wife or Concubine, as he pleases. Now the difference betwixt such a Concubine and a Wife, as learned Men have observed [y], was not that the one was truly married, and the other not; but in the different way of their being married. For she that was called a Wife was married publickly, and with great Solemnity, and Instruments of Dowry, and other Ceremonies which the Civil and Canon Law required; but she who was called a Concubine, was one married in a private way, without the Solemnity which the Law required: But they both agreed in these three Things: 1. That they were unmarried Persons before. 2. That they obliged themselves to their Husbands to live in conjugal Chastity, and in Procreation of Children, and be joyned to no other. 3. And that they would continue faithful in this State all their Lives. Now this sort of Concubines, being in the nature of Wives married without the Formalities required in the Civil Law, were not reputed guilty of Fornication, though they wanted the Privileges, Rights and Honours, that the Law allowed to those who were called Legal Wives: And therefore they were admitted to Baptism without any further Obligation, in case the Husband was an Heathen. But if the Husband was a Christian, the Rule in the Constitutions made a little difference. For if he had a Concubine, he was obliged to dismiss her, and marry a lawful [z] Wife, if his Concubine was a Slave; and if she was a free Woman, he must make her a lawful Wife; otherwise he was to be cast out of the Church. And so in the Decrees of Pope Leo [a], Christians who had only Concubines, were obliged to dismiss them, and they were Slaves, unless they would free them, and lawfully endow them, and give them a publick Marriage as the Laws required. And in this these Decrees seem to differ from that of the Council of Toledo, which allows a Concubine to cohabit in private Wedlock without any Ecclesiastical Censure. St. Austin [b] reckons this Case one of thoſe dubious and difficult Points which cannot eaſily be determined. But he inclines to think a Concubine of this kind might be admitted to Baptiſm, becauſe her Caſe differs much from that of a profeſſed Adultereſs, who could never be admitted to Baptiſm, whilſt ſhe lived in the practice of ſo flagrant a Crime; but the other Caſe, he thinks, is a matter which the Scripture has no where ſo poſitively condemned, but rather left in Doubt, as many other ſuch Points and Queſtions, which the Church in her Prudence muſt decide by the beſt Skill ſhe had to determine ſuch difficult Queſtions. I have repreſented the Senſe of the Ancients upon this Point as clearly as I could, becauſe it has occaſioned ſome ill-grounded Cenſures of the Ancients, and of Gratian's Canon-law (which is only copied from them) in ſome Modern Authors; as if they had allowed ſuch Concubines, as we commonly call Harlots, to be baptized without giving Signs of Repentance: Whereas, we ſee, this Matter was not ſo crudely delivered by them, but conſidered and determined with ſeveral neceſſary Cautions and Diſtinctions. And I have been the more particular in making Enquiries concerning theſe ſeveral kinds of adult Perſons, who might, or might not, be admitted to Baptiſm, becauſe theſe are Queſtions which the Reader will not readily find ſo diſtinctly examined in modern Writers, who have profeſſedly treated of the Subject of Baptiſm.

I only note one thing more concerning a pretended Rule of Purity among the Marcionites, which was, That they would admit no married Perſons to their Baptiſm; but they muſt be either Virgins, or Widows, or Batchelors, or divorced Perſons: Which, as Tertullian obſerves, came doubtleſs from their Abhorrence and Condemnation [c] of the married Life; which Error was common to them with many other antient Hereticks: Though I do not find this Peculiarity, of denying Baptiſm to ſuch Perſons, aſcribed to any others. However it was, we are ſure, there was no ſuch Rule ever made to diſcourage Marriage in the Catholick Church. Her Rule was always that of St. Paul, Marriage is Honourable in all, and the Bed undefiled; but Whoremongers and Adulterers God will judge. The Church took upon her to judge Adulterers, and by the Power of the Keys to exclude them from Baptiſm: But beyond this ſhe pretended to no Power or Commiſſion from God, to be exerciſed over any others, whom God had left at Liberty to be married or unmarried, as they ſaw Occaſion.

CHAP. VI.

Of the Time and Place of Baptiſm.

SECT. I. Why adult Perſons ſometimes delayed Baptiſm by Order of the Church.

NEXT to the Perſons who were the Subjects of Baptiſm, it will be proper to conſider the Circumſtances of Time and Place in the Adminiſtration of it. As to Infants I have already ſhewed, that no Time was limited for their Baptiſm; but they were to be regenerated as ſoon as they could with Convenience after the time of their natural Birth; being confined to no day, as Circumciſion was, by any Rule of Scripture: Though the Church in ſome places deferred them, when there was no danger of Death, to the Solemnity of ſome greater Feſtival. But for adult Perſons, the caſe was ſomething otherwiſe. For their Baptiſm was generally deferred for two or three Years, or a longer, or ſhorter time, by order of the Church, till they could be ſufficiently inſtructed and diſciplined to the Practice of a Chriſtian Life; of which I have given a full Account in the laſt Book. Others had their Baptiſm put off a longer time by way of Puniſhment, when they fell into groſs and ſcandalous Crimes, which were to be expiated by a longer courſe of Diſcipline and Repentance. This was ſometimes five, or ten, or twenty Years, or more, even all their Lives to the Hour of Death, when their Crimes were very flagrant and provoking. If a Catechumen turned Informer againſt his Brethren in time of Perſecution, and any one was proſcribed or ſlain by his means, then by a Canon [a] of the Council of Eliberis his Baptiſm was to be deferred for five Years. And ſo in caſe a Woman-catechumen divorced herſelf from her Husband, her Puniſhment was five Years [b] Prorogation. But if ſhe committed Adultery, and after Conception uſed any Arts to deſtroy her Infant in the Womb, then ſhe was to remain unbaptized all her Life, and only be admitted [c] to Baptiſm at the Hour of Death. From whence it is plain, that the Baptiſm of adult Perſons was ſometimes deferred a conſiderable time by Order of the Church: But then this was always either by way of Preparation or Puniſhment, whilſt Catechumens were firſt learning the Principles of Religion, or were kept in a State of Penance to make Satisfaction to the Church for ſome ſcandalous Tranſgreſſion.

Elib. Can. 11. [c] Conc. Eliber. Can. 68. Catechumena ſi per adulterium conceperit, & conceptum necaverit, placuit eum in fine baptizari.

SECT. II. Private Reaſons for deferring Baptiſm againſt the Rules of the Church. 1. Supinity and Negligence of Salvation.

BUT others deferred their Baptiſm of their own accord againſt the Rules of the Church: Of which Practice there are frequent Complaints in the Writings of the Ancients, and ſevere Invectives againſt it, anſwering the Common Pleas which Men uſually urged in their own behalf. Some did it out of a ſupine Lazineſs and careleſs Negligence of their Salvation, which was a very common Reaſon [d], but ſuch an one as Men were aſhamed to own, becauſe its own Reproach was a ſufficient Anſwer to it.

SECT. III. 2. An Unwillingneſs to renounce the World, and ſubmit to the Severities of Religion.

OTHERS deferred it out of an heatheniſh Principle ſtill remaining in them, becauſe they were in love with the World and its Pleaſures, which they were unwilling to renounce, to take upon them the Yoke of Chriſt, which they thought would lay greater Reſtraints upon them, and deny them thoſe Liberties which they could now more freely indulge themſelves in, and ſecurely enjoy. They could ſpend their Life in Pleaſure, and be baptized at laſt, and then they ſhould gain as much as thoſe that were baptized before; for the Labourers who came into the Vineyard at the laſt Hour, had the ſame Reward as thoſe that had born the Burden and Heat of the Day. Thus Gregory Nazianzen [e] brings them in, arguing for delaying their Baptiſm, as Men now uſually do for delaying Repentance. This Reaſon was ſo very abſurd and fooliſh, that many who were governed by it, were aſhamed to own it. But yet, as St. Baſil [f] obſerves, though they did not ſpeak a Word, their Actions ſufficiently proclaimed it. For it was the ſame as if they had ſaid, Let me alone, I will abuſe the Fleſh to the enjoyment of all that is filthy; I will wallow in the Mire of Pleaſures; I will embrue my Hands in Blood; I will take away other Mens Goods; live by Deceit; Forſwear and Lye; and then I will be baptized when I ſhall leave off ſinning. Such Men had the Idol of Infidelity ſtill in their Hearts, as the Author [g] of the Recognitions, under the Name of Clemens Romanus, charges them; and that was the true Reaſon why they put off their Baptiſm: For had they believed Baptiſm to be neceſſary to all, whether Juſt or Unjuſt, they would have made haſte to receive it, becauſe the End of every Man's Life is utterly uncertain.

SECT. IV. 3. A Fear of Falling after Baptiſm.

ANOTHER ſort of Men put off their Baptiſm to the End of their Lives upon a ſort of Novatian Principle, becauſe they pretended to be afraid of falling into Sin after Baptiſm; and there was no ſecond Baptiſm allowed to regenerate Men again to the Kingdom of Heaven; whereas if they were baptized at the Hour of Death, Heaven would be immediately open to them, and they might go pure and undefiled into it. In the mean time, if they died before Baptiſm, they hoped God would accept the Will for the Deed, and the Deſire of Baptiſm for Baptiſm itſelf. Now, as this Pretence was founded on abundance of Errors, ſo the Ancients are copious in refuting them. St. Baſil [h] argues againſt their Practice from the Uncertainty of Life. For who, ſays he, has fixed for thee the term of Life? Who is it that can promiſe thee the enjoyment of Old-age? Who can undertake to be a ſufficient Sponſor for Futurity? Do you not ſee both Young and Old ſuddenly ſnatched away? And why do you ſtay to make Baptiſm only the Gift of a Fever? Gregory Nazianzen [i] calls it a Riddle, for an unbaptized Man to think he is baptized in the Sight of God, whilſt he depends upon his Mercy in the Neglect of Baptiſm; or to imagine himſelf in the Kingdom of Heavrn, without doing the Things that belong to the Kingdom of Heaven. This is but a vain Hope, ſays Gregory Nyſſen [k], bewitching the Soul with falſe Appearances and Pretenſions. And as they thus expoſed the groundleſs Hopes of theſe Men, ſo they as zealouſly demonſtrated to them the Vanity of their pretended Fears. For though there was no ſecond Baptiſm for them that fell into Sin after the firſt, yet it was not impoſſible for Men to avoid falling into damnable Sins after their firſt Purgation; or if they did ſo fall, yet if they were not Sins unto Death, they might obtain a ſecond Cleanſing by Pardon upon Repentance. So that it was plain Madneſs and Folly to neglect Baptiſm upon ſuch uncertain Fears, becauſe that was to run a much more dangerous Riſque, whilſt they ſought to avoid a leſſer Inconvenience, which was attended with much more Safety, and had no ſuch apprehended Danger in it.

SECT. V. 4. Superſtitious Fancies in reference to the Time and Miniſters of Baptiſm.

SOME again there were, who deferred their Baptiſm upon a Principle of mere Fancy and Superſtition, in reference to the Time, or Place, or Miniſters of Baptiſm. Gregory Nazianzen [l] brings in ſome, making this Excuſe, I ſtay till Epiphany, the Time when Chriſt was baptized, that I may be baptized with Chriſt; I rather chuſe Eaſter, that I may riſe with Chriſt; I wait for Whitſuntide, that I may honour the Deſcent of the Holy Ghoſt. And what then? In the mean time comes Death ſuddenly, in a Day thou didſt not expect, and in an Hour thou art not aware of. Others had a ſuperſtitious Fancy to be baptized in ſome certain place, as at Jeruſalem, or in the River Jordan, and therefore they deferred their Baptiſm, till they could have a Convenience to come to the place intended. This ſeems tacitly to be reflected on by Tertullian [m], when he ſays, There is no difference between thoſe whom John baptized in Jordan, and thoſe whom Peter baptized in the Tiber; and by St. Ambroſe in his Diſcourſe to the Catechumens [n], where exhorting them to come with all poſſible ſpeed to be baptized, he invites them to draw the Bleſſing of Conſecration from the Font of Jordan, and to drown their Sins in that Stream, where Chriſt's ſacred Perſon was baptized: But then that they might not miſtake his Meaning, he adds, That in order to their being baptized in the Font of Jordan, it was not neceſſary they ſhould go to the Eaſtern Country, or to the River in the Land of Judæa: For whereever Chriſt was, there was Jordan: And the ſame Conſecration which bleſſed the Rivers of the Eaſt, ſanctified alſo the Rivers of the Weſt. Euſebius tells us, [o], That Conſtantine had a Deſign for many Years to have been baptized in the River Jordan, after the Example of Chriſt, and that perhaps might be the Reaſon why he ſo long deferred his Baptiſm: But God, who knew beſt what was fit for him, diſappointed him in this Deſign, and he was at laſt baptized at Nicomedia a little before his Death. For as to that Story, which is ſo pompouſly ſet forth by Baronius [p], concerning his being baptized by Pope Silveſter at Rome, and cured of his Leproſy; it is a mere Fable, refuted by the Teſtimony of all the Ancients, Euſebius, Socrates, Sozomen, Theodoret, Athanaſius, St. Ambroſe, St. Jerom, and the Council of Ariminum, who all ſpeak of his Baptiſm immediately before his Death: And the beſt Criticks ſince Baronius, Valeſius [q], and Schelſtrate [r], Lambecius [s], Papebrochius [t] and Pagi [u], agree in their Verdict with the Ancients againſt the Modern Fiction. So that now it is agreed on all hands, That Conſtantine was one of thoſe who deferred his Baptiſm to the time of his Death: And the moſt probable Account that can be given of this, is the Fancy which he had entertained of being baptized in Jordan, which the Providence of God never ſuffered him to put in Execution. Another ſort of fanciful Men would not be baptized, till they could have one to miniſter Baptiſm to them, who had ſome extraordinary Qualifications. Gregory Nazianzen takes notice of ſome ſuch as theſe, and rebukes them after this manner: Say not thou [x], A Biſhop ſhall baptize me, and that a Metropolitan, and alſo one of Jeruſalem: For Grace is not the Gift of the Place, but of the Spirit: Say not, I will be baptized by one that is of noble Birth, and that it will be a Reproach to thy noble Deſcent to be baptized by any other: Say not, If I am baptized by a Presbyter, it ſhall be one that is unmarried, and one that is of the Continent and Angelick Order, as if thy Baptiſm were defiled by any other: Make not thyſelf Judge of the Fitneſs or Qualification of the Preacher or Baptizer, for there is Another that judgeth of theſe Things. Every one is qualify'd to thee for thy Purgation, provided only he be one of thoſe that are allowed, and not condemned, nor a Foreigner, nor an Enemy of the Church. Judge not thy Judges, thou that haſt need of Healing. Tell me not of the Dignity of thy Purgators; make no Difference among thy ſpiritual Fathers; one may be better or more humble than another, but each of them is in an higher Rank than thee. By all this it appears, that a ſuperſtitious Diſtinction of Times, and Places, and Perſons, had an Influence upon ſome, and was pleaded as a Reaſon for deferring Baptiſm.

SECT. VI.

5. A Pretence to follow the Example of Chriſt.

OTHERS pleaded for deferring their Baptiſm till they were thirty Years old, from the Example of Chriſt, becauſe he was of that Age when he was baptized. Which Pretence is copiouſly refuted by Gregory Nazianzen [y], ſhewing in Anſwer to it, That Chriſt, as God, was Purity itſelf, and had no need of Purgation, but what he did in that kind, was only for the ſake of Men; that there was no Danger could befall him by delaying or protracting his Baptiſm; that there were particular Reaſons for his doing ſo, which did not belong to other Men; and that he did many Things which we are not concerned to follow his Example in; for all his Actions were not deſigned to be Copies and Examples for our Imitation.

He that would ſee more of theſe Pleas, may conſult the Diſcourſes of St. Baſil, Nazianzen, and Nyſſen upon this Subject; or Mr. Walker's Treatiſe of Infant-Baptiſm, in the Preface to which, he enumerates no leſs than Nineteen ſuch Caſes as theſe, which were the pretended Occaſions of Mens deferring their Baptiſm. Thoſe I have already mentioned, are ſufficient to our preſent Purpoſe, to ſhew, that when Men made great Delays in this Matter, they commonly did it againſt the Rules and Orders of the Church, and that the Ancients with great Severity and Sharpneſs always declaimed and inveighed againſt it as a dangerous and unchriſtian Practice. Therefore though there may be ſome particular Inſtances of Perſons, who thus careleſly and wilfully, through Ignorance or falſe Conceits, neglected their own Baptiſm, and perhaps the Baptiſm of their Children too; yet theſe Mens Actions are of no Account to ſhew us what were the ſtanding Meaſures and Methods of proceeding in the Church, ſince they are manifeſt Tranſgreſſions of her Rule, and Deviations from her ordinary Practice. The Church had but two Reaſons at any time for deferring the Baptiſm of adult Perſons Year after Year; the one was to give ſufficient Time to the Catechumens to prepare them for Baptiſm, and the other to reform their Miſcarriages, when they happened to turn Lapſers or Apoſtates before their Baptiſm. Both theſe were grounded upon one and the ſame Principle; which was, That Men were obliged to give ſufficient Security and Satisfaction to the Church, that they intended to live by the Rules of the Goſpel, before they were admitted to the Myſteries of it: And the beſt Security that could be given, was from the Experiment and Tryal beforehand, and therefore this Diſcipline was uſed to make them give Teſtimony of their Intentions by a reaſonable Prorogation of their Baptiſm.

SECT. VII.

The ſolemn Times appointed for Baptiſm in the Church were Eaſter, Pentecoſt, and Epiphany.

UPON this account the Church appointed certain ſtated Seaſons and ſolemn Times of Baptiſm in Ordinary Caſes; allowing her Miniſters ſtill the Liberty to anticipate theſe Times, if either Catechumens were very great Proficients, or in danger of Death by any ſudden Accident or Diſtemper. The moſt celebrated Time among theſe, was Eaſter; and next to that, Pentecoſt or Whitſuntide; and Epiphany, or the Day on which Chriſt was ſuppoſed to be baptized. Theſe Three are plainly referred to by Gregory Nazianzen [z], where he brings in ſome giving this Reaſon why they deferred their Baptiſm: One ſaid, he ſtaid till the Epiphany, (for the Ancients mean that by φῶτα & Lumina, not Candlemas, as ſome miſtake it, but Epiphany, the day on which Chriſt was baptized, and manifeſted to the World:) Another ſaid, he had a great Reſpect for Eaſter; and a third, that he waited till the time of Pentecoſt. Which plainly implies, That theſe three Feſtivals were then the moſt noted and ſolemn Times of Baptiſm. But Eaſter and Pentecoſt were the chief: For they are ſometimes mentioned without the other, and ſometimes with an expreſs Prohibition of it. St. Jerom ſpeaks of the two former, as uſual, but ſays nothing of the latter. He tells us, ſome referred that Prophecy in Zechary to Baptiſm [a], Living Waters ſhall go out from Jeruſalem; in Summer and in Winter ſhall it be. The Septuagint reads it, in Summer and in the Spring. And this they applied to the two ſolemn Times of Baptiſm, Pentecoſt, and Eaſter, one of which was in Summer, and the other in the Spring, when the living Waters of Baptiſm were diſtributed to all that thirſted after them. He mentions the ſame in his Epiſtle to Pammachius [b] againſt the Errors of John of Jeruſalem, where he ſpeaks of forty that were baptized at Bethleem upon Pentecoſt, and others that offered themſelve at Eaſter, but were rejected by that humourſome Biſhop, when they were ready for Baptiſm. Theſe two, and no other, are likewiſe ſpoken of by Tertullian [c]. He ſays, Eaſter was appointed, as the Time of Chriſt's Sufferings, into which we are baptized. And after that, Pentecoſt is a very large Space of Time ſet aſide for that purpoſe. In which Time Chriſt manifeſted his Reſurrection to his Diſciples, and the Grace of the Holy Spirit was firſt given, and the Angels predicted his ſecond Advent at his Aſcenſion. Where it is very plain, that Tertullian by the large Space of Pentecoſt, does not mean a particular Day, but the whole fifty Days between Eaſter and Whitſuntide, which in his time was one continued Feſtival, as he tells us in other [d] Places. And therefore though Vicecomes [e] reprehends Ludovicus Vives for aſſerting this, as if he had no Authority for it; yet Habertus [f] defends him out of this Place of Tertullian, and other learned Men [g] are of the ſame Opinion. Vicecomes thinks the Time of baptizing at Eaſter was only one Day, that is, the Great Sabbath, or Saturday, when our Saviour lay in the Grave. But this is alſo a Miſtake: For though this Day was the moſt famous for baptizing Catechumens and Infants alſo, as we learn from Chryſoſtom [h] and the Author of the Conſtitutions [i], yet the whole Time of fifty Days was ſet apart for this Purpoſe, and accounted but as one ſolemn Seaſon for Baptiſm. Which perhaps is the true Reaſon, why ſome antient Canons allow no other Time but that of Eaſter for Baptiſm; including the whole fifty Days from Eaſter till Pentecoſt, in the Senſe of Tertullian. Thus, in the Second Council of Maſcon [k], a Decree was made, That whereas many Chriſtians not regarding the lawful Time of Baptiſm, were uſed to bring their Children to be baptized upon any Holyday or Feſtival of a Martyr, ſo that at Eaſter there were not above two or three to be baptized; they therefore enacted, That from thenceforward no one ſhould be permitted ſo to do, excepting thoſe whoſe Children were in Extremity of Sickneſs and Danger of Death. A like Decree was made in the Council of Auxerre [l], confining all Children to the Time of Eaſter, except in caſe of Sickneſs, when they were allowed to have Clinick Baptiſm. And ſo Socrates ſays [m] it was the Cuſtom in Theſſaly only to baptize at Eaſter. All which muſt either be underſtood to include the Fifty days of Pentecoſt, or elſe it muſt be ſaid theſe Churches had a peculiar Cuſtom differing from the reſt of the World. For in other Rules and Canons, expreſs mention is made of Eaſter and Pentecoſt, though other Feſtivals are excluded. In the Council of Girone in Spain [n], all Catechumens are ordered to come only at Eaſter or Pentecoſt, becauſe the greater the Feaſt was, the greater ought the Solemnity to be. But on all other Feſtivals, none but ſick People were to be baptized, who were not to be refuſed Baptiſm at any time. Siricius, in his Epiſtle to Himerius [o] Biſhop of Tarraco in Spain, intimates indeed, that abundance of People preſumed to take greater Liberties to be baptized on the Nativity of Chriſt, and the Epiphany, and the Feſtivals of the Apoſtles and Martyrs; but this was againſt the Rule of the Roman Church, and all others, which reſerved this Privilege peculiar to Eaſter, with its Pentecoſt or Fifty days following, at which time Baptiſm was generally adminiſtred to all that were qualify'd, but not at other times, except only to Infants, and Perſons in a languiſhing Condition and in danger of Death. In the time of Pope Leo, the Cuſtom had prevailed in Sicily, to baptize as many on the Feſtival of Epiphany, as at Eaſter or Pentecoſt: But he calls [p] this an unreaſonable Novelty, and a Confuſion of the Myſteries of each Time, to think, that no Difference was to be made between the Day on which Chriſt was adored by the wiſe Men, and that whereon he aroſe from the dead. Therefore ſince theſe two, Eaſter and Pentecoſt, were the only Lawful [q] Times of baptizing the Elect Catechumens in the Church, he gives them an Admonition, that they ſhould mingle no other Days in the like Obſervance. He gives the ſame Admonition to the Biſhops of Campania [r], Samnium, and Picenum, in another Epiſtle, againſt baptizing of any, except in caſe of Neceſſity, on the Feſtivals of the Martyrs. And after him, Gelaſius [s], made another Decree, directed to the Biſhops of Lucania, prohibiting Baptiſm to be given at any other time, ſave Eaſter and Pentecoſt, except in caſe of dangerous Sickneſs, when there might be reaſonable Fear of the Party's dying without the Remedy of Salvation. So that in the Roman and Weſtern Churches, this was the general Rule, to baptize none of the adult in ordinary Caſes, ſave only upon theſe two great Feſtivals, though the Practice in ſome Places was a little diſſonant to the Injunction of the Canons. In the Eaſtern Churches, and in Africk, Epiphany ſeems alſo to have been regarded. For, beſides what has been already noted out of Nazianzen, Valeſius [t] has obſerved out of the antient Ritual, called Typicum Sabæ, that on this Day they were wont to baptize in the Church of Jeruſalem. And Joannes Moſchus [u] mentions the ſame Cuſtom in other Parts of the Eaſt. And Victor Uticenſis [x] plainly intimates, That it was a ſolemn time of baptizing at Carthage and in the African Churches. For though he does not name it Epiphany, yet we may eaſily collect it was either that Day or Chriſt's Nativity; for he ſays, it was but a little before the Kalends of February, that fatal Day on which the African Biſhops were baniſhed, and the Church deſtroyed by the Fury of the Arians, in the Time of the Vandalick Perſecution.

SECT. VIII. And in ſome Places the Feſtivals of the Apoſtles and Martyrs, and Anniverſary Days of the Dedication of Churches, prevailed alſo.

IT was alſo cuſtomary in ſome Churches, to make the Anniverſary Feſtival of the Dedication of the Church a ſolemn time of Baptizing. Sozomen [y] obſerves it to have been ſo at Jeruſalem, from the Time that Conſtantine built that famous Church over our Saviour's Grave at Mount Calvary, called Anaſtaſis, or the Church of the Reſurrection. For every Year after that Time the Church of Jeruſalem held an Anniverſary Feſtival of the Dedication, which, to make the Solemnity more auguſt, laſted for eight Days together, on which they held Eccleſiaſtical Meetings, and adminiſtred the Sacrament of Baptiſm; and many Men came from all Parts of the World to viſit the ſacred Places upon this Occaſion. Valeſius [z] takes ſome Pains to prove out of ſeveral Authors, the Chronicon Alexandrinum, Nicephorus, the Greek Menologium, and Typicum Sabæ, that this was on the Thirteenth of September; that no one might think it fell in with the Feſtivals of Eaſter or Pentecoſt, the other ſolemn Times of Baptiſm. Whether the ſame Cuſtom prevailed in any other

Churches,

Churches, is not ſaid; but it is not improbable that it might obtain, becauſe Jeruſalem was a leading Pattern, and is ſometimes ſtiled the Mother of all Churches. The Cuſtom of baptizing on the Feſtivals of the Apoſtles and Martyrs ſeems to have prevailed in many of the French and Spaniſh Churches: But this was condemned and forbidden by many Canons, and therefore cannot be ſpoken of as an Authentick Cuſtom, becauſe it was rather a Tranſgreſſion and Encroachment upon the eſtabliſhed Rules of the Church, which in this caſe might be obſerved without any Detriment, whilſt a Liberty was granted to baptize at any Time upon ſudden Emergencies and extraordinary Caſes.

SECT. IX. No ſuch ſtated Times in the Apoſtles Days.

INDEED in the firſt Plantation of the Goſpel there was no ſuch Obligation to obſerve any ſtated times of Baptiſm, becauſe the Apoſtles made no Law about it. They themſelves baptized indifferently at any time, as Occaſion required, and they left this Circumſtance wholly to the Judgment and Prudence of their Succeſſors in the Church, to act as Reaſon and Piety ſhould direct them. This is very evident from the Hiſtory of the Acts of the Apoſtles, and the ſubſequent Hiſtory of the Church compared together. The Author of the Comments on St. Paul's Epiſtles under the Name of St. Ambroſe [a] has diligently noted this Difference in the Church's Diſcipline, between the firſt and the following Age. At firſt, ſays he, every one taught and baptized on all Days and Times, as Occaſion required. Philip ſtayed for no Time, nor Day, to baptize the Eunuch, nor did he uſe any intermediate Faſt before it. Neither did Paul and Silas delay the Time, when they baptized the Keeper of the Priſon with all his Houſe. Neither did Peter uſe Deacons, or ſtay for a Solemn Day, when he baptized Cornelius and his Family. But when the Church had ſpread itſelf into all Parts, then Oratories were built, and Church-Officers were appointed, and ſeveral Orders made about the Adminiſtration of Baptiſm: Whence it was, that now neither Deacons preached; nor any of the inferior Clergy nor Laymen baptized; nor was Baptiſm adminiſtred at all Times to Believers, but only to thoſe that were Sick. That which ſeems to have made the Difference in this Matter, was the Difference in the Zeal and Readineſs of the firſt Converts and thoſe that came afterwards. For the Church found it neceſſary in Proceſs of Time to proceed a little more ſlowly with the Candidates of Baptiſm, both in the Inſtruction and Tryal of them, becauſe of their Dulneſs and Negligence and frequent Relapſes. And by this means it came to paſs, that in ſome populous Churches often vaſt Multitudes were baptized together. As Palladius obſerves in the Life of St. Chryſoſtom [b], that at Conſtantinople three thouſand Perſons were baptized at once upon one of theſe greater Feſtivals. And this was the Reaſon why Deacons at Rome, who were not allowed to baptize upon any other Occaſion, no not even in times of Sickneſs, were admitted to do it at Eaſter, becauſe of the vaſt Numbers of People that came then to be baptized, as I have had occaſion to ſhew out of a Canon of one of the Roman Councils in another Diſcourſe [c].

SECT. X. How far theſe Rules were obliging in ſucceeding Ages.

BUT when theſe Rules about ſtated Times of Baptiſm were in their ſtricteſt Obſervation, there were ſtill ſeveral Caſes, wherein it was thought proper to diſpenſe with them, and diſcharge Men of their Obligation. The caſe of Sickneſs and Extremity pleaded a juſt Exemption, as we have ſeen before, in all the Canons of the Univerſal Church. And the Promptneſs and Proficiency of ſome Catechumens above others, gave them an earlier Title to Baptiſm, if they deſired it, without waiting for a more ſolemn Seaſon, eſpecially in the Eaſtern Churches; as may be collected from the Exhortations of Chryſoſtom and Baſil, inviting ſuch as were duly prepared for Baptiſm, to receive it the firſt Opportunity, without ſtaying for one of theſe greater Feſtivals. You pretend to ſtay to the time of Lent, ſays Chryſoſtom [d]: But why ſo? Has that Time any thing more than others? The Apoſtles received not this Grace at Eaſter; but at another Time. Neither was it the Time of Eaſter, when the Three Thouſand and the Five Thouſand were baptized, of whom we read in the Acts of the Apoſtles. Other Things, ſays St. Baſil [e], have their peculiar Seaſons; there is a time for Sleep, and a time for Watching; a time for War, and a time for Peace: But the time of Baptiſm is Man's whole Life; All times are ſeaſonable to receive Salvation thereby, whether Day or Night, every Hour, every Minute, every Moment. And Nazianzen [f] in anſwering that Plea which Men uſed for Delay, that they ſtayed only till Eaſter, Pentecoſt, or Epiphany, plainly ſhews, that he rather thought Men ought not to defer their Baptiſm, when once they were qualified for it, leſt Death ſhould come ſuddenly upon them in a Day they did not expect it, and in an Hour they were not aware of. And in this Reſpect it was true, what Tertullian ſaid in the cloſe of his Diſcourſe upon this Subject, that every Day [g] was the Lord's Day, every Hour, and every Time was fit for Baptiſm, if Men were fit and prepared for it. One Day might be more ſolemn than another, but the Grace of Baptiſm was the ſame at all times. So that theſe ſolemn Times were ſet apart for prudent Reaſons by the Church, and for as prudent Reaſons they might be diſpenſed with, when either the Neceſſities of a languiſhing Diſtemper, or the Zeal and Activity of forward Proficients made it adviſeable to anticipate the uſual Times of Baptiſm, which, like all other Parts of Diſcipline, were deſigned for Edification, and not for Deſtruction.

SECT. XI. Baptiſm not confined to any Place in the Apoſtolical Ages.

THE like Obſervation may be made with reſpect to the Place of Baptiſm: For this varied alſo with the State and Circumſtances of the Church. In the Apoſtolical Age and ſome time after, before Churches and Baptiſteries were generally erected, they baptized in any Place where they had Convenience, as John baptized in Jordan, and Philip baptized the Eunuch in the Wilderneſs, and Paul the Jaylor in his own Houſe. So Tertullian obſerves, That Peter baptized [h] his Converts in the Tiber at Rome, as John had done in Jordan, and that there was no Difference whether a Man was baptized in the Sea, or in a Lake, in a River, or a Fountain; for the ſame Spirit ſanctified the Waters in all places, and gave them the Power of Sanctification, when once they were conſecrated by Invocation and Prayer. After this manner the Author of the Recognitions under the Name of Clemens Romanus [i] repreſents Peter preaching to the People, and telling them, They might waſh away their Sins in the Water of a River, or a Fountain, or the Sea, when they were baptized by invoking the Name of the Bleſſed Trinity upon them. And he deſcribes his own Baptiſm, and ſome others [k], as given them by Peter in certain Fountains in Syria by the Sea-Shore. And it ſeems to have continued to the Time of Juſtin Martyr and Tertullian. For Tertullian ſpeaks of their going from the Church to the Water, and then making [l] their Renunciations there, as they had done in the Church before. And Juſtin Martyr deſcribing the Ceremony of the Action, ſays, They brought the Perſon who was to be baptized [m] to a Place where there was Water, and there gave him the ſame Regeneration which they had received before.

SECT. XII. In ſucceeding Ages confined to the Baptiſteries of the Church.

BUT in After-ages Baptiſteries were built adjoining to the Church, and then Rules were made, That Baptiſm ſhould ordinarily be adminiſtred no where but in them. Juſtinian, in one of his Novels [n], refers to antient Laws, appointing, That none of the Sacred Myſteries of the Church ſhould be celebrated in private Houſes. Men might have private Oratories for Prayer in their own Houſes, but they were not to adminiſter Baptiſm or the Euchariſt in them, unleſs by a particular Licence from the Biſhop of the Place. Such Baptiſms are frequently condemned in the antient Councils, under the Name of ἰδιοβαπτίσματα, Baptiſms in private Conventicles. As in the Council of Conſtantinople under Mennas [o] Complaint is made againſt Zoaras the Monk, that though the Emperor had forbidden all private Baptiſms by an Edict, yet Zoaras deſpiſing that Order, had baptized many in a private Houſe upon the Eaſter Feſtival. The Edict which that Council refers to, was another [p] Novel of Juſtinian's, made againſt Severus and his Accomplices, who after they were expelled the Church, held Conventicles in private Houſes, and received and baptized, and gave the Communion to all that came to them. Which ſort of Parabaptizations are there condemned. So alſo in the Petition of the Monks preſented to Mennas and the Council under him, theſe Baptiſms and Communions in private Houſes are reckoned [q] to be an erecting of ſtrange Altars and Baptiſteries in Oppoſition to the true Altar and Baptiſtery or Laver of the Church; under which Name they are frequently condemned in the Acts [r] of that Council. And in the Council of Trullo the Order was again renewed, That no Perſons [s] ſhould receive Baptiſm in Oratories belonging to Houſes, but that they who deſire Illumination, ſhould go to the Catholick, that is, the Publick Churches: And that on pain of Depoſition to the Clergy-

SECT. XIII. Except in Case of Sickness, or with the Bishop's Licence to the contrary upon some special Occasions.

Now all these Laws and Rules were intended for the Preservation of Decency and good Order in the Church, that Baptism might be performed in the Presence of the whole Church, whereof Men were then made Members, and all the Congregation might be Spectators and Witnesses of their admission. Upon which Account it was improper to allow it to be done either in Heretical Conventicles, or in private Houses. Yet in Cases of Necessity, Sickness, Imprisonment, Journeying, and the like, these Rules could not bind; for they were only made for ordinary Cases. Therefore we read of Martyrs sometimes baptized in Prison, and frequently of Clinicks, as they were called, who were baptized on a Sick-Bed, and others baptized at Sea or in a Journey, which were not interpreted Transgressions of this Rule, because the Exigence and Necessity of the Case made them lawful. And sometimes Baptism was allowed in private Oratories by the Bishop's Licence, as both the Law of Justinian and the Canons in some Places had provided. For the Council of Agde [t] in France, allows the Eucharist to be celebrated in Country Chapels at all Times by the Bishop's Leave, not excepting the greater Festivals: And it is reasonable to suppose, that where the Eucharist was allowed, there Baptism might be administred also, though they were not properly parochial or baptismal Churches. The Council of Eliberis [u] in Spain speaks of Deacons presiding over a People, and baptizing in Places where there was neither Bishop nor Presbyter, which we must reasonably suppose to have been Country-Villages at some Distance from the Mother-Church, where yet for Convenience Baptism was allowed to be performed by the Hands of a Deacon. As St. Jerom [x] also testifies, who says, That in Villages and Castles, and Places remote from the Bishop's Church, Men were baptized both by Presbyters and Deacons. So that though the Bishop's Church was the ordinary Place of Baptism, as he himself was the chief Minister of it, and the publick Baptistery was only at his Church; yet upon proper Reasons, by his Authority and Permission, Baptism might be administred in other Places, especially in those that were a sort of Secondary Churches; of which, and their several Distinctions from the Ecclesia Matrix, the Episcopal or Principal Church, I have given a more particular Account before in the Discourse of Churches.

CHAP. VII.

Of the Renunciations and Professions made by all Persons immediately before their Baptism.

SECT. I. Three Things required of all Persons at their Baptism. 1. To Renounce the Devil.

HAVING thus far conducted the Catechumens to the Place of Baptism, that is, to the Baptistery of the Church; we are next to consider how the Discipline of the Church proceeded with them immediately before their Baptism. And here we are to observe in the first place, That three Things were now indispensably required of them at this Season, that is, a formal and solemn Renunciation of the Devil, a Profession of Faith made in the Words of some received Creed, and a Promise or Engagement to live in Obedience to Christ, or by the Laws and Rules of the Christian Religion. For though these Things were in some measure required of them before, during the Time of their Institution, yet now they were to make a more solemn and publick Profession of them before the Congregation. Tertullian seems [a] to intimate this twofold Profession, when he says, That according to the Discipline of the Church in his time, Catechumens first made their Renunciation of the Devil, and his Pomp, and his Angels in the Church, when they received Imposition of Hands from the Bishop in his Prayers for them, and again when they came to the Water to be baptized.

SECT. II. The Form of this Renunciation, and the Import of it.

THE Form of this Renunciation is more perfectly delivered by the Author of the Constitutions, in these Words: I renounce Satan, and his Works, and his Pomps, [b] and his Service, and his Angels, and his Inventions, and all Things that belong to him, or that are subject to him. Others express it more concisely; some calling it the Renunciation of the World, as Cyprian [c], who sometimes joyns the Devil and the World together, as where he asks one of the Lapsers, who had gone to offer Sacrifice at the Capitol, how a Servant [d] of God could ſtand there, and ſpeak, and Renounce Chriſt, who before had renounced the Devil and the World? And ſo it is in St. Ambroſe: Thou wenteſt into the Baptiſtery, conſider what Queſtions were asked thee, and what Anſwers thou gaveſt to them. Thou didſt renounce the Devil and his Works, the World [e] and its Luxury and Pleaſures. In like manner St. Jerom [f] joyns the Devil and the World together: I renounce thee, Satan, and thy Pomp, and thy Vices, and thy World which lieth in Iniquity. Sometimes the Games and Shows, which were part of the Devil's Pomp, were expreſly mentioned in this Form of Renunciation, as it is in Salvian: I renounce the Devil, his Pomps, his Shows, and his Works. For he thus addreſſes himſelf to Chriſtians, who ſtill gave themſelves Liberty to be Spectators at the Roman Shows: What is the firſt Profeſſion [g] that Chriſtians make at Baptiſm? Is it not a Proteſtation, that they renounce the Devil, and his Pomps, and his Shows, and his Works? Therefore theſe Shows and Pomps, even by our own Profeſſion, are the Works of the Devil. How then, O Chriſtian, canſt thou after Baptiſm, follow thoſe Shows, which thou confeſſeſt to be the Work of the Devil? Tertullian made uſe of the ſame Argument before, to make Chriſtians refrain from following the Roman Theatres. But then he had alſo the Charge of Idolatry to throw into the Scale againſt them. For, ſays he [h], What is the chief and principal Thing to be underſtood by the Devil, his Pomps, and his Angels, but Idolatry? Therefore if all the Preparation and Furniture of the Shows be made up of Idolatry, there can be no Diſpute, but that the Renunciation we make in Baptiſm, relates to thoſe Shows, and is a Teſtimony againſt them. He argues after the ſame manner againſt all ſuch Secular Offices [i], and Honours, and Employments, as could not be held and diſcharged without partaking in ſome Idolatrous Rites and Ceremonies; ſuch as the Offices of the Flamens, and many others; in which, the very wearing of a Crown or Garland, or exhibiting ſome of the publick Shows to the People, as by ſuch an Office they were obliged to do, made them guilty of Idolatry, though they abſtained from the groſſer Act of it, that of offering Incenſe and Sacrifice to the Idols. And ſo the Council of Eliberis [k] determined, That ſuch Flamens as only exhibited the publick Shows to the People, (which in their Language is called, Munus dare) though they did not ſacrifice to the Idols, ſhould be caſt out of the Church all their Lives, and only be admitted to Communion at the Hour of Death. Whence it is plain, that in the Times of Heatheniſm and Idolatry, all ſuch Offices and Employments as obliged Men to exhibit thoſe publick Games and Shows to the People, were ſuppoſed to be included in the Renunciation of the Pomps and Works of the Devil, becauſe of the Idolatry that was interwoven with them. But in the time of Salvian, all this Idolatry was aboliſhed, and theſe Pomps and Shows were no longer exhibited to the Honour of Idol-Gods: Yet they had ſtill ſo much Vanity, Lewdneſs and Profaneneſs in them, that they were juſtly complained of as Unchriſtian and Diabolical, upon the account of their Immorality, and therefore were reputed among thoſe unlawful Pomps which every Chriſtian was ſuppoſed to renounce at his Baptiſm. Cyril of Jeruſalem, who wrote after Idolatry was in a great meaſure deſtroy'd, ſtill continues the Charge [l] againſt them for their Lewdneſs and Cruelty, and reckons them among the Pomps of the Devil, whilſt he is explaining to his Catechumens this part of their baptiſmal Profeſſion.

SECT. III.

The Antiquity of this Renunciation. By ſome derived from Apoſtolical Practice.

THE Antiquity of this Renunciation is evidenced from all the Writers that have ſaid any thing of Baptiſm. And by ſome it is derived from Apoſtolical Inſtitution and Practice. For ſo they interpret that Paſſage of St. Paul to Timothy, 1 Tim. vi. 12. Lay hold on Eternal Life, whereunto thou art called, and haſt profeſſed a good Profeſſion before many Witneſſes. The Authors of the Comments under the Names of St. Ambroſe and St. Jerom, ſuppoſed to be Hilary the Roman Deacon and Pelagius, give this Interpretation of the Place: Thou haſt confeſſed a good Confeſſion [m] in Baptiſm, by renouncing the World and its Pomps, before many Witneſſes, before the Prieſts and Miniſters and the Heavenly Powers. So Pelagius. And Hilary [n] ſeems to ſay farther, That this Confeſſion was alſo entered or enrolled in the Monuments of the Church. Others do not found it upon this or any other expreſs Text of Scripture, but yet derive it from antient Tradition. As Tertullian and St. Baſil, the former of which [o] reckons it among many other Eccleſiaſtical Rites and Uſages, which are not expreſly determined in Scripture, but yet proceeded from Tradition, and are confirmed by Cuſtom. And St. Baſil ranks it [p] among thoſe Myſtical Rites which were received in the Church, not from any written Word, but by private Direction and Tradition from the Apoſtles. The Conjecture of thoſe Learned Men [q] is not improbable, who think the Form of Renunciation, made by way of Queſtions and Anſwers, to have been ſo antient in the Church, as that the Apoſtle St. Peter may be juſtly thought to refer to it, when he ſtiles Baptiſm, The Anſwer of a good Conſcience toward God, which can reaſonably refer to nothing ſo well as that common Cuſtom of anſwering in Baptiſm, Doſt thou renounce the Devil? &c. I renounce him. Doſt thou believe in God? &c. I believe.

SECT. IV. This Renunciation made by Perſons ſtanding with their Face to the Weſt: And the Reaſon of that Practice, with ſome other Ceremonies.

IT is farther to be obſerved concerning this Renunciation, That as ſoon as Baptiſteries were built, there was a particular place in them aſſigned peculiarly to this Service. For they commonly had two diſtinct Apartments, as has been ſhewed before [r], in the Deſcription of Churches; firſt their προαύλιον οἶκον, their Porch, or Ante-Room, where the Catechumens made their Renunciations of Satan, and Confeſſions of Faith; and then their ἐσώτερον οἶκον, their Inner Room, where the Ceremony of Baptiſm was performed. When the Catechumens were brought into the former of theſe, they were placed with their Faces to the Weſt, and then commanded to renounce Satan with ſome Geſture and Rite expreſſing an Indignation againſt him, as by ſtretching out their Hands, or folding them, or ſtriking them together; and ſometimes by Exſufflation and ſpitting at him, as if he were preſent: Which were all of them ſo many Indications of their Abhorrence. Cyril of Jeruſalem, in his myſtical Catechiſms to the Illuminated [s], thus deſcribes this part of the Action: Ye were firſt brought into the Ante-Room of the Baptiſtery, and placed toward the Weſt in a ſtanding Poſture, and then commanded to renounce Satan, by ſtretching out your Hands againſt him, as if he were preſent. A little after he explains the Meaning of their doing this with their Face toward the Weſt. The Weſt, ſays he, is the Place of Darkneſs, and Satan is Darkneſs, and his Strength is in Darkneſs. For this Reaſon ye ſymbolically look toward the Weſt, when ye renounce that Prince of Darkneſs and Horror. St. Jerom plainly alludes to this Cuſtom, when he ſays, In our Myſteries, meaning the Celebration of Baptiſm, we firſt renounce him that is in [t] the Weſt, who dies to us with our Sins: And then turning about to the Eaſt, we make a Covenant with the Sun of Righteouſneſs, and promiſe to be his Servants. In like manner, St. Ambroſe diſcourſing to ſome newly baptized Perſons [u], When you entered into the Baptiſtery, and had viewed your Adverſary whom you were to renounce, you then turned about to the Eaſt. For he that renounces the Devil, is turned unto Chriſt. Whence, as Gregory Nazianzen [x] obſerves, they did not only renounce the Devil in Words, but in their very Habit and Geſture; for they did it diveſted of their Clothes, and with their Body turned toward the Weſt, and with Hands ſtretched out againſt him; to this they added ſometimes a Colliſion, or ſtriking of the Hands together, and an Exſufflation, or a Spitting at their Adverſary, to expreſs their Abhorrence of him, as the Author under the Name of Dionyſius [y] deſcribes it.

SECT. V. Why this Renunciation was made three Times.

FROM whom we learn alſo, that this Renunciation was repeated three Times. For in another place he thus deſcribes the whole Ceremony: The Prieſt makes the Perſon who is to be baptized [z] to ſtand with his Hands ſtretched out toward the Weſt, and ſtriking them together; (the Original is, τὰς χεῖρας ἀποθέντα, which denotes Colliſion or ſtriking of the Hands together by way of Abhorrence) then he bids him ἐμφυσῆσαι τρὶς τῷ σατανᾷ, thrice Exſufflate, or ſpit in Defiance of Satan: Afterwards thrice repeating the ſolemn Words of Renunciation, he bids him thrice renounce him in that Form: Then he turns him about to the Eaſt, and with Hands and Eyes lift up to Heaven, bids him συντάξασθαι τῷ Χριστῷ, enter into Covenant with Chriſt. Vicecomes [a] thinks this triple Renunciation was made, either becauſe there were three Things which Men renounced in their Baptiſm, the Devil, his Pomps, and the World; or to ſignify the Three Perſons of the Trinity, by whom they were adopted as Sons on their renouncing Satan; or becauſe it was uſual in Civil Adoptions and Emancipation of Slaves, for the Maſter to yield up his Right by a Triple Renunciation, which he ſhews from Aulus Gellius, and Sigonius. But as the Ancients are ſilent in this Matter, I leave theſe Reaſons to the Diſcretion of every judicious Reader.

SECT. VI. The ſecond Thing required of Men at their Baptiſm, was a Vow or Covenant of Obedience to Chriſt.

THE next Thing required of Men at their Baptiſm, was a Vow or Covenant of Obedience to Chriſt, which the Greeks call, συντάσσεσθαι Χριστῷ, Giving themſelves up to the Government and Conduct of Chriſt. This was always an indiſpenſable part of their Obligation, before they could be admitted to the Ceremony of Regeneration. They firſt renounced the Devil, and then immediately promiſed to live in Obedience to the Laws of Chriſt. Some indeed in St. Auſtin's Time pleaded hard for an Exemption in this Particular. They were willing to make a Profeſſion of Faith in Chriſt, but not of univerſal Obedience; and yet would impudently pretend to demand Baptiſm of the Church, notwithſtanding their incorrigible Temper. Againſt whom he wrote that excellent Book, De Fide & Operibus, to ſhew the Neceſſity of Good-works, as well as Faith, to the Being of a Chriſtian; where he anſwers all the Objections and Arguments they pretended to bring from Scripture: for they pleaded Scripture for their Practice. Amongſt other Things they urged that famous Text of St. Paul, Other Foundation can no Man lay, than that is laid, which is Jeſus Chriſt. Now if any Man build upon this Foundation, Gold, Silver, precious Stones, Wood, Hay, Stubble; every Man's Work ſhall be made manifeſt: For the Day ſhall declare it; becauſe it ſhall be revealed by Fire; and the Fire ſhall try every Man's Work of what Sort it is. If any Man's Work abide, which he hath built thereupon, he ſhall receive a Reward. If any Man's Work ſhall be burnt, he ſhall ſuffer Loſs: But he himſelf ſhall be ſaved; yet ſo as by Fire. Upon which they made this perverſe Comment: That they who built upon this Foundation [b] Gold, Silver, Precious Stones, were ſuch as added Good-works to their Faith in Chriſt: But they who built Wood, Hay, Stubble, were they that held the ſame Faith in Unrighteouſneſs and a wicked Life. And they imagined, that even theſe Men might be ſo purged by certain Puniſhments of Fire, as to obtain Salvation by Virtue of the Foundation, which they retained. To which St. Auſtin replies, That if this was true [c], it were a laudable Charity indeed, for them to endeavour that all Men might indifferently be admitted to Baptiſm, not only Adulterers and Adultereſſes, who pretended falſe Marriages contrary to the expreſs Command of Chriſt, but alſo publick Harlots continuing in the baſeſt of all Profeſſions; which yet the moſt negligent Church on Earth never pretended to admit to Baptiſm, 'till they had firſt forſaken that vile Proſtitution. They urged farther, That to deny wicked Men the Privilege of Baptiſm, was to root out the Tares before the time. To which St. Auſtin [d] replies, That this Rejection of them from Baptiſm, was not rooting out the Tares, but rather not ſowing them, as the Devil did: They did not prohibit any that were willing to come to Chriſt, but only convinced them by their own Confeſſion, that they were unwilling to come to him. And therefore though theſe Men called it a Novel Doctrine and Practice to reject Harlots and Stage-players, and all that made open Profeſſion of ſuch abominable Arts, from Baptiſm, yet he tells them, this was grounded upon the Rule [e] of antient Truth, which manifeſtly declared, That they who do ſuch Things, ſhall not inherit the Kingdom of God. And that this was the antient Rule, by which the Church proceeded, is evident from all the Writers that have ſpoken of Baptiſm. Juſtin Martyr, who deſcribes the Ceremonies of Baptiſm with the greateſt Simplicity, ſays, It was only given to thoſe, who to their Confeſſion of Faith added alſo a Promiſe or Vow [f] that they would live according to the Rules of Chriſtianity. And hence came that uſual Form of Words in their Profeſſion, συντάσσομαί σοι Χριστέ, I gave myſelf up to thee, O Chriſt, to be governed by thy Laws: Which immediately followed the ἀποτάξις, or Renunciation of the Devil, whoſe Service they forſook to chuſe a new Maſter; as we find it frequently in St. Chryſoſtom [g], St. Baſil [h], St. Cyril of Alexandria [i], the Author of the Apoſtolical Conſtitutions [k], and moſt of the Greek Writers, whoſe Words, as being but one and the ſame Form, I think it needleſs to repeat upon this Occaſion. The Latins commonly call it Promiſſum, Pactum, and Votum, a Promiſe, a Covenant, and Vow, which Names they apply indifferently to all Parts of the Chriſtian Engagement, as well the Renunciation of the Devil, as the Profeſſion of Faith and Obedience to Chriſt, which do mutually ſuppoſe, and are virtually included in one another. For he that renounces the Devil and the World, does thereby profeſs himſelf a Soldier and Servant devoted to Chriſt. Therefore St. Ambroſe ſpeaking of the Renunciation, calls it [l] a Promiſe, a Caution, an Handwriting or Bond, given to God, and regiſtred in the Court of Heaven: Becauſe this is a Vow made before his Miniſters, and the Angels, who are Witneſſes to it. Upon which Account he ſays in another place [m], It is recorded not in the Monuments of the Dead, but in the Book of the Living. St. Auſtin calls it a Profeſſion [n] made in the Court of Angels, and the Names of the Profeſſors are written in the Book of Life, not by any Man, but by the heavenly Powers. St. Jerom [o] ſtyles it a Covenant made with the Sun of Righteouſneſs, and a Promiſe of Obedience to Chriſt. And he ſo ſpeaks of this Ceremony, as to ſhew it to be a diſtinct Act from the Renunciation (though they both tended to the ſame End) becauſe different Rites were uſed in expreſſing them. For in renouncing the Devil they had their Faces to the Weſt, for ſymbolical Reaſons which we have heard before; but in making their Covenant with Chriſt, they turned about to the Eaſt, as an Emblem of that Light, which they received from the Sun of Righteouſneſs, by engaging themſelves in his Service.

SECT. VII. This Vow of Obedience made by turning to the Eaſt. And why.

THIS Cuſtom of turning about to the Eaſt, when they made their Profeſſion of Obedience to Chriſt, is alſo mentioned by St. Ambroſe, Gregory Nazianzen, Cyril of Jeruſalem, and the Author under the Name of Dionyſius. For which they aſſign two Reaſons: 1. Cyril [p] tells his Diſciples, That as ſoon as they had renounced the Devil, the Paradiſe of God, which was planted in the Eaſt, and whence our firſt Parent for his Tranſgreſſion was driven into Baniſhment, was now laid open to them: And their turning about from the Weſt to the Eaſt, which is the Region of Light, was a Symbol of this. For the ſame Reaſon St. Baſil [q] and ſome others of the Ancients tell us, They prayed toward the Eaſt, that they might have their Faces towards Paradiſe. The other Reaſon for turning to the Eaſt in Baptiſm, was becauſe the Eaſt or riſing Sun was an Emblem of the Sun of Righteouſneſs, to whom they now turned from Satan: Thou art turned about to the Eaſt, ſays St. Ambroſe [r], for he that renounces the Devil, turns unto Chriſt. Where he plainly intimates with St. Jerom, that turning to the Eaſt, was a Symbol of their Averſion from Satan, and Converſion unto Chriſt, that is, from Darkneſs to Light, from ſerving Idols, to ſerve him who is the Sun of Righteouſneſs, and Fountain of Light.

SECT. VIII. The Third Thing required of the Party to be baptized, was a Profeſſion of Faith in the uſual Words of the Creed.

TOGETHER with this Profeſſion of Obedience there was alſo exacted a Profeſſion of Faith, of every Perſon to be baptized. And this was always to be made in the ſame Words of the Creed, that every Church uſed for the Inſtruction of her Catechumens. They were obliged to repeat it privately to the Catechiſt, and then again publickly in the Church, when they had given in their Names to Baptiſm: as I have ſhewed [s] before. But beſides this, they were alſo obliged to make a more ſolemn Profeſſion of it at the time of Baptiſm, and give diſtinct Anſwers to the ſeveral Queſtions, as the Miniſter propounded them, with relation to the ſeveral Parts of the Creed, which contained the Summary of the Chriſtian Faith. There were ſome indeed in St. Auſtin's time, who, as they were for excluding the Profeſſion of Obedience out of the baptiſmal Vow, ſo were they for curtailing the Profeſſion of Faith, and reducing it to one ſingle Article, I believe Jeſus Chriſt to be the Son of God. In favour of this, they pleaded the Example of Philip baptizing the Eunuch upon this ſhort Confeſſion [t], and that Saying of St. Paul to the Corinthians, I determined to know nothing among you, ſave Jeſus Chriſt, and him crucify'd. Yet they never durſt proceed ſo far as to put their Deſign in Practice; for they ſtill continued to make Interrogatories about other Articles, as the Church always did, concerning the Holy Ghoſt, the holy Church, the Remiſſion of Sins, the Reſurrection of the Dead, the Incarnation of Chriſt, his Paſſion and Death upon the Croſs, his Burial and Reſurrection on the third Day, his Aſcenſion, and Seſſion on the Right Hand of the Father. All which were thought ſo neceſſary, that the Chuch never omitted them even in Clinick Baptiſm, when Men were baptized upon a Sick-Bed: For if they were able to ſpeak, they anſwered for themſelves, as St. Auſtin ſays, to every particular Interrogation, though they were not able to commit them to Memory: And if they were ſpeechleſs, their Sureties or Sponſors anſwered for them, as they did for Children, as will be ſhewed in the next Chapter. So that one way or other the whole Creed was repeated, and every individual Article aſſented to by Men at their Baptiſm. And this was always the Practice of the Church from the very Days of the Apoſtles, and in their Time alſo: For though no other Article be mentioned in the Baptiſm of the Eunuch, but only his believing Jeſus Chriſt to be the Son of God, yet, as St. Auſtin obſerves in the ſame place [u], the Scripture in ſaying, Philip baptized him, is to be underſtood as meaning that all Things were fulfilled, which uſed to be obſerv'd in Baptiſm, though for Brevity's ſake they be not mentioned. And indeed in all the Accounts we have of Baptiſm in antient Writers, there is expreſs mention of this Profeſſion, either to believe the Doctrines of Chriſtianity in general, as they are delivered in Scripture, or as they are briefly ſummed up in the Articles of the Creed. Juſtin Martyr [x] ſays, Before Men were Regenerated, they muſt both profeſs to believe the Truth of thoſe Things which they had been taught, and alſo promiſe to live anſwerable to their Knowledge. Cyprian particularly [y] mentions the Uſe of the Creed in Baptiſm, and ſpecifies in ſeveral of the Interrogatories that were made in reference to the particular Articles of it; as, Whether they believed eternal Life, and Remiſſion of Sins in the holy Church? which were always the concluding Articles of the Creed. And in another place he ſpeaks both of theſe, and the Articles relating to the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt, as Interrogatories uſed in Baptiſm both by the Catholick [z] Church, and the Novatians. For however they differed in the Senſe of ſome of the Articles, yet they both agreed in the ſame Form of Interrogatories, and both baptized in the ſame Creed. Tertullian alſo [a] ſpecifies the Articles relating to Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt, and the Church, as part of the Interrogatories of Baptiſm. And Euſebius reciting the Words of the Creed of Cæſarea [b], ſays, It was the Creed into which he was baptized. The ſame Uſe was made of the Nicene Creed, as ſoon as it was compoſed, in moſt of the Eaſtern Churches. For they ordinarily baptized in the Profeſſion of that Faith, as I have ſhewed [c] in the laſt Book. It were eaſy here to ſubjoin many Teſtimonies out of St. Ambroſe, St. Jerom, Cyril of Alexandria and Jeruſalem, Chryſoſtom, Nazianzen, Baſil, Epiphanius, and Salvian, and the Author of the Conſtitutions: But the Matter is ſo inconteſtable, that the Ancients did never baptize into the Profeſſion of any ſingle Article, but into a complete and perfect Creed, that I think it needleſs to inſiſt upon the Proof of it, whilſt there is not any Pretence of an Exception to be made againſt it in any publick or private Baptiſm whatſoever.

Num ergo placet, ut hoc ſolum homines reſpondeant & continuo baptizentur? Nihil de Spiritu Sancto, nihil de Sancta Eccleſia, nihil de Remiſſione Peccatorum, nihil de Reſurrectione mortuorum? &c. Si enim Spado cum reſpondiſſet, Credo Filium Dei eſſe Jeſum Chriſtum, hoc ei ſufficere viſum eſt, ut continuo baptizatus abſcederet: Cur non id ſequimur, atque auferimus cætera quæ neceſſe habemus etiam cum ad baptizandum temporis urget anguſtia exprimere, interrogando ut baptizandus ad cuncta reſpondeat, etiamſi ea memoriæ mandare non valuit?

THERE were ſome Circumſtances and Ceremonies of this Confeſſion, which becauſe they added ſomething to the Solemnity of the Action, it will not be improper to mention. As firſt, That it was uſually done in Publick before many Witneſſes. Which was a Circumſtance grounded upon Apoſtolical Practice, and very rarely diſpenſed with. Primaſius [d] deduces it from the Example of Timothy, who witneſſed a good Confeſſion before many Witneſſes: Which he interprets of his Profeſſion of Faith made at Baptiſm. Which is alſo the Expoſition given by Ephrem [e] Syrus. And Pope Leo [f] ſeems to refer to the ſame, when he exhorts Men to ſtand firm in that Faith, which they confeſſed before many Witneſſes; that Faith in which they were born again of Water and the Holy Ghoſt, and received the Unction of Salvation, and the Seal of Eternal Life. It was uſual at Rome, St. Auſtin [g] tells us, To make this Confeſſion publickly in the Church in ſome eminent place appointed for the Purpoſe, that they might be ſeen and heard by all the Congregation. But ſometimes to favour the Modeſty of ſome very baſhful Perſons, who could not ſpeak without trembling in ſuch an awful Aſſembly, the Presbyters received their Confeſſion in private: And this they offered to Victorinus, a famous Rhetorician, upon his Converſion; but he choſe rather to make his Confeſſion in Publick; ſaying, There was no Salvation in Rhetorick, and yet he had always taught that in publick: And therefore it would not become him to be afraid of making a publick Confeſſion of God's Word before the meek Flock of Chriſt, who had never been afraid to repeat his own Words in the Schools of the Heathen, who, in compariſon of Chriſtians, were only to be reputed Mad-men.

SECT. X. With Hands and Eyes lift up to Heaven.

ANOTHER Circumſtance which added to the Solemnity of the Action, was the Poſture of the Body, not only looking toward the Eaſt, but with Hands and Eyes lift up to Heaven, as if they were immediately lift up to Chriſt, with whom they were now entring into Covenant, as their New Lord ſitting on the Throne of his Glory. For as they renounced the Devil with Hands ſtretched out againſt him, or with Colliſion or ſtriking them together in Defiance of him; ſo on the contrary, they made their Confeſſion and Covenant, and Addreſſes to Chriſt in the Poſture of Petition, with Hands lift up to the Sun of Righteouſneſs, and ready to embrace him. So the Author, under the Name of Dionyſius [h] deſcribes it, ſaying, The Prieſt bids the Catechumen, after he has renounced Satan, to turn about to the Eaſt and make his Covenant with Chriſt, with Hands and Eyes lift up to Heaven.

SECT. XI. Repeated Three Times.

THIS Confeſſion alſo, for greater Solemnity, is thought to have been repeated three Times, as we have heard before, that it was uſual to do in the Renunciation of Satan. Cyril of Alexandria [i] ſays, It was the Cuſtom of the Church to require a Triple Confeſſion of Chriſt, of all thoſe that propoſed to love him, and came to his holy Baptiſm: And this after the Example of St. Peter, to whom Chriſt ſaid three Times, Simon Son of Jonas loveſt thou me? And Peter anſwered thrice, Lord, thou knoweſt that I love thee. St. Ambroſe [k] ſays, That in the Celebration of Baptiſm, three Interrogatories were made, and a Triple Anſwer was given to them; nor could any one be otherwiſe baptized. Whence alſo Peter was asked three Times in the Goſpel, Whether he loved the Lord? That by anſwering thrice, he might looſe thoſe Bonds with which he had bound himſelf by denying his Lord. But I am not ſure that this triple Confeſſion always means thrice repeating the whole Creed. For St. Ambroſe [l] in another place makes this triple Confeſſion to be rather anſwering three Times, I believe, to the ſeveral Parts of the Creed. Thou waſt asked, ſays he, Doſt thou believe in God the Father Almighty? And thou didſt anſwer, I believe. Thou waſt asked again, Doſt thou believe in our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and his Croſs? And thou didſt anſwer a ſecond time, I believe. Thou waſt asked a third Time, Doſt thou believe in the Holy Ghoſt? And thy Anſwer was, I believe. So thou waſt thrice buried under Water, that thy triple Confeſſion might abſolve thee from the manifold Offences of thy former Life. Where it is plain, the Triple Confeſſion means no more than anſwering thrice, I believe, to the ſeveral Parts of the Creed. But there might be different Cuſtoms in different Places; for St. Cyril ſeems to mean ſomething more, when he makes theſe Anſwers not only to be a Confeſſion of the three Perſons of the Trinity, but a triple Confeſſion of Chriſt, which implies a Repetition of the Creed three Times over, if I rightly underſtand him.

SECT. XII. And ſubſcribed with their own Hands in the Books of the Church, as ſome think.

THERE was one Circumſtance more, which, if true, added great Weight to the whole Action: Which was, that the Party, after he had made his Confeſſion of Faith, ſubſcribed it alſo with his own Hand, if he were able to do it, in the Books or Regiſters of the Church. I cannot poſitively ſay that this was any certain or univerſal Practice, but there ſeem to be ſome Footſteps of it in ſome antient Records, and the Alluſions of Writers to ſuch a Cuſtom. Gregory Nazianzen is thought to refer to it, when exhorting Men to continue ſtedfaſt to the Faith which they profeſſed at Baptiſm, he ſays, If thou waſt enrolled into any other Faith [m] than what I have expounded, come and be enrolled again: And then tell thoſe that would draw thee away from it, What I have written, I have written. St. Ambroſe ſeems alſo to allude to this, when [n] he tells the Initiated, that their Hand-writing was recorded not only in Earth, but in Heaven, becauſe it was taken both in the preſence of Men and Angels. And St. Auſtin [o] ſays, the Names of ſuch as made their Profeſſion, were written in the Book of Life, not only by Men, but by the heavenly Powers above. Yet I confeſs St. Chryſoſtom has a Paſſage which ſeems to go contrary to all this: For ſpeaking of the Difference between earthly Maſters buying Slaves, and Chriſt taking us to be his Servants, he reckons this among others, That Chriſt requires no Witneſſes, nor Hand-writing [p] of us, but only our bare Word, to ſay, I renounce thee, Satan, and all thy Pomp. Whence it muſt be concluded, either that this Cuſtom was not ſo univerſal as the reſt, ſince St. Chryſoſtom knew nothing of it; or that the fore-cited Evidences are not ſo cogent as at firſt ſight they may ſeem to be. For St. Ambroſe and St. Auſtin may be ſo interpreted, where they ſpeak of being written in the Book of Life, as to be underſtood only in a Figurative Senſe, for having their Names written in Heaven. Yet Vicecomes is very poſitive not only of this, but that Men alſo ſet their Seal [q] to their Subſcription, and confirmed their Profeſſion with an Oath. But I do not find any ſufficient Authority for this, and therefore will not any farther inſiſt upon it, which I had rather leave to the farther Diſquiſition of the critical and curious Reader.

SECT. XIII.
The uſe of all theſe Ceremonies and Engagements; to make Men ſenſible of their Obligation, and ſtedfaſt to their Profeſſion.

BUT by what has been ſaid we may eaſily perceive, that the Deſign of the Church in all theſe Ceremonies, and the Caution and Deliberation uſed in the whole Action, was only to make Men truly ſenſible of the Nature of the Chriſtian Religion, (which admitted of no Proſelytes without theſe formal and ſolemn Profeſſions) and of their great Obligations to continue ſtedfaſt in that Faith of Obedience to Chriſt, which they had ſo ſolemnly promiſed with their Mouths, and ſubſcribed with their own Hands, not only before Men, but in the Preſence of God and the holy Angels. This was the greateſt Engagement imaginable upon them, and of Force to influence their whole Lives. To which Purpoſe St. Chryſoſtom often propoſes and inſiſts upon it, to make Men bear it perpetually in Memory, and uſe it as their beſt Armour and Weapon againſt all Temptations. In his laſt Diſcourſe to the People of Antioch, he expatiates upon this Topick, inveighing firſt ſeverely againſt all the Shows of the Roman Theatre, and Circus, and Obſervation of Days, and Preſages, and Omens, which he reckons among the Pomps of Satan. To theſe he joins Inchantments and Ligatures: For ſome Chriſtians made no Scruple to hang Golden Medals of Alexander the Great about their Head or Feet to cure Diſeaſes. With whom he expoſtulates after this manner: Are theſe our Hopes [r] and Expectations, that after the Croſs and Death of our Lord, we ſhould put our Truſt for Health in the Image of an Heathen King? Knoweſt thou not what Wonders the Croſs hath done? How it hath deſtroyed Death, extinguiſhed Sin, emptied Hell, diſſolved the Power of the Devil? And is it not as fit to be relied on to cure a bodily Diſeaſe? It hath given Reſurrection to the World, and canſt not thou confide in it? But thou not only procureſt Ligatures, but alſo Charms, bringing ſome old drunken ſtaggering Woman to thy Houſe for this Purpoſe, and payeſt Reverence to theſe Things, after thou haſt been diſciplined in the Religion of Chriſt. Nay, when Men are admoniſhed of theſe Things, they plead in Excuſe, that the old Woman the Inchanter is a Chriſtian, and names nothing but the Name of God. For which ſhe is the more to be abhorred, becauſe ſhe abuſes the Name of God to ſo ſcandalous a Practice, and whilſt ſhe calls herſelf a Chriſtian, does the Works of the Heathen. The Devils named the Name of Chriſt, and yet were Devils for all that, and were rebuked and ejected by our Saviour. Therefore I beſeech you, keep yourſelves pure from this Deceit, and take this Word as your Staff and Armour. As none of you will chuſe to walk abroad without his Shoes or Clothes: So without this Word, let none of you venture out in Publick, but when you go over the Threſhold of your Gate, ſay firſt this Word, I renounce thee, Satan, and thy Pomp, and thy Worſhip; and I make a Covenant with thee, O Chriſt. Never go forth without this Word, and it will be your Staff, your Armour, your invincible Tower. And with this Word, ſign yourſelves with the Sign of the Croſs: And then not only Man, but the Devil himſelf cannot hurt you, whilſt he finds you appearing guarded with this Armour. Thus St. Chryſoſtom exhorts Men daily to remember their ſolemn Profeſſion of Faith, and baptiſmal Vow, wherein they renounced Satan and embraced Chriſt, as the beſt Preſervative againſt Sin and Danger. To which both he and Ephrem Cyrus add this momentous Conſideration [s], That an Account of this Vow will be required of Men at the Day of Judgment. For by thy Words ſhalt thou be juſtified, and by thy Words ſhalt thou be condemned. And Chriſt will ſay to every wilfull Tranſgreſſor of it, Out of thine own Mouth will I condemn thee, O thou wicked Servant. As nothing therefore could be more uſeful than this Part of the Church's Diſcipline, in requiring ſuch Profeſſions and Promiſes of every Man before they entred the Service of Chriſt; as it was uſual for Maſters to do, before they bargained [t] with Slaves and took them into their Family: So nothing could be more material than the continued Impreſſions of this Vow upon Mens Minds, to keep them under a quick Senſe of their Obligations, on which the whole Conduct of their Lives ſo much depended, and their Eternal Intereſt at the Day of Judgment.

SECT. XIV.
Whether Publick and particular Confeſſion of Sins was required of Men at their Baptiſm.

THERE is one Thing more remains to be enquired into under this Head, that is, Whether any Publick or particular Confeſſion of Sins was required of Men at their Baptiſm, beſides what was implied in the general Renunciation of Satan and all his Works and Service? Now this is plainly reſolved by St. Chryſoſtom in the Negative: For diſcourſing of the Difference between God's chuſing his Servants, and the Choice which earthly Princes and Maſters make of their Soldiers and Slaves, he makes the Difference chiefly to conſiſt in this: That before Men were allowed to enter the Liſts in any of the famous Exerciſes of the Theatre, a publick Cryer muſt firſt lead them about by the Hand before all, and cry out, ſaying, Does any one accuſe this Man? Though there the Engagement was only of the Body, and not of the Soul. But in God's Choice of us it is quite otherwiſe: For though our Engagement depends not upon ſtrength of Arms, but on the Philoſophy and Virtue of our Souls, yet the Ruler and Governour thereof acts quite contrary: He does not take a Man, and lead him about, and ſay,

Does

Does any one accuſe him? But he cries out, Though all Men and Devils ſhould riſe up againſt him, and accuſe him of ſecret and horrible Crimes, I do not reject, I do not abhor him; but I deliver him from his Accuſer, and abſolve him from his Iniquity, and ſo I lead him to the Combat. Nor is this the only admirable Thing, that he forgives our Sins, but that he does not reveal nor diſcloſe them; he neither makes open Proclamation of them [u], nor compels thoſe that come to him to publiſh their own Offences, but requires them to give Account, and confeſs their Sins to him alone. He does not, like earthly Judges, oblige Criminals to make a publick Confeſſion before all Men in hopes of Pardon, but he forgives Sins upon our private Teſtimony without any other Witneſſes. This is undeniable Evidence, that no publick Confeſſion was required of Men for their private Offences, when they came to Baptiſm. And therefore when Gregory Nazianzen [x] ſpeaks of Confeſſion of Sins made at Baptiſm, he is to be underſtood either of a general Confeſſion, or ſuch a particular Confeſſion as Men voluntarily impoſed upon themſelves, to teſtify more eminently the Sincerity of their Repentance; which ſome think was done at John's Baptiſm, Mat. iii. 6. and in the Baptiſm of thoſe mentioned Acts xix. 18. where it is ſaid, That many who believed, came and confeſſed and ſhewed their Deeds; though this was not impoſed upon Men by any neceſſary Law or Rule of the Church. In caſe of publick ſcandalous Crimes they were obliged particularly to Promiſe and Vow the forſaking of them: But for private Crimes, no particular Confeſſion was required to be made, ſave only to God, with a general Renunciation of all Sin, in which every private Crime was ſuppoſed to be included. *Vid. CHAP. VIII.

Of the Uſe of Sponſors or Sureties in Baptiſm.

SECT. I. Three Sorts of Sponſors in the Primitive Church. 1. For Children.

NEXT to the Conditions and Promiſes required of Men in their Baptiſm, we muſt examine the Office and Buſineſs of Sponſors or Sureties, who had always ſome Concern in theſe Obligations. And here it is firſt to be obſerved, that there were three ſorts of Sponſors made uſe of in the Primitive Church. 1. For Children, who could not renounce, or profeſs, or anſwer for themſelves. 2. For ſuch adult Perſons, as by reaſon of Sickneſs or Infirmity were in the ſame Condition with Children, incapacitated to anſwer for themſelves. 3. For all adult Perſons in general. For the Church required Sponſors alſo for thoſe, who were otherwiſe qualify'd to make their own Reſponſes. Now the Office of Sponſors was diverſify'd a little in its Nature, according to theſe Diſtinctions. They who were Sureties or Sponſors for Children, were obliged firſt to anſwer in their Names to all the Interrogatories that were uſually put in Baptiſm, and then to be Guardians of their Chriſtian Education. Some will alſo needs have it, that they were obliged to give them a perfect Maintenance, and take them as it were for their own Children by Adoption, in caſe their Parents failed, and left them deſtitute in their Minority.

SECT. II. Parents commonly Sponſors for their own Children.

BUT this I take to be a Miſtake. For whoever were Sponſors for Children, if ever they became deſtitute, the Burden devolv'd upon the Church in general, and not upon any others. Which will be evidenced by theſe two Conſiderations: Firſt, That Parents were commonly Sponſors for their own Children: And in that caſe there can be no Diſpute where the Obligation of Maintenance lay, ſo long as they were alive. For they were obliged to maintain their own Children by a natural Law, not becauſe they were Sponſors, but becauſe they were Parents to them. It was not indeed abſolutely neceſſary that Parents ſhould be Sponſors for their own Children, tho' ſome in St. Auſtin's Days were inclined to think ſo, which he reckons an Error, and ſhews [a], That in many Caſes there was a Neceſſity it ſhould be otherwiſe. But yet in moſt Caſes the Parents were Sponſors for their own Children, as appears from St. Auſtin, who ſpeaks of Parents in all ordinary Caſes offering their own Children to Baptiſm, and making the proper Reſponſes for them [b]: And the extraordinary Caſes in which they were preſented by others, were commonly ſuch Caſes where the Parent could not or would not do that kind Office for them: As when Slaves [c] were preſented to Baptiſm by their Maſters; or Children, whoſe Parents were dead, were brought by the Charity of any who would ſhew Mercy on them; or Children expoſed by their Parents, which were ſometimes taken up by the holy Virgins of the Church, and by them preſented unto Baptiſm. Theſe are the only Caſes mentioned by St. Auſtin, in which Children ſeem to have had other Sponſors, and not their Parents. Which makes it probable, that in all ordinary Caſes Parents were Sureties for their own Children. Which may be collected alſo from the Author of the Hypognoſticks [d] under the Name of St. Auſtin, who ſpeaks of Infants being preſented to Baptiſm by the Hands of their Parents, and ſome of them dying in their Arms before the Prieſt could baptize them. Whilſt Parents therefore were Sureties for their own Children, they were obliged to maintain them; but this not by the Law of Sureties, but by the Law of Nature: And if they failed, this Duty devolved upon the whole Church.

SECT. III.
Other Sureties not bound to maintain the Children for whom they were Sponſors.

SECONDLY, In other Caſes, where Strangers became Sureties for Children, the Burden of Maintenance did never devolve upon them by any Law of Suretyſhip, except they were obliged by ſome antecedent Law to take care of them. In caſe a Maſter was Sponſor for his Slave, he was obliged to maintain him, becauſe he was antecedently in the nature of a Father to him: And this Obligation aroſe, not from his Suretyſhip, but from his being his Maſter. But in other Caſes it was not ſo. For ſometimes Children that were expoſed, were taken up and preſented to Baptiſm by mere Strangers, and in that caſe the burden of Maintenance fell upon the Church, and not upon the Sponſors. And in ſome Caſes, as St. Auſtin [e] informs us, ſuch Children were preſented unto Baptiſm by the ſacred Virgins of the Church, who had no other Maintenance but what they themſelves received from the Church: And in that Caſe it is evident the Childrens Maintenance muſt be derived from the ſame Fountain, as the Virgins was, that is, from the publick Stock of the Church. So that in all Caſes the Church was charged with this Care, and not the Sponſors, except there was ſome antecedent Obligation. And there was good Reaſon for this: For, as St. Auſtin [f] obſerves, Children were preſented to Baptiſm not ſo much by thoſe in whoſe Hands they were brought, (though by them too, if they were good and faithful Men) as by the whole Society of Saints. The whole Church was their Mother, ſhe brought forth all and every one by this new Birth. And therefore if any were to be charged with Maintenance, it was but reaſonable that the Church ſhould maintain her own Children. So that they who lay ſo much Streſs upon Sponſors Undertaking for Children, as if they thereby undertook to give them Maintenance too, have no Grounds for their Aſſertion, ſince it appears from the beſt Light that we have, to have been otherwiſe in the Practice of the Primitive Church. I have not ſaid this to excuſe Sponſors from any Duty that properly belongs to them, but only to take off the Force of an unreaſonable Objection, which ſome have made againſt the preſent Uſe of Sponſors in Baptiſm, as if they were of a different Sort from thoſe of the antient Church, becauſe they are not under this particular Obligation, which appears not to have any other Foundation but the bare Surmiſe of thoſe who make the Objection.

SECT. IV.
But only to anſwer for them to the ſeveral Interrogatories in Baptiſm.

TWO Things indeed were antiently required of Sponſors as their proper Duty: 1. To anſwer in their Names to all the Interrogatories of Baptiſm. This ſeems to be intimated by Tertullian [g] where he ſpeaks of the Promiſes which the Sponſors made in Baptiſm, and of the Danger there was of their failing to fulfill them, either by their own Mortality, or by the untoward Diſpoſition of the Party. But if any one thinks theſe Promiſes related only to what the Sponſors promiſed for themſelves, and not in the Name of the Child, he may be informed more clearly from others. Gennadius [h] tells us, Theſe Promiſes for Infants and ſuch as were uncapable of Learning, were made after the uſual manner of Interrogatories in Baptiſm. And St. Auſtin [i] more particularly acquaints us with the Form then uſed, which was, Doth this Child believe in God? Doth he turn to God? Which is the ſame as Renouncing the Devil, and making a Covenant with Chriſt. In other places [k] he tells us more expreſly, That the Sponſors anſwered for them, That they renounced the Devil, his Pomps and his Works. And diſputing againſt the Pelagians, he proves by this Argument, That Children were under the Power of Satan and the Guilt of Original Sin, and needed Pardon; becauſe if a Pelagian himſelf brought a Child to Baptiſm, he muſt anſwer for him [l], becauſe he could not anſwer for himſelf, That he renounced the Devil, that he turned to God, and that among other Things, he believed the Remiſſion of Sins; all which would only be fallaciouſly ſaid, if Children had no Concern in them. And he profeſſes, he would not admit any Child to Baptiſm, whoſe Sponſor he had Reaſon to believe did not make theſe Promiſes and Reſponſes ſincerely for him. Of the Form and Practice then there is no Diſpute. Only it ſeemed a great Difficulty to Biſhop Boniface, and as ſuch he propoſed it to St. Auſtin, How it could be ſaid with Truth, that a Child believed, or renounced the Devil, or turned to God, who had no Thought or Apprehenſion of theſe Things; or if any, yet ſecret and unknown to us? If any one ſhould ask us concerning a Child, Whether he would prove Chaſte or a Thief, when he became a Man? we ſhould doubtleſs in that caſe anſwer, We know not. Or if the Queſtion was, Whether a Child in his Infancy thought Good or Evil? we ſhould make the ſame Anſwer, We know not. Since therefore no one would promiſe either for his future Morals, or his preſent Thoughts, how is it that when Parents preſent their Children as Sponſors in Baptiſm, they anſwer and ſay, The Children do thoſe Things which that Age does not ſo much as think of? As, That they believe in God, and are turned unto him, &c. To this St. Auſtin anſwers, That the Child is only ſaid to believe, becauſe he receives the Sacrament of Faith and Converſion, which entitles him to the Name of a Believer. For the Sacraments, [m] becauſe of the Reſemblance between them and the Things repreſented by them, do carry the Name of the Things repreſented. Chriſt was but once offered in himſelf, and yet he is offered not only on the Annual Solemnity of the Paſſover, but every Day for the People; and no one tells a Lye, that ſays, He is offered. As therefore the Sacrament of Chriſt's Body after a certain manner is called his Body, and the Sacrament of his Blood is called his Blood; ſo the Sacrament of Faith is Faith. And upon this Account, when it is anſwered, That an Infant believes, who has not yet any Knowledge or Habit of Faith, the meaning of the Anſwer is, That he has Faith becauſe of the Sacrament of Faith, and is converted to God becauſe of the Sacrament of Converſion, for theſe Anſwers appertain to the Celebration of the Sacrament. So that according to St. Auſtin, when an Infant is ſaid to have Faith, the meaning is only that he receives the Sacrament of Faith, which Faith he is bound to embrace when he comes to underſtand it. In the mean time he is called a Believer, becauſe he receives the Sacrament of Faith, and is entred into the Covenant of God by his Sponſors, who ſupply that Part for him which he cannot perform in his own Perſon. This was the firſt Duty of Sponſors toward Children.

SECT. V. And to be Guardians of their Spiritual Life for the future.

THE other was, That they were to be Guardians of their Spiritual Life for the future, and to take care by good Admonitions and good Inſtructions that they performed their part of the Covenant they were now engaged in. St. Auſtin [n] makes Sponſors themſelves concerned in this Covenant with God, and therefore preſſes it as a Duty upon them, that they ſhould not only by their Examples, but by their Words and Inſtructions teach them the great Duties of Chaſtity, Humility, Sobriety and Peace, for as much as they had anſwered in their ſtead, that they renounced the Devil, his Pomps and his Works. And in another place [o] he more particularly ſpecifies their Obligations, that they ſhould admoniſh them to live chaſtly, and preſerve their Virginity to Marriage, to refrain their Tongues from Evil-ſpeaking and Perjury, not to accuſtom their Mouths to filthy and laſcivious Songs, not to be Proud nor Envious, not to retain Anger nor Hatred in their Hearts, not to obſerve Divination or Sooth-ſaying, nor to hang Phylacteries or Diabolical Characters upon their own Bodies or their Relations, to keep and hold the Catholick Faith, to frequent the Church, to hear the Scriptures read with Attention, to entertain Strangers, and waſh their Feet, according to what was ſaid to them in Baptiſm, to live peaceably, to be Peace-makers among diſagreeing Brethren, and to honour the Prieſts and their Parents with the love of ſincere Charity. Theſe were ſuch Things as they had promiſed for Children in Baptiſm, and therefore they were bound by Compact with God to uſe their utmoſt Endeavours to engage their Spiritual Pupils to perform them.

SECT. VI. A 2d Sort of Sponſors for ſuch adult Perſons as could not anſwer for themſelves.

ANOTHER ſort of Sponſors were ſuch as were appointed to make Anſwers for ſuch Perſons, as by reaſon of ſome Infirmity could not anſwer for themſelves. I have obſerved before, that ſuch adult Perſons as were ſuddenly ſtruck Speechleſs, or ſeized with a Sicut ergo ſecundum quendam modum Sacramentum Corporis Chriſti Corpus Chriſti eſt, Sacramentum Sanguinis Chriſti Sanguis Chriſti eſt, ita Sacramentum Fidei Fides eſt. Ac per hoc cum reſpondetur Parvulus credere, qui fidei nondum habet affectum, reſpondetur Fidem habere propter Fidei Sacramentum, & convertere ſe ad Deum propter Converſionis Sacramentum, quia & ipſa Reſponſio ad celebrationem pertinet Sacramenti. Phrenzy by the Violence of a Diſtemper, might yet be baptized, if any of their Friends could teſtify that they had beforehand deſired Baptiſm: And in this caſe the ſame Friends became Sponſors for them, making the very ſame Anſwers for them as they did for Children. This we learn from Cyril of Alexandria, who aſſures us, That when Men were ſeized with Extremity of Sickneſs [p], and it was thought proper upon that account to baptize them, there were ſome appointed to make both the Renunciations and Confeſſions in their Name. And ſo it is in the Account which Fulgentius [q] gives of the African Negro, who juſt before his Baptiſm fell ſick of a Fever, which bereaved him of his Senſes, and made him ſpeechleſs: He was baptized for all this, having his Sponſors to anſwer in his Name, as if it had been for an Infant. So that all thoſe Canons which [r] ſpeak of baptizing Dumb Perſons in caſes of Extremity, though they do not expreſly require Sponſors for them, yet are to be underſtood as intending them, according to the uſual Practice of the Church. And if the Party happened to recover after ſuch a Baptiſm, it was the Sponſor's Duty, not only to acquaint him, as a Witneſs, with what was done for him, but alſo as a Guardian of his Behaviour, to induce him to make good the Promiſes, which he in his Name had made for him. For this was the indiſpenſible Duty of Sureties in all caſes whatſoever.

SECT. VII. The Third ſort of Sponſors for all adult Perſons in general.

THE Third ſort of Sponſors were for ſuch ſort of adult Perſons as were able to anſwer for themſelves. For theſe alſo had their Sponſors, and no Perſons antiently were baptized without them. Theſe are ſpoken of not only by Dionyſius [s] and the Author of the Apoſtolical Conſtitutions [t], but by many other more unqueſtionable Writers. Victor Uticenſis tells us [u] of one Muritta a Deacon, who was Sponſor for Elpidiphorus at Carthage. And Palladius [x] ſays, Evagrius Ponticus performed the ſame Office for Rufinus the great Stateſman, and Præfectus Prætorio under Arcadius. St. Auſtin often mentions them, but then he alſo acquaints us, That it was no part of their Office to make Reſponſes for their Pupils in Baptiſm, as it was in the caſe of Infants and ſick Perſons who could not anſwer for themſelves. For though the Church accepted it [y] in the caſe of Infants by reaſon of their Diſability; yet ſhe would not allow adult Perſons to anſwer by Proxy, who were able to anſwer for themſelves; there being ſomething of natural Reaſon in that Saying in the Goſpel, He is of Age, let him ſpeak for himſelf. The moſt ruſtick Capacities and meaneſt Underſtandings even in the weaker Sex, would not ordinarily excuſe them from doing this in their own Perſons, unleſs, as Gennadius [z] ſays, They were ſo heavy and dull, as not to be capable of Learning, in which Condition the Sponſors were required to anſwer for them as for little Children, from whom they differed ſo little in Underſtanding.

SECT. VIII. Whoſe Duty was not to anſwer in their Names, but only to admoniſh and inſtruct them before and after Baptiſm.

BUT in ordinary Caſes, this was no Office of the Sponſors, when Men were in a Capacity to anſwer for themſelves. Their only Buſineſs was to be Curators and Guardians of their Spiritual Life; to which purpoſe, it was incumbent on them to take care of their Inſtruction and Morals, as well before as after Baptiſm. Upon this account the Deaconeſſes were uſually employed in the private Inſtruction of Women, to teach them how to make their Reſponſes in Baptiſm. And this was one Qualification required in Deaconeſſes by ſome antient Canons [a], that they ſhould be Perſons of ſuch good Underſtanding, as to be able to inſtruct the ignorant and ruſtick Women, how to make their Reſponſes to the Interrogatories, which the Miniſter ſhould put to them in Baptiſm, and how to order their Converſation afterward, as has been obſerved in another place [b].

AND by ſome antient Rules this Office was chiefly impoſed upon Deaconeſſes, to be Sponſors for Women, as the Deacons were obliged to be for Men. For ſo the Author of the Apoſtolical Conſtitutions ſeems to repreſent it, when he orders [c] a Deacon to be Suſceptor for a Man, and a Deaconeſs for a Woman in Baptiſm. And we find the ſacred Virgins often mentioned as concerned in this Office. St. Auſtin, as we heard before, ſpeaks of them [d] as preſenting expoſed Children to Baptiſm, tho' they had no Children of their own, nor intended to have any. And in the Life of Epiphanius [e] we read, that as one Lucian was his Godfather in Baptiſm, so Bernice, a Sacred Virgin, was Godmother to his Sister. Whence it appears, that at first the sacred Virgins and Monasticks were thought as proper Persons as any to take this weighty Office upon them. Though afterward, in the French Church, by a Canon [f] of the Council of Auxerre, Monks are prohibited from being Sponsors in Baptism. And so the Prohibition stands in the Romish Church to this Day.

SECT. X. What Persons prohibited from being Sponsors.

BUT antiently there was no Prohibition of any sorts of Men from performing this Charitable Office, save only of such as unqualify'd themselves, by going contrary to the Rules of the Christian Religion. Fathers, as we heard before, were frequently Sponsors for their own Children; and I know of no Prohibition of this before the time of Charles the Great, when the Council of Mentz [g] made a Decree against it, forbidding Fathers to be Susceptors to their own Sons or Daughters at the Font in Baptism. Antiently also Presbyters and Deacons were allowed to be Sponsors, though this is also now prohibited in some Provincial Councils of the Romish Church by Cardinal Borromæo [h] in the last Age. But the only Persons whom the Ancients excluded from this Office, were Catechumens, Energumens, Hereticks, and Penitents; that is, Persons who either were yet never in full Communion with the Church, as being themselves unbaptized; or else such as had forfeited the Privileges of their Baptism and Church-Communion by their Errors, or Crimes, or Incapacity to assist others, who needed Assistance themselves. And by some Canons [i] Persons who were never confirmed, were excluded from being Sponsors both in Baptism and Confirmation.

SECT. XI. But one Sponsor required, and that a Man for a Man, and a Woman for a Woman.

FROM what has been said, the Reader will also easily observe, that antiently no more but one Sponsor was required, and that was a Man for a Man, and a Woman for a Woman; for we never read of more than one, in all the Accounts of the Ancients, and one of the same Sex for adult Persons. In the case of Infants, there was no Regard had to the Difference of Sex: For a Virgin might be Sponsor for a Man-child, and a Father for his own Children, whether they were Male or Female. And one Sponsor was sufficient in any case. Some Rules forbid more than one, either in Baptism or Confirmation: As that Decree of Leo [k], cited by Gratian, which says, No more than one, whether Man or Woman, shall be admitted as Surety for a Child in Baptism: And the like to be observed in Confirmation. Which Rule was renewed and confirmed by the Council of Metz [l], but upon a Reason which is something peculiar. For they conclude, that because there is but one God, one Faith, one Baptism, therefore an Infant ought to have only one Sponsor, whether Man or Woman, at his Baptism. Which I mention not for the Excellency of the Reason, but only to shew what conformity it bears to the antient Practice.

SECT. XII. When first it became a Law, that Sponsors might not marry a Spiritual Relation.

SOME perhaps will here be desirous to know the Original of that Practice in the Romish Church, which is the Occasion of so many Dispensations in Matrimonial Causes, arising from the Prohibition of Sponsors or Godfathers marrying within the forbidden degrees of Spiritual Relation. Now that which seems to have given the first Tendency towards this, was a Law of Justinian, still extant in the Code, wherein he forbids [m] any Man to marry a Woman, whether she be a Slave or Free, for whom he had been Godfather in Baptism when she was a Child: Because nothing does induce a more Paternal Affection, or juster Prohibition of Marriage, than this Tie by which their Souls are in a divine manner united together. Now this Law extended no farther than to prohibit Marriage in this immediate Relation: And it could not affect very many, whilst Parents were commonly Sponsors for their own Children, and the sacred Virgins, or the Deaconesses, or the Clergy for others; and Men were Sponsors for Men, and Women for Women. But afterward this was improv'd a little farther: For the Council of Trullo [n] forbids the Godfather not only to marry the Infant, but the Mother of the Infant, for whom he answers; and orders them that have done so, first to be separated, then to do the Penance of Fornicators. This Prohibition was extended to more degrees in the following Ages, and grew so extravagant, that the Council of Trent thought it a Matter worthy of their Reformation; though still by their Rules this spiritual Relation [o] was extended to more Degrees, than either the Laws of Justinian or the Canons of Trullo had prohibited. For they forbid Marriage not only between the Sponsors and their Children, but alſo between the Sponſors themſelves; and the Father and Mother of the Baptized is not to marry a Sponſor; nor may the Baptizer marry the Baptized, nor the Father or Mother of the Baptized, becauſe of the ſpiritual Relation that is contracted between them. But they forbid above two Sponſors to appear for a Child, and if more than two appear, they are not bound by this Law of ſpiritual Relation, though the Canon-Law [p] had determined otherwiſe in former Ages. Yet after all their Regulations about this Matter, there remain a thouſand Difficulties to exerciſe the Pens of the Roman Caſuiſts, which the Reader that is curious may find referred to by Soteallus and Barboſa [q] in their Declarations and Remiſſions on the Council of Trent.

SECT. XIII. Why the Names of the Sponſors ordered to be Regiſtred in the Books of the Church.

THERE is one Thing indeed ordered by that Council, which was antiently of good Uſe, though not for the Purpoſe for which they appointed it: That is, That not only the Names of the Baptized, but alſo the Names of the Sponſors ſhould be Regiſtred in the Books of the Church. The Council of Trent orders it only that Men might know what Perſons were forbidden to Marry by this ſpiritual Relation. But antiently it had a much better Uſe, that the Church might know who were Sponſors, and that they might be put in Mind of their Duty, by being entred upon Record, which was a ſtanding Memorial of their Obligations. This Cuſtom we find mentioned in the Author under the Name of Dionyſius, where he deſcribes the Ceremony of admitting Catechumens together with their Sponſors. The Biſhop firſt explains to the Catechumen the Laws and Rules of a divine Life and Converſation, and then asks him, Whether he purpoſes ſo to live? Which when he has promiſed, he lays his Hand upon his Head, and orders the Prieſts to Regiſter [r] both the Man and his Sponſor. Afterward he ſpeaks of reciting their Names out of theſe Regiſters, when Men were preſented by their Sponſors immediately to be baptized. And thus much of the Uſe of Sponſors in the Primitive Church.

CHAP. IX.

Of the Unction and the Sign of the Croſs in Baptiſm.

SECT. I. Of the firſt Original of Unction in Baptiſm.

WE find in ſome of the Antient Ritualiſts, but not in all, mention made of an Unction preceding Baptiſm, and uſed by way of Preparation for it. They who firſt deſcribe it, ſpeak of it as uſed either immediately after the Confeſſion of Faith, as the Author [a] of the Conſtitutions; or elſe between the Renunciation and the Confeſſion, as Cyril of Jeruſalem [b] deſcribes it. But there is no mention of this Unction either in Juſtin Martyr or Tertullian. For though Tertullian ſpeaks of an Unction among the Ceremonies of Baptiſm; yet, as Daillé [c] rightly obſerves, it was not this Unction preceding Baptiſm, but the Unction which followed after it in Confirmation, accompanied with Impoſition of Hands, which belongs to another Subject. For it is plain from Tertullian that neither of theſe were given before Baptiſm, but when Men [d] were come out of the Water, then they were anointed with the holy Unction, and had Impoſition of Hands, in order to receive the Holy Ghoſt. Whence I think Daillé's Conjecture very juſt and reaſonable, That the Unction preceding Baptiſm is of later Dare, and was not as yet adopted among the Ceremonies of Baptiſm in the time of Tertullian.

SECT. II. Of the Difference betwixt this and Chryſm in Confirmation.

BUT the Writers of the following Ages ſpeak diſtinctly of two Unctions, the one before, the other after Baptiſm: Which they deſcribe by different Names and different Ceremonies, to diſtinguiſh them one from the other. The firſt they commonly call χρῖσιν μυσικὴν ἔλαίῳ, the Unction of the Myſtical Oyl, and the other χρῖσιν μύρῳ, or χρῖσμα, the Unction of Chriſm. They both agree in this, That the Biſhop only conſecrated them, whether for the Uſe of Baptiſm or Confirmation. The Author of the Conſtitutions gives us a Form of Conſecration to be uſed by the Biſhop in ſanctifying Oyl for this Unction before Baptiſm, where he prays [e] to God, That he would ſanctify the Oyl in the Name of the Lord Jeſus, and grant it ſpiritual Grace and efficacious Power, that it might be ſubſervient to the Remiſſion of Sins, and the Preparation of Men to make their Profeſſion in Baptiſm, that ſuch as were anointed therewith, being freed from all Impiety, might become worthy of the Initiation according to the Command of his Only-begotten Son. And this Power of Conſecration is reſerved to the Biſhop in all the Canons of the antient Councils; of which more when we come to ſpeak of Confirmation. In the mean time I obſerve, 1. That theſe two went by different Names. The Author of the Conſtitutions calls the firſt [f] Myſtical Oyl, and the other Myſtical Chriſm, and has a diſtinct Form of Conſecration for each of them. And the ſame Diſtinction in Name is obſerved by Cyril of Jeruſalem [g] and the Authors under the Name of Juſtin Martyr [h], and Dionyſius [i]. 2. They differed in the Time of Adminiſtring them. For the one was given before the Party went into the Water, the other after he came out of it again. Which is clear from all the forementioned Authors, and from St. Ambroſe, who ſpeaks of an Unction with Oyl [k] before Baptiſm. As alſo the Author of the Recognitions under the Name of Clemens Romanus [l], who tells Perſons that were to be Baptized, That they were firſt to be anointed with Oyl conſecrated by Prayer. 3. They differed in reſpect to the Perſons concerned in the Adminiſtration. For the Unction before Baptiſm was often done by a Deacon or a Deaconeſs: But that after Baptiſm by the Biſhop himſelf moſt commonly, or at leaſt by a Presbyter in ſome peculiar caſes. The Author of the Conſtitutions [m] ſpeaking particularly of the Unction before the Baptiſm of Women, orders the Biſhop to anoint the Head, the Deacon the Forehead, and the Deaconeſſes the other parts of the Body. But the Chriſm after Baptiſm is reſerved to the Biſhop only. Laſtly, They differed in the Deſign and Intent of them. For the Deſign of the firſt Unction was to prepare them for Baptiſm, and enter them on their Combat with Satan, as Champions of Chriſt; the other was to conſummate and confirm their Baptiſm with the Conſignation or Seal of the holy Spirit.

SECT. III. The Deſign of this Unction, and the Reaſon of it.

Cyril of Jeruſalem ſpeaking of the former Unction [n] ſays, Men were anointed from Head to Foot with this exorciſed or conſecrated Oyl, and this made them Partakers of the true Olive-tree, Jeſus Chriſt. For they being cut out of a wild Olive-tree, and ingrafted into a good Olive-tree, were made Partakers of the Fatneſs of the good Olive-tree. Therefore that exorciſed Oyl was a Symbol of their partaking of the Fatneſs of Chriſt, and an Indication of the Flight and Deſtruction of the adverſe Power. For as the Inſufflation of the Saints, and Invocation of God, do like a vehement Flame, burn and put the Devils to Flight; ſo this exorciſed Oyl by Prayer and Invocation of God, gains ſuch a Power, as not only to burn up and purge away the Footſteps of Sin, but alſo to repel all the Powers of the inviſible wicked One, the Devil. St. Ambroſe compares it to the anointing of Wreſtlers before they enter their Combat, Thou cameſt to the Font, ſays he [o], and waſt anointed as a Champion of Chriſt, to fight the Fight of this World. The Author under the Name of Juſtin Martyr, diſtinguiſhing between the two Unctions, ſays [p] Men were firſt anointed with the antient Oyl, that they might be Chriſt's, that is, the Anointed of God; but they were anointed with the precious Ointment (after Baptiſm) in Remembrance of him who reputed the Anointing of himſelf with Ointment to be his Burial. The Author of the Conſtitutions likewiſe uſes the ſame Diſtinction: Thou ſhalt firſt of all [q] anoint him with the holy Oil, then baptize him with Water, and afterward ſign him with the Ointment: That the anointing with Oil may be the Participation of the holy Spirit, and the Water may be the Symbol of Death, and the ſigning with Ointment may be the Seal of the Compact made with God. But if there be neither Oil, nor Ointment, Water is ſufficient both for the Unction and the Seal and the Confeſſion of him with whom we die. So that this was only a Ceremony of Baptiſm, which might be omitted without any Detriment to the Subſtance or Eſſential part of it To theſe may be added the Teſtimony of St. Chryſoſtom, who ſays [r], every Perſon before he was baptized, was anointed as Wreſtlers entring the Field: And this is not as the High Prieſt was anointed of old, only on the Head, or right Hand, or Ear, but all over his Body, becauſe he came not only to be taught, but to exerciſe himſelf in a Fight or Combat. This is the Account which they give of this Unction preceding Baptiſm.

SECT. IV. The Sign of the Croſs frequently uſed in the Ceremonies of Baptiſm. 1. In the Admiſſion of Catechumens. And 2dly, In the Time of Exorciſm.

DR. Cave [s] and ſome other Learned Perſons are of Opinion, That together with this Unction, the Sign of the Croſs was made upon the Forehead of the Party baptized. And there is no queſtion to be made of this, though all the Paſſages they refer to, are not direct Proofs of it. For many of them relate to the Sign of the Croſs in the Unction of Chriſm or Confirmation. As particularly, that Unction which Tertullian ſpeaks of, and the Sign of the Croſs accompanying it, was not the Unction before Baptiſm, but that which followed in Confirmation, as I have ſhewed before in the Beginning of this Chapter. Therefore to underſtand this Matter exactly, we are to diſtinguiſh at leaſt four ſeveral Times, when the Sign of the Croſs was uſed, during the Preparation or Conſummation of the Ceremonies of Baptiſm. 1. At the Admiſſion of Catechumens to the State of Catechumenſhip and the general Name of Chriſtians. 2. In the time of Exorciſm and Impoſition of Hands, while they were paſſing through the ſeveral Stages of Catechumens. 3. At the Time of this Unction before Baptiſm. 4. And laſtly, At the Unction of Confirmation, which was then uſually the Concluſion of Baptiſm both in adult Perſons and Infants; and many of the Paſſages which ſpeak of the Sign of the Croſs in Baptiſm, do plainly relate to this, as an Apendage of Baptiſm, and cloſely joyned to it as the laſt Ceremony and Conſummation of it. The Uſe of this Sign in the Admiſſion of Catechumens, I have already ſhewed before from St. Auſtin and the Life of Porphyrius Biſhop of Gaza [t]. And the frequent Uſe of it in Exorciſm and Impoſition of Hands and Prayer, during their Chatechetical Exerciſes, has alſo been noted [u] in treating of them from St. Auſtin and St. Ambroſe, which I therefore need not here repeat.

THE third Uſe of it was in this Unction before Baptiſm. For ſo the Author under the Name of Dionyſius deſcribing the Ceremony of Anointing the Party before the Conſecration of the Water, ſays, The Biſhop begins the Unction by thrice ſigning him [x] with the Sign of the Croſs, and then commits him to the Prieſts to be anointed all over the Body, whilſt he goes and conſecrates the Water in the Font. St. Auſtin alſo may be underſtood of this, when he ſays [y], The Croſs is always joyned with Baptiſm. And by this we may interpret ſeveral Paſſages in Cyprian, as where he tells Demetrian, They only eſcape who are born again, and ſigned with the Sign of Chriſt. And what that Sign is, and on what part of the Body it is made, the Lord ſignified in another place, ſaying, Go through the midſt of Jeruſalem, and ſet a Mark upon their Foreheads [z]. And ſo again in his Book of the Unity of the Church [a] ſpeaking of Uzziah's Leproſy, he ſays, He was marked for his Offence againſt the Lord in that part of his Body, where thoſe are ſigned, who obtain his Mercy. Which ſeems plainly to refer to the Sign of the Croſs made in Baptiſm. The Author of the Apoſtolical Conſtitutions is very expreſs in this Matter. For explaining the Meaning of the ſeveral Parts and Ceremonies uſed in Baptiſm, he ſays [b], the Water is to repreſent Chriſt's Burial, the Oyl to repreſent the Holy Ghoſt, the Sign of the Croſs to repreſent the Croſs, and the Ointment or Chriſm, the Confirmation of Men's Profeſſions. And not improbably St. Jerom might refer to this, though his Words be not ſo reſtrained to this Time of Unction, when he ſays, He was a Chriſtian, born of Chriſtian Parents, and carried the Banner of the Croſs [c] in his Forehead. Some add alſo thoſe Words of Cyprian [d], Let us guard our Foreheads, that we may preſerve the Sign of God without Danger. And thoſe of Pontius [e] in his Life, where ſpeaking of the Chriſtian Confeſſors who were branded by the Heathen in the Forehead, and ſent as Slaves into the Mines, he ſays, They were marked in the Forehead a ſecond time; alluding to the Sign of the Croſs, which as Chriſtians they had received before. But theſe Paſſages do not neceſſarily relate to Baptiſm, but are only general Expreſſions that may refer to the Uſe of the Sign of the Croſs upon any other Occaſion: It being uſual in thoſe Times, to ſign themſelves upon the Forehead in the commoneſt Actions of their Lives, upon every Motion, as Tertullian expreſſes it [f], at their going out and coming in, at their going to bath, or to Bed, or to Meals, or whatever their Employment or Occaſions called them to. Yet thus far it may be argued from them, that they who uſed it ſo commonly upon all other Occaſions, would hardly omit it in this ſolemn Unction of Baptiſm. And therefore thoſe Allegations may be allowed to be a ſort of collateral Evidence of the Practice.

SECT. VI. Fourthly, In the Unction of Confirmation.

LASTLY, It was always uſed in the Unction of Confirmation. And that being then an Appendage to Baptiſm, what was done in it, was many times ſaid to be done in Baptiſm: And ſo both the Unction and Sign of the Croſs uſed in Confirmation are aſcribed to Baptiſm, and upon that account ſometimes miſtaken for the former Unction and Conſignation preceding Baptiſm. There was no Unction before Baptiſm in the Time of Tertullian; but there was one immediately after it, which together with Impoſition of Hands had alſo the Sign of the Croſs joyned with it; and all theſe were properly Ceremonies of Confirmation, which came after Baptiſm, and are not to be confounded with the former. Ter- tullian [f] says, The Flesh is washed, that the Soul may be cleansed; the Flesh is anointed, that the Soul may be consecrated; the Flesh is signed, that the Soul may be guarded; the Flesh is overshadowed by Imposition of Hands, that the Soul may be illuminated by the Spirit; the Flesh is fed by the Body and Blood of Christ, that the Soul may receive Nourishment or Fatness from God. Here he describes all Things in order as they were done after Baptism to the Eucharist. There was an Unction, and a signing with the Sign of the Cross, and Imposition of Hands, and then the Eucharist. So that this Sign of the Cross plainly relates to the Unction which came after Baptism, and was an usual Ceremony of Imposition of Hands or Confirmation. And thus we are to understand that other Passage of Tertullian [g] where he says, The Devil apes the Ceremonies of the divine Sacraments in his Idol-Mysteries. He baptizes those that believe in him; he promises them Expiation of Sins in his Laver, as now it is in the Mysteries of Mithra; he signs his Soldiers in the Forehead; he celebrates also the Oblation of Bread, &c. Where most probably signing in the Forehead relates to the Sign of the Cross in Confirmation, which comes between Baptism and the Eucharist. And so in Pope Leo [h], All that are regenerated in Christ, the Sign of the Cross makes them Kings, and the Unction of the Spirit consecrates them Priests; meaning in the same Sense as St. Peter says, All Christians are a Royal Priesthood. Which Privileges are commonly by the Ancients ascribed to the Unction in Confirmation, as here by Leo, who makes the Sign of the Cross an Attendant of this Unction after Baptism. St. Austin's Words are a little [i] more general; but yet learned Men think [k] they refer to the Sign of the Cross in Confirmation, when he says, Several Sacraments or sacred Rites are received in different ways; some, you know, are received in the Mouth, meaning the Eucharist; others in the whole Body, meaning Baptism, wherein the whole Body is washed with Water; others in the Forehead, as the Sign of the Cross: where because he distinguishes the Sign of the Cross, as a Sacrament in the large Sense of the Word, both from Baptism and the Eucharist, it seems most reasonable to suppose that he intended the Use of it in Confirmation. Which therefore the Greeks often call σφραγὶς, the Sign or Seal of the Holy Ghost [l]; and sometimes the Sign of the Cross is more distinctly called σταυροῦ σφραγὶς, the Sign made in the Form of the Cross, which was used not only in baptizing and confirming, but also in the Ordination of Priests, as I have had Occasion elsewhere [m] to shew out of Chrysostom and Dionysius [n], and in the Consecration of the Waters of Baptism, which is the next Thing that comes in order to be considered.

CHAP. X.

SECT. I. The Consecration of the Water made by Prayer.

IMMEDIATELY after the Unction the Minister proceeded to consecrate the Water, or the Bishop if he were present consecrated it, while the Priests were finishing the Unction. For so the Author under the Name of Dionysius represents it. While the Priests, says he [a], are finishing the Unction, the Bishop comes to the Mother of Adoption (so he calls the Font) and by Invocation sanctifies the Water in it, thrice pouring in some of the holy Chrism in a manner representing the Sign of the Cross. This Invocation or Consecration of the Water by Prayer, is mentioned by Tertullian. For he says [b], The Waters are made the Sacrament of Sanctification by Invocation of God. The Spirit immediately descends from Heauen, and resting upon them sanctifies them by himself, and they being so sanctified, imbibe the Power of Sanctifying. And Cyprian [c] declares, That the Water must first be cleansed and sanctified by the Priest, that it may have Power by Baptism to wash away the Sins of Man. And so the whole Council of Carthage [d] in the time of Cyprian says, The Water is sanctified by the Prayer of the Priest to wash away Sin. Optatus has respect to this, when speaking of the Name of Piscis, ἰχθὺς, the Technical Name that was given to Christ, from the several Initial Letters of his Titles, which signifies a Fish, he says, This is the Fish [e], meaning Christ, which is brought down upon the Waters of the Font in Baptiſm by Invocation and Prayer. St. Auſtin often mentions this Invocation in his Books of Baptiſm. That Water [f] is not profane and adulterated, over which the Name of God is invoked, though the Invocation be made by profane and adulterous Men. In another place [g] he ſays, This Invocation was uſed both in conſecrating the Waters of Baptiſm, and the Oyl for Unction, and the Euchariſt, and in giving Impoſition of Hands. And the Sacraments were Valid, though it were a Sinner or a Murderer that made the Prayer. And again, anſwering the Objection of the Cyprianiſts and Donatiſts, That a wicked Man or an Heretick could not ſanctify the Water, he ſays, Every Error [h] in the Prayer of Conſecration does not deſtroy the Eſſence of Baptiſm, but only the Want of thoſe Evangelical Words, (he means the Form of baptizing in the Name of the Trinity) inſtituted by Chriſt, without which Baptiſm cannot be conſecrated. For otherwiſe, if the Water were not conſecrated, when the Miniſter uſes any erroneous Words in his Prayer, then not only wicked Men, but many good Brethren in the Church did not ſanctify the Water: For many of their Prayers were daily corrected, when they were rehearſed to thoſe that were more Learned, and many Errors were found in them contrary to the Catholick Faith. Yet they that were baptized when ſuch Prayers were ſaid over the Water, were not baptized again. This is a plain Evidence, that Prayers of Conſecration were then generally uſed both among the Catholicks and Donatiſts, though neither the Uſe nor the Orthodoxy of them were reckoned to be of abſolute Neceſſity to the very Being and Eſſence of Baptiſm, which might conſiſt with great Errors in ſuch Prayers. It were eaſy to add many other Teſtimonies of this antient Practice out of St. Ambroſe [i], St. Baſil [k], Theodoret [l], Gregory Nyſſen [m], Theophilus of Alexandria [n], Victor Uticenſis [o], and ſome others. But I think it needleſs to repeat them all at length, after ſuch full Evidence from St. Auſtin and thoſe Writers that came before him.

SECT. II. An antient Form of this Prayer in the Conſtitutions.

ONLY I ſhall add two or three Obſervations more concerning this Prayer of Conſecration, which may give a little Light to ſome Uſages, and ſome Doctrines alſo of the Antient Church. And firſt we find, that as they had Forms for other Parts of the Divine Service, ſo they had a Form for this Conſecration-prayer, or Benediction of the Water, though that not ſo univerſal and invariable as the Form of Baptiſm. For St. Auſtin obſerves, that the one never varied, but the other was ſubject to ſome Errors and Corruptions, by reaſon of the Liberty that was left to Human Compoſures. One of theſe Forms is now extant in the Conſtitutions, which it will not be amiſs here to inſert. It goes under the Title of a Thankſgiving over the Myſtical Water. The Prieſt bleſſes [p] and praiſes the Lord God Almighty, the Father of the only-begotten God, giving him Thanks, for that he ſent his Son to be incarnate for us, that he might ſave us; that he took upon him in his Incarnation to be obedient in all Things, to preach the Kingdom of Heaven, the Remiſſion of Sins, and the Reſurrection of the Dead. After this he adores the only-begotten God, and for him gives Thanks to the Father, that he took upon him to die for all Men upon the Croſs, leaving the Baptiſm of Regeneration as a Type or Symbol of it. He farther praiſes God the Lord of all, that in the Name of Chriſt, and by the Holy Spirit, not rejecting Mankind, he ſhewed himſelf at divers times in divers Providences towards them; giving Adam an Habitation in a delicious Paradiſe; then laying upon him a Command in his Providence, upon the Tranſgreſſion of which he expelled him in his Juſtice, but in his Goodneſs did not wholly caſt him off, but diſciplined his Poſterity in divers manners, for whom in the End of the World he ſent his Son, to be made Man for the ſake of Men, and to take upon him all the Affections of Men, Sin only excepted. After this Thankſgiving the Prieſt is to call upon God, and ſay, Look down from Heaven, and ſanctify this Water; give it Grace and Power, that he that is baptized therein, according to the Command of Chriſt, may be crucified with him, and die with him, and be buried with him, and riſe again with him to that Adoption which comes by him; that dying unto Sin, he may live unto Righteouſneſs. Any one that will compare the Form in our Liturgy with the antient Form, will find a great Reſemblance between them, both in the Thankſgiving, and the particular Prayer of Conſecration.

SECT. III. The Sign of the Croſs uſed in this Conſecration.

Secondly, I obſerve, That together with this Prayer, it was uſual to make the Sign of the Croſs alſo; not as before, upon the Perſon to be baptized, but as a Circumſtance of the Conſecration. This we learn not only from Dionyſius [q], but from St. Auſtin [r], who ſays, The Water of Baptiſm was ſigned with the Croſs of Chriſt. And St. Chryſoſtom [s] ſays, They uſed it in all their ſacred Myſteries; when they were regenerated in Baptiſm, when they were fed with the Myſtical Food in the Euchariſt, when they were ordained, that Symbol of Victory was always repreſented in the Action, whatever religious Matter they were concerned in. To which we may add the Author under the Name of St. Auſtin [t], who runs over all the ſolemn Conſecrations of the Church, and tells us, the Symbol of the Croſs was uſed in every one, in chatechiſing of new Converts, in conſecrating the Waters of Baptiſm, in giving Impoſition of Hands in Confirmation, in the Dedication of Churches and Altars, in conſecrating the Euchariſt, and in promoting Prieſts and Levites to holy Orders.

SECT. IV.

The Effects and Change wrought by this Conſecration, the ſame as in the Bread and Wine in the Euchariſt.

Thirdly, I obſerve concerning the Effects of this Conſecration, That the very ſame Change was ſuppoſed to be wrought by it in the Waters of Baptiſm, as by the Conſecration of Bread and Wine in the Euchariſt. For they ſuppoſed not only the Preſence of the Spirit, but alſo the Myſtical Preſence of Chriſt's Blood to be here after Conſecration. Julius Firmicus [u] ſpeaking of Baptiſm, bids Men here ſeek for the pure Waters, the undefiled Fountain where the Blood of Chriſt after many Spots and Defilements, would whiten them by the Holy Ghoſt. Gregory Nazianzen [x] and Baſil [y] ſay upon this Account, That a greater than the Temple, a greater than Solomon, a greater than Jonas is here, meaning Chriſt by his Myſtical Preſence and the Power of his Blood. St. Auſtin [z] ſays, Baptiſm or the baptiſmal Water is Red, when once it is conſecrated by the Blood of Chriſt; and this was prefigured by the Waters of the Red Sea. Proſper [a] is bold to ſay, That in Baptiſm we are dipped in Blood; and therefore Martyrs are twice dipped in Blood, firſt in the Blood of Chriſt at Baptiſm, and then in their own Blood at Martyrdom. St. Jerom [b] uſes the ſame bold Metaphor, explaining theſe Words of Iſaiah, Waſh ye, make ye clean: Be ye baptized in my Blood by the Laver of Regeneration. And again [c], ſpeaking of the Ethiopian Eunuch, he ſays, He was baptized in the Blood of Chriſt, about whom he was reading. After the ſame manner, Cæſarius ſays [d], The Soul goes into the living Waters, conſecrated and made Red by the Blood of Chriſt. And Iſidore [e] ſays, What is the Red-Sea, but Baptiſm conſecrated in the Blood of Chriſt? Others tell us, That we are hereby made Partakers of the Body and Blood of Chriſt, and eat his Fleſh, according to what is ſaid in St. John's Goſpel, Except ye eat the Fleſh of the Son of Man, and drink his Blood, ye have no Life in you. Upon which Words Fulgentius [f] founds the Neceſſity of Baptiſm: For as much as it may be perceived by any conſidering Man, that the Fleſh of Chriſt is eaten and his Blood drunk in the Laver of Regeneration. Hence Cyril of Alexandria ſays [g], We are Partakers of the Spiritual Lamb in Baptiſm. And Chryſoſtom [h], That we thereby put on Chriſt, not only his Divinity, or only his Humanity, that is, his Fleſh, but both together. And Nazianzen [i], That in Baptiſm we are anointed and protected by the precious Blood of Chriſt, as Iſrael was by the Blood upon the Door-poſts in the Night. St. Chryſoſtom [k] ſays again, That they that are baptiſed, put on a Royal Garment, a Purple dipped in the Blood of the Lord. Philo-Carpathius ſays, The Spouſe of Chriſt, his Church, receives in Baptiſm the Seal [l] of Chriſt, being waſhed in the Fountain of his moſt holy Blood. Optatus [m], as we have heard before, ſays, Chriſt comes down by the Invocation, and joyns himſelf to the Waters of Baptiſm. Nay, Chryſoſtom [n], in one of his bold rhetorical Flights, ſcruples not to tell a Man that is baptized, That he immediately embraces his Lord in his Arms, that he is united to his Body, nay, compounded or conſubſtantiated with that Body which ſits above, whither the Devil has no Acceſs. Some tell us, as Iſidore, That the Water of Baptiſm is the Water [o] that flowed out of Chriſt's Side at his Paſſion: And others, as Laurentius Novarienſis [p], That it is Water mixed with the ſacred Blood of the Son of God. Others tell us [q], That the Water is tranſmuted or changed in its Nature by the Holy Ghoſt, to a ſort of divine and ineffable Power. So Cyril of Alexandria, who frequently uſes the Word μεταστοιχέωσις, Tranſelementation, both when he ſpeaks of the Water in Baptiſm, and the Bread and Wine in the Euchariſt, or of any other Changes that are wrought in the Myſteries of the Chriſtian Religion. Cyril of Jeruſalem and Gregory Nyſſen have the ſame Obſervation upon the Change that is wrought in the Oyl, after Conſecration, which they make to be the ſame with that of the Bread and Wine in the Euchariſt. Beware, ſays Cyril [r], that you take not this Ointment to be bare Ointment. For as the Bread in the Euchariſt, after the Invocation of the Holy Spirit, is not mere Bread, but the Body of Chriſt: So this holy Ointment after Invocation, is not bare or common Ointment, but it is a Gift of God, that makes Chriſt and the Holy Spirit to be preſent in the Action. In like manner, Gregory Nyſſen makes the ſame Change to be in the Myſtical Oyl, and in the Altar itſelf, and in the Miniſters by Ordination, and in the Waters of Baptiſm, as in the Bread and Wine in the Euchariſt after Conſecration. Do not contemn, ſays he, the divine Laver, nor deſpiſe it as a common Thing, becauſe of the Uſe [s] of Water. For great and wonderful Things are wrought by it. This Altar, before which we ſtand, is but common Stone in its own Nature, differing nothing from other Stones, wherewith our Walls are built; but after it is conſecrated to the Service of God, and has received a Benediction, it is an holy Table, an immaculate Altar, not to be touched by any but the Prieſts, and that with the greateſt Reverence. The Bread alſo is at firſt but common Bread, but when once it is ſanctified by the holy Myſtery, it is made and called the Body of Chriſt. So the Myſtical Oyl, and ſo the Wine, though they be Things of little Value before the Benediction, yet after their Sanctification by the Spirit, they both of them work Wonders. The ſame Power of the Word makes a Prieſt become Honourable and Venerable, when he is ſeparated from the Community of the Vulgar by a new Benediction. For he who before was only one of the common People, is now immediately made a Ruler and Preſident, a Teacher of Piety, and a Miniſter of the ſecret Myſteries: And all theſe things he does without any Change in his Body or Shape; for to all outward Appearance he is the ſame that he was, but the Change is in his inviſible Soul, by an inviſible Power and Grace. Pope Leo [t] goes one Step farther, and tells us, That Baptiſm makes a Change not only in the Water, but in the Man that receives it; for thereby Chriſt receives him, and he receives Chriſt, and he is not the ſame after Baptiſm that he was before, but the Body of him that is regenerated is made the Fleſh of him that was crucified. From all which it is eaſy to obſerve, that in all theſe Caſes, the Change which they ſpeak of is not made in the Subſtance of the Things, but in the Qualities only; the Water is not the Blood of Chriſt Subſtantially and Really, but only Symbolically and Myſtically; nor is a Man changed into the Fleſh of Chriſt thereby any other way, than as he is made a living Member of his Myſtical Body, participating of that Spirit whereby he rules and governs his Church, as the Head of it. So that when the Ancients ſpeak of a divine Change or Tranſelementation (for as yet the Word Tranſubſtantiation was not known) in the Bread and Wine in the Euchariſt, they are to be interpreted, as here we do in Baptiſm, of a Change in Qualities and Powers, and not in Subſtance: Since all the words they uſed to expreſs that Change, are equally verified in the Water of Baptiſm after Conſecration.

SECT. V.
How far theſe Prayers of Conſecration reckoned neceſſary in the Church.

I muſt farther obſerve, to avoid all Miſtakes, that when the Ancients ſpeak of an abſolute Neceſſity of Invocation of God to conſecrate the Waters of Baptiſm, they then do not mean any New Form of Prayer inſtituted by the Church, but the very Form of Baptiſm inſtituted by Chriſt, which they rightly ſuppoſe to be an Invocation of the Holy Trinity; in which Senſe, no Baptiſm can be duly performed without an Invocation to conſecrate the Water, though it may be performed in Times of Exigency, without the additional [u] Prayers of the Church.

CHAP. XI.

Of the different Ways of Baptiſing by Immerſion, Trine Immerſion, and Aſperſion in the caſe of Clinick Baptiſm.

SECT. I. All Perſons anciently diveſted in order to be baptized.

HAVING thus far conſidered all Things preceding the very Act of baptizing, we are now to enquire into the Manner how that was uſually performed, Whether by Dipping and total Immerſion, or by Aſperſion and Sprinkling, which is now the more general Practice of the Church. There is no Queſtion made but that either of theſe Ways does fully anſwer the primary End of Baptiſm, which is to purify the Soul, and not the Body, by waſhing away Sin. But yet the Ancients thought, that Immerſion or burying under Water did more lively repreſent the Death and Burial, and Reſurrection of Chriſt, as well as our own Death unto Sin, and Riſing again to Righteouſneſs: And the diveſting or uncloathing the Perſon to be baptized, did alſo repreſent the putting off the Body of Sin, in order to put on the New Man, which is created in Righteouſneſs and true Holineſs. For which Reaſon they obſerved the way of baptizing all Perſons naked and diveſted, by a total Immerſion under Water, except in ſome particular caſes of great Exigency, wherein they allowed of Sprinkling, as in the caſe of Clinick Baptiſm, or where there was ſcarcity of Water. That Perſons were diveſted in order to be baptized is evident, partly from what has been ſaid before of the Unction, which was adminiſtred not only on the Head, but on other Parts of the Body; partly from expreſs Teſtimonies which affirm it; and alſo from the manner of baptizing by Immerſion, which neceſſarily preſuppoſes it. St. Chryſoſtom ſpeaking of Baptiſm, ſays, Men were as naked as Adam in Paradiſe, but with this Difference: Adam was naked [a] becauſe he had ſinned, but in Baptiſm a Man was naked that he might be freed from Sin; the one was diveſted of his Glory, which he once had, but the other put off the old Man, which he did as eaſily as his Clothes. St. Ambroſe [b] ſays, Men came as naked to the Font, as they came into the World; and thence he draws an Argument by way of Alluſion, to rich Men, telling them, How abſurd it was, that a Man who was born naked of his Mother, and received naked by the Church, ſhould think of going rich into Heaven. Cyril of Jeruſalem takes notice of this Circumſtance [c], together with the Reaſons of it, when he thus addreſſes himſelf to Perſons newly baptized: As ſoon as ye came into the inner part of the Baptiſtery, ye put off your Clothes, which is an Emblem of putting off the old Man with his Deeds: And being thus diveſted ye ſtood naked, imitating Chriſt, that was naked upon the Croſs, who by his Nakedneſs ſpoiled Principalities and Powers, publickly triumphing over them in the Croſs. O wonderful Thing! Ye were naked in the Sight of Men, and were not aſhamed; in this truly imitating the firſt Man Adam, who was naked in Paradiſe, and was not aſhamed. So alſo Amphilochius in the Life of St. Baſil [d], ſpeaking of his Baptiſm, ſays, he aroſe with Fear and put off his Clothes, and with them the old Man. And Zeno Veronenſis [e] reminding Perſons of their Baptiſm, bids them rejoice, for they went down naked into the Font, but roſe again cloathed in a white and heavenly Garment, which if they did not defile, they might obtain the Kingdom of Heaven. Athanaſius in his Invectives againſt the Arians, among other Things lays this to their Charge, that by their Perſuaſions the Jews and Gentiles broke into the Baptiſtery, and there offered ſuch Abuſes to the Catechumens as they ſtood with their naked Bodies [f], as was ſhameful and abominable to relate. And a like Complaint is brought againſt Peter Biſhop of Apamea in the Council of Conſtantinople under Mennas [g], that he caſt out the Neophytes, or Perſons newly baptized, out of the Baptiſtery, when they were without their Clothes and Shooes. All which are manifeſt Proofs that Perſons were baptized Naked, either in Imitation of Adam in Paradiſe, or our Saviour upon the Croſs, or to ſignify their putting off the Body of Sin, and the old Man with his Deeds.

SECT. II. No Exception in this Caſe either with reſpect to Women or Children.

AND this Practice was then ſo general, that we find no Exception made, either with reſpect to the tenderneſs of Infants, or the baſhfulneſs of the Female Sex, ſave only where the caſe of Sickneſs or Diſability made it neceſſary to vary from the uſual Cuſtom. St. Chryſoſtom is an undeniable Evidence in this Matter. For writing about the barbarous Proceedings of his Enemies againſt him on the great Sabbath, or Saturday before Eaſter, among other tragical Things which they committed, he reports this for one, That they came armed into the Church, and by Violence expelled the Clergy, killing many in the Baptiſtery; with which the Women [h], who at that time were diveſted in order to be baptized, were put into ſuch a Terror, that they fled away naked, and could not ſtay in the Fright to put on ſuch Clothes as the Modeſty of their Sex required. And that ſo it was in the caſe of Children alſo, is evident from the Cuſtom of Immerſion which continued in the Church for many Ages; as alſo from what is particularly ſaid of Infants in the Ordo Romanus [i] and Gregory's Sacramentarium, That after the Prieſt has baptized them with three Immerſions, they are to be cloathed, and brought to the Biſhop to be confirmed. For this Cloathing ſuppoſes that they were uncloathed before in order to be baptized.

SECT. III. Yet Matters were ſo ordered as that no Indecency might be committed.

BUT yet that no Indecency might appear in ſo ſacred an Action, two things were eſpecially provided for by antient Rules. 1. That Men and Women were baptized apart. To which purpoſe the Baptiſteries were commonly divided into two Apartments, the one for the Men, the other for the Women, as I have had occaſion to ſhew from St. Auſtin [k], in another place [l]. Or elſe the Men were baptized at one time and the Women at another, as Voſſius [m] obſerves out of the Ordo Romanus, Gregory's Sacramentarium, Albinus Flaccus and other Writers. 2. There was antiently an Order of Deaconeſſes in the Church, and one main part of their Buſineſs was to aſſiſt at the Baptiſm of Women, where for Decency's ſake they were employed to diveſt them, and ſo to order the matter, that the whole Ceremony both of Unction and Baptizing might be performed in ſuch a manner as became the Reverence that was due to ſo ſacred an Action; of all which I have given ſufficient Proofs in a former Book [n], which I need not here repeat.

SECT IV. Baptiſm uſually performed by Immerſion.

PERSONS thus diveſted or uncloathed were uſually baptized by Immerſion, or Dipping of their whole Bodies under Water, to repreſent the Death and Burial and Reſurrection of Chriſt together; and therewith to ſignify their own dying unto Sin, the deſtruction of its Power, and the Reſurrection to a new Life. There are a great many Paſſages in the Epiſtles of St. Paul, which plainly refer to this Cuſtom, Rom. vi. 4. We are buried with him by Baptiſm, that like as Chriſt was raiſed up from the dead by the Glory of the Father, even ſo we alſo ſhould walk in newneſs of Life. So again, Col. ii. 12. Buried with him in Baptiſm; wherein ye are alſo riſen with him, through the Faith of the Operation of God, who raiſed him from the Dead. And as this was the Original Apoſtolical Practice, ſo it continued to be the univerſal Practice of the Church for many Ages, upon the ſame Symbolical Reaſons as it was firſt uſed by the Apoſtles. The Author of the Apoſtolical Conſtitutions [o] ſays, Baptiſm was given to repreſent the Death of Chriſt, and the Water his Burial. St. Chryſoſtom proves the Reſurrection from this Practice: For, ſays he, our being baptized and immerged in the Water [p], and our riſing again out of it, is a Symbol of our deſcending into Hell or the Grave, and of our returning from thence. Wherefore St. Paul calls Baptiſm our Burial. For, ſays he, we are buried with Chriſt by Baptiſm into Death. And in another place [q], When we dip our Heads in Water as in a Grave, our Old Man is buried; and when we riſe up again, the New Man riſes therewith. Cyril of Jeruſalem makes it an Emblem of the Holy Ghoſt's Effuſion upon the Apoſtles: For as he that goes down into the Water [r] and is baptized, and ſurrounded on all Sides by Water; ſo the Apoſtles were baptized all over by the Spirit: The Water ſurrounds the Body externally, but the Spirit incomprehenſibly baptizes the interior Soul. The Fourth Council of Toledo keeps to the former Reaſon [s], The Immerſion in Water, is as it were the deſcending into the Grave, and the riſing out of the Water a Reſurrection. And ſo St. Ambroſe [t] explains it, Thou waſt asked, Doſt thou believe in God the Father Almighty? And thou didſt anſwer, I believe: And then thou waſt immerged in Water, that is, buried. It appears alſo from Epiphanius and others, that almoſt all Hereticks, who retained any Baptiſm, retained Immerſion alſo. Epiphanius [u] ſays, The Ebionites received Baptiſm as it was practiſed in the Church, but they added to it a Quotidian Baptiſm, immerging themſelves in Water every Day. So the Marcionites were guilty of many Errors in other Reſpects about Baptiſm: They would baptize no Perſons but either Virgins [x] or Widows, or unmarried Men; they repeated their Baptiſm three times [y]; and introduced ſome other Errors about it: But ſtill the Baptiſms which they adminiſtred, were in this reſpect conformable to thoſe of the Church, that they baptized by a total Immerſion, as Tertullian [z] witneſſes of them. Other Hereticks, as the Valentinians, to their Baptiſm by Water, added another Baptiſm by Fire [a], which is mentioned by Tertullian. But yet we find no Charge brought againſt them for their firſt Baptiſm, as if it were adminiſtred in any other way than by a total Immerſion. The only Hereticks, againſt whom this Charge is brought, were the Eunomians, a Branch of the Arians, of whom it was reported by Theodoret [b], that they baptized only the upper parts of the Body as far as the Breaſt. And this they did in a very prepoſterous way, as Epiphanius [c] relates, τὰς πόδας ἄνω, καὶ τὴν κεφαλὴν κάτω, with their Heels upward, and their Head downward. Which ſort of Men are called Hiſtopedes, or Pederecti. Whence the Learned Gothofred [d] conjectures, That in one of the Laws of Theodoſius, where it is now read, Eunomiani Spadones; it ſhould be Eunomiani Hiſtopedes, which ſignifies Men hanged up by the Heels, as he proves from Pauſanias, Pollux, Heſychius, Harpocration and others. So that theſe were the only Men among all the Hereticks of the antient Church, that rejected this way of baptizing by a total Immerſion in ordinary caſes.

SECT. V. Yet Aſperſion or Sprinkling allowed in ſome extraordinary Caſes.

INDEED the Church was ſo punctual to this Rule, that we never read of any Exception made to it in ordinary Caſes, no not in the Baptiſm of Infants. For it appears from the Ordo Romanus and Gregory's Sacramentarium, that Infants as well as others were baptized by Immerſion; and the Rules of the Church, except in Caſes of Danger, do ſtill require it. But in two Caſes a Mitigation of this Rule was allowed. 1. In caſe of Sickneſs and extreme Danger of Life. Here that excellent Rule, I will have Mercy and not Sacrifice, was always allowed to take place. Therefore that which the Ancients called Clinick Baptiſm, that is, Baptiſm by Aſperſion or Sprinkling upon a Sick-bed, was never diſputed againſt as an unlawful or imperfect Baptiſm, though ſome Laws were made to debar Men who were ſo baptized, from aſcending to the Dignities of the Church. For if Men by Neglect deferred their Baptiſm to a Sick-bed, the Church in her Prudence and Diſcipline (becauſe this Delay was a Fault ſhe always declaimed againſt) thought fit to deny ſuch Men the Privilege of Ordination, as I have had Occaſion to ſhew in a more proper [e] place. But yet ſhe did not at any time attempt to annul ſuch Baptiſms, or judge them imperfect as to what concerned the Eſſence or Subſtance of the Action. This very Queſtion was moved by ſome, together with that of Heretical Baptiſm, in the time of Cyprian: But Cyprian, who determined againſt the Validity of Heretical Baptiſm, makes no Scruple in this caſe, but offers Arguments to prove ſuch Clinick Baptiſm by Aſperſion, to have all the neceſſary Conditions of a true Baptiſm. For though this was the Caſe of Novatian, who had not been waſhed, but only ſprinkled upon a Sick-bed; yet Cyprian [f] had no Objection againſt his Chriſtianity upon that Account: But declares, That as far as he was able to judge, all ſuch Baptiſms were Perfect, where there was no Defect in the Faith of the Giver or the Receiver: For the Contagion of Sin was not waſhed away, as the Filth of the Body is, by a carnal and ſecular Waſhing. There was no need of a Lake or other ſuch-like Helps to waſh and cleanſe it. The Heart of a Believer was otherwiſe waſhed, the Mind of a Man was cleanſed by the Merit of Faith. In the Sacraments of Salvation, when Neceſſity requires, God grants his Indulgence by a ſhort way of performing them. This Lawfulneſs of Aſperſion in ſuch caſes he proves from thoſe Words of God in Ezekiel xxxvi. 25. I will ſprinkle clean Water upon you, and ye ſhall be clean: From all your Filthineſſes, and from all your Idols will I cleanſe you. And from ſeveral other Texts, Numb. xix. 19. viii. 7. and xix. 9. where the Water of Sprinkling is called the Water of Purification. Whence he concludes, That the ſprinkling of Water was as effectual as Waſhing: And what the Church did in this Caſe in compliance with Neceſſity and Mens Infirmities, was neither diſpleaſing to God, nor detrimental to the Party baptized, who received a full and complete Sacrament by the Power of God, and the Truth of his own Faith together. And therefore he blames thoſe who Nicknamed theſe Men, Clinicks, inſtead of Chriſtians. It farther appears from the Canons which ſpeak of theſe [g], That they were only denied Orders, not the Name of Chriſtians. The Council of Neo-Cæſarea allows them in time of great Exigency, or in caſe of great Merit, to be ordained, as Novatian was for his pregnant Parts, and the Hopes which the Church had conceived of him, as Euſebius [h] out of the Epiſtle of Cornelius informs us. The Council of Laodicea [i] appoints ſuch, if they recover, to learn the Creed, but

ſays not a Word of Re-baptizing them. And it appears from the Council of Auxerre [k], that theſe Clinicks were allowed to be baptized at any Time when Neceſſity required, without ſtaying for a ſolemn Feſtival. So that many Things were indulged to them, which were not allowed by the ordinary Rules of the Church. 2. Another Caſe in which Sprinkling was accepted inſtead of Immerſion, was in Times of Difficulty, when a ſufficient quantity of Water could not be procured. As when a Martyr was to be baptized in Priſon, or was to baptize any other under ſuch a Confinement. Thus we read in the antient Acts of St. Laurence, referred to by Walafridus Strabo [l], how one Romanus a Soldier was baptized by him in a Pitcher of Water. And again, how one Lucillus was baptized by the ſame Martyr [m] only by pouring Water upon his Head. But as both theſe were extraordinary Caſes, they only ſhew us, how far the Church could diſpenſe with this Rule upon Reaſons of Neceſſity or Charity, not what was her ſtanding and ordinary Practice. Some learned Perſons [n] think Tertullian alludes to the Allowance of Sprinkling in extraordinary Caſes, when ſpeaking of Mens pretending to be baptized without true Repentance, he ſays, No Man would grant ſuch falſe Penitents [o] ſo much as one Aſperſion of Water. And Gregory Nyſſen perhaps refers to it alſo in that famous Story, which he tells of one Archias, who having neglected his Opportunity of receiving Baptiſm, was at laſt ſuddenly ſurprized with Death at a Seaſon when there was no poſſibility of obtaining it: And then he cried out in that languiſhing Condition, O ye Mountains [p] and Woods, baptize me; O ye Trees, and Rocks and Fountains, give me this Grace: And with theſe Words, being wounded to Death, he expired in the Hands of his Enemies. This Man's Condition he compares to thoſe, who have the ſudden Summons of Death upon a ſick Bed: They then begin to call for a Veſſel of Water, a Prieſt, and Words to prepare them for Baptiſm; but the Violence of their Diſeaſe prevents them from obtaining it. This ſeems to imply, that ſuch a Sprinkling as Men might have upon a ſick Bed, in Caſes of Extremity was reputed a Saving Baptiſm; and it was an Unhappineſs in ſome, that they could not obtain even that at their laſt Hour, which the Church allowed as the laſt Refuge only in ſuch extraordinary Caſes.

SECT. VI. Trine Immerſion, the general Practice for ſeveral Ages. The Reaſons of this.

BUT I muſt obſerve farther, That they not only Adminiſtred Baptiſm by Immerſion under Water, but alſo repeated this three Times. Tertullian ſpeaks of it as a Ceremony [q] generally uſed in his Time: We Dip not once, but Three times, at the naming every Perſon of the Trinity. The ſame is aſſerted by St. Baſil [r], and St. Jerom [s], and the Author under the Name of Dionyſius [t], who ſays likewiſe, that it was done at the diſtinct mention of each Perſon of the Bleſſed Trinity. St. Ambroſe is moſt particular in the Deſcription of this Rite: Thou waſt asked, [u] ſays he, Doſt thou believe in God the Father Almighty? And thou repliedſt, I believe, and waſt dipped, that is, buried. A ſecond Demand was made, Doſt thou believe in Jeſus Chriſt our Lord, and in his Croſs? Thou anſweredſt again, I believe, and waſt dipped. Therefore thou waſt buried with Chriſt. For he that is buried with Chriſt, riſes again with Chriſt. A third time the Queſtion was repeated, Doſt thou believe in the Holy Ghoſt? And thy Anſwer was, I believe. Then thou waſt dipped a third Time, that thy triple Confeſſion might abſolve thee from the various Offences of thy former Life. Two Reaſons are commonly aſſigned for this Practice. 1ſt, That it might repreſent Chriſt's three Days burial, and his Reſurrection on the third Day. We cover ourſelves in the Water, ſays Gregory Nyſſen [x], as Chriſt did in the Earth, and this we do three Times, to repreſent the Grace of his Reſurrection performed after three Days. In like manner Cyril of Jeruſalem [y] and the Author of The Queſtions upon the Scripture [z] under the Name of Athanaſius. Thus likewiſe Pope Leo among the Latins [*], The Trine Immerſion is an Imitation of the three Days burial, and the riſing again out of the Water, is an Image of Chriſt riſing from the Grave. 2. Another Reaſon was, that it might repreſent their Profeſſion of Faith in the Holy Trinity, in whoſe Name they were baptized. St. Auſtin [a] joins both Reaſons together, telling us there was a twofold Myſtery ſignified in this way of Baptizing. The Trine Immerſion was both a Symbol of the Holy Trinity, in whoſe Name we are baptized, and alſo a Type of the Lord's Burial, and of his Reſurrection on the third Day from the Dead. For we are buried with Chriſt by Baptiſm, and riſe again with him by Faith. St. Jerom [b] makes this Ceremony to be a Symbol of the Unity as well as the Trinity. For, ſays he, we are thrice dipped in Water, that the Myſtery of the Trinity may appear to be but one: We are not baptized in the Names of Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt, but in one Name, which is God. And therefore he adds, that though we be thrice put under Water to repreſent the Myſtery of the Trinity, yet it is reputed but one Baptiſm.

SECT. VII. The Original of this Practice.

THE Original of this Cuſtom is not exactly agreed upon by the Ancients. Some derive it from Apoſtolical Tradition; others from the firſt Inſtitution of Baptiſm by our Saviour; whilſt others eſteem it only an indifferent Circumſtance or Ceremony, that may be uſed, or omitted, without any Detriment to the Sacrament itſelf, or Breach of any Divine Appointment. Tertullian [c], St. Baſil [d], and St. Jerom [e], put it among thoſe Rites of the Church, which they reckon to be handed down from Apoſtolical Tradition. St. Chryſoſtom ſeems rather to make it part of the firſt Inſtitution: For he ſays, Chriſt delivered to his Diſciples [f] one Baptiſm in three Immerſions of the Body, when he ſaid to them, Go teach all Nations, baptizing them in the Name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghoſt. And Theodoret [g] was of the ſame Opinion: For he charges Eunomius as making an Innovation upon the Original Inſtitution of Baptiſm, delivered by Chriſt and his Apoſtles, in that he made a contrary Law, that Men ſhould not be baptized with three Immerſions, nor with Invocation of the Trinity, but only with one Immerſion into the Death of Chriſt. Pope Pelagius brought the ſame Charge againſt ſome others in his Time [h] who baptized all in the Name of Chriſt, with one Immerſion, which he condemns as contrary to the Goſpel Command given by Chriſt, who appointed every one to be baptized in the Name of the Trinity, and that with three Immerſions, ſaying to his Diſciples, Go, baptize all Nations, in the Name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt. And this was ſo far eſteemed a Divine Obligation by the Author of the Apoſtolical Canons [i], that they order every Biſhop or Presbyter to be depoſed, who ſhould adminiſter Baptiſm not by three Immerſions, but only one in the Name of Chriſt; becauſe Chriſt ſaid not, baptize into my Death; but, Go, baptize all Nations in the Name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt. It is plain, all theſe Writers thought this a neceſſary Circumſtance from our Saviour's Inſtitution. And the Eunomians, who firſt rejected this, are condemned by Theodoret and Sozomen, as making a new Law of baptizing, not only againſt the general Practice, but againſt the general Rule and Tradition of the Church.

SECT. VIII. When firſt the Church allowed of any Alteration in it.

YET there happened a Circumſtance in the Spaniſh Churches in After-ages, which gave a little Turn to this Affair. For the Arians in Spain, not being of the Sect of the Eunomians, continued for many Years to baptize with three Immerſions: But then they abuſed this Ceremony to a perverſe End, to patronize their Error about the Son and Holy Ghoſt's being of a different Nature or Eſſence from the Father. For they made the three Immerſions to denote a Difference, or Degrees of Divinity in the three Divine Perſons. To oppoſe whoſe wicked Doctrine, and that they might not ſeem to Symbolize with them in any Practice that might give Encouragement to it, ſome Catholicks began to leave off the Trine Immerſion, as ſavouring of Arianiſm, and took up the ſingle Immerſion in Oppoſition to them. But this was like to prove Matter of Scandal and Schiſm among the Catholicks themſelves. And therefore in the time of Gregory the Great, Leander Biſhop of Sevil wrote to him for his Advice and Reſolution in this Caſe. To which he returned this Anſwer: Concerning the three Immerſions in Baptiſm, you [k] have judged very truly already, That different Rites and Cuſtoms do not prejudice the Holy Church, whilſt the Unity of Faith remains entire. The Reaſon why we uſe three Immerſions (at Rome) is to ſignify the Myſtery of Chriſt's three Days burial, that whilſt an Infant is thrice lifted up out of the Water, the Reſurrection on the third Day may be expreſſed thereby. But if any one thinks this is rather done in regard to the Holy Trinity; a ſingle Immerſion in Baptiſm does no way prejudice that: For ſo long as the Unity of Subſtance is preſerved in Three Perſons, it is no harm whether a Child be baptized with one Immerſion or three; becauſe three Immerſions may repreſent the Trinity of Perſons, and one Immerſion the Unity of the Godhead. But foraſmuch as Hereticks uſe to baptize their Infants with three Immerſions, I think you ought not to do ſo; leſt this multiplication of Immerſions be interpreted a Diviſion of the Godhead, and give them occaſion to glory, that their Cuſtom has prevailed. Yet this Judgment of Pope Gregory did not ſatisfy all Men in the Spaniſh Church: For ſtill many kept to the old way of Baptizing by three Immerſions, notwithſtanding this Fear of Symbolizing with the Arians. Therefore ſome Time after, about the Year 633, the Fourth Council of Toledo, which was a general Council of all Spain, was forced to make another Decree to determine this Matter, and ſettle the Peace of the Church. For while ſome Prieſts baptized with three Immerſions, and the others but with one, a Schiſm was raiſed [l], endangering the Unity of the Faith. For the contending Parties carried the Matter ſo high, as to pretend, that they who were baptized in a Way contrary to their own, were not baptized at all. To remedy which Evil, the Fathers of this Council firſt repeat the Judgment of Pope Gregory, and then immediately conclude upon it, that though both theſe Ways of Baptiſm were juſt and unblameable in themſelves, according to the Opinion of that Great Man; yet as well to avoid the Scandal of Schiſm, as the Uſage of Hereticks, they decree, That only one Immerſion ſhould be uſed in Baptiſm, leſt if any uſed three Immerſions, they might ſeem to approve the Opinion of Hereticks, whilſt they followed their Practice. And that no one might be dubious about the Uſe of a ſingle Immerſion, he might conſider, that the Death and Reſurrection of Chriſt were repreſented by it. For the Immerſion in Water was as it were the deſcending into Hell or the Grave, and the Emerſion out of the Water was a Reſurrection. He might alſo obſerve the Unity of the Deity, and the Trinity of Perſons to be ſignified by it. The Unity by a ſingle Immerſion, and the Trinity by giving Baptiſm in the Name of Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt. Some learned Perſons [m] find Fault with this Council, for changing this ancient Cuſtom upon ſo ſlight a Reaſon, as that of the Arians uſing it: Which, if it were any Reaſon, would hold as well againſt a ſingle Immerſion, becauſe the Eunomians, a baſer Sect of the Arians, were the firſt Inventors of that Practice. And therefore the Exception made by this Spaniſh Council in the Seventh Century, cannot prejudice the more ancient and general Practice of the Church, which, as Strabo obſerved, ſtill prevailed after this Council; and if Voſſius ſays true, the Trine Immerſion, or what correſponds to it, the Trine Aſperſion, is the general Practice of all Churches upon Earth at this Day. And ſuch a Cuſtom could not well be laid aſide, without ſome Charge of Novelty, and Danger of giving Offence and Scandal to weaker Brethren. I have now gone over the ſeveral Circumſtances and Ceremonies accompanying Baptiſm, ſo far as to make it a complete Sacrament, and the Inſtrument of Salvation to all worthy Receivers, if they happened to die without any farther Conſummation, as ſometimes they did, when Baptiſm was adminiſtred to them with leſs Solemnity, either in Times of Sickneſs, or at ſome Diſtance from the Mother Church; in both which Caſes they had the Subſtance of the Sacrament, but not all the Ceremonies that were appointed to attend it. They were ſuppoſed to be made Partakers of Chriſt's Body, and to eat his Fleſh, and to be waſhed in his Blood, which was drinking it by Faith, in Baptiſm as well as in the Euchariſt. And if they ſurvived, they were alſo admitted immediately to the Symbols of Chriſt's Body and Blood in the Euchariſt. But there were ſome other Ceremonies following Baptiſm, as it were to finiſh the Solemnity of it; ſome of which were Introductory and Preparatory to the Euchariſt, as the ſecond Unction accompanying Baptiſm, which we commonly call Impoſition of Hands or Confirmation. Of which, becauſe it will be neceſſary to ſpeak a little more diſtinctly, I ſhall make it and the remaining Ceremonies of Baptiſm the Subject of another Book.

Nos autem quod tertiò mergimus, triduanæ ſepulturæ Sacramenta ſignamus, ut dum tertiò infans ab aquis educitur, reſurrectio triduani temporis exprimatur. Quod ſi quis forte etiam pro ſummæ Trinitatis veneratione exiſtimet fieri; neque ad hoc aliquid obſiſtit baptizando ſemel in aquis mergere: quia dum in tribus Perſonis una ſubſtantia eſt, reprehenſibile eſſe nullatenus poteſt, infantem in baptiſmate vel ter, vel ſemel immergere; quando & in tribus merſionibus Perſonarum Trinitas, & in una poteſt Divinitatis ſingularitas deſignari. Sed quia nunc hucuſque ab hæreticis infans in baptiſmo tertiò mergebatur, fiendum apud vos eſſe non cenſeo, ne dum merſiones numerant, Divinitatem dividant; dumque quod faciebant faciunt, ſe morem veſtrum viciſſe glorientur.

BOOK XII.

Of CONFIRMATION, and other Ceremonies following BAPTISM, before Men were made Partakers of the EUCHARIST.

CHAP. I.

Of the Time when, and the Perſons to whom Confirmation was adminiſtred.

SECT. I. Confirmation antiently given immediately after Baptiſm, if the Biſhop were preſent.

IMMEDIATELY after the Perſons came up out of the Water, if the Biſhop was preſent at the Solemnity, they were preſented to him, in order to receive his Benediction, which was a ſolemn Prayer for the Deſcent of the Holy Ghoſt upon ſuch as were baptized: And to this Prayer there was uſually joined the Ceremony of a ſecond Unction, and Impoſition of Hands, and the Sign of the Croſs; whence the whole Action many times took theſe Names, χρῖσμα, the Unction, χειροθεσία, the Impoſition of Hands, and σφραγὶς, the Sign or Seal of the Lord, which are Names much more common among the Ancients, than that of Confirmation. But by all theſe Names they underſtood one and the ſame Thing, which was the Biſhop's Prayer for the Deſcent of the Spirit upon Perſons newly baptized. This was always adminiſtred together with Baptiſm, if the Biſhop, who was the ordinary Miniſter of it, were preſent at the Action. But if he was abſent, as it uſually happen'd to be in Churches at a Diſtance from the Mother Church, or when Perſons were baptized in haſte upon a Sick-bed, then Confirmation was deferred till the Biſhop could have a convenient Opportunity to viſit them. This we learn from St. Jerom, who ſpeaks [a] of it as cuſtomary in the Church, for Biſhops to go and invocate the Holy Spirit by Impoſition of Hands on ſuch as were baptized by Presbyters and Deacons in Villages and Places remote from the Mother-Church. And it many times happened, that ſuch Perſons died before the Biſhop could come to give them Impoſition of Hands. To prevent which Inconvenience, the Canons in ſome places obliged Biſhops to viſit their whole Dioceſes once every Year; and if they were ſo large that they could not do ſo, then they were to divide their Dioceſes and make them leſs, as we find it decreed and practiſed in ſome of the Spaniſh [b] Councils. But in caſe Perſons were baptized in the Preſence of the Biſhop, then without any Delay they were immediately confirmed with Impoſition of Hands and the holy Unction. Tertullian ſays [c] very plainly, That as ſoon as they came out of the Water, they were anointed with the Oil of Conſecration, and then received Impoſition of Hands, inviting down the Holy Spirit by that Benediction. And ſo Cyril of Jeruſalem repreſents it, when he tells the Neophytes, That as ſoon as they come up out of the Waters of the Font [d], they received the Chriſm, or Unction, with the Antitype of which (that is, the Holy Ghoſt,) Chriſt was anointed when he came up out of Jordan. In like manner the Author of the Conſtitutions deſcribing the Ceremonies of Baptiſm, orders the Prieſt [e], as ſoon as he has baptized any one, to anoint him with the holy Chriſm, and give him Impoſition of Hands, ſaying a Prayer which is there appointed. Thus we find in the Life of St. Baſil [f], how Maximinus the Biſhop, who baptized him and Eubulus together, immediately clothed them with the white Garments, and anointed them with the holy Chriſm, and gave them the Communion. The ſame may be obſerved in the Deſcription of the Ceremonies of Baptiſm given by the Author under the Name of Dionyſius [g], St. Ambroſe, Optatus, Pacian, and all others amongſt the Ancients, who have made any mention of the Time of adminiſtring Confirmation.

SECT. II.

And this as well to Infants as Adult Perſons. Which is evidenced, 1ſt, From ſome plain Teſtimonies.

NOR was this only true with reſpect to Adult Perſons, but alſo with reſpect to Infants, who were antiently confirmed by Impoſition of Hands and the holy Chriſm or Unction, as ſoon as they were baptized. Which perhaps will ſeem a Paradox to many, who look no farther than to the Practice of later Ages: But it may be undeniably evidenced theſe two ways. 1. From plain Teſtimonies of the Ancients declaring it ſo to be. And, 2. From that known Cuſtom and Uſage of the Church in giving the Euchariſt to Infants, which ordinarily preſuppoſes their Confirmation. Firſt, For the Teſtimonies of the Ancients, nothing can be plainer than thoſe Words of Gennadius, If they be Infants that are baptized [h], let thoſe that preſent them to Baptiſm, anſwer for them according to the common way of baptizing: And then let them be confirmed with Impoſition of Hands and Chriſm, and ſo be admitted to partake of the Euchariſt. In like manner Pope Innocent in one of his Decrees [i] ſays, Infants are not to be conſigned or confirmed by any but the Biſhop. And in the Collection of Canons made by Martin Bracarenſis [k] out of thoſe of the Greek Church, this is one, That a Presbyter may not conſign Infants in the Preſence of the Biſhop, except he be particularly appointed by the Biſhop to do it. This Practice continued in the Church for many Ages. For it is mentioned by Pope Gregory both in his Sacramentarium and in his Epiſtles [l], and after him by all the Writers in the Eighth and Ninth Centuries. Alcuin who wrote about the Offices of the Church in the time of Charles the Great, ſpeaking of Infant-baptiſm [m] ſays, After an Infant is baptized, he is to be cloathed, and brought to the Biſhop, if he be preſent, who is to confirm him with Chriſm, and give him the Communion: And if the Biſhop be not preſent, the Presbyter ſhall communicate him. The ſame is in the Ordo Romanus, a Book written and uſed as a Liturgy about the ſame Time: Where after the Biſhop has given the White Garment to Infants, he lifts up his Hand and lays it upon their Heads, [n] praying for the Deſcent of the Holy Ghoſt upon them, and ſigning them with the Sign of the Croſs in the Forehead, he ſays, I confirm thee in the Name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt. Baluzius in his Notes upon Regino [o] gives us two antient Manuſcript Pontificals of the Ninth Centary, wherein this Order for Confirming Infants is continued. And to theſe he adds [p] an Epiſtle of Jeſſe Biſhop of Amiens deſcribing the Order of Baptiſm, where the Rule is for the Biſhop, after the Child has been baptized with three Immerſions, to confirm him with Chriſm in the Forehead, and then to confirm him (for ſo it is worded) or communicate him with the Body and Blood of Chriſt. Theſe Teſtimonies are ſo plain and convincing, that all Learned Men, who have exactly conſidered this Matter, as well Papiſts as Proteſtants, are agreed, That this was the antient and general Practice of the Church, to confirm Infants as ſoon as they were baptized. For ſo I find not only Baluzius, but Peter de Marca [q], Hugo Menardus [r], Maldonat [s], Eſtius [t], Galenus [u], among the Papiſts, and Biſhop Taylor [x] and Daillé [y] among the Proteſtants, readily conſenting. And ſome [z] tell us, the ſame Practice continues among the Greeks to this Day. The Learned Reader may add to the former Teſtimonies the Authority of St. Auſtin, who witneſſes for this Practice in his own Perſon. For he ſays [a], He himſelf was uſed to give Impoſition of Hands, or Confirmation, to Infants, that they might receive the Holy Spirit.

SECT. III.
And Secondly, From the Cuſtom of giving the Euchariſt to Infants for many Ages.

IF this Matter needed farther Proof, we might inſiſt upon that known Practice and Cuſtom in the antient Church, of giving the Euchariſt to Infants, which continued in the Church for ſeveral Ages. It is frequently mentioned in Cyprian, Auſtin, Innocentius and Gennadius, Writers from the Third to the Fifth Century. Maldonat confeſſes it was in the Church for Six Hundred Years. And ſome of the Authorities juſt now alledged, prove it to have continued two or three Ages more, and to have been the common Practice beyond the Time of Charles the Great. Now all Men know, that in the common courſe of Things, Confirmation always preceded the Euchariſt, unleſs there was ſome ſpecial Cauſe, as ſometimes it happened in the caſe of Clinick-baptiſm, or the Biſhop's Abſence, to prevent it. For in theſe two Caſes the Euchariſt was many times given before Confirmation, as now it is in our large Dioceſes, where the Biſhop's Preſence cannot always be had to give Confirmation, in Places at a great Diſtance, before the Communion. But in all other caſes the uſual way was to let Confirmation uſher in the Communion. And therefore ſince it is evident, That the Communion itſelf was given to Infants, and that immediately from the time of their Baptiſm; it would be reaſonable to conclude from hence, were there no other Evidence, That Confirmation alſo was given to Infants together with Baptiſm, becauſe this Rite by all ordinary Rules and Cuſtom was prior and introductory to the Communion.

SECT. IV.
Whence it appears, that Confirmation was not eſteemed a proper Sacrament diſtinct from Baptiſm.

THIS Obſervation may help us to underſtand ſome difficult Paſſages in the Ancients, and anſwer an Objection which the Romaniſts draw from them, as if Confirmation were a proper Sacrament diſtinct from Baptiſm. The Ancients, it muſt be owned, ſometimes give it the Name of a Sacrament, and call Baptiſm and Confirmation two Sacraments. But then it is very evident, they take the Word Sacrament in a large Senſe for any ſacred Ceremony, Rite or Myſtery belonging to Baptiſm: In which Senſe they ſuppoſe two Sacraments, or chief myſterious Ceremonies to be in Baptiſm, that is, the Immerſion in Water, and the Unction with the Holy Chriſm, both which are ſpoken of as Sacraments or Ceremonies belonging to Baptiſm. Thus in the Council of Carthage under Cyprian, Nemeſianus Tubunenſis ſays, It was not ſufficient for Men to be regenerated only by Impoſition of Hands, but they ought to be born again [b] by both the Sacraments in the Catholick Church; that is, as well by waſhing in Water, as Impoſition of Hands, both which he makes Sacraments, that is, ſacred Rites of the ſame Sacrament of Regeneration. In the ſame Senſe Cyprian himſelf [c] ſays, Both the Sacraments of Regeneration were required to complete Men's Sanctification. Which plainly ſhews, That by two Sacraments he means no more but two of the principal Ceremonies that belonged to a compleat and perfect Baptiſm, becauſe he ſays, Men were regenerated or born again by them both. In like manner Optatus [d] makes Impoſition of Hands and Unction to be only Parts and Ceremonies compleating Baptiſm. For ſpeaking of the Baptiſm of Chriſt, he ſays, He went not into the Water, as if any thing in God could need cleanſing; but it was neceſſary the Water ſhould go before the Unction that was to follow after, to initiate and order and compleat the Myſteries or Sacramental Rites of Baptiſm. When he was waſhed by the Hands of John, the Order of the Myſtery was ſettled; the Father fulfilled what the Son had asked, and what the Holy Ghoſt had foretold. The Spiritual Oyl immediately deſcended in the Image of a Dove, and ſate upon his Head, and anointed him; from whence he began to be called Chriſt, becauſe he was anointed of God the Father. And that Impoſition of Hands might not ſeem to be wanting, the Voice of God was heard from the Cloud, ſaying, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleaſed. Here Optatus profeſſes to deſcribe the Order, and Parts, and Myſteries of Baptiſm, from the Similitude of the Baptiſm of Chriſt. In each of theſe he makes three Sacraments or principal Myſteries, the Waſhing, the Unction, and Impoſition of Hands; which are not properly three diſtinct Sacraments, but three Parts or Rites of the ſame Sacrament of Baptiſm, which according to Optatus, were ordered and ſhadowed, and completed in the Baptiſm of Chriſt. Unleſs we take Sacrament in this large Senſe, we ſhall have three proper Sacraments in Baptiſm, which neither Optatus nor any of the Ancients ever thought of, when they ſpeak of the Myſteries of Baptiſm; but they allow both Unction and Impoſition of Hands to be Sacraments, as they are Parts or Rites of the Myſtery of Baptiſm. After this manner Pacianus Biſhop of Barcelona, makes alſo three Sacraments of the Myſtery of Baptiſm, viz. The Laver or Waſhing of Water, the Unction of the Spirit, and the Hand and Mouth of the Prieſt. For he ſays, The Seed of Chriſt, that is, the Spirit of God, brings forth a New Man, by the Hands of the Prieſt, out of the Womb of the Church, which is the Font, Faith being the Bride-maid to all this [e]. And without theſe three Sacraments, the Laver, the Chriſm, and the Prieſt, this new Birth is not effected. For by the Laver Sin is purged away, by the Chriſm the Holy Spirit is poured down upon us; and both theſe we obtain by the Hand and Mouth of the Prieſt; and ſo the whole Man is regenerated and renewed in Chriſt. Here we muſt of Neceſſity ſay, Either that the Laver, the Chriſm, and Words and Action of the Prieſt are three Sacraments, or elſe that they are but three Parts or Ceremonies of the ſame Sacrament of Baptiſm; which is what Pacian plainly intended; for he is ſpeaking of the Manner how Men are regenerated in Baptiſm, and he makes Chriſm to be one Means of this Regeneration; whence it is evident, he had no other Notion of it, but as of an Integral Part of Baptiſm, though not abſolutely eſſential to it. This is then one plain Reaſon, why the Ancients ſometimes call the Immerſion in the Water, and the Unction of Chriſm, two Sacraments, becauſe they are Parts, or Rites, or Ceremonies of the Myſtery of Baptiſm. And there is nothing more uſual with the Ancients, than this way of ſpeaking, to call every ſacred Rite and Ceremony uſed in the Church, by the name of a Sacrament or Myſtery. As St. Auſtin calls Exorciſm [f] a Sacrament. And the Salt that was given to the Catechumens before Baptiſm, is called the Sacrament of the Catechumens, both by St. Auſtin [g] and the third Council of Carthage [h], as has been obſerved in another place, where I ſpeak particularly of this Sacrament of the Catechumens. Cyprian [i] ſpeaks of Sacraments in the Lord's Prayer. And to inſiſt no longer upon theſe, it is uſual alſo with the Ancients to divide the proper Sacraments, Baptiſm and the Euchariſt, each of them into two or more, meaning the ſeveral Parts or Rites belonging to them. Thus Iſidore ſpeaks of four Sacraments [k] in the Church, which are, Baptiſm, Chriſm, the Body of Chriſt, and the Blood of Chriſt. As therefore the Bread and Wine are called two Sacraments, though they be but two Parts of the ſame Euchariſt; ſo the Waſhing and the Unction are called two Sacraments, though they be but two Rites of the ſame Sacrament of Baptiſm. The like Style is uſed by Pope Innocent [l], when he calls the Bread and Wine Sacraments, in the Plural. And Fulbertus Carnotenſis [m] is more expreſs, when he ſays, There are two Sacraments of Life, the Body and Blood of Chriſt. No wonder therefore the ſame Author [n] ſhould call the Immerſion in Water and the Unction of Chriſm, conveying the Spirit, by the Name of the two Sacraments of Baptiſm. For nothing can be plainer, than that Immerſion and Chriſm are not properly two Sacraments of Baptiſm, but only two Rites of it: As the Bread and Wine are not ſtrictly two Sacraments of the Euchariſt, but only different Parts of the ſame Communion. It were eaſy to add abundance more of ſuch Expreſſions out of other Authors, many of which the Reader may find collected together by the Learned Daillé [o]; I ſhall only add the Words of Haimo Haberſtatenſis, where he expreſly makes Confirmation a Rite or Ceremony of Baptiſm, always accompanying, and adminiſtred at the ſame time with it, as the conſummating Act and Perfection of it: The Gift of the Holy Spirit, ſays he [p], is given in Baptiſm by the Impoſition of the Biſhop's Hands. So that when the Ancients call Confirmation a Sacrament, they always mean, that it is a Part or Ceremony of the Sacrament of Baptiſm. In which Senſe they give the Name of Sacraments to many other Things, which were only Parts, or Ceremonies, or Attendants on it, ſuch as Exorciſm, and the Sign of the Croſs, which were Sacraments in the ſame Senſe as Confirmation.

SECT. V.

No not when it was ſeparate from Baptiſm, as in the Caſe of Hereticks who were baptized out of the Church.

BUT it may be ſaid, That Confirmation, Impoſition of Hands, or Unction, was many times given to Men at ſome Years diſtance from Baptiſm, as in the caſe of Hereticks and Schiſmaticks, who were baptized in Infancy out of the Church, and were received by Impoſition of Hands, when they returned to the Church afterwards. To which I anſwer, That the Impoſition of Hands which the Church gave in this caſe ſeparate from Baptiſm, was what could not be avoided, becauſe the Church had no Opportunity of adminiſtring it before: And therefore no Argument is to be drawn from what ſhe was forced to do upon ſuch an Exigence, being only an Exception to her ordinary Practice. It is owned, That the Church gave Impoſition of Hands to all Hereticks upon their return to the Church: And this, as I have ſhewed at large in another [q] Diſcourſe, was to ſupply the Deficiencies of that outward Form of Baptiſm, which could not grant them the Graces of the Spirit, whilſt they remained in Hereſy or Schiſm. And there I alſo obſerved, That ſome Hereticks retained the Unction and Impoſition of Hands as well as Baptiſm, and adminiſtred it to Infants together with Baptiſm: Which was the Practice of the Donatiſts, and it may be of ſeveral others. But yet the

Church

Church, though she neither repeated the outward Form of Baptism, nor always the Unction of Chrism; especially in the Western Parts, where St. Austin, Optatus, and Alcimus Avitus lived; yet she always gave a new Imposition of Hands with Prayer, to implore the Descent of the Holy Ghost upon them. And though this was separating Confirmation from Baptism, yet it was only in an extraordinary case, when the Church was not capacitated to do otherwise. In other cases she always joyned these two Ceremonies together, as well in Infants as adult Persons, as I suppose the Allegations and Proofs alledged in this Chapter, do abundantly shew to any candid Reader beyond Possibility of Contradiction.

SECT. VI. No Necessity of giving Confirmation to Infants now, any more than the Eucharist, from the Example of the Primitive Church.

BUT some will be apt to object, That if this were the case, then all Churches at present, as well Protestant as Popish, differ from the Practice of the Primitive Church in this Particular, That now they never administer Confirmation to Infants, but only to adult Persons, who can confirm their baptismal Vow in their own Persons. And this Difference is readily owned, as to Practice. But then if the Question be about Right, which is the more suitable and agreeable Practice? and, Whether we ought not to conform in every Circumstance to the Practice of the Primitive Church? I suppose every Church in this case is best Judge for herself, what is most for the Edification of her Children. And as no Church now thinks herself under any Obligation to give the Eucharist to Infants, because the Primitive Church for eight hundred Years did so: So neither does any Church judge herself bound to give Confirmation to Infants from the same Example: Though some Learned Persons have pleaded for both, as Bishop Bedel [r] among the Protestants for the Communion of Infants, and Matthew Galen [s] among the Papists for giving them Confirmation. Whilst others judge the Modern Practice the more edifying Way, and think there are no sufficient Arguments to engage the Church to make an Alteration.

CHAP. II.

Of the Minister of Confirmation.

SECT. I. The Consecration of Chrism reserved only to the Office of Bishops by the Canons.

NEXT to the Persons to whom Confirmation was given, we are to make Enquiry about the Ministry of it, and see by whom it was usually given. And here it will be necessary to distinguish the several Parts and Ceremonies of Confirmation, and Cases ordinary and extraordinary; as also the Consecration of the Chrism from the Use of it, and the Practice and Custom of some Churches from others: For one Rule was not precisely observed in all these. Confirmation consisted of several Acts, as we shall see in the next Chapter: There was first the Consecration of the Chrism, which was always the Bishop's Act: Then there was the Unction itself, or the Use of it, with Consignation or the Sign of the Cross on the Forehead or other Parts of the Body; then Imposition of Hands with Prayer: There were also Cases Ordinary, when the Bishop was present at Baptism, and Cases extraordinary when he was absent, and the Party in danger of Death: There were also different Practices, according to the Rules of different Churches: And according to these Distinctions the Answer must be given to this general Question. The Consecration of the Chrism was generally reserved to the Bishop in all Churches, and so the Use of it was derived from his Authority in all cases whatsoever. The Second Council of Carthage [a] forbids Presbyters to have any concern in it, and refers to a former Council, wherein the like Prohibition was made before. The Third Council of Carthage allows Presbyters, by the Commission of the Bishop, to consecrate Virgins; but never [b] to consecrate the Chrism. The Fourth Council of Carthage [c] obliges Presbyters in Country Churches to go to the Bishop yearly before Easter, or else to send their Sacrist to him for the Chrism. In some Churches of Spain the Presbyters took upon them to consecrate it themselves, which occasioned the first Council of Toledo to renew the Decree against this as an Usurpation [d], forbidding any beside the Bishop to do it from that Day forward, and obliging Presbyters, as before, to go to their own Bishop for it before Easter. The like Injunctions are made in the first Council of Vaison [e], the Council of Auxerre [f], the Council of Barcelona [g], the first and second Councils of Bracara [h], and in the Collection of Greek Canons made by Martin Bracarensis [i]; as also in the Roman Decrees made by Pope Inno- cent [k], Leo [l], and Gelasius [m], which I need not repeat at length upon this Occasion. So that by this Means the Bishop's Authority was secured, even in such cases where Presbyters were allowed to have their Share in this holy Unction.

SECT. II. The Use of the Chrism divided between the Office of Bishops and Presbyters.

Now this Unction or Consignation in many Churches (particularly in the Roman Church) was distinguished into two sorts, the Consignation of the Forehead, and the Consignation of the other Parts of the Body. And the former, in such Churches where this Distinction was made, was generally reserved to the Bishop to be administred with Imposition of Hands; but the latter was given by Presbyters also. All Churches did not allow of this Distinction of Chrism into two sorts, but such as did allow of two, granted Authority to Presbyters to administer the one, but not the other. The double Chrismation was first brought in by Pope Innocent, and he thus divides the Office between Bishops and Presbyters. A Presbyter, says he [n], baptizing either in the Bishop's Presence or Absence, may anoint the baptized Party with Chrism, provided it be consecrated before-hand by the Bishop; but he may not sign him in the Forehead with the same Oyl, because it belongs to Bishops only when they give the Holy Ghost. And so it is in the Decrees of Gelasius [o] and Pope Gregory [p] his Successor in the Roman See. But this double Chrismation was not received in France, nor in any of the Eastern Churches. In France it was the Office of Presbyters, and the Imposition of Hands was only reserved to the Bishop. This is undeniably evident from the Council of Orange [q], which orders every Minister, who had received the Office of baptizing, where-ever he went, to have the Chrism with him, because it was agreed, That Chrism should only be once used in Baptism. But if by any Necessity it had been omitted in Baptism, then the Bishop should be put in mind of that Omission in Confirmation. For it was agreed to have only one Chrismation. This Canon is repeated and referred to again in the second Council of Arles [r], and Valesius adds [s] to them an Inscription in Gruter, confirming the same thing, That the Bishop did not minister the Chrism, except it had been omitted by the Presbyter before. In the Eastern Churches they had but one Unction after Baptism, and that performed by the Bishop, except in some particular and extraordinary cases. The Author of the Apostolical Constitutions makes this the Office [t] of the Bishop to anoint those that were baptized with the holy Chrism. And this, he says, was the Confirmation of the Professions which they had made in Baptism [u]. The Author under the Name of Dionysius, says the same [x], That after the Presbyters have baptized a Man, they bring him to the Bishop, and he anoints him with the divine Chrism, and pronounces him capable of partaking of the Holy Eucharist. Now this Episcopal Unction was not only in the Forehead, as was usual in the Roman Church, but in all other parts of the Body. For as Cyril of Jerusalem [y] tells those that were baptized, They were first anointed in the Forehead, to wipe away that Shame which the first Man by his Transgression had contracted; and that they might now with open Face behold the Glory of the Lord. Then they were anointed on the Ears, that they might have Ears to hear the divine Mysteries. After that on the Nose and Breast, that they might be a sweet Savour unto the Lord, and being armed with the Breast-plate of Righteousness, might be able to withstand all the Insults of the Devil. Thus [z] also all such Hereticks as were to be received into the Church without Rebaptization, as having been baptized in due Form before, are appointed to be received by Consignation or Unction of the holy Chrism; first on the Forehead, then on the Eyes, Nose, Mouth and Ears, with this Form of Words; The Seal of the Gift of the Holy Spirit. But though this whole Ceremony of Unction in the Eastern Church was ordinarily to be perfomed only by the Bishop, and not divided (as in the Roman) between the Bishop and Presbyters; yet in some special cases, in some particular Churches this Office devolved upon the Presbyters. For at Alexandria, if the Bishop was absent, it was usual for the Presbyters to give this Consignation at the same time that they baptized. As I think the Words of the Author under the Name of St. Ambrose [a] are to be understood, when he says, In Egypt the Presbyters consign in the Bishop's Absence. And this another Author under the Name of St. Austin [b] calls Consecration. Which some learned Persons, I know, take for the Consecration of the Eucharist. But that was nothing singular, but common to all the World, for Presbyters to conſecrate the Euchariſt in the Biſhop's Abſence in all Churches, and therefore needed not to be noted as a peculiar Cuſtom in Egypt. Therefore I rather judge it to mean ſome Conſecration, which Presbyters in many other Churches were not allowed in the Abſence of the Biſhop, as the conſecrating or conſigning ſuch as were baptized, with the Chriſm of Confirmation, which a Presbyter might not do in the Roman Churches. But in ſome of the Eaſtern Churches this was allowed; for the Author of the Conſtitutions ſpeaking of the Celebration of Baptiſm, addreſſes himſelf both to Biſhops and Presbyters, telling them in what Order they ſhould perform it; Thou Biſhop, or Presbyter, ſhalt firſt anoint the Party to be baptized with the Holy Oyl; then thou ſhalt baptize him with Water; and laſt of all [c] thou ſhalt ſign him with the Holy Chriſm. Where we ſee not only the Unction preceding Baptiſm, but that which followed after, which was the Unction of Confirmation, is commanded to the Presbyter as well as the Biſhop; which muſt at leaſt be interpreted to mean his doing it in the Abſence of the Biſhop; or in his Preſence, if he has a particular Command and Delegation. So that as to what concerned this firſt Ceremony of Confirmation, the Unction of Chriſm, the Practice of different Churches varied much upon it. Some Churches, as the Roman, divided the Office between Biſhops and Presbyters: Others, as thoſe of France, committed it wholly to Presbyters, reſerving to the Biſhop only the Conſecration of the Oyl, and Impoſition of Hands in Confirmation: Others, as thoſe of the Eaſt, reſerved not only the Conſecration of the Chriſm, but the Uſe of it to the Biſhop entirely, when he was Perſonally preſent, and in all ordinary Caſes; only allowing it to be uſed by Presbyters in his Abſence, or ſome ſuch extraordinary Caſes.

SECT. III. The other Ceremony of Impoſition of Hands reſerved more ſtrictly to the Office of Biſhops.

As to the other Ceremony of Impoſition of Hands in Confirmation, we find that more univerſally and ſtrictly reſerved to the Office of Biſhops; yet not ſo abſolutely and entirely, but that the Canons authorized Presbyters to do it in Subordination to their Biſhop in ſome certain Caſes. It is certain Cyprian [d] ſpeaks of it as the ordinary Office of Biſhops or chief Miniſters of the Church. For mentioning the Impoſition of Hands given by the Apoſtles, to thoſe whom Philip had baptized, Acts viii. he ſays, The ſame Cuſtom was now obſerved in the Church, that thoſe who were baptized, were preſented to the Governors of the Church, that by their Prayer and Impoſition of Hands they might receive the Holy Ghoſt, and be conſummated with the Seal of the Lord. In like manner, Firmilian Biſhop of Cæſarea in Cappadocia, who was Cotemporary with Cyprian, makes Biſhops the ordinary Miniſters of this Office [e], whilſt he draws a Compariſon between St. Paul giving Impoſition of Hands to thoſe whom he baptized at Epheſus, Acts xix. and the Biſhop's giving Impoſition of Hands to ſuch as returned from Hereſy or Schiſm to the Unity of the Catholick Church. So likewiſe the anonymous [f] Author who writes of the Baptiſm of Hereticks, at the end of St. Cyprian's Works, makes Impoſition of Hands the Office of Biſhops, in imitation of the Apoſtles giving Impoſition of Hands to thoſe who were baptized by Philip the Deacon, Acts viii. And in another Place [g] he ſays, If Biſhops were preſent at Baptiſm, they gave Impoſition of Hands together with Baptiſm; but if any were baptized by the inferior Clergy, in time of Neceſſity, then the Biſhops ſupplied this afterwards, or elſe the LORD ſupplied it as he ſaw fit. The Council of Eliberis not long after, made two Canons to this purpoſe. In one of which [h] it is ordered, That if a Layman baptized a Catechumen, when he was dangerouſly ſick at Sea, or where there was no Church near at hand, he ſhould afterward bring him to the Biſhop, that he might perfect his Baptiſm by Impoſition of Hands. And in the other Canon it is alſo ordered, That in caſe a Deacon governing a Country-People [i], where there is no Biſhop or Presbyter preſent, ſhall baptize any of them, the Biſhop ſhall afterwards perfect them by his Benediction. Or, if they chanced to die before this could be done, they were to be reputed in a Salvable Condition by the Faith in which they were baptized. We have heard St. Jerom [k] before teſtifying of this, as the general Practice of the Church, for Biſhops to go about the Country-Villages and remoter Places in their Dioceſes, to give Impoſition of Hands to ſuch as were baptized by Presbyters and Deacons: And ſome of theſe died before the Biſhop could come to them; which implies, not only that it was the Biſhop's Ordinary Office, but that Presbyters and Deacons did not adminiſter Impoſition of Hands, even in ſuch Caſes of Neceſſity; otherwiſe the Party who wanted it, could not have died without it. This was evidently the Practice of the Roman Church, where, though the Office of Chriſmation was in part allowed to Presbyters, yet the Conſignation in the Forehead with Impoſition of Hands, was ſtill reſerved to the Biſhop, as his peculiar Office in Confirmation: As we learn from the Letters of Pope Innocent [l], Gelaſius [m], and Gregory the Great [n], which have already been mentioned in the laſt Section. To which we may add the Teſtimony of Cornelius, who lived before all theſe in the Time of Cyprian, as it is recorded by Euſebius. He there, ſpeaking [o] of Novatian, who was baptized only with Clinick Baptiſm upon a Sick-bed, ſays, When he recovered from his Diſtemper, he never received thoſe Things, which by the Laws of the Church he was obliged to receive, to wit, Conſignation by the Hands of the Biſhops, &c. All thoſe Teſtimonies likewiſe, which require Hereticks to have Impoſition of Hands from the Biſhop, in order to obtain the Gift of the Holy Ghoſt, are a farther Evidence of this Practice. To which purpoſe we have the Decrees of Pope Leo [p], and Siricius [q], who particularly obſerves this to have been the general Practice of the whole Church, both Eaſtern and Weſtern, as well as the Church of Rome, in the Reception of thoſe who had been baptized in any Hereſy or Schiſm. And as to all Perſons baptized in the Church, St. Auſtin is a farther Witneſs, who ſays, That in propriety of Speech, neither the Apoſtles, nor any other Man, but Chriſt alone, as he is God, could give the Holy Ghoſt: For the Apoſtles only [r] laid Hands on Men, that the Holy Ghoſt by their Prayers might deſcend upon them; which Cuſtom the Church now obſerved and practiſed by her Biſhops or Governors alſo. In like manner St. Ambroſe [s] ſays, The Spiritual Seal, or Seal of the Spirit, which was the Completion of Baptiſm, came after the Font, when by the Prayer of the Prieſt, (that is, in his Language, the Biſhop) the Holy Ghoſt was poured upon them. From all which Teſtimonies it is moſt undeniably evident, that the Biſhop in all ordinary Caſes was the only ſtanding and regular Miniſter of this part of Confirmation, which conſiſted in Impoſition of Hands and Prayer, to invocate the Gift of the Holy Ghoſt.

SECT. II. Yet in ſome ſpecial Caſes, Presbyters by Commiſſion allowed to miniſter it alſo. As, 1ſt, When Biſhops particularly required their Presbyters to do it, to ſuch as were baptized in the Church.

YET there were ſome ſpecial and extraordinary Caſes, in which ſome Churches, if not all, granted a Licenſe by Canon to Presbyters, to miniſter this part of Confirmation alſo. As when Biſhops, either in their Preſence or Abſence, appointed a Presbyter by a particular Delegation or Command to do it. This was no Encroachment upon the Biſhop's Authority, nor Infringement of his Privilege and Power, becauſe what was done, was only done in Subordination to him, and in purſuance of his Command. This Licenſe we find ſometimes granted to Presbyters, even in the Biſhop's Preſence: As is clear from that Canon [t] in the Collection of Martin Bracarenſis, out of the Canons of the Greek Church. A Presbyter ſhall not conſign Infants in the Preſence of his Biſhop, unleſs it be particularly enjoyned him by his Biſhop. Here three things are manifeſtly implied; 1. That this Conſignation, or Impoſition of Hands with the Sign of the Croſs and Prayer, was ordinarily the ſole Office of the Biſhop. 2. That by a ſpecial Commiſſion he might authorize Presbyters to do it, even in his Preſence. 3. That in his Abſence they were authorized to do it by a general Commiſſion, rather than Infants or any other baptized Perſons ſhould die without Confirmation. And this agrees very well with what has been ſaid before in the laſt Section, concerning the Practice of the Churches of Alexandria and Egypt; tho' in the Weſtern Churches it was otherwiſe, as is evident from what has been alledged before out of Pope Innocent [u] and St. Jerom [x], who tell us, That Presbyters neither in the Preſence of the Biſhop, nor in his Abſence, were allowed to do it, but many Men were forced to die without Confirmation or Impoſition of Hands, becauſe the Biſhop did not come time enough to adminiſter it to them.

SECT. V. 2dly, Presbyters might adminiſter to the Energumens.

YET alſo in the Weſtern Churches there were ſome ſpecial Caſes, in which this Conſignation was allowed to be perfored by Presbyters. Nay, and in one Caſe by Deacons alſo. As it was in the Caſe of Energumens, or Perſons poſſeſſed with evil Spirits after Baptism; concerning whom Pope Innocent makes this Decree, in the same Epistle, where he prohibits Presbyters from consigning in all ordinary Cases: That if any one was seized [y] with an Evil Spirit after Baptism, the Bishop might give Orders to a Presbyter or a Deacon to consign him in that Condition. It was not to be done but by the Bishop's Authority; for he only had the Power of Imposition of Hands: But because an Energumen, who was at a great distance from the Bishop, might have several Chances in his Journey, it was therefore thought more proper for the Bishops to grant a Commission to a Presbyter or Deacon, to give him Imposition of Hands at home, than to venture his falling into his Distemper, by either coming to the Bishop, or returning.

SECT. VI. 3dly, And to such as were baptized in Heresy or Schism, in Case they were in danger of Death.

ANOTHER extraordinary Case in which this Office of Imposition of Hands was granted to Presbyters, was, when any who had been baptized by Hereticks or Schismaticks, were upon their Return to the Church, seized with a violent Sickness, and in imminent danger of Death, before they could go to the Bishop, or the Bishop come to them, to give them Imposition of Hands, and confirm them with that Grace of the Spirit, which they could not have in Heresy or Schism. In that Case, rather than such Persons should die without this Office, a Commission was granted to Presbyters to administer it. This we find most expressly in the first Council of Orange [z], That Hereticks, if they be in Extremity and apparent danger of Death, when they desire to become Catholicks, shall, in the Bishop's Absence, be consigned by the Presbyters with Chrism and Benediction, that is, Imposition of Hands in the Benediction-Prayer. And the like Decree is made in the Council of [a] Epone, That if any Hereticks, who lay desperately sick, upon a Death-bed, desired suddenly to be converted, in that Case, for the Salvation of their Souls, which was heartily desired, a Presbyter should be permitted to give them the Consolation of Chrism. Which they that were in Health, were to go to the Bishop for, at their Conversion. Where we may observe, that the Chrismation here spoken of, was not the Chrismation which Presbyters were ordinarily allowed to give in the Western Church, but that which was joined with Imposition of Hands, which was peculiarly reserved to the Bishop, except in such Cases of Extremity, when a Presbyter was allowed to give it, rather than a converted Heretick should die without it. And the Reason of this Concession was, because Hereticks, who were baptized out of the Church, were supposed to be without the Grace of the Spirit, till they received it by Imposition of Hands in the Catholick Church. For which Reason, all Hereticks, as well those who used Imposition of Hands at Baptism, as those that did not, received a new Benediction when they returned to the Unity of the Church, as I have shewed from St. Austin [b], Optatus [c] and Alcimus Avitus [d] in another Place. See Scholast. Hist. of Lay-baptism, Part I. p. 86.

CHAP. III.

Of the Manner of Administring Confirmation, and the Ceremonies used in the Celebration of it.

SECT. I. The first Ceremony of Confirmation, was the Unction of Chrism.

HAVING thus far considered both the Subject of Confirmation, or Persons to whom it was administred, and the Persons by whom it was administred; we are in the next place to take a View of the Form and Manner of its Administration; in which we may observe four distinct Ceremonies besides the Consecration of the Chrism, which were, the Unction, the Sign of the Cross, Imposition of Hands, and Prayer. The Unction was commonly first in Order, as we learn from that of Tertullian [a], As soon as we are come out of the Water, we are anointed with the blessed Unction. And then we receive Imposition of Hands, invocating the Holy Spirit by a Benediction.

SECT. II. The Original of this Unction.

THE first Rise and Original of this Unction in the Church, is not exactly known, and the Sentiments of Learned Men are various about it. The late famous Writer, under the feigned Name of Petrus Aurelius, in his Book called Orthodoxus, againſt Sirmond, takes a great deal of Pains to prove it an Apoſtolical Practice. But Habertus [b] calls this a Dream, and a mad Undertaking, againſt the general Stream and Current of learned Men. And Eſtius ſays [c], the common Opinion is, that the Apoſtles in the beginning of their Preaching, uſed no Chriſm in the Adminiſtration of this Sacrament, as he calls it. So that what the Romaniſts now make the Matter of their New Sacrament, is confeſſed to be without any Foundation in Scripture. Biſhop Pearſon [d] is of opinion, that the Uſe of it came into the Church ſhortly after the Time of the Apoſtles. Baſnage [e] and Daille [f] think not till the third Century, when it is firſt mentioned by Origen [g] and Tertullian. Some indeed alledge an Author more antient than either of theſe; which is Theophilus Antiochenus [h], who ſays, That we are therefore called Chriſtians, becauſe we are anointed with the Oyl of God. But the Unction he ſpeaks of, is a Spiritual and Myſtical Unction; ſuch as, he ſays, the whole Air and Earth under Heaven is anointed with, viz. the Unction of Light and the Spirit of God. So that there being no Author before Tertullian, who mentions the Material Unction, as uſed in Confirmation, it is moſt probable it was a Ceremony firſt begun about his Time, to repreſent the Unction of the Holy Ghoſt.

SECT. III.

The Form and Manner of adminiſtring it, together with the Effects of it.

BUT when it was once admitted, it was uſually magnified as the Symbol, and ſometimes the Inſtrumental Cauſe of very great Effects. The Conſecration of it was ſuppoſed to work a Myſtical Change in its Nature, anſwerable to the Change wrought in the Waters of Baptiſm, and the Bread and Wine in the Euchariſt, which Cyril of Jeruſalem compares together [i]. It was this Unction, as the Completion of Baptiſm, to which they aſcribed the Power of making every Chriſtian in ſome ſenſe Partaker of a Royal Prieſthood. Which is not only ſaid by Origen in the Paſſage laſt mentioned, but by Pope Leo [k], St. Jerom [l], and many others [m]. To it they alſo aſcribed the noble Effects of confirming the Soul with the Strength of all Spiritual Graces on God's part, as well as the Confirmation of the Profeſſions and Covenant made on Man's Part. The Author of the Conſtitutions makes it to be on Man's Part βεβαίωσις τ ὁμολογίας, καὶ συνθηκῶν, the Confirmation [n] of the Confeſſions and Compacts made with God in Baptiſm; and on God's Part, the Collation of the Holy Spirit, repreſented by this Ceremony of Anointing. Which is ſo frequently mentioned in every Greek Writer upon this Subject, that it is ſuperfluous to refer any learned Reader to them. It will be ſufficient only to hint the Forms of Prayer, which they uſe upon this Occaſion; for theſe will evidently ſhew what Spiritual Effects they expected from this Unction. Now of theſe we have two ancient Forms remaining, a ſhorter and a longer, the one an Expreſs, and the other an Implicit Prayer. The ſhorter Form was conceived in theſe Words, σφραγὶς δωρεᾶς πνεύματος ἁγίου, The Seal of the Gift of the Holy Spirit; as we find it in the firſt General Council of Conſtantinople [o], where they order ſuch as were baptized by Hereticks, to be confirmed by the Unction of Chriſm in this Form of Words. And ſo again, in the Council of Trullo [p] and ſome private [q] Writers. Not to mention now, that this is the Form ſtill in uſe in the Euchologium of the preſent Greek Church. But beſide this ſhorter Form (which was only an implicit Prayer, as if they had ſaid, Let this Unction be unto thee the Seal of the Gift of the Holy Spirit) they had alſo ſome larger Forms, which were more expreſs Prayers; one of which is in the Author of the Apoſtolical Conſtitutions, under the Title of an εὐχαριστία ἐπὶ τῷ μυστικῷ μύρῳ, a Thankſgiving or Benediction to be uſed in the Unction of the Myſtical Chriſm, where the Biſhop is ordered to anoint the Party baptized, ſaying theſe Words [r], O Lord God, the Unbegotten, who haſt no Lord, who art Lord of all, who madeſt the ſweet Savour of the Knowledge of the Goſpel to go forth among all Nations: Grant now, that this Chriſm may be effectual in this baptized Perſon, that the ſweet Savour of thy Chriſt may remain firm and ſtable in him, and that he being dead with him, may riſe again and live with him. Now this Unction in the Greek Church, was not only in the Forehead, but in ſeveral other Parts of the Body, all performed by the Biſhop in one and the ſame Act; but the Latins divided the Office in ſome Places between the Biſhop and Presbyters, as has been obſerved before: But whether united or divided, it was all reckoned the Unction of Confirmation. Which is evident from that Canon of the Council of Barcelona, which ſpeaking of Presbyters receiving the conſecrated Chrism from their Bishops, which they themselves were to use, says expressly [s], that it was for confirming Neophytes, or Persons newly baptized. Which is a manifest Proof, that that Part of the Ceremony of Unction, which was committed to Presbyters, was reckoned a Part of Confirmation. And so much of it might be committed to Presbyters, acting in Subordination to their Bishop, as the Rules of every Church allowed. For this part of Confirmation being wholly of Ecclesiastical Institution, it was in the Power of the Church to make Orders in all Things concerning it, both in what Manner, and by what Persons she would have it performed. Which is the true Reason of so much Variety, as we have observed, in different Churches in the administring this first Ceremony of Confirmation.

SECT. IV. The Second Ceremony of Confirmation was the Sign of the Cross.

TOGETHER with this Unction they usually joyned the Sign of the Cross. For this Ceremony they used upon all Occasions, and therefore would not omit it in this solemn Act of Confirmation. Of this we have several clear Proofs in Tertullian, Pope Leo, and others, which, because they have been already recited at large [t], in speaking of the Use of the Sign of the Cross in Baptism, I will not here repeat them; but only add, that the Name Consignation, which is so often used by the Latin Writers to denote Confirmation [u], seems to have had its Rise from this Ceremony and Custom of signing with the Sign of the Cross, when they gave the Unction to Persons baptized. And this in some measure answers to the Greek Name σφραγὶς, which many times, though not always, denotes the Sign of the Cross, as used in Baptism or Confirmation, or any other Office of Religion; of which I need not here be more particular.

SECT. V. The third and most noted Ceremony, Imposition of Hands, and fourthly, Prayer joyned therewith.

THE most noted Ceremony in this whole Affair, and that which most universally prevailed, was Imposition of Hands; a Ceremony used in all sorts of Benedictions, but more peculiarly applied to Ordination, reconciling of Penitents, and Confirmation. The Latin Writers commonly speak of Confirmation under this Title. But some think it was not in Use among the Greeks, who, they say, only used Chrism, and not Imposition of Hands in Confirmation. But this is a great Mistake: For the Author of the Constitutions [x], in the same Chapter where he rehearses the Prayer of the mystical Chrism, immediately subjoyns, this is the Power of Imposition of Hands necessary for every one: For unless he that is baptized have this Invocation of the Holy Priest, he only goes into the Water as a Jew, and puts off the Filth of the Body, but not the Filth of the Soul. Therefore though this Imposition of Hands be not so frequently mentioned in the Greek Writers, yet it is always to be understood, as Chrism is in the Latin Writers, where only Imposition of Hands is mentioned.

SECT. VI. The Original of this Ceremony of Imposition of Hands.

THE Antiquity of this Ceremony is by all antient Writers carried as high as the Apostles, and founded upon their Example and Practice. There are three Passages in Scripture from which they generally deduce it: Acts viii. where mention is made of the Apostles laying Hands on those whom Philip had baptized. Acts xix. where St. Paul laid his Hands on those whom he baptized after John's Baptism. And Heb. vi. 2. where mention is made of Imposition of Hands among the first Principles of Religion. Cyprian derives it from the Practice of the Apostles [y] laying their Hands on those whom Philip baptized: For, says he, the same Custom is now observed in the Church, that they who are baptized, are presented to the Governors of the Church, that by their Prayer and Imposition of Hands they may receive the Holy Ghost. And in other Places [z] he refers it in general to Apostolical Institution and Practice. The Anonymous Author of the Book concerning Heretical Baptism, at the End of Cyprian [a], deduces it likewise from the same Example of the Apostles laying Hands on the Samaritans, whom Philip baptized. Firmilian compares the Bishop's Imposition of Hands to invocate the Holy Spirit, to that of St. Paul [b] upon those whom he baptized at Ephesus. St. Jerom owns the Luciferians Argument to be good, when he derives this Custom [c] from the Acts of the Apostles, and the Case of the Samaritans receiving Imposition of Hands after Philip had baptized them: Though he thinks the Practice and Tradition of the Church sufficient to authorize such a Custom in this Case, as well as in several other Rites belonging to Baptism and other Things, which had the Authority of Laws, though they were no where expreſsly commanded in Scripture; as the triple Immerſion in Baptiſm, and the taſting of Milk and Honey in token of a new Birth. St. Auſtin in like manner affirms [d] this Obſervation deſcended to the Governors of the Church from the Apoſtles, who prayed over thoſe on whom they laid their Hands, that they might receive the Holy Ghoſt. And becauſe it might be objected, That the Apoſtolical Practice was for a quite different End, to confer on Men the miraculous Gift of the Spirit, impowering them to ſpeak with new Tongues: He is very careful once or twice to anſwer this Objection, and ſhew, That notwithſtanding any ſuch Difference, this Practice of Impoſition of Hands in order to obtain the Holy Spirit, might be ſaid to deſcend from the Apoſtles. For, ſays he [e], by the Holy Ghoſt, which is given only in the Catholick Church by Impoſition of Hands, our Forefathers would have us to underſtand that which the Apoſtle ſays, The Love of God is ſhed abroad in our Hearts by the Holy Ghoſt which is given us. For that is the Charity, which they have not who are cut off from the Communion of the Catholick Church: And though they ſpeak with the Tongues of Men and Angels, and know all Myſteries, and all Knowledge, it profits them nothing. For they have not the Love of God, who love not the Unity of the Church; upon which account it is rightly ſaid, that the Holy Spirit is not received but only in the Catholick Church. For now the Holy Spirit, which is given by Impoſition of Hands, does not appear with ſenſible and temporal Miracles to atteſt it, as it was heretofore given to recommend the firſt Plantation of Faith, and to dilate the Church in its Infancy. For who now expects that they to whom Impoſition of Hands is given to receive the Holy Spirit, ſhould immediately begin to ſpeak with new Tongues? But the Love of God is ſuppoſed to be inſpired into their Hearts inviſibly and latently by the Bond of Peace, ſo as they may truly ſay, The Love of God is ſhed abroad in our Hearts by the Holy Ghoſt that is given us. He gives the ſame Anſwer to this pretended Difficulty in another Place [f]. Hereby, ſays he, we know that He dwells in us, by the Spirit which He hath given us. If thou findeſt in thy Heart the Love of God, thou haſt the Spirit to give thee Knowledge: Which is a very neceſſary Thing. In the firſt Age the Holy Ghoſt fell on them that believed, and they ſpake with Tongues, which they had never learned, as the Spirit gave them Utterance. Theſe were Signs proper for that Time; for then it was neceſſary that the Holy Ghoſt ſhould be thus demonſtrated in all kinds of Tongues; becauſe the Goſpel was to run throughout the whole World in all ſorts of Languages. But this Demonſtration once made, it ceaſed. For does any Man now expect to hear them ſpeak with new Tongues, who receive Impoſition of Hands as a Means to obtain the Holy Spirit? Or, when we laid Hands on theſe Infants, did any of you look when they ſhould ſpeak with Tongues? And when they did not ſpeak with Tongues, was any one ſo perverſe in Heart, as to ſay, they have not received the Holy Ghoſt? For if they had received it, they would have ſpoken with Tongues, as was done heretofore. If therefore there be no ſuch Miracles now, to teſtify the Preſence of the Spirit: How knows any Man that he has received the Holy Ghoſt? Let him ask his own Heart: If he loves the Brethren, the Spirit of God abideth in him. Thus St. Auſtin derives Impoſition of Hands for conveying the Spirit, from the Practice of the Apoſtles, though there were very different Effects then from what there are now: Though Men had not the Gift of Tongues conferred upon them, as in the Days of the Apoſtles; yet they might have other Graces, ſufficient both to teſtify the Preſence of the Spirit, and to entitle the Act of Impoſition of Hands to the Dignity of an Apoſtolical Inſtitution. From whence alſo we may obſerve, that Charity and Unity, or Stedfaſtneſs in the Love of God and Religion, was a particular Grace of the Spirit given by Impoſition of Hands: Which becauſe Hereticks could not have, who were baptized out of the Church, therefore they always received Impoſition of Hands upon their [g] Return to the Church, whether they had received it in Pretence among their own Party before or not. For ſome Hereticks gave Impoſition of Hands together with Baptiſm, and others did not: But both of them received Impoſition of Hands again, upon their return to the Catholick Church. There is one Paſſage more, upon which ſome of the Ancients found this Practice, which is, Heb. vi. 2. where the Apoſtle joins Impoſition of Hands with Baptiſm. Upon which the Author under the Name of St. Ambroſe [h] notes, that it means the Impoſition of Hands, which is ſuppoſed to confer the Holy Ghoſt, which is ordinarily given by the Chief Prieſts, or Biſhops after Baptiſm, for the Confirmation of Men in the Unity of the Church of Chriſt. Which Expoſition is repeated by Haymo [i] and ſome later Writers, and allowed as probable by Grotius and Calvin. There is one Writer more who ſeems to derive it from the Deſcent of the Holy Ghoſt upon the Apoſtles at the Day of Pentecoſt. He goes under the Name of Euſebius Emiſſenus; but learned Men ſuppoſe him to be Eucherius of Lyons, or Hilary of Arles, or ſome other Writer about the Time of Pope Leo in the middle of the fifth Century. Whoever he was, the Account he gives of Confirmation is very particular and inſtructive, and therefore the whole Paſſage may be worth tranſlating. That which Impoſition of Hands, [k] ſays he, now gives to every one in confirming Neophytes, the ſame did the Deſcent of the Holy Ghoſt then confer on all Believers. But becauſe we have ſaid, that Impoſition of Hands and Confirmation confers ſomething on him that is born again and regenerated in Chriſt; perhaps ſome one will be ready to think with himſelf, and ſay, What can the Miniſtry of Confirmation profit me after the Myſtery of Baptiſm? If after the Font we want the Addition of a new Office, then we have not received all that was neceſſary from the Font. It is not ſo, Beloved. For, if you obſerve, in the Military Life, when the Emperor has choſen any one to be a Soldier, he does not only ſet his Mark or Character upon him, but furniſhes him with competent Arms for Fighting; ſo it is in a baptized Perſon, the Benediction is his Armour. Thou haſt made him a Soldier, give him alſo the Weapons of Warfare. What doth it profit, though a Father confer a great Eſtate upon his Child, if he do not alſo provide him a Tutor? Now the Holy Ghoſt is the Keeper, and Comforter, and Tutor to thoſe who are regenerated in Chriſt. As the Scripture ſaith, Except the Lord keep the City, the Watchman waketh but in vain. Therefore the Holy Ghoſt, which deſcends with his ſaving Preſence on the Waters of Baptiſm, there gives us the Plenitude of Perfection to make us Innocent; but in Confirmation, he gives us an augmentation of Grace. Becauſe in this World we are to live all our Lives among inviſible Enemies, and to walk in the midſt of Dangers; in Baptiſm we are born again to Life, but after Baptiſm we are confirmed to fight; in Baptiſm we are waſhed, but after Baptiſm we are ſtrengthened. And ſo the Benefits of Regeneration are ſufficient for thoſe who preſently leave this World; but to them who are to live in it, the Auxiliary Aids of Confirmation are alſo neceſſary. Regeneration by itſelf alone ſaves thoſe who are preſently received in Peace into a better World; but Confirmation arms and prepares thoſe who are reſerved to fight the Battles and Combats of this World. He that after Baptiſm goes immaculate, with the Innocence which he has acquired, to Death, is confirmed by Death; becauſe he cannot ſin after Death. If here we ſhall ask, what Advantage the Apoſtles had by the coming of the Holy Spirit after the Paſſion and Reſurrection of Chriſt? The Lord himſelf evidently ſhews us, ſaying, I have many Things to ſay unto you, but ye cannot bear them now: Howbeit, when he the Spirit of Truth is come, he will guide you into all Truth. You ſee, when the Holy Ghoſt is given, the Heart of a Believer is dilated and enlarged with Prudence and Conſtancy. Before the Deſcent of the Holy Ghoſt, the Apoſtles were terrified even to the Denial of Chriſt; but after his Viſitation they were armed with a Contempt of Death, even to ſuffer Martyrdom for his Sake. Thus it is that we have Redemption by Chriſt, but the Holy Ghoſt gives us the Gift of Spiritual Wiſdom, by which we are illuminated, edified, inſtructed and conſummated to Perfection. This is the Account which the Ancients generally give of the Original of Impoſition of Hands: Which Ceremony is now wholly laid aſide and diſuſed in the Roman Church, though they pretend to make another Sacrament of Confirmation. But this only by the way.

FROM the Account given by this Author, we clearly learn what the Ancients ſuppoſed Confirmation ſuperadded to the Benefit of Regeneration. The New-birth gave Innocence and pardon of Sins; but the Invocation of the Spirit added Wiſdom and Strength to preſerve and eſtabliſh Men in Innocence to Perfection. He alſo ſhews us, what Opinion the Ancients had of the Neceſſity of Confirmation. It was not abſolutely the ſame as that of Baptiſm. For if Men died immediately after Baptiſm without Impoſition of Hands, they were ſaved by their Innocence which they had acquired in Baptiſm: They needed no other Confirmation but Death, which was a Security againſt all other Dangers. Confirmation was only neceſſary to thoſe, who were to live and fight with the World and Inviſible Powers. And this is the Senſe of all other Writers, who ſpeak the higheſt of the Neceſſity of Confirmation. The Council of Eliberis having ſaid [l], That it was neceſſary for the Biſhop to conſummate thoſe by his Benediction, who were baptized by Deacons; adds, Yet if any one die before this can be done, he is juſtified by the Faith which he profeſſed in Baptiſm. And ſo the Author of the Apoſtolical Conſtitutions ſays [m], If there be neither Oyl nor Chriſm, the Water alone is ſufficient both for the Unction of the Holy Ghoſt, and the Seal of the Covenant. By which we are to mollify that other harſh Expreſſion of his in another place [n], where he ſays, That Baptiſm without this Impoſition of Hands, and Prayer of the Prieſt, is only a bodily Waſhing, like that of the Jews, purging the Filth of the Body, but not of the Soul. For unleſs ſome very candid Interpretation be put upon this Expreſſion, it will be highly injurious and derogatory to the ſaving Power of Baptiſm, which purges away Sin by a Spiritual Regeneration. And therefore it is but reaſonable to let the harſh Expreſſions of this Author be interpreted by himſelf, when he owns that the Water of Baptiſm is ſufficient to anſwer all the Ends of Chriſm or Confirmation, where that is omitted not by any Contempt, but for want of Opportunity to receive it. And this is plainly St. Jerom's Meaning, when he ſays, That though the Practice of Impoſition of Hands deſcends from the Acts of the Apoſtles [o]; yet in many Places it was obſerved rather for the Honour of the Chief Prieſthood, than for any abſolute Neceſſity of the Thing. For otherwiſe, if the Spirit was only obtained by the Prayer of the Biſhop, thoſe Men muſt be in a deplorable Condition, that were baptized in Villages and Caſtles and remote Places by Presbyters and Deacons, and died before the Biſhop could come to viſit them. All therefore that was neceſſary to Salvation, was conferred in Baptiſm, which miniſtred ſuch a Portion of the Spirit, as was ſufficient to cleanſe Men from Sin, and qualify them for Eternal Life. So that when ſome of the Ancients ſay, That Baptiſm does not miniſter the Spirit, which was only given by Impoſition of Hands in Confirmation; as Cornelius pleads in his Letter [p] againſt Novatian, and Tertullian [q], who ſays, That we do not obtain the Holy Ghoſt in Baptiſm, but are only cleanſed in the Water, and prepared for the Holy Ghoſt: They are to be underſtood, as meaning only that the Holy Ghoſt is not given in that full Meaſure of Baptiſm, as afterward by Impoſition of Hands. They do not deny, that Baptiſm grants Men Remiſſion of Sins by the Power of the Holy Ghoſt; but only that there are ſome farther Effects and Operations of the Holy Spirit, which are not ordinarily conferred on Men but by the ſubſequent Invocation of the Spirit, the Increaſe of which Men were to deſire, and to receive Impoſition of Hands in order to obtain it. In which Senſe it is ſaid in the Goſpel, That the Holy Ghoſt was not yet given, becauſe the Apoſtles had not yet received that plentiful Effuſion of it in the Gift of Tongues, which they afterwards had on the Day of Pentecoſt, though they had before received ſuch a Meaſure of it, as both enabled them to work ſeveral ſorts of Miracles, and alſo qualified them in every reſpect for the Kingdom of Heaven.

BUT though the Ancients did not think this Impoſition of Hands ſo abſolutely neceſſary, as that the want of it ſhould exclude thoſe who were baptized from the Kingdom of Heaven: yet they thought fit to puniſh the Neglect of it, by ſetting ſome Marks of Diſgrace and publick Cenſure upon ſuch, as voluntarily and careleſly omitted it, when they had Opportunity to receive it. Such Men were ordinarily denied the Privilege of Eccleſiaſtical Promotion and holy Orders. As appears from the Objection made againſt Novatian, That he ought not to be ordained, becauſe being baptized privately with Clinick Baptiſm, he had afterward neglected to receive his Conſummation from the Hands of the Biſhop, which [r] he ought to have done by the Laws of the Church. And to this purpoſe the Council of Neo-Cæſarea [s] has a Canon, forbidding ſuch to be ordained; which is made part of the Code of the Univerſal Church. The Council of Eliberis alſo [t] excludes ſuch, as have not Lavachrum integrum, their own Baptiſm completed by Impoſition of Hands, from the Privilege of giving Baptiſm to others, which in caſes of Neceſſity they allowed to all other Laymen. So far they thought fit to diſcountenance the Contempt and Neglect of Confirmation, though they neither eſteemed it a diſtinct Sacrament from Baptiſm, nor of abſolute Neceſſity to Salvation, but only as a proper Means to ſtrengthen Men in their Chriſtian Warfare.

CHAP. IV.

Of the remaining Ceremonies of Baptism following Confirmation.

SECT. I. Persons newly baptized cloathed in White Garments.

MUCH about the same time as the Unction of Confirmation was administred to Persons newly baptized, they were also cloathed in White Garments. In the Latin Church it came immediately before Confirmation; but in the Greek Church it seems to have followed after. For Cyril of Jerusalem speaks of it as following the Unction [a]. This was to represent their having put off the Old Man with his Deeds, and having put on the New Man Christ Jesus. Hence they were called λαμπρυνθέντες, & Grex Christi Candidus & Niveus, the White Flock of Christ [b], as we find in Lactantius and many others. Palladius, in the Life of St. Chrysostom [c], notes it particularly, as a great piece of Barbarity in Arcadius, that when St. Chrysostom's Presbyters in his Exile had baptized three thousand Persons at one Festival, the Emperor sent his Soldiers to disperse them, as they were λαμπρυνθέντες, cloathed in their white Garments. This was otherwise called, the Garment of Christ, and the Mystical Garment. For so Socrates [d] and Sozomen [e], speaking of the Ordination of Nectarius Bishop of Constantinople, which was immediately given him after his Baptism, say, He was ordained whilst he had his mystical Garment on; meaning this white Robe, which had just before been given him at his Baptism. St. Jerom [f] also, writing to Fabiola, seems to allude to this, when he says, We are to be washed with the Precepts of God, and when we are prepared for the Garment of Christ, putting off our Coats of Skins, we shall put on the Linen Garment, that hath nothing of Death in it, but is all White, that rising out of the Waters of Baptism, we may gird about our Loins with Truth, and cover the former Filthiness of our Breasts. Some also alledge two other Passages of his in his Epistles to Pope Damasus [g], where he speaks of his having put on the Garment of Christ at Rome. But others, who have more exactly [h] considered the Time of St. Jerom's Baptism, and the same Phrase as used by him in other places, more probably conclude, that he means the Monastick Habit, which he elsewhere [i] calls the Garment of Christ, and not the Albes of Baptism. However, not insisting on those dubious Passages of St. Jerom, the ancient Custom is sufficiently attested from other Authors.

SECT. II. These sometimes delivered to them with a solemn Form of Words.

SOME of which also tell us, That these Garments were wont to be delivered to the Neophytes with a solemn Form of Words, in the Nature of a Charge: Such as that in Gregory's Sacramentarium [k], Receive the White and Immaculate Garment, which thou mayst bring forth without Spot before the Tribunal of our Lord Jesus Christ, that thou mayst have Eternal Life. Amen.

SECT. III. Worn eight Days, and then laid up in the Church.

THESE Garments were commonly worn eight Days, and then laid up in the Church. St. Austin, or some one under his Name [l], speaks of the Sunday after Easter, as the Time appointed for this purpose. That was the Conclusion of the Paschal Festival, and then the Neophytes changed their Habit; whence that Day is thought to have the Name of Dominica in Albis; and White-Sunday is said to be so called from this Custom of wearing White Robes after Baptism. These being laid aside, were carefully preserved in the Vestries of the Church, as an Evidence against Men, if afterward they violated those Professions which they had made in Baptism. A remarkable Instance of which we have, related in Victor Uticensis, concerning one Elpidiphorus, a Citizen of Carthage, who having a long time lived in the Communion of the Church, at last turned Arian, and became a bitter Enemy to the Orthodox in the Vandalick Persecution. Among others, whom he summoned before him as their Judge, was one Muritta a Deacon, who had been Sponsor for him at his Baptism. He being ready to be put upon the Rack, produced against him those white Robes with which he had been cloathed at his Baptiſm; and with Words, [m] melting all the whole City into Tears, he thus beſpoke him: Theſe are the Garments, O Elpidiphorus, thou Miniſter of Error, which ſhall accuſe thee, when the Majeſty of the great Judge ſhall appear; theſe I will diligently keep as a Teſtimony of thy Ruin, which ſhall depreſs thee to the Bottom of the Lake that burns with Fire and Brimſtone. Theſe are they that were girt about thee, when thou cameſt immaculate out of the holy Font; theſe are they that ſhall bitterly purſue thee, when thou ſhalt begin to take thy Portion in the Flames of Hell; becauſe thou haſt cloathed thy ſelf with Curſing as with a Garment, and haſt caſt off the ſacred Obligation of thy Baptiſm, and the true Faith which thou didſt then profeſs and take upon thee. So that the Deſign of this ſignificant Ceremony was firſt to repreſent that Innocence and Angelical Purity, which every Man obtained by the Remiſſion of his Sins in Baptiſm, and then to remind them of the Obligations and Profeſſions they had entred into, which if they violated, would riſe up as ſo many Accuſers at the Day of Judgment.

SECT. IV. The Ceremony of Lights and Tapers. What intended by it. And at whoſe Charge both theſe were provided.

To this Ceremony of wearing White Robes, they added another of the like Nature, which was the carrying of lighted Tapers in their Hands. I cannot ſay this was ſo univerſal a Practice as the former, but it is mentioned by Gregory Nazianzen among other Ceremonies following Baptiſm. The Station, ſays he, when immediately after Baptiſm thou ſhalt be placed before the Altar, is an Emblem of the Glory of the Life to come; the Pſalmody with which thou ſhalt be received, is a Foretaſte of thoſe Hymns and Songs of a better Life; and the Lamps [n] which thou ſhalt light, are a Figure of thoſe Lamps of Faith, wherewith bright and Virgin Souls ſhall go forth to meet the Bridegroom. Others refer it to another Reaſon, That it might be a Symbol of their own preſent Illumination, and as done in Alluſion to that Saying of our Saviour, So let your Light ſhine before Men, that they may ſee your good Works, and glorify your Father which is in Heaven. In ſome Baptiſms alſo of great Men, we find theſe Ceremonies enlarged and ſet off with greater Pomp; for not only they themſelves, but all their Retinue and Attendants were cloathed in White Garments, and all carried Lamps in their Hands. As it was in the magnificent Baptiſm of the Younger Theodoſius, related in an Epiſtle of Marcus Gazenſis [o], publiſhed by Baronius; where he ſays, The Proceſſion from the Church to the Palace was extremely ſplendid: For the Leaders of the People were all cloathed in White, which made the Company look as if it had been covered with Snow: And all the Senators, and Men of Quality, and Soldiers in their Ranks carried Lamps in their Hands, that one would have thought the Stars had appeared upon Earth. The Expence of theſe Things, eſpecially when ſo very ſumptuous and magnificent, we may reaſonably ſuppoſe, was defrayed by every Perſon at his own proper Coſt and Charge. And ſo the Objection, which ſome make in Gregory Nazianzen againſt Baptiſm, upon the Account of the Charge attending it, plainly intimates. For they thus object againſt it: Where is the Gift that I ſhall offer at Baptiſm? Where is the Garment [p] of Light in which I muſt ſhine? Wherewithal ſhall I entertain my Baptizers? To which Nazianzen replies, That in great Things Men ſhould not be concerned about ſuch ſmall Matters as theſe. For the Sacrament itſelf was far above theſe viſible Objects. Therefore offer thyſelf for a Gift, put on Chriſt for a Garment, and let thy Entertainment of me the Miniſter, be an holy Converſation. God requires no great Thing of us, which the Poor cannot give. From whence we may conclude, That either theſe Ceremonies were omitted in the Baptiſm of poor Men, or elſe the Church herſelf was at the Charge of them. Which ſome think may be inferred from the Donations of Conſtantine, made to the Baptiſteries of Rome, mentioned in the Pontifical in the Life of Pope Sylveſter; but it may more certainly be proved from the Epiſtles of Pope Gregory [q], where he often mentions his giving theſe Garments to the Poor, who could not provide them for themſelves.

ANOTHER Ceremony uſed to congratulate ſuch as were newly baptized, upon their Admiſſion and Incorporation into the Church, was the Kiſs of Peace. Which was obſerved even towards Infants, as we learn from that Objection raiſed againſt it in Cyprian: Where the Opponents pleaded for deferring Baptiſm till the Child was eight Days old, becauſe Children at their Birth were unclean, and every one abhorred to kiſs them, as was neceſſary to be done after Baptiſm, to teſtify their Right of Fraternity upon their Adoption into God's Family. To which Cyprian replied, That this was no Impediment to their Baptiſm; for all Things were clean to them that were clean. No one ought to abhor that which God had vouchſafed to make. For though an Infant was but juſt born, yet he was then in ſuch a Condition, as no one ought to abhor [r] in giving him the Grace of Baptiſm, or imparting to him the Kiſs of Peace. This Cuſtom is alſo mentioned by St. Auſtin [s], and it ſeems to be founded upon that Apoſtolical Rule, obſerved in the Euchariſt and other holy Offices, of ſaluting one another with an holy Kiſs, in token of their moſt cordial Affection, and acknowledging one another as Brethren. St. Chryſoſtom gives another Reaſon why it was called, The Peace, or the Kiſs of Peace, becauſe Men were now reconciled to God by Baptiſm, and reſtored to his Peace and Favour. For elegantly comparing the two Nativities of Man together, the Natural and the Spiritual, he ſays, The firſt Birth is always attended with Tears and Lamentations, Nature as it were preſaging the ſubſequent Sorrows and Miſeries of Life: But in the ſecond Birth it is otherwiſe: Here are no Tears or Mournings, but Salutations, and Kiſſes, and Embracings of the Brethren, who acknowledge the Perſon baptized as one of their own Members, and receive him as one returning from a long Peregrination out of his own Country. For becauſe before his Baptiſm he was an Enemy, but after Baptiſm is made a Friend of our common Lord, we therefore all rejoyce with him: And upon this account the [t] Kiſs has the Name of Peace, that we may learn thereby, that God has ended the War, and received us into Familiarity and Friendſhip with himſelf. Hence it is, that to give the Peace to any one, is the ſame Thing many times in the Writings of the Ancients, as to ſalute him with the Holy Kiſs, in the Phraſe of the Apoſtle.

THEY were uſed alſo to give to the newly baptized a little Taſte of Honey and Milk: Which Salmaſius and ſome others [u] ſuppoſe to be given them inſtead of the Euchariſt: But that is a Miſtake, for the Euchariſt was given them at the ſame time: The Ancients themſelves give another Reaſon for it. St. Jerom [x] and Tertullian [y] ſay, It was to ſignify their New Birth, and that they were now as Children adopted into God's Family. Tertullian ſays moreover [z], That the Marcionites retained the Cuſtom for the ſame Reaſon, as they did many other Uſages of the Church. St. Jerom [a] ſays farther, That in ſome of the Weſtern Churches the Mixture was made up of Milk and Wine inſtead of Honey, and this in alluſion to thoſe Paſſages of the Apoſtle, I have fed you with Milk, and not with ſtrong Meat: And St. Peter's Saying, As new-born Babes deſire the ſincere Milk of the Word. For Milk denotes the Innocency of Children. Clemens Alexandrinus alſo [b] takes notice of this Cuſtom, ſaying, As ſoon as we are born we are nouriſhed with Milk, which is the Nutriment of the Lord. And when we are born again we are honoured with the Hope of Reſt by the Promiſe of Jeruſalem which is above, where it is ſaid to rain Milk and Honey. For by theſe material Things we are aſſured of that ſacred Food. We learn farther from the third Council of Carthage, that this Milk and Honey had a peculiar Conſecration diſtinct from that of the Euchariſt. It is there ſaid to be offered at the Altar [c] on a Day moſt ſolemn (which means the Great Sabbath, or Saturday before Eaſter, which was the moſt ſolemn time of Baptiſm) and there to have its proper Benediction for the Myſtery of Infants, (that is, Perſons newly baptized, who are commonly called Infants in the Myſtical Senſe) that it might be diſtinguiſhed from the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Chriſt. This part of the Canon indeed is omitted in ſome Collections, but Labbée ſays it was in the antient Manuſcripts, and it is now ſo read in the Body of the African [d] Code, which puts the Matter beyond all Diſpute. I have given the Canon with a little explanatory Paraphraſe, becauſe ſome Learned Men complain of the Obſcurity of it, and profeſs themſelves to be in the Dark about the Myſtery of Infants, which ſeems to me evidently to refer to this Cuſtom of giving Milk and Honey to the newly-baptized.

SECT. VII. Then required to ſay the Lord's Prayer.

WHEN Perſons were thus adopted into God's Family, and acknowledged as Brethren in Chriſt, then they were admitted as Sons to call upon God their Father, and immediately required to do it in the Form of Words taught us by Chriſt. The Author of the Conſtitutions [e] bids them repeat the Lord's Prayer ſtanding upright, becauſe they were now riſen with Chriſt from the Dead: And after that repeat this other ſhort Form: "Almighty God, the Father "of Chriſt, Thy only-begotten Son, give me an "immaculate Body, a pure Heart, a watchful

And this was the firſt time they were allowed to uſe this Prayer. For till Men were baptized, and made Sons of God by Regeneration, they were not allowed to call God their Father. And though they learned the Lord's Prayer before Baptiſm, yet they were not permitted till after Baptiſm to uſe it as a Prayer publickly in the Church.

SECT. VIII. Received with Pſalmody.

AMONG other Ceremonies after Baptiſm, Gregory Nazianzen mentions their Reception with Pſalmody [g], which he ſays, was a Præludium or Foretaſte of thoſe Hymns and Praiſes which ſhould be the Employment of the Life to come. But whether this means any particular Pſalms appointed to be ſung at Baptiſm, or the common Pſalmody of the Church, he does not inform us. If I may be allowed to conjecture, I ſhould conclude for the former, becauſe the common Pſalmody of the Church was no more than what Catechumens were allowed to hear before, as being part of the Miſſa Catechumenorum, or firſt Service, at which not only Catechumens, but profeſſed Jews and Heathens might be preſent. Perhaps they ſung the cxviiith Pſalm, in which are theſe Words, This is the Day which the Lord hath made, we will rejoyce and be glad in it, becauſe St. Auſtin [h] ſpeaking of the Eaſter-Feſtival ſeems to refer to it, ſaying, This is the Day which the Lord hath made, higher than all, brighter than all, in which he hath acquired to himſelf a new People by the Spirit of Regeneration, and hath filled our Minds with Joy and Gladneſs. And Paulinus [i] ſpeaks of ſinging Allelujahs upon this Occaſion. But in doubtful Matters I will not be over poſitive to determine.

SECT. IX. And admitted immediately to the Communion of the Altar.

IT is more certain, that as ſoon as the Ceremonies of Baptiſm were finiſhed, Men were admitted to a Participation of the Euchariſt. For this was the τὸ τέλειον, the Perfection or Conſummation of a Chriſtian, to which he was entitled by vertue of his Baptiſm. Therefore all the antient Writers ſpeak of this as the concluding Privilege of Baptiſm, which in thoſe Days was always immediately ſubjoyned to it. And this was obſerved, not only with reſpect to Adult Perſons, but Children alſo. For Proof of which Cuſtom, at preſent it will be ſufficient to alledge the Teſtimony of Gennadius [k], who joyns the Baptiſm of Infants, and Confirmation, and the Euchariſt all together. And this continued to the ninth Century, as appears from the Rituals of that Age, ſome of which have been produced before [l], and many others might be added; but theſe belong to another Place, where it will be more proper to treat of the Communion of Infants among other things that relate to the Subject of the Euchariſt, which, together with the ancient Pſalmody, Reading of the Scriptures, Preaching and Prayers, which make up the whole ordinary Service of the Church, under the Name of Miſſa Catechumenorum, and Miſſa Fidelium, will be the Subject of the next Volume, which is intended to give an Account of the Liturgy of the Church.

SECT. X. Of the Ceremony of Waſhing the Feet retained in ſome Churches.

THERE was one Ceremony more, uſed in ſome Churches, but rejected by others, which it will not be improper to give ſome Account of here in the Cloſe. That was the Cuſtom of Waſhing the Feet of the Baptized. Vicecomes [m] thinks, at firſt it was a Ceremony preceding Baptiſm, and uſed on Maundy-Thurſday, or the ſame Day that our Saviour (from whoſe Example it was taken) waſhed his Diſciples Feet. And this ſeems to be clear, he ſays, from St. Auſtin's Words, who has Occaſion to mention it in two of his Epiſtles. But in the former Epiſtle [n] St. Auſtin is ſpeaking of the Cuſtom of bathing the whole Body before Eaſter, that the Catechumens who had neglected themſelves in the Obſervation of Lent, might not appear offenſive, when they came to be baptized: Therefore Maundy-Thurſday was choſen as the Day to cleanſe themſelves by Bathing, from the bodily Filth which they had contracted. And becauſe this was allowed to the Catechumens, many others choſe to bathe themſelves with them on this Day alſo, and relax their Faſt, becauſe Faſting and Bathing would not agree together. So that this Waſhing was not the Waſhing of the Feet, however Vicecomes came to miſtake it, but the Bathing of the whole Body; and not uſed as a religious Ceremony, but as a Ceremony of Convenience and civil Decency, that they might not be offenſive to the Sênſes of others, when they came to Baptiſm. In the other Epiſtle he ſpeaks particularly of waſhing the Feet, but that was after Baptiſm, on the third Day, or the Octaves, or ſuch other Time as thoſe Churches which retained the Ceremony, thought fit to appoint it. For many Churches [o], he ſays, would never admit of this Cuſtom at all, leſt it ſhould ſeem to belong to the Sacrament of Baptiſm, when our Saviour only intended it as a Leſſon of Humility. And other Churches for the ſame Reaſon abrogated the Cuſtom, where it had been received. And others, who retained it, that they might recommend it by fixing it to ſome more ſacred Time, and yet diſtinguiſh it from the Sacrament of Baptiſm, choſe either the third Day of the Octave, or the Octave after Baptiſm itſelf, as moſt convenient for this Purpoſe. Among the Churches which wholly refuſed, or abrogated this Cuſtom, the Spaniſh Church is one, which in the Council of Eliberis made a Canon againſt it; forbidding at once, the exacting any Gift or Reward for adminiſtring Baptiſm, leſt the Prieſt ſhould ſeem to ſell what he freely received; (of which I have given a full [p] Account, in ſpeaking of the Revenues of the Church;) and alſo forbidding the Prieſts [q] or any other of the Clergy to waſh the Feet of ſuch as were baptized. Among thoſe Churches which never received this Cuſtom, we may reckon the Roman Church; and among thoſe which always received it, the Church of Milan, whoſe Practice is oppoſed to the Roman by St. Ambroſe, or whoever was the Author of the Books de Sacramentis, & de iis qui myſteriis initiantur, among his Works. He ſays [r], in the Church of Milan the Biſhop was uſed to waſh the Feet of the Baptized. But the Roman Church had not this Cuſtom: And he thinks they might decline it, becauſe of the Multitude of thoſe that were baptized. But they of the Roman Church pleaded, That it was not to be done by way of Myſtery in Baptiſm or Regeneration, but only by way of Humility, as the Cuſtom of waſhing the Feet of Strangers. But on the contrary the Church of Milan pleaded, That it was not meerly a Buſineſs of Humility, but of Myſtery and Sanctification, becauſe Chriſt ſaid to Peter, Except I waſh thy Feet, thou haſt no Part with me. This I urge, ſays our Author, not to reprehend others, but to commend my own Office. For though we deſire to follow the Roman Church, yet we are Men that have our Senſes about us. And therefore we obſerve that Practice, which we conceive to be righter in other Churches. He adds farther, That this was not done [s] to obtain Remiſſion of Sins, for what was already done in Baptiſm: But becauſe Adam was ſupplanted by the Devil, and the Serpent's Poiſon was caſt upon his Feet, therefore Men were waſhed in that Part for greater Sanctification, that he might have no Power to ſupplant them any farther. Theſe were the Reaſons given by the Church of Milan, for their adhering to this Practice: But they were not ſo ſtrong as to prevail with others, and ſo this Cuſtom never got any great Footing in the Chriſtian Church.

SECT. XI.

A General Reflection upon the whole preceding Diſcourſe, with Relation to the Practice of the Preſent Church.

I have now gone over the moſt material Ceremonies and Uſages of the Church, obſerved about the Adminiſtration of Baptiſm, as well thoſe that went before, as thoſe that accompanied the Action itſelf, and thoſe that followed after; and, as near as I could, delivered them in the ſame Order and Manner as ſhe herſelf obſerved them. And ſhall here cloſe the Diſcourſe only with one general Reflection, which may be of ſome uſe to vindicate the Practice of the preſent Church, and give Satisfaction to ſuch ſober Diſſenters as ſcruple our Office of Baptiſm for the ſake of an innocent ſignificant Ceremony or two retained in it. The candid Reader may obſerve throughout this Diſcourſe, that not only one or two, but many ſignificant Ceremonies were obſerved by the antient Church in the Adminiſtration of Baptiſm; particularly the Sign of the Croſs was uſed at leaſt four or five times in the whole Proceſs of the Action. Therefore they who now raiſe Objections againſt the preſent Office, had they lived in the Primitive Times, muſt have had much more Reaſon to complain of the antient Practice. And yet we do not ordinarily find Objections rais'd againſt the Baptiſm of the Church, upon the Account of the Ceremonies ſhe uſed therein, no, not even by thoſe who in other things differed her. Which Conſideration, methinks, ſhould a little ſatisfy thoſe, who really value the Peace and Unity of the Church, and be an Argument to them not to diſſent from the Practice of the preſent Church, for thoſe Things which muſt more forcibly have obliged them to have been Diſſenters in all Ages. I know not how far this Conſideration may prevail upon any, but I know how far it ought to prevail upon all that love the Peace, and ſtudy the Quiet of the Church, and therefore I could not but in this Place here ſeaſonably ſuggeſt it.

CHAP. V.

Of the Laws againſt REBAPTIZATION both in Church and State.

SECT. I. But one Baptiſm, properly ſo called, allowed by the Church. And Why?

TO what has been ſaid about Baptiſm, it will not be improper to add ſomething about the Laws made both in Church and State, againſt the Repetition of it, when once duly perform'd. The Ancients generally determine againſt a Repetition of Baptiſm; tho' Voſſius thinks [a] their Reaſons are not always ſtrictly concluſive. Some argued, That Baptiſm was not to be repeated, becauſe we are baptized into the Death of Chriſt, who died but once. So St. Baſil [b] and St. Auſtin [c]. But Voſſius thinks there is no weight in this Argument, becauſe that which is but once done, may be often repreſented: As the Sacrament of the Euchariſt is often repeated, though it alſo be in Remembrance of the Lord's Death till he come. Others prove it from thoſe Words of our Saviour, Joh. xiii. 10. He that is waſhed, needeth not ſave to waſh his Feet, but is clean every whit. This Argument is uſed by Optatus, St. Auſtin, Fulgentius, Pacianus, and St. Ambroſe. But Voſſius thinks there is as little Force in this Reaſon as the former: Becauſe Men may become polluted and unclean after Baptiſm, and ſo have need of a ſecond Waſhing, if there were no other Reaſon againſt it. Others argued from thoſe Words of the Apoſtle, Heb. vi. 4. It is impoſſible for thoſe who are once enlightned, if they ſhall fall away, to renew them again unto Repentance. The ancient Expoſitors, Chryſoſtom, Theodoret, Primaſius, Sedulius, and Haimo, underſtand this as a Prohibition of renewing Men to Repentance again by a ſecond Baptiſm: For they do not deny abſolutely the Poſſibility of a ſecond Repentance or Pardon, but only upon a ſecond Baptiſm. And ſo Voſſius ſays it is alſo expounded by Epiphanius [d], Cyril of Alexandria [e], St. Jerom [f], St. Auſtin [g], and St. Ambroſe [h]. But he thinks their Expoſition not ſo agreeable to this Place, as that of others, who interpret the falling away, either to mean the Blaſphemy againſt the Holy Ghoſt, or what St. John calls a Sin unto Death, or a Total Apoſtacy from the Chriſtian Religion, for which there is no Renewal of Repentance. But I will not be ſo poſitive as Voſſius, that any of theſe are better Interpretations of that Text, which is ſo unanimouſly urged by the Ancients againſt the Novatians, as a Prohibition, not ſimply of a ſecond Repentance, but of a Repentance by a ſecond Baptiſm. Others made uſe of thoſe Words of the Apoſtle, Eph. iv. One Faith, one Baptiſm. Which is the Argument urged by Cyril of Jeruſalem and Pope Leo, againſt Rebaptization. But this, as Voſſius obſerves, probably was not intended as a Prohibition of a ſecond Baptiſm, but only to declare the Community of that Baptiſm, which is received one and the ſame by all, without Exception. As the Apoſtle calls the Euchariſt one Bread, not becauſe it was only once to be received, but becauſe it was that common Bread, of which all were Partakers. The true Reaſon, Voſſius thinks, why Baptiſm is not to be repeated, is the Divine Will that ſo appointed it. For there is no Command to reiterate Baptiſm, as there is to repeat the Euchariſt, in the Words of Inſtitution. Neither is there any Example of any Rebaptization in Scripture, though we often read of Men's falling into groſs and ſcandalous Sins after Baptiſm. To which may be added, that Baptiſm ſucceeds in the room of Circumciſion, being the Entrance and Seal of the Covenant, which, on God's Part, is never broken: So that as Circumciſion was never repeated, though the Paſſover was yearly; in like manner, Men enter into the Covenant by Baptiſm, and their Breaches of the Covenant are not to be repaired by repeated Baptiſms, but by Confeſſion and Repentance, which is the Method preſcribed by the Apoſtle for reſtoring fallen Brethren. St. Jerom [i] obſerves, That though there were many Hereticks in the Apoſtles Days, as the Nicolaitans and others, yet there was no Command given to rebaptize them upon their Repentance. And Optatus [k] makes the Unity of Circumciſion a good Argument for the Unity of Baptiſm, in which both the Catholicks and Donatiſts agreed. For though the Donatiſts rebaptized the Catholicks, yet they did it not under the Notion of a ſecond Baptiſm, but as ſuppoſing they had received no true Baptiſm before.

SECT. II. Only the Marcionites allowed Baptiſm to be thrice repeated.

INDEED among all the antient Hereticks, we find none for a Plurality of Baptiſms, but only the Marcionites. Which Epiphanius obſerves to have been an Invention of Marcion [l] their firſt Founder, in regard to his own Converſation: For he having been guilty of deflowering a Virgin, invented a ſecond Baptiſm, aſſerting, That it was lawful to repeat Baptiſm three times for the Remiſſion of Sins. So that if any Man fell, he might receive a ſecond Baptiſm after the firſt, and a third after that, upon his Repentance. Which he pretended to ground upon thoſe Sayings of our Saviour, I have a Baptiſm to be baptized with, and I have a Cup to drink; which have no reference to any other Baptiſm in Water, but to his Baptiſm in Blood, that is, his Death and Paſſion. Of which the Ancients ſpeak much, as they do of ſome other Sorts of Baptiſm, which are only metaphorical, as the Baptiſm of Afflictions, the Baptiſm of Tears and Repentance, and the Baptiſm of Fire at the laſt Day. But here the Queſtion is only about proper Baptiſm by Water, which the Marcionites affirmed might be repeated three Times in the ſame way, which the Church never allowed of.

SECT. III. What the Church did in doubtful Caſes, not reckoned a Re-baptization.

'TIS true indeed, there were ſome doubtful Caſes, in which it might happen accidentally that a Man might be a ſecond time baptized; but theſe were ſuch Caſes only, in which the Party was reputed not to have received any former Baptiſm at all. As when a Man could neither give any Account of his own Baptiſm, nor were there any other credible Witneſſes that could atteſt it. Which often happened to be the Caſe of thoſe who were taken Captives in their Infancy, and made Slaves by the Heathen. When any ſuch were redeemed or recovered by the Chriſtians, the Church made no Scruple to baptize them; becauſe tho' they might perhaps have received a former Baptiſm, yet no Evidence of it appeared. And ſo this was not reputed a Re-baptization. A Decree was made to this purpoſe in the fifth Council of Carthage [m], upon a Queſtion put by the Biſhops of Mauritania, who affirmed that they redeemed many ſuch captive Children from the Hands of the Barbarians: The Council ordered, That in this Caſe, as often as it happened that there were no certain Witneſſes found, who could give undoubted Teſtimony of their Baptiſm; nor were they able of themſelves to affirm, by reaſon of their Age, that they ever had received it; they ſhould be baptized without any Scruple, leſt an Heſitation in this Caſe ſhould deprive them of the Purgation of the Sacraments. The like Determination was alſo given in one of the Roman Synods under Leo upon the ſame Caſe, where it was concluded [n], That in ſuch a doubtful Caſe, neither the Baptizer nor the Baptized incurred the Crime of Re-baptization. And Leo reſolves the Matter [o] himſelf after the ſame manner in other Places. Neither was it reckoned any Crime, though it afterward appeared that the Party had been baptized before, becauſe it was done in Ignorance: But yet, like Clinick-baptiſm, it was a ſort of Blemiſh to him, that deprived him of Eccleſiaſtical Promotion, except in ſome extraordinary Caſe, as we learn from Theodore's [p] Pœnitentiale cited by Gratian.

SECT IV. Nor when ſhe baptized thoſe who had been unduly baptized before in Hereſy or Schiſm.

NEITHER was it reckoned properly a ſecond Baptiſm, when the Church baptized any who had before been unduly baptized in Hereſy or Schiſm. For then ſhe did it only on Preſumption that they had received no true Baptiſm before. Some Hereticks corrupted Baptiſm by altering the neceſſary Form, and others corrupted it by changing the Matter of it into ſome other Subſtance of their own appointing: And the Baptiſms of all ſuch were looked upon as no Baptiſms, and therefore the Church ordered all thoſe to be baptized upon their Return to her Communion, in the very ſame manner as Jews and Gentiles, as ſuppoſing their former Pretence of Baptiſm to be nothing at all, but her own Baptiſm the firſt true Baptiſm that was given them. And even the Cyprianiſts, who baptized all that had been baptized in any Hereſy or Schiſm whatſoever without Diſtinction, did it ſtill only upon this Suppoſition, That the Baptiſm which they had received before, was no Baptiſm at all, but a mere Nullity. But if any had been baptized in the Catholick Church, and after that turned Hereticks or Schiſmaticks, or even Apoſtates, Jews or Gentiles, they never gave ſuch another Baptiſm upon their Return to the Church again.

SECT. V. Apoſtates never Rebaptized in the Catholick Church.

FOR the Cyprianiſts in this agreed with the reſt of the Catholick Church, That Catholick Baptiſm was never to be repeated in the greateſt Apoſtates. This Doctrine is not only inculcated by St. Auſtin [q], but even by Cyprian himſelf and his Followers: Where they plead ſo much for baptizing thoſe who had been baptized in any Hereſy or Schiſm, they ſtill except thoſe Hereticks who had originally been baptized in the Catholick Church; though they turned Apoſtates, they were not to be received again by Baptiſm [r], but only by Repentance, as was determined in the Council of Carthage over which Cyprian preſided. St. Auſtin refers us to this very Paſſage, and thence concludes this was a Point agreed upon univerſally in the Catholick Church, That no Lapſe or Crime could make it neceſſary to give a ſecond Baptiſm to any, who had once been truly baptized within the Pale of the Church. A longer Penance indeed was impoſed upon ſuch Deſerters and Apoſtates, as had been baptized in the Church, than upon thoſe who had been baptized among Hereticks originally, as the Rules of Pope Innocent inform us [s]; The one were obliged to go through a long Courſe of Penance for their Apoſtacy, but the other was admitted immediately by Impoſition of Hands upon their Recantation: Yet ſtill the Church kept ſtrict to her Rule, That whatever way ſhe admitted them, ſhe would not do it by a ſecond Baptiſm.

SECT. VI. What Hereticks rebaptized the Catholicks.

SEVERAL Hereticks pretended to obſerve the ſame Rule: For they rebaptized the Catholicks; yet they ſaid this was not a ſecond Baptiſm; becauſe the Catholicks were reputed Hereticks with them, and therefore their Baptiſm of no Value in their Account. Upon this ground the Novatians rebaptized the Catholicks, as we learn from Cyprian [t] and the Epiſtle of Pope Innocent laſt cited. The Donatiſts followed the Novatians in this ſacrilegious Practice, as the Charge is often brought againſt them by St. Auſtin [u] and many others. And the Eunomians not only rebaptized the Catholicks, but all others of the Arian Sects, that were not of their own particular Faction, as is noted by Epiphanius [x] in his Account of them. And the other Arians, though they were at firſt averſe to this Practice (as Papebrochius [y] and Pagi [z] rightly obſerve, in order to refute the Story of Conſtantine's being baptized by Pope Sylveſter, and rebaptized by Euſebius of Nicomedia; for at that time the Arians had not taken up the Practice of Rebaptizing the Catholicks:) Yet afterwards they gave way to it about the Time of St. Auſtin. For he charges it upon them more than once [a], That they rebaptized the Catholicks. And it appears from Victor Uticenſis [b] That they inſiſted ſtifly upon it in the Time of the Vandalick Perſecution, and we afterwards meet with the ſame in the Epiſtles of Vigilius [c]. Valeſius [d] cites the Life of Fulgentius and the Author of the Breviarium Fidei, publiſhed by Sirmondus, to the ſame Purpoſe. By which laſt Author [e] we find, that the Arians not only rebaptized the Catholicks, but alſo made an Argument of it (as ſome Romaniſts in another Caſe have ſince argued againſt the Proteſtants) that their Baptiſm was better than the Catholicks, becauſe the Catholicks never rebaptized thoſe that came over from the Arians, but reconciled them only by Impoſition of Hands: But the Arians, whenever they could ſeduce any from the Catholicks, always gave them a ſecond Baptiſm.

SECT. VII. What Puniſhments were inflicted on Rebaptizers by the Laws of Church and State.

NOW to prevent this petulant Humor from ſpreading in the Church, many and ſevere Laws were made againſt it, both by the Eccleſiaſtical and the Secular Power. The Church by her Canons [f] not only cenſured and condemned all ſuch Rebaptizations, as Impious and Sacrilegious, as a crucifying of Chriſt again, a doing Deſpite to the Spirit, as a Mockery to the Divine Myſteries, and Deriſion of Holy Things; but alſo inflicted Penalties on all thoſe who were either actively or paſſively concerned in them. The Council of Lerida [g] forbids the Faithful ſo much as to eat with Perſons that ſuffered themſelves to be Rebaptized. The Canons of Pope Innocent [h] enjoyn them a long Penance to make

Satis-

Satisfaction. And those of Pope Leo [i] require even those who through Fear or Terror were rebaptized against their Wills, to do Penance at the Discretion of the Bishop, before they were admitted again to Communion. If they were Bishops, Presbyters, or Deacons, who thus suffered themselves to be rebaptized, then they were to be degraded, and obliged to do Penance all their Lives, without being suffered to communicate with the Church either in the Prayers of the Faithful, or the Prayers of the Catechumens, and were only to be admitted to Lay-Communion at the Hour of Death, because they had not only denied their Orders, but their Christianity, and openly professed themselves Pagans, by being rebaptized. This we find in the Decrees of Felix III. made in a Roman Council [k] with respect to the African Churches, where such Rebaptizations were often practised, by the Power of the Arians, who compelled the Catholicks to be rebaptized. This was the antient Discipline of the Church toward those, who were only Passive in admitting a second Baptism, after they had once been truly baptized with Catholick Baptism before. Then again for those who were actively concerned in such Rebaptizations, the Canons appointed, that if any Bishop or Presbyter presumed to give a second Baptism after a true one once received [l], he should be degraded: And this Penalty was confirmed by the Civil Law; for Valentinian put forth an Edict against such Rebaptizers, declaring them unworthy [m] of the Priesthood. But because such sort of Penalties did not much affect either the Donatists or Eunomians, who were already out of the Church, and little regarded her Censures: Therefore Honorius reinforced the former Laws by adding a Civil Penalty to them. For in two Laws made against the Donatists, who were chiefly concerned in this Crime, he enacted [n], that it should be Confiscation of all a Man's Goods, whoever was found to rebaptize another. And Theodosius Junior [o] laid the same Penalty upon the Eunomians, and those that were rebaptized by them, commanding their Goods to be confiscated, and their Persons to be banished. Such was the Care both of the Civil and Ecclesiastical Governors to preserve the Unity of Baptism in the Catholick Church. But as Gothofred, I think, rightly observes, these Laws seem only intended against Hereticks rebaptizing Catholicks. For if Hereticks rebaptized Hereticks, as the Eunomians did the other Arians, it does not appear that in that Case the Penalties of these Laws affected them, but only were designed to restrain their Insolencies against the Catholick Church. Some Catholicks continued still, after the Cyprianick Way, to rebaptize all Hereticks and Schismaticks whatsoever, without distinguishing those that were baptized in the Name of the Trinity, from those that were not: And tho' this was contrary to the general Custom and Discipline of the Church, yet I conceive the Penalties of these Laws did not affect them neither. And the same may be said of those, who thought themselves obliged to rebaptize those, who were only baptized by Laymen. For though it was reckoned a Rebaptization by those Churches which practised otherwise, yet it was not that criminal Rebaptization, against which these Laws were chiefly intended: And these being something more of doubtful and disputed Cases, about which good Catholicks themselves were divided, a greater Allowance was made in these, so long as Men only observed the Custom and Practice of the Churches, in which they lived, about them: Which was St. Basil's Advice to the Churches of Asia, which were divided upon these Questions.

BOOK XIII.

CHAP. I.

Some neceſſary Remarks upon the Antient Names of Divine Service, which Modern Corruptions have render'd ambiguous.

SECT. I. The Partition of this Work.

WE have hitherto ſeen the Method of Introducing Men into the Church, through the various Steps of their Catechumenſhip, and Baptiſm, and Confirmation: We are now to view their Practice in the Worſhip of God after their Admiſſion, and to examine into the Manner of their holding Religious Aſſemblies, and performing there the ſeveral publick Offices of Divine Service. Some things of this kind are General Conſiderations, that run through all Offices, and relate to every Part of Divine Worſhip; ſuch as the Object of their Worſhip, and the Circumſtances of Language, and Forms, and Habits, and Geſture, and Time; and therefore of thoſe General Things I ſhall diſcourſe firſt in this Book. After this I ſhall conſider the ſeveral Parts of their moſt ſolemn Worſhip on the Lord's Day; ſuch as their Pſalmody, and Reading of the Scriptures, and Preaching, and Prayer, and receiving the Communion, which were their ſolemn Acts of Worſhip on every Feſtival. And becauſe ſome of theſe were ſuch as the Catechumens and all others were allowed to be preſent at, for their Benefit and Edification; whilſt other Parts of Divine Service were more reſtrained to Perſons baptized, who were complete and perfect Chriſtians (who were therefore called Communicants, becauſe they had a more peculiar Right to all the Privileges of Chriſtian Communion). I ſhall upon this account ſpeak of their Worſhip under theſe two Heads, according to their own Diſtinction; The Miſſa Catechumenorum, and the Miſſa Fidelium; the Service of the Catechumens, and the Service of the Communicants; or, as we may otherwiſe term them, the Ante-communion Service, and the Communion Service.

SECT. II. Of the Miſſa Catechumenorum, or Firſt Part of Divine Service, to which all Orders of Men were admitted.

The Miſſa Catechumenorum comprehended all that part of the Service, which preceded the common Prayers of the Communicants at the Altar; that is, the Pſalmody, the Reading of the Scriptures, the Sermon, and the particular Prayers that were made over the Catechumens and other Orders of Penitents, Energumens, &c. before they were diſmiſſed. For by the antient Rules and Diſcipline of the Church, the Method of Divine Service was ſo ordered that all Perſons, except ſome very ſcandalous Sinners, had Liberty to be preſent at ſome Parts of it. The Pſalms, and Leſſons, and Sermons were for the Inſtruction, not only of Believers, but alſo of Catechumens, and Heathens, Jews and Infidels, Unbelievers and Hereticks: And therefore by ſome Canons all theſe had Liberty to ſtay in the Church, till this part of the Service, called Miſſa Catechumenorum, was ended. The fourth Council of Carthage [a] has a Rule to this purpoſe, That the Biſhop ſhall not prohibit any one to enter the Church, and hear the Word of God, whether he be Gentile, Jew or Heretick, till the Service of the Catechumens was ended. A like Canon was made by the firſt

Council

Council of Orange, That the Catechumens [b] ſhould have the Liberty to ſtay and hear the Goſpels read in all their Churches. The Council of Valentia [c] in Spain extends the Privilege to Hereticks and Heathens, as well as Catechumens, and therefore orders that the Goſpel ſhould be read before the Oblation was brought forth, in the uſual Order of the Leſſons, ſo that not only the Communicants, but the Catechumens and Penitents, and Gentiles, and Hereticks, who were of the contrary Part, might have Liberty to hear the ſaving Precepts of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and the Sermons of the Biſhops. For they had learned by Experience, that by the Biſhops preaching many had been brought over to the Faith. And by this we may interpret an obſcure Canon [d] of the Council of Lerida, which orders, That inceſtuous Perſons, ſo long as they continued in their Sin, ſhould not be permitted to ſtay any longer in the Church, ſave only during the Service of the Catechumens, that is, to hear the Pſalmody, the Leſſons and the Sermon. St. Chryſoſtom abundantly confirms this Obſervation: For in many of his Homilies [e] he ſpeaks not only of Catechumens, but of Hereticks and Heathen being preſent as Part of his Auditory. Particularly in his Homily [f] upon the Forty-fourth Pſalm, he wiſhes all the Jews and Heathens had been then preſent to have heard him expound that prophetical Pſalm of Chriſt. In another Homily [g] upon the Forty-eighth Pſalm he brings in an Heathen uſing this Form of Complaint againſt Chriſtians: I went into a Chriſtian Church, and there I heard Paul ſay to their Women, That they ſhould not adorn themſelves with Gold or Pearl; but I ſaw every Thing contrary in their Practice. And, ſays Chryſoſtom, Will not the Heathen when he comes into the Church, and ſees the Women thus adorn'd in the Galleries above, and hears Paul thus ſpeaking below, be ready to ſay, Our Religion is mere Pageantry and Fable? It is not ſo indeed; but the Heathen is ſcandalized and offended at this Contrariety in our Practice. This plainly implies, that the Heathens had free Liberty to come into the Chriſtian Churches, and hear the Scriptures read, and the Sermon preached. And it is very remarkable, what Sozomen [h] obſerves of St. Chryſoſtom, That by this Means he brought over many of thoſe who heard him in the Church, to acknowledge the Divinity of Chriſt. Which ſome underſtand of the Scholars of Libanius, but Valeſius, I think more truly, interprets it of Heathens and Hereticks in general, who flock'd to St. Chryſoſtom's Church to hear him. There is but one Thing that can be ſaid againſt all this, and that is, That the Council of Laodicea has a contrary Canon, which abſolutely forbids [i] the permitting of Hereticks to enter into the Houſe of God. But this is only a Local Ordinance; and the Thing being a Matter of pure Diſcipline, there might be prudential Reaſons for denying Hereticks in ſome Places the Privilege that was allowed them in others. Or elſe the Canon may be underſtood of not permitting them to come into the Church for Prayers or Communion, which was a Thing forbidden by all Canons whatſoever, till after their Recantation. Some indeed think, that in Tertullian's Time the Catechumens were excluded before Sermon, becauſe he objects it to the Hereticks [k], That there were ſuch Confuſions in their Aſſemblies, that no one could tell who was a Catechumen, and who was a Communicant, becauſe they all met, and heard, and prayed together. And Heathens, if they came in among them, were not excluded from the very Myſteries of their Religion. But in this, as Schelſtrate [l] has obſerved againſt Albaſpinæus and Chriſtianus Lupus, Tertullian does not object to the Hereticks, That they admitted Catechumens to hear their Sermons, but that they made no Diſtinction in their Aſſemblies, as the Church did; but without any Obſervation of Decency or Order, ſuffered their Catechumens to mingle themſelves with Communicants, whom the Catholicks always confined to a ſeparate place in the Church, while Hereticks admitted them confuſedly, not only to hear Sermons, but to be preſent at their Prayers and the Oblation of the Euchariſt alſo. So that this Paſſage of Tertullian rather confirms the Thing aſſerted, That the Miſſa Catechumenorum, or Service of the Catechumens, lasted to the End of the Sermon. After which it was uſual for the Deacon to call to the Heathens, and Hereticks, if there were any preſent, to be gone: μή τις τῶν ἀκροωμένων· μή τις τῶν ἀπίστων: Let none that are only Hearers, none of the Unbelievers be preſent, as the Author of the Conſtitutions [m] words it. Then followed the Prayers for the Catechumens of the Order called Proſtrators; and after their Diſmiſſion, Prayers for the Energumens; and after them, the Prayers for the Candidates of Baptiſm, and laſt of all the Prayers for the Penitents. All which was included in the general Name of Miſſa Catechumenorum, the Service of the Catechumens, or Ante-Communion Service.

SECT. III. Of the Miſſa Fidelium, or Communion Service, peculiar to Communicants only.

AFTER this was ended, it was uſual for the Deacon to make another ſolemn Proclamation to all Orders of Non-communicants to withdraw: οἱ ἀκοινώνητοι προσ-πατήσατε, Ye that cannot communicate, walk off and be gone. Let no Catechumen be preſent, no Hearer, no Infidel, no Heterodox or Heretical Perſon, as the Author of the Conſtitutions words it [n]. And as St. Chryſoſtom acquaints [o] us, he was uſed to add farther, ἐπιγινώσκετε ἀλλήλους, Ye that are Communicants, diſcern and know one another: See that there be no Catechumen, none of thoſe that cannot eat of the Sacrifice, no Spy, no one that cannot ſee the heavenly Blood ſhed for the Remiſſion of Sins, no one unworthy of the living Sacrifice, no unbaptized Perſon, no one that may not touch the tremendous Myſteries with his polluted Lips. And here began the Miſſa Fidelium, or Communion-ſervice, ſo called, becauſe none might be preſent at it but Communicants only, as appears from theſe ſolemn Forms of diſmiſſing all others before it began. This contains all thoſe Prayers which were ſaid at the Altar, and were properly called εὐχαὶ πιστῶν, Prayers of the Faithful or Communicants, in Oppoſition to the Prayers of the Catechumens, which went before: Theſe were the Prayers for the whole State of the Church, and Peace of the World, which preceded the Oblation and Conſecration of the Euchariſt; and then the Conſecration Prayers, and Prayers again for all Orders of Men in the Church, with proper Forms of Communicating, and Doxologies, Hymns and Thankſgivings after Reception, of which we diſcourſe particularly in the laſt of theſe Books, under the general Title of Miſſa Fidelium, or Communion-Service. This Part of the Service being wholly ſpent in Prayers, and that by the Communicants only, is therefore peculiarly diſtinguiſh'd by the Name of εὐχαὶ πιστῶν, The Prayers of the Faithful, by the Council of Laodicea [p], which ſpeaks of them as coming after the Prayers of the Catechumens and their Diſmiſſion. In other Canons they are called the common Prayers of the People, and abſolutely The Prayers, without taking Notice of any other Prayers in the Church. Whence in the Council of Nice [q], ſpeaking of Penitents, the Phraſe, Communicating in Prayers with the People without the Oblation, denotes joyning in this Part of the Service of the Church, diſtinguiſhed by the Name of Prayers, or Communion-Service, which belonged not to the Catechumens, but the Body of the People, in which the Penitents of the higheſt Claſs, called Co-ſtanders, were allowed to joyn, though they might neither make their Oblations, nor partake of the Euchariſt with the Faithful. And in the ſame Senſe the Council of Ancyra [r] ſpeaks of Penitents, who as they were to be three Years Subſtrators among the Catechumens, and bow down under the Biſhop's Hands for Benediction; ſo were they for two Years to communicate in Prayers only without the Oblation. And ſo communicating in Prayers with the People is taken in the Council of Antioch, when they ſay, all ſuch as come to Church, and hear the holy Scriptures read, but will not communicate [s] in Prayers with the People, or withdraw themſelves diſorderly from partaking of the Euchariſt, ſhall be caſt out of the Church. Where, as Reading of the Scriptures, is put for the whole Service of the Catechumens, which was the firſt Service; ſo Communicating in Prayers and the Euchariſt denotes the ſecond part of the Service, peculiar to Communicants, or Perſons baptized; from which, as Catechumens were debarred, ſo others might not withdraw themſelves, under Pain of Eccleſiaſtical Cenſure. This was the true Order of the firſt and ſecond Service in the antient Church, and the true Diſtinction between the Miſſa Catechumenorum, and Miſſa Fidelium, of which I intend to give a full Account in the two next Books.

SECT. IV.

The true Original and Meaning of the antient Name, Miſſa, The Maſs, which in its primitive Uſe denotes every Part of Divine Service: but no where an Expiatory Sacrifice for the Quick and Dead.

AT preſent we may obſerve, how ſhamefully they have abuſed the antient Name Miſſa, under the Appellation of Maſs, who apply it only to denote the Office of Conſecrating Bread and Wine into the Body and Blood of Chriſt, and offering that as an Expiatory Sacrifice for the Quick and Dead. For antiently the Name Miſſa ſignified no ſuch thing, but was a general Name for every part of Divine Service. It ſignified, as we have ſeen already, the Service of the Catechumens, as well as the Service of the Altar; and is often uſed for the Pſalmody, for the Leſſons, and for the Prayers at Evening, when there was no Communion, as well as for the Prayers uſed in time of Celebration of the Euchariſt. Thus Caſſian [t] often mentions the Miſſa Nocturna, by which he means the Morning Prayers and Pſalmody before Day, when it is certain they had no Communion. The Council of Agde [u] ſpeaks of Evening Maſs, as well as Morning, which meant no more but Morning and Evening Prayer without any Communion. For they had no Communion either Morning or Evening at their Daily Prayers, but only on Feſtivals at a diſtinct Hour from both thoſe. So the Emperor Leo in his Tacticks [x] ſpeaks of the μίσαι ἑσπεριναὶ, a Word plainly borrowed from the Latin Miſſa, (for the Greeks had originally no ſuch Name) to ſignifie only Evening Prayer. And Biſhop Uſher in his Religion of the antient Iriſh [y], gives us another ſuch Inſtance out of Adamnanus, who uſes the Name Veſpertinalis Miſſa for what is commonly called Evening Prayer. And the late learned Mabillon [z] has obſerved out of the Rules of Cæſarius Arelatenſis and Aurelian, that the Word Miſſa is ſometimes uſed for the Leſſons alſo. For it is one of Aurelian's Rules, that they ſhould take ſix Miſſa's, (that is, Leſſons) out of the Prophet Iſaiah, Lacite ſex Miſſas de Eſaia Propheta. And Mabillon very judiciouſly remarks farther [a], that the Word Miſſa has at leaſt three Significations. It ſometimes ſignifies the Leſſons, ſometimes the Collects or Prayers, and ſometimes the Diſmiſſion of the People. And indeed the third Senſe is the Original Notation of the Word. For Miſſa is the ſame as Miſſio. And it was the Form uſed in the Latin Church, Ite Miſſa eſt, which anſwers to the Greek ἀπολύεσθε and προέλθετε, the ſolemn Words uſed at the Diſmiſſion of the Catechumens firſt, and then of the whole Aſſembly afterwards, at the End of their reſpective Services. Whence the Services themſelves at laſt took their Names from theſe ſolemn Diſmiſſions, the one being called, Miſſa Catechumenorum, and the other Miſſa Fidelium, neither of which ever ſignify more than the Divine Service, at which the one or the other attended.

In vain therefore do many learned Men labour to deduce its Original from foreign Languages, to make it ſignify ſomething agreeable to the Modern Notion of the Roman Maſs, when it is ſo plainly of Latin Extraction. Baronius [b], after Reuclin and Genebrard, would have it come from the Hebrew Word Miſſah, an Oblation: But Durantus [c] has a good Reaſon againſt that; becauſe if it had been of Hebrew Extraction, the Greeks would have retained it in their Language, as they do the Words Hoſanna, Sabbaoth, Alleluiah, and Amen: Whereas there is no Greek Writer uſes it till the time of Leo Sapiens, who firſt borrows it from the Latin in his *Tactick*s. Albaſpinæus has ſtill a wilder Conjecture; he ſays, the Word Meſs, among the Northern Nations, ſignifies a Feſtival, and therefore he imagines, the Name Miſſa and Maſs might come from that: Which is only to invert the Origination, and make the Daughter to become the Mother; ſince it is evident, the Name Meſs comes from Miſſa, and not Miſſa from that. Cardinal Bona [d] takes a great deal of Pains to confute theſe and all other falſe Opinions, and eſtabliſhes the true one with undeniable Evidence from Alcimus Avitus, and all the antient Ritualiſts, Iſidore, Rabanus Maurus, Fiorus Magiſter, Remigius Altiſſiodorenſis, Alcuinus, Gregory's Sacramentarium, Hugo Victorinus, and Bernoldus, who all agree in this, that Miſſa comes from the Diſmiſſion of the People, and not from any other Original. So that I think it needleſs to trouble my Reader with any of theſe Authorities, ſince the Matter is now cleared beyond all Contradiction by Mabillon and Bona, two ſuch eminent Writers of the Roman Communion.

SECT. V. In what ſenſe Divine Service antiently called Sacrificium.

ANOTHER general Name of the antient Service, which in later Ages has met with ſome Abuſe, is Sacrificium, Sacrifice; a Name borrowed from the Jewiſh Carnal Sacrifices, and applied to the Spiritual Sacrifices of Chriſtians, viz. their Prayers and Praiſes, and Preaching, and devoting themſelves entirely, Body and Soul, to the Service of Chriſt by the Sacraments of Baptiſm and the Lord's Supper. Hence every part of Divine Worſhip had the Name of Sacrifice, and not only the Service of the Altar. For they commonly call their Evening Hymns and Prayers by the Name of Evening Sacrifice. Thus St. Jerom bids Læta accuſtom her Daughter not only to the Morning Hymns, and daily Hours of Prayer, the 3d, the 6th, and the 9th, but alſo when Night comes, and the Lamps are lighted, then in like manner to render to God her Evening [e] Sacrifice. And ſo St. Hilary upon thoſe Words of the Pſalmiſt, Let the lifting up of my Hands be an Evening Sacrifice, ſays, The Sacrifice of Chriſtians is their Prayers, recommended to God by ſtretching forth their Hands to relieve the Poor. For we, ſays he, upon whom [f] the ends of the World are come, do not ſacrifice to God with Blood or Burnt-offerings: But the Evening Sacrifice, which is pleaſing to God, is that which Chriſt teaches in his Goſpel, I was an hungry, and ye fed me; thirſty, and ye gave me drink, &c. this is the Evening Sacrifice, that is, the Sacrifice of the laſt Times. In this we are to lift up our Hands: For by ſuch Prayers the Inheritance of the Kingdom of Heaven is prepared for thoſe that are bleſſed of God, from the Foundation of the World. In the ſame Senſe Euſebius calls the Prayers of Chriſtians the rational Sacrifices [g], that are offered without Blood to God. And Clemens Alexandrinus [h] ſays, the Sacrifices of Chriſtians are their Prayers and Praiſes, and reading of the Scriptures, and Pſalms and Hymns before Meals, and at their Meals, and at Bed-time, and in the Night. And there are Hundreds of Paſſages in the Ancients, both of publick and private Prayers, to the ſame purpoſe, beſides what is ſaid of the Sacrifice of the Euchariſt, or Communion-Service, of which we ſhall have Reaſon to ſay ſomething more upon another Occaſion. Here it is ſufficient to have hinted the Grounds, upon which the Ancients gave the general Name of Sacrifice to all parts of divine Service.

SECT. VI. And Sacramenta.

ANOTHER Name, though neither ſo antient, nor ſo common as the former, is that of Sacramenta, which in ſome Authors ſignifies not what we now call Sacraments, but the Order or Manner of performing Divine Offices, and that as well the Prayers and Service in general, as the particular Offices of adminiſtring Baptiſm and the Lord's Supper. For the Word Sacramentum, anſwering to the Greek μυστήριον, is a Word of a large Extent, denoting not only the proper Sacraments, but all ſacred Ceremonies and Uſages of the Church, that have any thing of ſymbolical or ſpiritual Significancy in them, repreſenting ſomething more to the Underſtanding than appears to the outward Senſes; and in a more reſtrained, though not the ſtricteſt Senſe, it denotes the Manner or Method of performing Divine Offices in the Church, whether relating to the Sacraments properly ſo called, or any other Parts of Divine Service, as the Prayers, Hymns, Leſſons, in Morning or Evening Service. In this Senſe, 'tis obſerved by learned Men [i] that the Book of Divine Offices compoſed by Gregory the Great for the Uſe of the Roman Church, bears the Title of Liber Sacramentorum, The Book of Sacraments, that is, a Book or Method for performing Divine Offices in the Church. And Gelaſius did the ſame thing before him under the Title of Codex Sacramentarius, lately publiſhed by Thomaſius at Rome, 1680. And Gennadius [k] ſays, Muſæus a Presbyter of Marſeilles compoſed Volumen Sacramentorum, a large Book of Sacraments, that is, Divine Offices, to direct what Leſſons, and Pſalms, and Hymns were to be uſed in the Communion-Service, according to the Seaſons of the Year, and what Prayers and Thankſgivings were to make up the Service of the Church. And it is the Opinion of two very learned Men, Menardus and Biſhop Stillingfleet [l], that both St. Auſtin and St. Ambroſe give the Name of Sacramenta to the Books of Liturgic Offices uſed in their Time. And they obſerve that the old Miſſal publiſhed by Illyricus bears the Name of Ordo Sacramentorum, which can mean nothing but the Manner of performing Divine Offices in the Adminiſtration of the Euchariſt and other Parts of publick Worſhip.

SECT. VII. And Curſus Eccleſiaſticus.

THESE Offices are by other Writers ſtyled Curſus Eccleſiaſticus, the Order or Courſe of Divine Offices. For under this Title, Gregory Turonenſis is ſaid to have compoſed a Book, De Curſibus Eccleſiaſticis, for the Uſe of the Gallican Church, which is now loſt; but he himſelf [m] mentions it in his Hiſtory. And Biſhop Uſher [n] cites an antient Manuſcript out of the Cotton Library, which ſays, That Germanus and Lupus brought Ordinem Curſus Gallorum, the Gallican Liturgy, into Britain with them. And this was the Liturgy of the Britiſh Churches for ſome Ages, till by degrees the Curſus Romanus was brought in upon them. Bede [o] ſays, In the Time of Pope Agatho, Joannes Abbas, the Roman Præcentor, was ſent over to ſettle the Roman Curſus, or Pſalmody for the whole Year, according to the Uſage and Way of St. Peter's Church at Rome. And the Council of Calchuth [p] ſome time after Bede, ſpeaks of the Liturgy under the ſame Title, ordering all Churches at the Canonical Hours, reverently to perform their Curſus. And Mabillon [q] cites the Lives of Walaricus and Senericus, where there is frequent mention of the Curſus Gallicanus.

SECT. VIII. The Names Λειτουργία, Ἱερουργία, Ἱερά, and μυσταγωγία moſt uſual in the Greek Church.

AMONG the Greek Writers we ſeldom meet with any of theſe Names, but they uſually ſtile all Holy Offices, and all Parts of Divine Service, by the general Name of Λειτουργία, and Ἱερουργία, Liturgy, and ſacred Service. Though Liturgy in its extended Senſe denotes any publick Office or Miniſtration, as the Apoſtle uſes it, Phil. ii. 30. and 2 Cor. ix. 12. for the Miniſtration of Charity; and Eccleſiaſtical Writers do the ſame, often applying it both to civil and ſacred Functions, as to the Office of a Magiſtrate or a Biſhop, as Caſaubon [r] ſhews at large; yet in a more limited Senſe it is put to ſignify thoſe ſacred Offices which make up the ſeveral Parts of Divine Worſhip, as Prayers, Reading, Preaching, and Adminiſtration of the Sacraments. But it is never uſed, as the Romaniſts would appropriate it, for the buſineſs of Sacrificing only. The Council of Epheſus ſpeaks both of Evening [s] and Morning Liturgies, which doubtleſs mean Evening and Morning Prayers only. And ſo Caſaubon obſerves, that Juſtinian [t] takes it for the Office of reading the Scripture as well as adminiſtring the Euchariſt, when he ſays of a certain Monaſtery, that the Divine Liturgy was performed in it, as it was uſed to be in the Churches, both by reading the Holy Scriptures, and receiving the Holy Communion. And Antiochus [u] applies the Name of Liturgy, not only to Morning Prayer, but alſo to the Service of their Midnight Aſſemblies.

Neither of which was in his Time the ordinary Hours of the Communion-Service. So that Erasmus and others are governed more by Prejudice than Reason, who would have that Passage of Acts xiii. 2. Λειτουργούντων αὐτῶν, to be render'd Sacrificantibus illis, as if there were no Divine Service without Sacrifice in their Notion of it; when yet the vulgar Translation renders it Ministring, and the old Syriack and Arabick, as Beza observes, have it Praying; which is agreeable to the Notion of Liturgy for Divine Service. Yet when the Epithet of Mystica was added to Liturgia, then it commonly signified the Communion-Service. As when Theodoret says that the Salutation of St. Paul, 2 Cor. xiii. 14. The Grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, &c. is the Beginning of the Mystical Liturgy [x], he means the Communion Office, where this Form of Salutation was always used. And so in the Clementina Epitome [y], the sacred Liturgy, denotes the Service of the Altar, which came after the ἐυχὴν ἢ ἱερῶν ὕμνων, Prayers used in Psalmody, or the Service of the Catechumens. And it is Bona's Observation [z] out of Vincentius Riccardus [a], That except the Words Sacred, or Mystical, be added to the Name Liturgy, it is never to be taken for the Sacrifice of the Altar, but for some other Part of Divine Service: Though, I think, this is more than can be fairly proved. As on the other hand, when the Epithet of Mystical is added, it does not always, but only for the most part, as I said before, mean the Eucharistical Service. For the Service of Baptism was ever esteem'd a Mystical Service, as well as that of the Eucharist. And the Name μυσαγωγία, Communion in the sacred Mysteries, is upon that account frequently given by St. Chrysostom [b], Theodoret [c] and others, to Baptism, as well as the Lord's Supper; as may be seen at large in Suicerus's [d] Collections upon that Subject. It is certain the Author under the Name of Dionysius the Areopagite, uses the Title of Mystagogia, as well when he is describing the Ceremonies and Service of Baptism, as the Eucharist: And Cyril's Mystagogical Catechisms are equally an Exposition of the Rites observed in administring Baptism and Confirmation, as of those of the other Sacrament; these being the two great Mystical Services of the Christian Church. The Names ἱερὰ, ἱερουργία and θυσία are all Words of the same Importance: They most commonly signify the Communion-Service, or the Sacrifice of Prayers at the Altar. But sometimes they denote the Offices of Baptism, Preaching, Reading the Scripture, and Psalmody: These being the spiritual Sacrifices of Christians. It is certain the Apostle calls Preaching the Gospel by the Name of ἱερουργία, Rom. xv. 16. and the Conversion of the Gentiles thereby, the offering them up or sacrificing them to God. Upon which Words Chrysostom [e] observes, That the Apostle does not call this Service barely λατρεία, but λειτουργία and ἱερουργία, Sacrifice, or sacred Service. For this is my Priesthood, to preach and publish the Gospel: This the Sacrifice that I offer to God. And St. Basil [f] gives the same Names of ἱερουργία and θυσία to the Duty of Praise and Thanksgiving. I will offer unto Thee the Sacrifice of Praise. And we have seen before (n. 5.) how the Evening Prayer is commonly styled Sacrificium Vespertinum, Evening Sacrifice, by the Latin Writers.

IT is farther to be observed, that as the Latins by the Names Missa, Cursus, Ordo and Officium, mean not only the Divine Worship it self, but also the Books containing the Method and Prescriptions for the Regular Performance of it, which we usually call set Forms of Prayer: So the Greeks sometimes understand the same Thing by the Name of Liturgy; and that not only when they speak of the Forms of administring the Sacraments, but of any other parts of Divine Service. 'Tis plain the Author of the Constitutions [g] takes the Word in this Sense, when he applies it to the Forms of Prayer then made for the Catechumens. And Casaubon observes [h], That all those Forms of Worship which go under the Names of Peter, James, Andrew, Chrysostom, and Basil, bear the Name of Liturgies, which the Latins call Ordo and Officium, and the modern Greeks, ἀκολουθία. These were sometimes also among the antient Greek Writers termed ἐυχῶν διαλάξεις, The Order of Prayers; which is the Name that Nazianzen gives the Liturgy of St. Basil [i], composed by him by the Direction of his Bishop, whilst he was Presbyter of Cæsarea, and those Forms and Orders of Divine Worship collected by the Author of the Constitutions, bear the same Title διατάξεις. In Chrysostom they are styl'd νόμοι, The Rules or Appointments of the Church; and the Prayers particularly are distinguished into two sorts of Forms, both by him [k], and the Council of Laodicea [l], the one called ἐυχαὶ καθηχεμένων, The Prayers of the Catechumens, and the other, ἐυχαὶ πιστῶν, The Prayers of the Faithful or Believers. But I shall say no more of Liturgies here, considered as set Forms or Prescriptions of Worship, because they will come to be discoursed of more fully hereafter in their proper Place.

SECT. X. Of Litanies. This at first a general Name for Prayers. How and when it came to be appropriated to certain particular Forms of Worship, called Rogations.

THERE is one general Name more, which the first Writers use to denote all sorts of publick Prayers, but the middle Ages have appropriated it to a particular Form of Worship, that is, Litanies, in Greek called λιτανεία, and λίτα, in Latin Supplicationes and Rogationes. These Words in their original Signification are but another Name for Prayers in general, of whatever kind, that either were made publickly in the Church, or by any private Person. Eusebius speaking of Constantine's Custom of making his solemn Addresses to God in his Tent, before he went out to Battle, says, He endeavoured to render God propitious to him by Supplications and Litanies [m], that he might obtain his Favour, Assistance and Direction in his Enterprizes. And again, he says, [n] a little before his Death he spent some time in the House of Prayer, making Supplications and Litanies to God. In which places Litany seems to be a general Name, and not to intend any particular sort of Prayers: So Chrysostom also uses the Word Litany, when he says [o] to his People, To-morrow I shall go forth with you to make our Litany, that is, the publick Service. And again [p] speaking of the solemn Form of Words, Pax vobis, Peace be with you, he says, the Bishop used it in all Offices when he first enter'd the Church, when he made the Prayers and Litanies, and when he preached. And Arcadius in one of his Laws [q] made against Hereticks about the same time, takes Litany in the same Sense for Prayers in general, when he forbids Hereticks to hold profane Assemblies in the City, either by Night or by Day, to make their Litany. Where it is plain, his Intent was, not to prohibit Hereticks from making any particular sort of Prayers, but all Prayers in general within the City, and to cut off all Opportunities of meeting either by Night or by Day for that purpose: And so Gothofred understands him: For this Law was made with a direct View to the Arian Assemblies for Psalmody in their Night Stations, which had occasion'd some Tumults and Murder in the City, as Socrates [r] and Sozomen inform us. So that the Morning Hymns and Psalmody and Prayers then came all under the general Name of Litany, and the Arians were forbidden in this Sense to make any Litanies within the City by this Law of Arcadius. What Hamond Lestrange [s] alledges out of St. Austin, Cyprian and Tertullian, proves nothing, but that there were always Prayers made in the Church to implore God's Mercy and Favours; which no one ever denied: Neither is the Name Litany used by any of them. It is more to the purpose what St. Basil [t] says to the Church of Neocæsarea, where Gregory Thaumaturgus was Bishop; that though in Gregory's time they had no Litanies, yet afterward before St. Basil's time they had admitted the Use of them. By which Argument he defends the nocturnal Prayers and Psalmody and Vigils against those, who objected that they were not used in St. Gregory's time. For neither were Litanies used in his Time, and yet now they were in Use, and no one objected Novelty against them. This shews, that St. Basil takes Litanies for a peculiar sort of Prayers lately set up in the Church. For it cannot be doubted, but that they had Prayers before, though not of this particular Kind.

Some think, that Litanies in this new limited Sense were first introduced by Mamercus Bishop of Vienna in France, about the Year 450. But St. Basil's Testimony proves them to be earlier in the East: And it is a Mistake in those who assert Mamercus to be the first Author of them in the West: For Sidonius Apollinaris, who lived in the time of Mamercus, and wrote some Epistles to him, says expressly, that he was not the first Inventor of them, but only of the Rogation Fast Days before Ascension, to which he applied the Use of these Litanies, which were in being long before, though not observed with such Solemnity, nor fixed to any stated Times, but only used as exigencies required, to deprecate any impending Judgment. This he declares at large in an Epistle to Mamercus [u] himself, stiling him the Author of the Rogation Days, and shewing both the Reasons of their Institution, and the Manner of observing them, with ardent Supplications and Fastings, in Imitation of the Ninevites, to avert the threatning Judgments of Fire, or Earthquakes, or Inundations, or hostile Invasions. But that we may not think Mamercus was the first Author of Litanies, because he applied their Use particularly to the Rogation Days, he speaks more expressly in another Epistle [x], where he says, that Mamercus indeed first brought in the Observation of the Rogation Solemnities, which spread by his Example: But Supplications or Litanies were in Use before, when Men had occaſion to pray againſt exceſſive Rains or Droughts; though they were obſerved but in a cold and diſorderly manner, without Faſting or full Aſſemblies: But thoſe which he inſtituted, were obſerved with Faſting, and Praying, and Singing, and Weeping. What Sidonius ſays here, proves that Mamercus was the Author of the Rogation Faſt in France; but Litanies were in Uſe before: And if Savaro judge right [y] of one of St. Auſtin's Homilies, the Rogation Faſt muſt have been obſerved long before in the African Churches. For among his Homilies de Tempore there is one upon the Vigil of the Aſcenſion, where he ſpeaks of a Faſt [z] obſerved for three Days before Aſcenſion Day, adviſing all Men to keep thoſe Days with Faſting, Prayer, and Pſalmody. However from the Time of Mamercus we are ſure theſe Rogation Days and Litanies were celebrated with great Solemnity in the Church, being frequently mentioned by Alcimus Avitus [a], Cæſareus Arelatenſis [b], Eucherius Lugdunenſis junior [c], and Gregory of Tours [d], to name no later Writers. The firſt Council of Orleance, an. 511, eſtabliſhed them [e] by a Decree, ordering the three Days before Aſcenſion to be kept a Faſt with Abſtinence after the manner of Lent, and with Rogations or Litanies, and that on theſe Days Servants ſhould reſt from their Labours. In the Spaniſh Churches they deferred theſe Rogations to the Week after Pentecoſt: For they kept to the old Rule of the antient Church, not to have any Faſt during the fifty Days between Eaſter and Whitſontide; Therefore as Walafridus Strabo obſerves of them [f], they would not obſerve the Rogation Faſt in the time that the Bridegroom was with them. But by an Order of the Council of Girone [g] theſe Litanies and this Faſt was put off to the Week after Whitſontide. And they ordered a ſecond Litany to be uſed on the firſt Day of November. The fifth Council of Toledo [h] appointed another ſuch Litany and Faſt to be celebrated yearly for three Days, commencing on the thirteenth Day of December. The ſixth Council of Toledo [i] confirmed this Decree about two Years after, an. 638, and made it a general Rule for all the Churches of Spain and Gallicia, and Gallia Narbonenſis, which was at this time under the Government of the Gothick King Chintillan. And in the ſeventeenth Council of Toledo [k], an. 694, under King Egicanes, a more general Decree was made, That ſuch Litanies ſhould be uſed in every Month throughout the Year. And ſo by Degrees theſe ſolemn Supplications came to be uſed weekly, on Wedneſdays and Fridays, the antient ſtationary Days, in all Churches.

SECT. XI. Of the Diſtinction between greater and leſſer Litanies.

IN the mean time Gregory the Great inſtituted ſome ſuch Rogations at Rome, and one particularly on the twenty fifth Day of April, which goes by the Name of Litania Septiformis, becauſe he ordered the Church to go in Proceſſion in ſeven diſtinct Claſſes; firſt the Clergy, then the Laymen, next the Monks, after them the Virgins, then the married Women, next the Widows, and laſt of all the Poor and the Children. This is mentioned both by Gregory [l] himſelf and Walafridus Strabo [m], who give it the Name of Litania major: Whence ſome have been led into a Miſtake, to think the Roman Litanies were diſtinguiſhed by the Name of the greater Litanies from thoſe of Mamercus, which they call the leſs. So Hamond Leſtrange, and others [n], in their Accounts of theſe Things. But the French Writers do not allow of this Diſtinction. Cellotius [o] ſays, The Rogation or Litania of Mamercus was always dignified with the Title of Litania major by their old Writers, as well as that of Gregory, and that Gregory's Litany was of little Uſe among them. It is certain, the Council of Mentz [p] and the Capitulars of Charles the Great [q], which repeat the Words of that Council, apply'd the Name of Litania major to their own Rogations before Aſcenſion. And Cellotius ſays, Gualterus Aurelianenſis and Strabo both give it the ſame Title. But ſtill he does not tell us what they mean by the Litania minor, the leſſer Litany, in Contradiſtinction to the greater. If the Reader will take my Conjecture, it is no more but the known Form, Kyrie Eleiſon, as the Latins read it, from the Greek, κύριε ἐλέησον, Lord, have mercy upon us, or Lord, have mercy upon them, if they were praying for others. As this was the conſtant Reſponſe made by the People to each Petition of their larger Supplications for the Catechumens and others (as we ſhall ſee hereafter); ſo it was uſed ſometimes by it ſelf, in all their Offices, as a ſhorter Form of Supplication: And then it had the nature of a Litany by it ſelf, and was not a part of a larger Prayer. This is evident from the Order made in the Council of Vaiſon [r] for introducing the Uſe of it into the French Churches: Whereas, ſay they, it is a very uſeful and agreeable Cuſtom in the Roman Church, and all the Provinces of Italy and the Eaſt, to uſe the frequent Repetition of the Kyrie Eleiſon, Lord, have mercy upon us, with great Affection and Contrition; we therefore decree, that the ſame holy Cuſtom be introduced into all our Churches, both at Morning and Evening Prayer, and in the Communion-Service. The Greeks uſually ſaid, Lord, have mercy upon us, without adding the other part, Chriſt, have mercy upon us: But the Latins uſed both Clauſes, and repeated them alternately, as we now do, firſt the Miniſter, and then the People; whereas by the Greeks the Supplication was made by the common Voice of all together. This Difference is noted by Gregory [s] the Great; but it does not detract from our Obſervation, but rather confirms it, that this was a ſhort Form of Supplication uſed one way or other in all Churches, and that as a part of all their daily Offices; whence it borrowed the Name of the leſſer Litany, in oppoſition to the greater Litanies, which were diſtinct, complete, and ſolemn Services, adapted to particular Times, or extraordinary Occaſions. I muſt note farther, that the greater Litanies are ſometimes termed Exomologeſes, Confeſſions [t]; becauſe Faſting, and Weeping, and Mourning, and Confeſſion of Sins, was uſually joyn'd with Supplication to avert God's Wrath, and reconcile him to a ſinful People.

SOMETIMES to theſe ſolemn Supplications they added Proceſſions, which at firſt had nothing of Harm or Superſtition in them: For they were only of the ſame nature with their Proceſſions at a Funeral, when they carry'd a Corps with the Solemnity of Pſalmody to its Interment. They ſometimes made their Proceſſions, and ſometimes their Litanies, as Occaſion required, in the open Field: But here was no Pomp of Relicks, nor expoſing of the Euchariſt to Adoration, in ſuch Solemnities; they only carry'd the Croſs, as they did alſo in ſome of their Night Proceſſions for Pſalmody, as the Badge of their Profeſſion, before them. Of this indeed there are ſome Inſtances as early as Chryſoſtom: For 'tis noted in his Life by Palladius [u], that his Enemies trampled under foot the Sign of the Croſs, which the People carry'd on their Shoulders as they made their Litanies in the Field. And in thoſe Vigils which he ſet up at Conſtantinople in oppoſition to the Arians; the Hiſtorians [x] ſay, they had ſilver Croſſes given them by the Empreſs for this purpoſe. And the Laws of Juſtinian [y] expreſly provided, that as theſe Litanies ſhould not be celebrated without the Biſhop or the Clergy; ſo the Croſſes to be uſed in theſe Solemnities ſhould not be repoſited in any places but the Churches, nor be carry'd by any but ſuch as were appointed. And becauſe in theſe ſolemn Proceſſions ſome were inclined to appear in Pomp unſuitable to the Occaſion, with gay Cloathing, and on Horſe-back; therefore both theſe Things were particularly forbidden. Sidonius [z] notes it as a great Abſurdity for Men to appear, Caſtorinati ad Litanias, dreſſed up in their rich Beaver Cloaths at a Litany, becauſe Sackcloth and Aſhes were more becoming ſuch Solemnities, which were intended for Faſting, and Mourning, and Supplication, and Humiliation, and Confeſſion of Sins, after the Example of the Ninevites, in their ſolemn Addreſſes to God. And for this Reaſon the Canons [a] forbad any one to appear on Horſe-back, or in rich Apparel at the Rogation Solemnities, but rather diſcalceat in Sackcloth and Aſhes, unleſs he had the Excuſe of Infirmity to hinder him. For theſe Rogations were intended to implore God's Mercy in the moſt humble manner, and with the moſt ardent Affections of Soul to beſeech him to avert all Sickneſſes, and Plagues, and Tribulations; to repel the Evils of Peſtilence, War, Hail and Drought; to compoſe the Temper of the Air, ſo that it may be for the Health of Mens Bodies, and Fertility of the Earth; that he would keep all the Elements in due Order and Harmony, and grant Men peaceable Times; as Eucherius [b] relates the chief Heads of them in his Sermon upon this Subject. Whereas yet we may obſerve, no Prayers or Interceſſions were made to Saints or Angels, as in the modern Litanies of the Romiſh Church, but to God only, as ſhall be ſhewed at large in the following Chapters.

CHAP. II.

That the Devotions of the antient Church were paid to every Perſon of the Bleſſed Trinity.

SECT. I. Proofs of the Worſhip of Chriſt, as the Son of God, or the Second Perſon of the Bleſſed Trinity in the firſt Century.

HAVING thus diſtinguiſhed the Ambiguity of the Names of the antient Worſhip, and ſettled the true meaning of them, our next Enquiry muſt be into the Object of the Chriſtian Worſhip, to ſee what Perſons they were, to whom they paid their Devotion. That which makes this Enquiry neceſſary, which otherwiſe might have been omitted, is the Prevalency of two contrary Errors, too much reigning in theſe latter Ages; one of which aſſerts, that the Father alone was the ſole Object of true divine Worſhip, and not the Son or Holy Ghoſt; and the other, that Saints and Angels had alſo a ſhare in it. To ſhew the Falſeneſs of both which Pretences, I ſhall a little detain the Reader with the Proofs and Evidences of the contrary Aſſertions. And firſt to ſhew, that Chriſt as the Son of God and the ſecond Perſon of the ever-bleſſed Trinity, was the Object of divine Worſhip, in all Ages, we will begin with the Original of Chriſtian Worſhip, and carry the Enquiry through the three firſt Centuries. For the firſt Age, the Scripture is ſufficient Evidence of the Chriſtians Practice. For not to inſiſt on the Precept of honouring the Son, as they honoured the Father; or the Form of Baptiſm, in which they are commanded to join the Father, Son and Holy Ghoſt in one Act of Worſhip; or the Injunction to believe in the Son, as they believed in the Father; with many other Acts of internal Worſhip peculiar to God alone: I only argue from their Example and Practice. St. Stephen the Protomartyr, when he was ſealing his Confeſſion with his Blood, breathed out his laſt in a Prayer to Chriſt, Lord Jeſus, receive my Spirit: And, Lord, lay not this Sin to their Charge. Acts vii. 59. St. Paul profeſſes he never baptized any but in the Name of Chriſt, 1 Cor. i. 13. And his common Forms of Bleſſing were with Invocation of the Name of Chriſt. Grace be to you, and Peace from God the Father and from our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. And, The Grace of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and the Love of God, and the Communion of the Holy Ghoſt, be with you all: As the ſolemn Forms run almoſt in all his Epiſtles, both in the Beginning and the Concluſion of them. Nay, ſo common was this practice, that among other Titles of the Believers, at their firſt Riſe and Appearance in the World, they were diſtinguiſhed by the Character of thoſe that called on the Name of Chriſt. Acts. ix. 14. 21. 1 Cor. i. 2. 2 Tim. ii. 22. Some Criticks, I know, would have the Phraſe, ἐπικαλούμενον τὸ ὄνομα Χριστοῦ, to be taken paſſively only for thoſe who were named by the Name of Chriſt, that is, Chriſtians; but this Criticiſm is of no weight: For they were called Invokers, or Worſhippers of Chriſt, before the Name Chriſtian was known in the World: For this Name was not uſed till ſome time after St. Paul's Converſion, when, as St. Luke ſays expreſly, Acts xi. 26. the Diſciples were firſt called Chriſtians in Antioch. But they were Worſhippers of him before, and therefore were diſtinguiſhed by the Character of the Men that called upon his Name. Many other ſuch like Evidences are obvious to any one that reads the New Teſtament: I only add that of the Revelations, v. 8. where the Church in Heaven and Earth together is repreſented as offering both Prayers and Hymns to Chriſt: When he had taken the Book, the four Beaſts and four and twenty Elders fell down before the Lamb, having every one of them Harps, and golden Vials full of Odours, which are the Prayers of Saints. And they ſung a new Song, ſaying, Thou art worthy to take the Book, and to open the Seals thereof: For Thou waſt ſlain, and haſt redeemed us to God by thy Blood out of every Kindred, and Tongue, and People, and Nation; and haſt made us unto our God Kings and Prieſts: And we ſhall reign on the Earth. And I beheld, and I heard the Voice of many Angels round about the Throne, and the Beaſts and the Elders: And the Number of them was ten thouſand times ten thouſand, and thouſand of thouſands; ſaying with a loud Voice, Worthy is the Lamb that was ſlain, to receive Power, and Riches, and Wiſdom, and Strength, and Honour, and Glory, and Bleſſing. And every Creature which is in Heaven, and on the Earth, and under the Earth, and ſuch as are in the Sea, and all that are in them, heard I, ſaying, Bleſſing, and Honour, and Glory, and Power be unto him that ſitteth upon the Throne, and unto the Lamb for ever and ever.

SECT. II. Proofs of the ſame in the 2d Century.

WE have here ſeen the Model of the Worſhip of Chriſt, as begun and ſettled in the Practice of the Church in the firſt Age. And we ſhall find it continued in the ſame manner in thoſe that follow'd immediately after. For Pliny, who lived in the Beginning of the ſecond Century, and as a Judge under Trajan, took the Confeſſions of ſome revolting Chriſtians, ſays, They declared to him they were [a] uſed to meet on a certain Day before it was light, and among other parts of their

Worſhip, ſing an Hymn to Chriſt, as to their God. Which is a plain Indication of their Worſhip of Chriſt on the Lord's Day. Not long after this, lived Polycarp, who [b] joyns God the Father and the Son together in his Prayers for Grace and Benediction upon Men: The God and Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and Jeſus Chriſt himſelf, the Eternal High-Prieſt, the Son of God, build you up in Faith and Truth, and in all Meekneſs, to live without Anger, in Patience, in Long-ſuffering and Forbearance, and give you a Lot and Part among the Saints, and to us with you, and to all them that are under Heaven, who ſhall believe in Jeſus Chriſt our Lord, and in his Father, who raiſed him from the Dead. And ſo he begins his Epiſtle, Mercy and Peace from God Almighty, and from the Lord Jeſus Chriſt be multiplied unto you. And when he came to his Martyrdom, he made a Prayer to God at the Stake, before he was burnt, concluding it with this Doxology to the whole Trinity: [c] I bleſs thee, I praiſe thee, I glorify thee for all things, together with the eternal and heavenly Jeſus Chriſt, thy beloved Son, with whom unto thee, and the Holy Spirit, be Glory both now and for ever, World without End. Amen. When Polycarp was dead, the Church of Smyrna wrote a circular Epiſtle to other Churches, to give an Account of his Sufferings, wherein they relate this remarkable Occurrence, That as ſoon as he was dead, the Jews ſuggeſted to the Heathen Judge, that he ſhould not ſuffer the Chriſtians to take Polycarp's Body and bury it, leſt they ſhould [d] leave their crucified Maſter, and begin to worſhip this other. Not conſidering, ſays the Epiſtle, that we can never either forſake the Worſhip of Chriſt, who ſuffered for the Salvation of all thoſe who are ſaved in the whole World, the Juſt for the Unjuſt; or worſhip any other. For we worſhip him as being the Son of God; but the Martyrs we only love, as they deſerve, for their great Affection to their King and Maſter, and as being Diſciples and Followers of their Lord, whoſe Partners and Fellow-Diſciples we deſire to be. This is an unanſwerable Teſtimony, to prove both the divine Worſhip of Chriſt, as the true Son of God, and that no Martyr or other Saint was worſhipped in thoſe Days. Not long after this lived Juſtin Martyr, who in his ſecond Apology, to wipe off the Charge off Atheiſm, brought againſt them by the Heathens, who objected to them, That they had caſt off the Worſhip of God; anſwers, That they worſhipped and adored ſtill [e] the God of Righteouſneſs, and his Son (that came from him, and taught both them and the Hoſt of good Angels, who followed him, and were made like unto him) as alſo the Holy Spirit of Prophecy: To theſe they paid a rational and true Honour, as they always frankly owned to all ſuch as were diſpoſed to learn. Bellarmin [f] very fraudulently urges this Place, to prove the Worſhip of Angels: As if Juſtin had ſaid, That they worſhipped the Father, the Son, the Angels, and the Holy Spirit; whereas he ſays nothing of the Worſhip of Angels, but that the Angels were taught by the Son, and that the Son together with the Father and Holy Spirit, were the Object of Chriſtian Worſhip. Which he repeats again in his foreſaid Apology [g], ſaying, in anſwer to the ſame Objection, that they could demonſtrate, that as they worſhipped God the Creator of all things, ſo with equal Reaſon they worſhipped Jeſus Chriſt in the ſecond place, and the Holy Spirit of Prophecy in the third, knowing Jeſus Chriſt to be the Son of the true God. For whereas the Heathens objected farther, that it was madneſs in them, next to the immutable and true God, Maker of all things, to give the ſecond place to a crucified Man, he tells them, They underſtood not the Myſtery of this Practice. Which ſhews, that as they worſhipped Chriſt, ſo they worſhipped him as the true Son of God, and not as a Creature: For he tells the Emperors a little after [h], they held it unlawful to worſhip any but God alone. Therefore in their Practice they alſo ſhewed their Belief of his true Divinity; ſince they worſhipped him only upon this Foundation and Suppoſition, that he was truly God, and not a mere Man; and to have done it upon any other Suppoſition, had been groſs Idolatry by their own Confeſſion. Which I wiſh were duly conſidered by thoſe who now write againſt the Divinity of Chriſt, and abſurdly pretend that all the Fathers of the three firſt Ages were of their Opinion. For this is only to make them guilty of the groſſeſt Idolatry, and involve them in a monſtrous Contradiction; whilſt they pretended to worſhip none but God alone, and yet gave divine Honour to one, whom (if our modern Repreſenters ſay true) they did not believe to be truly God by Nature, but only a Creature.

But to go on with the Enquiry, as to what concerns the Object of their Worſhip in Practice. Athenagoras anſwers the Charge of Atheiſm, after the ſame manner as Juſtin Martyr had done before him: We are [i] no Atheiſts, who worſhip the Creator in all things, and his Word that proceedeth from him. Minucius Felix, to another Objection, That they worſhipped a crucified Man, anſwers, That they were miſtaken in the Charge; for he whom [k] they worſhipped, was God, and not a mere mortal Man: Miſerable is he, whoſe Hope is only in Man; for his Help is at an End, when the Life of Man is extinct. About this time lived Lucian the Heathen, who in one of his Dialogues takes notice of the Chriſtian Worſhip. For bringing in a Chriſtian inſtructing a Catechumen [l], he makes the Catechumen ask this Queſtion, By whom ſhall I ſwear? And he that perſonates the Chriſtian, anſwers, By the God that reigns on high, the Great, Immortal, Heavenly God, and the Son of the Father, and the Spirit proceeding from the Father, One in Three, and Three in One. Take theſe for your Jupiter, imagine this to be your God. Which evidently ſhews, That Lucian had learned this from the Chriſtian Inſtitutions, That the Father, Son and Holy Ghoſt, were the Object of their divine Worſhip. And he elſewhere objects to them the Worſhip of their crucified [m] Impoſtor, as he blaſphemouſly terms our bleſſed Lord. Not long after Irenæus, ſpeaking of the Miracles which the Church wrought in his Time, particularly in caſting out Devils, ſays, ſhe did this [†] not by Invocation of Angels, nor by Inchantments, nor by any other wicked piece of Curioſity, but by directing her Prayers, clean, and pure, and openly to the God over all; and by invocating the Name of Jeſus Chriſt ſhe works Miracles for the Benefit of Men, and not for their Seduction. And that this was ſo, appears farther from ſome of the Forms of Prayer uſed then in the Church for the Energumens in the publick Service, one of which is recorded by the Author of the Conſtitutions [‡] directed perſonally to Chriſt, under the Title of the only-begotten God, who binds the ſtrong one, that is, the Devil: which Prayer I need not repeat here, becauſe the Reader may find it at length hereafter [n] in the Service of the Catechumens.

About the ſame Time with Irenæus lived Theophilus Biſhop of Antioch, who though he does not expreſly mention the worſhip of Chriſt, yet he acknowledges him to be God of God [o], and ſays the World was made by him: For when the Father ſaid, Let us make Man in our own Image, he ſpake this to no other [p], but to his own Word, and his own Wiſdom, that is, the Son and Holy Spirit; whom he expreſly ſtyles by the Name of Trinity [q] in the Godhead; and ſays elſewhere, that God is to be worſhipped, and nothing [r] elſe beſides him, who is the true God, the Ordainer of Kings; who may be honoured, but not worſhipped, becauſe they are only Men, and not God. From all which it is eaſy to infer, that Theophilus thought Chriſt the Object of divine Worſhip, as the living and true God, and that it would be Idolatry to give divine Worſhip to Chriſt, upon any other Suppoſition, than that he is true God as well as Man.

In the ſame Age Clemens Alexandrinus is an illuſtrious Witneſs of this Practice. For in his Exhortation [s] to the Gentiles, he ſtyles him the Living God, that was then worſhipped and adored: Believe, ſays he, O Man, in him who is both Man and God: Believe, O Man, in him who ſuffered Death, and yet is adored as the Living God. In the End of his Pædagogue, he himſelf addreſſes his Prayers to the Son joyntly with the Father, in theſe Words: Be merciful to thy Children, O Maſter, O Father, Thou Ruler of Iſrael, O Son, and Father, who are both One, our Lord, [t]. And in the Concluſion of the Book, he has this Doxology to the whole Trinity: Let us give Thanks [u] to the only Father and Son, to the Son and the Father, to the Son our Teacher and Maſter, with the Holy Spirit; one in all Reſpects; in whom are all things; by whom all things are one; by whom is eternal Exiſtence; whoſe Members we are; whoſe is the Glory and the Ages; Who is the perfect Good, the perfect Beauty, allwiſe, and all-juſt: To whom be Glory both now and for ever. Amen.

Cotemporary

Cotemporary with Clemens was Athenogenes the Martyr, who ſuffered about the Year 196. St. Baſil [x] ſays, he compoſed a ſacred Hymn, ſetting forth the Glory of the Holy Ghoſt. From whence we may collect, that it did the ſame for Chriſt as the Son of God. The learned Doctor Cave [y], by a little Miſtake of what St. Baſil ſays, ſuppoſes Athenogenes to have been the Author of thoſe two antient Hymns, called the Morning and Evening Hymns, which the Reader will find related at length [*] hereafter under the Titles of the great Doxology, Glory be to God on high, &c. and the Hymnus Lucernalis. But 'tis plain from St. Baſil, that the Hymn of Athenogenes was diſtinct from theſe. For he makes no mention of the Morning Hymn, and ſays expreſsly of the Evening Hymn, that he knew not who was the Author of it. However it was an Hymn of antient Uſe in the Church, addreſſed immediately to Chriſt, and containing this Doxology to the whole Trinity, ὑμνοῦμεν πατέρα καὶ υἱὸν καὶ ἅγιον πνεῦμα Θεοῦ, we laud the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit of God. Which St. Baſil urges, as we do here, as a diſtinct Teſtimony from that of Athenogenes, and as a farther Inſtance of the Church's antient Practice in giving divine Honour and Worſhip, not only to the Father, but to the Son, and to the Holy Ghoſt.

About the ſame time ſuffered Andronicus the Martyr, in the Acts of whoſe Paſſion it is objected to him by the Heathen Judge [z], that Chriſt, whom he invocated and worſhipped, was a Man that had ſuffered under the Government of Pontius Pilate, and that the Acts of his Paſſion were then extant. Their Worſhip of Chriſt was ſo well known to the Heathens, that at every turn, we ſee, it was objected to them. And their Anſwer was always the ſame, That they worſhipped him indeed, but not as a mere Man, but God, the Son of God by Nature, and of the ſame Subſtance with the Father. Which is the Anſwer that Tertullian (who is the laſt Writer of the ſecond Age) makes to this Objection. For whereas it was objected [a], that they were Worſhippers of a Man, whom all the World knew to be a Man, and the Jews had condemned as a Man: To this he anſwers [b], not by denying that they worſhipped him, but by explaining the Reaſons and Foundation of their Worſhip, becauſe they knew him to be the true natural Son of God, by a ſpiritual Generation, and therefore called God, and the Son of God, becauſe he was of one and the ſame Eſſence or Subſtance. For God was a Spirit: and the Son was Spirit of Spirit, and God of God, as Light is of Light. In that manner he was begotten of God, ſo as to be God and the Son of God, and they were both one. In another Place diſſuading Chriſtian Women from marrying with Unbelievers, among other Arguments, he uſes this [c], that in ſuch a Family there could be no mention of God, no Invocation of Chriſt, no cheriſhing of Faith by their joint reading of the Scripture. At the ſame time he tells us [d] a Chriſtian could pray to no other but the Eternal, the Living and True God: He could not ask ſuch Things, as they were wont to ask in Prayer, of any other but him, from whom he knew he could obtain them, and who alone was able to give them. Now this had been abſurd and ridiculous arguing to the Heathens, had not Chriſtians believed Chriſt to be the Eternal, Living and True God. Their Arguments might eaſily have been retorted, and charged with Contradiction; and they would have ſtood ſelf-condemned by their own Practice, if whilſt they were arguing againſt the Heathen Idols upon this foot, that nothing was to be worſhipped but the Eternal, Living and True God, they themſelves had worſhipped one who fell ſhort of that Character. Therefore we muſt conclude, that as it is plain from the foregoing Teſtimonies, that Chriſtians did give divine Worſhip to Chriſt in this Age, ſo they did it only upon this Suppoſition, that he was the Eternal, Living, and True God, as the Eternal Son of the Eternal Father; and that however they differed, as far as it was neceſſary for a Father and Son to be diſtinct, yet they were but one Creator and one God.

SECT. III. Proofs of the Worſhip of Chriſt in the third Century.

WE are now come to the third Century, where we have firſt an illuſtrious Teſtimony for the Worſhip of Chriſt, as God, in the Fragments of Caius, a Roman Presbyter, preſerv'd by Euſebius, out of his Book called The Labyrinth, written againſt Artemon, one of the firſt that appeared againſt the Divinity of our Saviour. Here, among many other Things, ſhewing the Novelty of that Hereſy, he obſerves [e] there were antiently many Pſalms and Hymns compoſed by the Brethren, and tranſcribed by the Faithful, ſetting forth the Praiſes of Chriſt as the Word of God, and aſcribing Divinity to him. And that ſuch ſort of Hymns were uſed in the Service of the Church, we learn from another Paſſage in the ſame Euſebius, taken out of the Council of Antioch againſt Paulus Samoſatenſis, the heretical Biſhop of Antioch, about the middle of this Century. For there he is charged as giving Orders [f] to forbid the Uſe of ſuch Pſalms or Hymns as were uſed to be ſung in the Church to the Honour of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, under Pretence that they were only the novel Compoſitions of late and modern Authors. Whilſt in the mean time he ſuborned Women on the great Day of the Lord's Paſſion (or the Reſurrection, for Paſcha will ſignify both) to ſing Hymns compoſed to his own Honour; where among other Things, he that would not allow Chriſt any other but an earthly Original, was not aſhamed to hear himſelf blaſphemouſly extolled as an Angel come down from Heaven; which, as thoſe holy Fathers obſerve, was enough to make an Hearer tremble. And for this inſolent Attempt againſt the Divinity and Worſhip of Chriſt, that heretical Biſhop was anathematized and depoſed.

A little before this Time Nepos an Egyptian Biſhop compoſed Pſalms and Hymns for the Uſe of the Church, which are commended by Dionyſius [g] Biſhop of Alexandria, as an uſeful Work for the Edification of the Brethren. And probably they might be ſome of thoſe Hymns, which Paulus Samoſatenſis diſcarded as novel Inventions of modern Authors, though Hymns of the like Nature had been in uſe from the firſt Foundation of the Church. Dionyſius of Alexandria was one of thoſe who oppoſed the Practice of Paulus Samoſatenſis by his Letters, tho' he was not preſent in the Council; and he is commended by St. Baſil [h] as one that always uſed this Form of Doxology: To God the Father, and the Son our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, with the Holy Spirit, be Glory and Dominion now and for ever, World without End. Amen. But we have more pregnant Teſtimonies from the Works of Origen in the Beginning of this Century. In his fifth Book againſt Celſus, he tells us, That they could not lawfully worſhip Angels, but they might and did worſhip the Son of God. All Prayers, ſays he, and Supplications [i], and Interceſſions, and Thankſgivings, are to be ſent up to God the Lord of all, by the High Prieſt who is above all Angels, being the living Word and God. And we can alſo pray to the Word himſelf, and make Interceſſions to him, and give Thanks, and make Supplications to him, if we rightly underſtand how Prayer is to be taken in Propriety of Speech, or with ſome Reſtriction. He means, that Prayers offered to the Son of God, conſidered as a Son, redound to the Father, as the Fountain of the Deity: As Biſhop Bull [k] judiciouſly explains, and vindicates this Paſſage from the unjuſt Exceptions which Hue-tius makes againſt it. As he does alſo another Paſſage in the eighth Book, where Origen more largely aſſerts the Worſhip of Chriſt againſt the common Objection renewed by Celſus, That the Chriſtians worſhipped one that had but lately appeared in the World. Celſus had thus formed the Objection with all the Art and Force he was able: If the Chriſtians, ſays he, worſhipped no other but one God [l] their Arguments might be of ſome Weight and Force againſt others: But now they give immenſe Honour and Worſhip to this new Upſtart, who ſo lately made his Appearance in the World, and yet think they commit no Offence againſt God, though they give divine Worſhip to his Servant. To this Origen replies, not by diſſembling, or denying, or diminiſhing the Worſhip of Chriſt, but by aſſerting it upon ſuch Grounds and Principles as ſhew that Father and Son can be but one God: and that to worſhip two Perſons under ſuch Relation and OEconomy of real Father and Son, cannot be to worſhip two Gods. If Celſus, ſays he, had underſtood the Meaning of this, I and the Father are one; or what the Son of God ſays in his Prayer, As I and Thou are one; he would never have imagined, that we worſhip any but the God who is over all. For he ſaith, The Father is in me, and I in the Father. But that no one may think, that in ſaying this, we run over to thoſe who deny the Father and Son to be two Hypoſtaſes or Perſons, (meaning the Sabellians) let him conſider that which is ſaid, All they that believed, were of one Heart and one Soul, that he may underſtand this, I and the Father are one. We therefore worſhip one God, as I have ſhewed, the Father and the Son; and our Reaſoning ſtands ſtill in full Force againſt others; neither do we give divine Honour to an upſtart Being, as if he had no Exiſtence before. For we believe him, when he ſays, Before Abraham was, I am; and again, I am the Truth. Neither is any of us of ſo mean and ſervile Underſtanding, as to imagine, that the Subſtance of Truth had not a Being before the Appearance of Chriſt in the Fleſh. Therefore we worſhip the Father of Truth, and the Son, who is the Truth, two Things in perſonal Subſiſtence, but one in Agreement, and Conſent, and Identity of Will. Ὄντα δύο τῇ ὑποστάσει πράγματα, ἓν δὲ τῇ ὁμονοίᾳ, καὶ τῇ συμφωνίᾳ, καὶ τῇ ταυτότητι τοῦ βουλήματος: So that whoever ſees the Son, who is the Brightneſs of the Glory of God, and the expreſs Image of his Perſon, ſees God in him, as being the true Image of God. Now Celſus imagines, that becauſe together with God we worſhip his Son, it follows upon our own Principles, that we may not only worſhip God, but his Miniſters and Servants. And indeed if he meant the true Servants of God, after his Only-begotten Son, ſuch as Michael and Gabriel, and the reſt of the Angels and Archangels, and ſtood up for the Worſhip of theſe; perhaps taking Worſhip, and the Acts of the Worſhippers in a ſound and qualified Senſe (he means the common Reſpect of Love and Honour, which is due to good Angels) we might ſay ſomething proper upon this Head: But now when he underſtands by the Servants of God, only the Devils whom the Gentiles worſhip, he does not oblige us by any juſt Conſequence to worſhip ſuch as theſe, whom the Scripture aſſures us to be only Servants of the wicked one, the Prince of this World, and the Author of Apoſtaſie from God. We refuſe to worſhip all ſuch, as knowing them to be no Servants of God; for had they been Servants, we ſhould not have called them Devils; but we worſhip one God, and his only Son, and Word, and Image, with Supplications and Prayers to the utmoſt of our Power, offering our Prayers to God over all by his Only-begotten Son; to whom we firſt preſent them; beſeeching him, who is the Propitiation for our Sins, as our High-Prieſt, to offer our Prayers, and Sacrifices, and Interceſſions to God the Lord of all Things. Therefore our Faith relies only upon God, by his Son who confirms it in us. And therefore Celſus has no Reaſon or Colour for his Charge of Sedition, or departing from God upon the account of his Son: For we worſhip the Father, whilſt we admire and adore the Son; who is his Word, and Wiſdom, and Truth, and Righteouſneſs, and whatever elſe we are taught to believe of the Son of God, begotten of ſuch a Father.

I have recited this Paſſage at length, not only becauſe it is ſuch a full Proof of the Matter of Fact, that the Chriſtians did give divine Honour and Worſhip to the Son; but alſo becauſe it ſhews us upon what Principle and Foundation they did it; viz. as being the true Son of God, and one God with the Father. For though Huetius has excepted againſt ſome Words in this Paſſage, as derogatory to the Son; and the modern Arians have abuſed it to patronize their Hereſy; and the Romaniſts would fain draw it into a Proof for the Worſhip of Angels; yet I dare be bold to ſay, there is not a Tittle in it, when rightly underſtood, to countenance any of their Suggeſtions: But as it is a ſolid Proof of the Matter of Fact, ſo it is an illuſtrious Evidence of Origen's Belief, and clear Explication of the Unity of the Godhead. For excepting that ſort of Unity, which Origen and all Catholick Writers reject as inconſiſtent with a real Trinity, that is, the Unity of Hypoſtaſes, or Perſons, which none but Sabellians and their Followers maintain; he aſſerts all other Kinds of Unity, in oppoſition to Arians, who denied the Unity of Eſſence or Nature, and made the Son to be of a different Subſtance from the Father, as a created Being; in Oppoſition to the Marcionites, and ſuch other Hereticks, as maintained contrary Principles, one Good, and another Evil, in the Godhead; in Oppoſition to the Tritheites, who brought in the proper Doctrine of three Gods, by denying the Subordination and Relation of Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt, and aſſerting three Co-ordinate and Independent Principles, and baptizing in the Name of three ſuch ἄναρχοι, ἀναίτιοι, and ἀγέννητοι (as the Apoſtolical Canons [m] call them) three unoriginated and unbegotten Principles, wholly independent of one another; in Oppoſition to Hieracas and the Triformians, who abſurdly divided the Trinity into three parts of one whole; and finally in Oppoſition to all that ſwarm of Hereticks, who diſtinguiſhed with the Cerdonians between the God of Juſtice, and the God of Goodneſs, ſtiling the one the God of the Law and the Prophets, and the other the Father of Chriſt and God of the Goſpel. Origen, I ſay, in Oppoſition to all theſe aſſerts every ſort of Unity, except the Jewiſh and Sabellian Notion of Unity, which confines the divine Nature to one Perſon. For in ſaying firſt that the Son is the expreſs and true Image of God the Father, he aſſerts the Identity of Nature, againſt Arius; and ſo could not believe him to be a Creature of a different Subſtance or Nature, but as a true Son, of the ſame Eſſence with his Father, and equal to him in all infinite and divine Perfections. 2. In ſaying that he was a Son, deriving his Original from the Father, and not another independent Being, he maintains the Unity of Principle, and reſerves to the Father the Privilege of being the Fountain of the Deity; and conſequently oppoſes the Hereſy of the Tritheites, who maintain three co-ordinate and independent Principles, and deſtroy the Monarchy, and make three Creators inſtead of one, by deſtroying the due Subordination and Relation of the Son to the Father. 3. In ſaying, that the Father and Son are one in Agreement and Conſent and Identity of Will, he aſſerts the Unity of Operation, Creation and Government: Which deſtroys the Hereſy of thoſe, who maintained contrary Principles in the Godhead. 4. In ſaying, that the Son was equal to the Father in all infinite Perfections, he rejects the Abſurdity of thoſe who dreamed of three parts in the Divine Nature. 5. In aſſerting Chriſt to be the Son of the Creator and God of the Old Teſtament, he maintains the Unity of Providence, and refutes the Hereſy of thoſe, who maintained, that the Creator and God of the Old Teſtament was a different God from the Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. So that he maintains all ſorts of Unity, except perſonal Unity, which cannot conſiſt with a real Trinity in the Godhead. And upon this foot he anſwers the Objection of Celſus, who charged the Chriſtians with Polytheiſm for giving divine Honour to Jeſus Chriſt.

Having made this ſhort and uſeful Digreſſion upon this celebrated Paſſage of Origen, to vindicate it from the Abuſes of the modern Arians, I now return to the Hiſtory of Fact, to ſhew that divine Worſhip was given to Chriſt as the Son of God. And of this there is farther Evidence in Origen: For this is not the only Place in which he is put to vindicate the Worſhip of Chriſt from the Charge of Polytheiſm, which is frequently repeated by Celſus. In the third Book [n] Celſus objects, that they worſhipped one, who was apprehended and put to Death; in which reſpect they were no better than the Getæ who worſhipped Zamolxis, and the Cilicians Mopſus, and the Acarnanes Amphilochus, and the Thebans Amphiaraus, and the Lebadians Trophonius. In replying to which, Origen ſays, they offered their Prayers to Chriſt, as Mediator between God and Men, who conferred the Bleſſings of the Father upon Men, and preſented their Prayers as High-Prieſt to the God over all. Not long after Celſus [o] repeats the Charge again, that they who ridiculed the Heathens for worſhipping Jupiter, whoſe Sepulchre the Cretians could ſhew, did themſelves worſhip one that was laid in the Grave. In the ſeventh Book he renews the Impeachment three times, bidding the Chriſtians [p] not be ſo ridiculous, as to revile the Heathen Gods as Idols, whilſt they worſhipped a God of their own more wretched than any Idol, and not ſo much as an Idol, for that he was truly dead. If they had a Mind to innovate in worſhipping a dead Man [q], they might with more Reaſon, he thinks, have choſen Hercules, or Æſculapius, or Orpheus, or Anaxarchus, or Epictetus, or Sibylla, rather than have made a God of one, who lived an infamous Life, and died a miſerable Death. Yea, they might have choſen among their own Prophets, Jonas under the Gourd, or Daniel in the Lion's Den, as more worthy of this Honour. He whom they worſhipped, he crys again [r], is no Dæmon, but a dead Man. Thus from the Charges of Celſus, and Origen's Replies, we may collect what Worſhip was given to Chriſt as the Son of God, and alſo as Mediator between God and Men.

It is farther obſervable, That Origen in his firſt Book [s] ſpeaking of the wiſe Men who came to worſhip Chriſt, by the leading of a Star, ſays, they offered Gifts to Him ſuited to his different Qualities, who was compounded, as one might ſay, of God and mortal Man: They therefore preſented Him with Gold, as a King; with Myrrhe, as a mortal Man that ſhould die; and with Frankincenſe, as a God. And Origen himſelf in his other Works frequently ſpeaks of his own Prayers offered to Chriſt. In one of his Homilies [t] he addreſſes him in theſe Words, O Lord Jeſus, grant that I may be found worthy to have ſome Monument of me in Thy Tabernacle. I could wiſh to offer Gold, or Silver, or precious Stones, with the Princes of the People: But becauſe theſe Things are above me, let me at leaſt be thought worthy to have Goats Hair in the Tabernacle of God, only that I may not in all Things be found empty and unfruitful. In another Homily [u], We muſt pray to the Lord Jeſus and the Holy Spirit, that He would take away that Miſt and Darkneſs, which is contracted by the Filth of our Sins, and dimms the Sight of our Souls. And again [x], I muſt pray to the Lord Jeſus, that when I ſeek, He would grant me to find, and open to me, when I knock. And in another Homily [y], Let us pray from our Hearts to the Word of God, who is the only-begotten of the Father, that reveals Him to whom he will, that he would vouchſafe to reveal theſe Things unto us. And he has many the like Prayers in his other [z] Diſcourſes. But eſpecially that Paſſage in his Comment on the Epiſtle to the Romans is moſt remarkable, where he proves Chriſt to be God, from his being called upon in Prayer: The Apoſtle, he ſays, in thoſe Words, 1 Cor. i. 2. With all that call on the Name of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, declares him to be God [a], whoſe Name was called upon. And if to call upon the Name of the Lord, and to adore God, be one and the ſelf-ſame Thing; then as Chriſt is called upon, ſo is he to be adored: And as we offer to God the Father, firſt of all Prayers, ſo muſt we alſo to the Lord Jeſus Chriſt; and as we offer Supplications to the Father, ſo do we alſo to the Son; and as we offer Thankſgivings to God, ſo do we offer Thankſgivings to our Saviour. For the holy Scripture teaches us, That the ſame Honour is to be given to both, that is, to God the Father and the Son, when it ſays, That they may honour the Son, as they honour the Father.

Not long after Origen, lived Novatian at Rome, and Cyprian at Carthage, who both ſpeak of the Prayers of the Church, as offered up to Chriſt together with the Father. Novatian [b] makes it an Argument of his Divinity, That he is preſent in all Places to them that call upon him; which belongs not to the Nature of Man, but God. And he argues farther from the Church's praying to Him as Mediator; which kind of Prayers would be of no uſe, if he were a mere Man: And from our Obligations to fix our Hope on him, which would be a Curſe rather than a

Bleſſing, if he were not God, as well as Man. For curſed is the Hope that is placed only in Man. St. Cyprian in like manner ſpeaks of his being worſhipped in many Places. In his Book of The Advantage of Patience, he ſtiles him [*] the Lord God of Hoſts, the God of the Chriſtians: And particularly tells us, That God the Father has commanded his Son to be worſhipped; and in regard to that Command, the Apoſtle Paul ſays, That God hath highly exalted him, and given him a Name above every Name; that at the Name of Jeſus every Knee ſhould bow, of Things in Heaven, and Things in Earth, and Things under the Earth: And in the Revelations, when St. John would have worſhipped the Angel, the Angel oppoſed it, and ſaid, I am thy Fellow-ſervant, and of thy Brethren: Worſhip the Lord Jeſus. So Cyprian reads it, Jeſum Dominum adora. And he uſes this as an Argument to perſuade Men to Patience, That the Lord Jeſus, who is worſhipped in Heaven, bears with many Indignities on Earth, and does not avenge himſelf till his ſecond Coming in Glory. Again, in one of his Epiſtles he ſpeaks of their offering Prayers to him as Mediator [c] firſt, and then by him to God the Father; and that upon this double Foundation, That he was their Advocate and Interceſſor, and alſo their Lord and their God. In another Place [d] writing to Lucius Biſhop of Rome, who had been a Confeſſor for Chriſt, he tells him, They would not ceaſe in their Sacrifices and Prayers, to give thanks for him to God the Father, and the Lord Jeſus Chriſt his Son, and alſo make Supplications and Prayers for him, that he who was the Author of all Perfection, would keep and conſummate in him the glorious Crown of his Confeſſion. Not long after Cyprian, Arnobius wrote in vindication of the Chriſtian Worſhip, and here again he brings in the Heathens forming their uſual Charge againſt the Worſhip of Chriſt. Our Gods [e], ſay they, are not diſpleaſed with you for worſhipping the Almighty God, but that ye make a God of one that was born a Man, and put to death by the Puniſhment of the Croſs (an infamous Puniſhment, only inflicted on vile Men) and becauſe ye believe him to be yet alive, and make daily Supplications unto him. To this he anſwers, firſt upon their own Principles, That admitting it were ſo, that Chriſt were only a Man, yet he might with more reaſon deſerve to be worſhipped for his good Deeds to Mankind, than either their Bacchus, or Ceres, or Æſculapius, or Minerva, or Triptolemus, or Hercules, becauſe there was no compariſon between their Actions and his for the Benefit of the World. But ſecondly, he anſwers more cloſely upon true Chriſtian Principles, That the Reaſon of their worſhiping Chriſt [f] was indeed their certain Knowledge that he was the true God, whom they could not but worſhip and honour as the Head of their Body. And though an angry Heathen would rave at his being called God, yet they muſt anſwer plainly, that he was God, and God too of the interior Powers of the Soul; that is, the Searcher of the Hearts and Reins, which is the peculiar Property of God. The ſame Objection is once more propoſed [g], and anſwered by Lactantius. They are wont, ſays he, to object to us his Paſſion, by way of reproach, that we worſhip a Man, and one that was put to a notorious Death by Men. In replying to which, after having largely ſet forth the Reaſons of his Incarnation and Sufferings, he at laſt anſwers that part of the Objection which concerns their Worſhiping him, and pleads, that they worſhipped him as one God with the Father. For, ſays he, when we ſpeak of God the Father and God [h] the Son, we do not ſpeak of diverſe Natures, or ſeperate the One from the Other; for neither can He be a Father without a Son, nor the Son be divided from the Father: For as much as He cannot be called a Father without a Son, nor the Son be begotten without a Father. Seeing therefore a Father makes a Son, and a Son makes a Father, they have both one Mind, and one Spirit, and one Subſtance: But the Father as the Fountain and Original; and the Son as the Stream flowing from the Fountain. A little after he explains their [i] Unity by this Similitude: When any one hath a Son, who is his dearly-beloved, as long as he is in his Father's Houſe and under his Hand, although he allow him the Name and Power of Lord, yet it is called but one Houſe, and one Lord. So this World is one Houſe of God; and both the Son and the Father, who unanimouſly dwell therein, are but one God: Becauſe the One is as Two, and the Two as One. Meaning two Perſons, and one God. Nothing can be plainer than these two Things, from the Words of Lactantius; First, That Christians gave Divine Worship to Christ: Secondly, That they gave him this Worship, as one God with the Father: And there was no other way to avoid the Charge of Polytheism, which they objected to the Heathens, and the Heathens were so desirous to recharge and throw back upon them.

There is one Thing more may be observed as very remarkable in this Age, which was an Age of great Persecution: That is, that the Martyrs, who suffered in it, commonly directed their last Prayers, as St. Stephen did, personally to Christ, in whose Cause they laid down their Lives, and into whose Hands they resigned their Spirit, commending their Souls to him, as unto a faithful Creator and Redeemer. Thus Eusebius observes of a whole City in Phrygia in the time of the Diocletian Persecution, that being all met together in the Church, Men, Women and Children, Magistrates and People (for the City was entirely Christian) they were surpriz'd by their Enemies, and barbarously burnt all together in the Church, as they were at their Devotions, calling [k] upon Christ, the God over all, τὸν ὑπὲρ πάντων Θεὸν Χριστὸν ἐπιβοωμένους. So in a former Persecution in France under Antoninus, Blandina one of the Martyrs, when she was put into a Net, to be tossed by a wild Bull, is said not to have been sensible of any Pain, whilst she made her Prayers to Christ, διὰ τὴν ὁμιλίαν πρὸς τὸν Χριστὸν [l]. And Eusebius himself, who gives us these particular Relations, makes a more general Observation concerning the Worship of Christ, that the highest Powers on Earth confessed and adored him [m], not as a common King, made by Men, but as the true Son of the supreme God, as the true and very God; who had preserved his Church against all the Opposition of so many fierce Persecutions; there being nothing that was able to withstand the Will of that Word, who was the universal King and Prince of all Things, and very God [n] himself. We see, in the Opinion of Eusebius, the Ground of their Worship was no other than his being the living and true God, and the great King of all the Earth. Which is the Title that is given him in the Acts of St. Felix, an African Bishop, who suffer'd in the Diocletian Persecution: O Lord God of Heaven and Earth, Jesus Christ, I bow my Neck [o] to thee as a Sacrifice, who livest to all Eternity: To whom belongs Honour and Power for ever and ever. Amen. And in the Acts of Thelica, [p] I give Thanks to the God of all Kingdoms. Lord Jesus Christ, we serve thee. Thou art our Hope: Thou art the Hope of Christians: Most holy God, most high God, God Almighty, we give thanks to thee for thy great Name. So again in the Acts of [q] Emeritus: I beseech thee, O Christ: I give thanks to thee: Deliver me, O Christ. In thy Name I suffer, I suffer for a Moment, I suffer willingly: Let me not be confounded, O Christ. The curious Reader may find many other Prayers in the like Terms in the Passions of Glycerius [r], Olympius [s], Ampelius [t], Euplius [u], Dativus [x], Saturninus [y] Senior and Junior, recorded in Baronius, which I need not here transcribe. I only add two farther Instances out of Eusebius and St. Ambrose. Eusebius [z] speaking of the Passion of Porphyrius, a Palestine Martyr, and one of the Scholars of Pamphilus, says, when he was surrounded with Flames, he called upon Jesus the Son of God to be his Helper, and with those Words he gave up the Ghost. And St. Ambrose [a] tells us, Vitalis the Martyr made this his last Prayer: O Lord Jesus Christ, my Saviour and my God, command that my Spirit may be received; for I desire to obtain the Crown which thy holy Angel hath shewed me.

It were easy to add many other Testimonies of the like nature, but these are abundantly sufficient to shew, what was the Practice of the Church, in reference to the Worship of Christ, during the three first Ages, before Arianism appeared in the World, or any of those difficult Questions were raised, which afterwards perplexed Men with unintelligible Subtilties, occasioned by the restless Endeavours and Sophistry of the Arian Party. The Christians of the three first Ages, we see, in their Disputes with the Heathens, always with a great deal of honest Plainness and Simplicity freely owned that they worshipped Christ as their Creator and their God; not as a Creature, but as the true and living God; equal to the Father in all divine Perfections, as a Genuine Son; who as a Son, could not be another God, but only one God with the Father. For they declared, that so long as he was owned to be a true Son, he could neither be a Creature, nor another God, which would imply another co-ordinate and independent Being, which was inconsistent with his being the Son of God. They declared at the same time, that it was unlawful and Idolatry to give divine Worship to any Creature, or any Being, how excellent soever, that was not the living and true God; as we shall see more fully in the next Chapter: And that is ſuch a ſenſible and intelligible Argument of their believing the Son to be the living and true God, as any one of the meaneſt Capacity may underſtand: And it is ſuch an Argument of his Divinity, as all the Art and Sophiſtry in the World cannot evade, without charging thoſe holy Men with the groſſeſt Idolatry, and Self-condemnation, and a flat Contradiction of their Principles in their Practice, if they gave divine Honour to one, whom they did not believe to be by Nature the living and true God. And for this Reaſon I have inſiſted a little the longer upon this plain way of proving their Belief of the Divinity of our bleſſed Lord, from their conſtant and univerſal Practice in giving divine Worſhip to him as their God. And as to thoſe Diſtinctions between abſolute, relative, and mediatorial Worſhip; or thoſe of Latria, Dulia and Hyperdulia (hard Words invented to ſolve the Idolatry of later Ages) whatever ſhelter modern Idolaters may think to find in them; the Ancients had no occaſion to lay the ſtreſs of their Cauſe upon any ſuch Subtilties and Diſtinctions. For they knew no diſtinction between Latria, Dulia and Hyperdulia, when they ſpake of religious Worſhip, but plainly ſaid all religious Worſhip was ſolely due to God: And though they diſtinguiſhed between abſolute, relative and mediatorial Worſhip, yet they gave all theſe to the Son; worſhipping him with mediatorial Worſhip, as the only proper Mediator in both Natures between God and Man; beſeeching him by his own Merits, as their great High-prieſt, to preſent their Prayers to the Father; and with relative Worſhip, as the Son of God, whoſe Honour redounds to the Father; and with abſolute Worſhip, as their Creator and Author of their Being; declaring it to be Idolatry to give any ſuch Honour to any mere Creature. So that either they believed Chriſt to be the living and true God, or elſe it is impoſſible to underſtand Men by their Words or Practice.

WE are now to ſee whether they gave the ſame divine Honour to the Holy Ghoſt. And for this the Reader only needs to look back into the former Proofs: For many of the preceding Allegations join the Son and Holy Ghoſt together. Polycarp's Doxology [b] is to the whole Trinity: To thee (the Father) with him (the Son) and the Holy Spirit, be Glory now and for ever. Amen. Juſtin Martyr [c] declares alſo to the Heathen, that the Object of their Worſhip was the whole Trinity: We worſhip and adore the God of Righteouſneſs, and his Son, and the Holy Spirit of Prophecy. And again [d] he proves, that Chriſtians were no Atheiſts, as the Heathens objected, becauſe they worſhipped the Creator of all Things, and his Son Jeſus Chriſt in the ſecond Place, and the Holy Spirit of Prophecy in the third Place: Only obſerving the natural Order of the Perſons, not diſtinguiſhing them into one God and two Creatures; for then it had been unlawful to worſhip them upon their Principles, which denied divine Worſhip to any Thing that by Nature was not God. We have heard Lucian before, repreſenting [e] the Chriſtian Worſhip, as the Worſhip of the great God of Heaven, and the Son of the Father, and the Spirit proceeding from the Father, three of one, and one of three. Theophilus Biſhop of Antioch expreſsly mentions the Trinity [f], under the Title of the Father, his Word, and his Wiſdom; and ſays farther, that it was his Word and his Wiſdom, to whom he ſaid [g] in the Begining, Let us make Man. So that if the Holy Ghoſt was the Creator of Man, there can be no Diſpute but that he was worſhipped as his Creator together with the Father and Son. We have heard Clemens Alexandrinus concluding his Pædagogue [h] with this Doxology, To the Father, and the Son, with the Holy Spirit be Glory now and for ever. Amen. We have heard St. Baſil teſtifying of Athenogenes the Martyr [i], that he compoſed an Hymn to the Glory of the Holy Ghoſt; and that the Church, Time out of Mind, uſed that known Doxology in her Evening Hymn at ſetting up Lights, we laud the Father and the Son and the Holy Spirit of God. Which Hymn was ſo antient, that St. Baſil profeſſes, he knew not who was the Author of it. He teſtifies farther in the ſame Place, that Dionyſius Biſhop of Alexandria was always wont to uſe this Form of Doxology; to God the Father, and the Son our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, with the Holy Ghoſt, be Glory and Dominion now and for ever. Amen. We have heard Origen [k] ſaying, that we are to pray to the Lord, to the Holy Spirit; that he would vouchſafe to take away that Miſt and Darkneſs, which is contracted in our Hearts by the Defilement of Sin, and dims the Sight of our Minds. They that ſaid ſuch Things as theſe, did certainly own and practiſe the religious Adoration and Worſhip of the Holy Ghoſt. And all this we have ſeen proved in the former Allegations. To which we may here add that plain Teſtimony of Origen upon the firſt Chapter to the Romans, where he compares the Practice of the Heathens and Chriſtians [l]. It is the Property of thoſe only to diſhonour their Bodies, ſays he, who ſerve Idols; and of them only, to worſhip the Creature, who have forſaken the Creator. As for us, who worſhip and adore no Creature, but the Father and the Son and the Holy Spirit, as we do not err in our Worſhip, ſo neither let us offend in our Actions and Converſation: But looking to what the Apoſtle ſays, Know ye not, that your Bodies are the Members of Chriſt? And again, That your Bodies

are the Temples of the Holy Ghoſt? Let us keep our Bodies in all Holineſs and Purity, as Members of Chriſt, and as Temples of the Holy Spirit. St. Baſil, who wrote in Defence of the Worſhip of the Holy Ghoſt, cites another Paſſage of Origen out of his Commentaries [m] upon St. John, wherein he ſpeaks of the Woſhip of the whole Trinity in the Celebration of Baptiſm, ſaying, Baptiſm by vertue of the Invocations there made, is the Fountain and Spring of ſpiritual Graces to every one that dedicates himſelf to the divine Majeſty of the adorable Trinity. In which Words Origen by Invocations ſeems to refer to two Things: Firſt the Conſecration of Water to a myſtical Uſe, which was always performed by Prayer (as I have ſhewed at large in another [*] Place) and Secondly the Form of Baptiſm, which was always adminiſtred in the Name of the Holy Trinity: In like manner as Bread and Wine in the Euchariſt was conſecrated by Invocation of the three divine Perſons. Which is expreſsly ſaid by St. Cyril [n], that before Invocation of the adorable Trinity it is common Bread and Wine, but after Invocation it is made the Body and Blood of Chriſt. Where he uſes the ſame Expreſſion about the Conſecration of the Euchariſt, as Origen does about Baptiſm, ſaying, that it was done by Invocation of the adorable Trinity. And this is what Juſtin Martyr [o] means, when he ſays, that the Miniſter in conſecrating the Euchariſt, ſent up praiſe and glory to the Father of all by the Name of his Son and Holy Spirit. Optatus [†] ſpeaking of the Sacrilege of the Donatiſts, ſays, they had broken down the Altars, where God Almighty was wont to be invocated, and the Holy Ghoſt prayed to, that he might come down and ſanctify the Oblation. Theophilus of Alexandria ſays in like manner [p], that the Bread and Wine in the Euchariſt was conſecrated by the Invocation and Deſcent of the Holy Ghoſt. And we are told, that in the old Gallican Liturgy the Oblation-prayer [q] was conceived in this Form: Receive, O holy Trinity, this Oblation, which we offer unto thee, in Memory of the Paſſion, Reſurrection and Aſcenſion. And probably, Origen might have reſpect to ſome ſuch Invocation of the holy Trinity in the Conſecration of the Waters of Baptiſm. However, the Form of adminiſtring Baptiſm in the Name of the Father, Son and Holy Ghoſt, was ever eſteemed an act of Adoration of the Trinity, both as a Profeſſion of Faith in three Divine Perſons, and as a Dedication of the Party to the Service of the holy Trinity, and as a ſolemn Invocation of their Benediction. The antient Author of the Recognitions, who lived before Origen, ſays expreſsly [r], that Baptiſm was antiently given by Invocation of the Name of the bleſſed Trinity. By which we can underſtand nothing but joining the Holy Ghoſt as God with the Father and the Son in the ſame act of Adoration, expreſſed either in the Prayers or Form of Baptiſm. And hence the Ancients were uſed to prove the Holy Ghoſt [s] to be God, becauſe he was join'd in the ſame divine Worſhip with the Father and the Son in the Adminiſtration of Baptiſm. And that Baptiſm was generally eſteemed null and void, which was given to any Perſon without mentioning the Holy Ghoſt, as well as Father and Son, as I have fully ſhewed [*] in another Place.

It is farther obſervable, that in Tertullian's time, the Worſhip of the Holy Ghoſt was ſo common in the Church, that Praxeas and other Unitarians were ready to charge the Catholicks with Tritheiſm, or the Worſhip of three Gods, upon this account. They boaſted, that [t] they were the only Perſons who truly worſhipped one God, and preſerved the divine Monarchy entire; whilſt all other Chriſtians, by worſhipping three Perſons, introduced the Worſhip of three Gods: As if, ſays Tertullian, the Unity abſurdly collected, might make an Hereſy; and a Trinity rationally conceived, might not conſiſt with Unity. He there explains how theſe Three are one God [u] by Unity of Original, by Unity of Subſtance, Condition and Power. And he adds, that as the Father was God, ſo the Son [x] was God, and the Holy Ghoſt God. And ſays in another Place [y], that the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt, was a Trinity in One Godhead or Divine Nature. So that it is plain, the Difference then between the Praxean Hereticks and the Catholicks was, that the Praxeans worſhipped but one Perſon as God; but the Catholicks worſhipped three Perſons, Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt, under the Title and Appellation of one God. And Eraſmus was wonderfully miſtaken, when he aſſerted, that the Name, God, was never given to the Holy Ghoſt before the time of St. Hilary, in the middle of the fourth Century:

When

When it is ſo evident he had both the Name and Worſhip of God given him in the time of Tertullian, and in effect by all Chriſtians in former Ages, whilſt they joined him in all Acts of Divine Worſhip and Glorification with the Father and Son as one God.

Cyprian expreſsly ſtiles him God, when diſputing againſt the Validity of heretical Baptiſm, he uſes this Argument: [z] If a Man can be baptized by Hereticks, he may obtain Remiſſion of Sins: If he may obtain Remiſſion of Sins, he may be ſanctified, and be made the Temple of God. I ask, of what God? If it be ſaid the Creator; he cannot be his Temple, who believes not in him. If Chriſt; neither can he be his Temple, who believes not Chriſt to be God. If the Holy Ghoſt; ſeeing the Three are One, how can the Holy Spirit be reconciled to him, who is an Enemy to the Father or the Son? As the Holy Ghoſt is here plainly ſtiled God, ſo every true Chriſtian is ſaid to be the Temple of the Holy Ghoſt, as God: And Temples being for the Worſhip of God, it may be concluded, that according to Cyprian, the Holy Ghoſt was then worſhipped in all his living Temples as God.

At the ſame time with Cyprian lived thoſe two ſhining Lights of the Aſiatick Church, Firmilian Biſhop of Cæſarea, and Gregory of Neo-Cæſarea, from his Power in working Miracles ſirnamed Thaumaturgus. Of both theſe St. Baſil [a] teſtifies, that in their Prayers and Books, they were always wont to uſe this Doxology, To God the Father, and his Son our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, with the Holy Ghoſt, be Glory and Dominion for ever and ever.

And this is the Doxology that moſt commonly occurs in the Author of the Conſtitutions, which though I do not with a late Author take for an inſpired Writing, nor for the genuine Work of Clemens Romanus, yet I believe it to be a very good Collection of the Rituals and Liturgy of the antient Church, for the three firſt Ages, and not infected with thoſe pernicious Principles of Arianiſm, which ſome would fain father upon him, who pervert his Words, as they do the other Ante-Nicene Writers, from their proper Meaning to an heretical Senſe. This Author, I ſay, commonly uſes that Doxology, which is ſo much commended by St. Baſil, as expreſſing the true Worſhip of the Holy Trinity. Of which I ſhall give a few Inſtances out of his eighth Book, which is a Collection of the Forms of Prayer uſed in the antient Service. In the 12th Chapter of that Book the Oblation Prayer is thus concluded: We beſeech thee to gather us into the Kingdom of thy Chriſt, the God of the whole Nature of Things both Viſible and Inviſible, and our King: For to thee belongs all Glory, and Worſhip, and Thankſgiving, and Honour, and Adoration, the Father, and the Son; and the Holy Ghoſt, now and for ever, throughout all Ages World without End. In the 13th Chapter, the Prayer after Conſecration ends in the ſame manner: By thy Chriſt, to whom with thee and the Holy Ghoſt, be Glory, Honour, and Praiſe, Doxology and Thankſgiving for ever and ever. In the ſame Chapter all the People ſing this Hymn to Chriſt: There is one Holy, one Lord Jeſus Chriſt, Bleſſed for ever, to the Glory of God the Father. Glory be to God on High, and on Earth, Peace, Good-will towards Men. Hoſanna to the Son of David: Bleſſed be God the Lord, who came in the Name of the Lord, and was manifeſted unto us: Hoſanna in the higheſt. In the 14th Chapter, after the Communion the Deacon ſays, προσευξώμεθα, Let us commend ourſelves to God, the only unbegotten God, and to his Chriſt. Now the προσευχὰς or Commendations, were one ſort of Prayers, as I ſhall ſhew hereafter [*]. Then the Biſhop makes a Thankſgiving in the 15th Chapter, which he concludes in theſe Words: By Jeſus Chriſt our Lord, to whom with thee and the Holy Ghoſt be Glory, Honour and Adoration, now and for ever. Amen. And in his Invocation in the ſame Chapter, he ſays, To thee and thy Son Jeſus, thy Chriſt, our Lord, and God, and King, and to the Holy Ghoſt, be Glory, Praiſe, Majeſty, Worſhip and Adoration, now and for ever, World without End. Amen. There are many other ſuch Doxologies in other Prayers [b] throughout this Book, which I need not here repeat. For if theſe be not plain Inſtances of the Worſhip of the Holy Ghoſt, together with the Father and the Son, it is hard to ſay, what Words can expreſs it.

SECT. V. In what Senſe all Prayers are ordered to be directed to the Father.

Now then, by all this we may interpret the Meaning of that African Canon, which orders all Prayers at the Altar to be directed to the Father [c]. For that was not intended to exclude the Worſhip of the Son and Holy Ghoſt together with the Father; for the Hymns and Doxologies beforementioned, which were uſed at the Altar, plainly ſhew the contrary: But it was deſigned, that when the Sacrifice of Chriſt was commemorated, he ſhould be conſidered as the great Mediator, by whoſe Sacrifice we apply to the Father, and have Acceſs by his Merits and Interceſſion to the Throne of Grace and Mercy. And therefore all Prayers at the Altar are ordered to be directed to the Father in his Name: Which very Application was a Worſhip of the Son as Mediator, and an Honour peculiar to him, and incommunicable to any Creature. In other Prayers direct Applications were made to the Son, as we have ſeen before in that of the Conſtitutions [d] for the Diſpoſſeſſing of Devils: And in theſe Prayers at the Altar, the Glorification was in common to the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt. Whence Fulgentius, who was an African Biſhop, and therefore may be preſumed to underſtand the Meaning of the African Canons, tells us [e], that all Worſhip and Adoration of Honour and Sacrifice was equally given to the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt, that is, to the Holy Trinity, by the Catholick Church; and that it was no Prejudice to the Son or the Holy Ghoſt, that the Miniſter at the Altar directed the Prayers to the Perſon of the Father. For in the End of them, the Names of the Son and Holy Spirit were always expreſſed; and that ſhewed, that there was no Difference in the Holy Trinity: Becauſe when the Words were only directed to the Perſon of the Father, yet the whole Trinity was honoured by the Faith of the true Believer; and whilſt the Intention of the Sacrifice was more peculiarly fixed upon the Father, the Sacrifice it ſelf was by one and the ſame Act offered to the whole Trinity. From all which it is evident to a Demonſtration, that the Three Perſons of the Holy Trinity were always the Object of Divine Adoration from the firſt Foundation of the Chriſtian Church, and that the giving of Divine Honour to the Son and Holy Ghoſt, as God, was not the Invention or Addition of any later Ages.

CHAP. III.

That in the antient Church religious Worſhip was given to no Creature, Saint or Angel, but to God alone.

SECT. I.

This Poſition proved firſt from their general Declarations againſt giving Religious Worſhip to any Creature.

IT has been obſerved in the foregoing Chapter, that the Worſhip of Chriſt in the Primitive Church was eſteemed a good Argument of his Divinity, becauſe it was then an undoubted Principle, that no Creature, how excellent ſoever, was to be worſhipped with Religious Worſhip, but only the living and true God. And an Arian or a Socinian can never anſwer or evade this Argument from Antiquity, ſo long as both theſe Aſſertions ſtand good, that Chriſt was worſhipped with Religious Worſhip, and that nothing is to be worſhipped with Religious Worſhip but only the living and true God. The Force of this Argument has been much weakened and indeed wholly enervated and deſtroyed by the Writers of the Romiſh Church, in whoſe Mouths the Argument ſignifies nothing to an Arian or Socinian, becauſe their own Practice, in giving Religious Worſhip to Saints and Angels, is a ſufficient Anſwer to it. For upon Suppoſition that Saints and Angels may be worſhipped, the Worſhip of Chriſt can be no Argument of his Divinity, no more than it is of the Divinity of Saints or Angels, becauſe they are worſhipped in the Romiſh Church. But upon the Principles of the Primitive Church the Argument is unanſwerable: For at the ſame time that they aſſerted the Worſhip of Chriſt, they aſſerted likewiſe, that Religious Worſhip was not to be given to any Creature, but to God alone: And in this View, the Argument for Chriſt's Divinity was very Rational and Solid. As therefore we have ſeen the Truth of the firſt Poſition, That Chriſt was religiouſly worſhipped in the Primitive Church, made good from their undeniable Aſſertions and Practice: So now we will a little examine the Truth of the ſecond, That nothing is to be religiouſly worſhipped but only the living and true God. Which Poſition is deſigned to be handled here, only as an Illuſtration and Confirmation of the Argument for the Divinity of Chriſt, drawn from the Practice of the Primitive Church in giving religious Adoration to him. And the Truth of this Propoſition I ſhall confirm briefly theſe three Ways. 1. By ſhewing in general, that the Ancients declare univerſally againſt giving religious Worſhip or Adoration to any Creature, or Being, which by Nature is not God. 2. That in particular they rejected the Worſhip of Saints and Angels as Idolatry and Unlawful. 3. That there is no mention made of it but in the Practice either of Hereticks or Heathens, whoſe Idolatry is aggravated upon the account of this Practice. In the firſt Place it is obſervable, that the Ancients in general declare againſt giving religious Worſhip to any Creature, or Being, which by Nature is not God. It would fill a whole Volume to cite all that is ſaid by the Ancients upon this Head, therefore I ſhall content my ſelf to ſelect a few plain Paſſages out of an infinite Number that might be alledged to this purpoſe. Juſtin Martyr [a] often tells the Emperors in his Apology, that Chriſtians could worſhip none but God alone: And that Chriſt had taught them ſo, in ſaying, Thou ſhalt worſhip the Lord thy God, and him only ſhalt thou ſerve with all thy Heart and with all thy Strength, the Lord God that made thee; and again in ſaying, Render to Cæſar the things that are Cæſar's, and to God the things that are God's. Therefore we worſhip God alone, but in all other Things we chearfully ſerve you. In like manner Theophilus Biſhop of Antioch: I will Honour the King, ſays he, not by worſhipping him, but praying for him. But I will worſhip God, the living and true God, knowing, that by him the King is ordained. You will ſay then, why do you not worſhip the King? Becauſe he is not made to be worſhipped, but to be honoured with lawful Honour. For he is not a God, but a Man. And as he will not ſuffer any other to aſſume the Title of King but himſelf; ſo neither is it lawful [b] to worſhip any other but God alone. In another Place [c] he ſays, God's Laws forbid not only the worſhip of Idols, but all other Creatures, the Sun, Moon, and Stars, Heaven Earth, and Sea; and command the worſhip of the true God alone, who is the Creator of all Things. After the ſame manner Tertullian ſpeaking of the Chriſtians Prayers for the Emperors and the Peace of the World [d], ſays, they asked theſe Things of the living and true God, and they could ask them of no other but him, of whom they were ſure to obtain them, becauſe he alone was able to give them. And he repeats the ſame in ſeveral [e] other Places of his Writings. This was the Anſwer which the Martyrs commonly gave to the perſecuting Judges, when they ſollicited them to worſhip other Gods. When Fructuoſus (a Spaniſh Biſhop and Martyr, who ſuffered at Tarragone about the Year 262.) was commanded to ſacrifice, he replied, I only worſhip one God [f] the Maker of Heaven and Earth, and of all Things that are therein. And ſo Dionyſius Biſhop of Alexandria anſwered Æmylian the Prefect, as he himſelf tells us in an Epiſtle recorded by Euſebius [g], I have publickly teſtified, ſays he, that I worſhip none but the true God alone, neither can I ever depart from this Practice, or ceaſe to be a Chriſtian. And when Æmylian urged him farther to worſhip the Gods of the Empire together with his own God, his Anſwer was ſtill the ſame, We worſhip him and no other. There are many the like Expreſſions in Irenæus [h], Clemens Alexandrinus [i], Origen [k], Cyprian [l], Lactantius [m], the Author of the Recognitions under the Name of Clemens Romanus [n], Athenagoras, Tatian, and others: Which becauſe the learned Reader may have recourſe to himſelf, or read them collected together in one View in that excellent Book of Mr. Daille [o] againſt the Idolatry of the Church of Rome, I ſhall here omit them, and proceed

SECT. II.

Secondly, From their denying the Worſhip of Saints and Angels in particular, and condemning it as Idolatry.

To the ſecond Obſervation; which is, that the Ancients not only in general reject the Worſhip of any Creature, but reject the Worſhip of Saints and Angels in particular, as Idolatry and unlawful. And of this we cannot have a plainer Proof, than was given in the Anſwer of the Church of Smyrna to the Suggeſtion of the Jews, when at the Martyrdom of Polycarp the Jews deſired the Heathen Judge, that he would not permit the Chriſtians to carry off the Body of Polycarp, leſt they ſhould leave their crucified Maſter, and begin to worſhip this Man in his ſtead: This Suggeſtion, ſays the Anſwer, proceeded purely from Ignorance, that we could neither forſake Chriſt, nor worſhip any [p] other. For we worſhip him, as being the Son of God: But the Martyrs, as the Diſciples and Followers of the Lord, we love with a due Affection, for their great Love of their own King and Maſter; with whom we deſire to be Partners and Fellow-Diſciples. A like Anſwer was given at the Martyrdom of Fructuoſus in Spain. For when the Judge asked Eulogius his Deacon, whether he would not worſhip Fructuoſus? as thinking, that he who refuſed to worſhip the Heathen Idols, might yet perhaps be inclined to worſhip a Chriſtian Martyr: To this Eulogius plainly replied, I do not worſhip [q] Fructuoſus, but I worſhip him whom Fructuoſus worſhips. We are beholden to Baronius himſelf for this Teſtimony: And we cannot deſire a clearer Evidence, that in thoſe early times the Chriſtians did not worſhip the Martyrs, but only the God of the Martyrs, to whom the Martyrs offered their own Bodies in Sacrifice, whilſt they died for his Name, and ſealed their Confeſſion with their Blood. Before this, Origen in his Anſwers to Celſus poſitively denies that ever the Jews or Chriſtians gave any religious Worſhip to Angels. He ſays they are miniſtring Spirits, that bring the Gifts of God to us, but there is no Command in Scripture to worſhip [r] or adore them. For all Prayers, Supplications, Interceſſions, and giving of Thanks are to be ſent up to God by the great High-Prieſt, the living Word of God, who is ſuperi-or to all Angels. He ſays again [s] allowing what Celſus pleaded to be true, that the Angels were God's Heralds and heavenly Meſſengers: Yet ſtill the Heralds and Meſſengers were not to be worſhipped, but he whoſe Heralds and Meſſengers they were. He repeats this frequently in his eighth Book in ſeveral Places [t], which for Brevity's ſake I here omit, only reciting one Paſſage more, becauſe it ſo handſomly meets with that common Pretence of the Romaniſts, that we are to worſhip Angels, becauſe they are the Friends of God. We muſt endeavour, ſays he [u], to pleaſe God alone, who is above all Things, and labour to have him propitious unto us, procuring his Good-will with Piety and all kind of Virtue. And if Celſus will yet have us to procure the Good-will of any others, after him that is God over all: Let him conſider, that as when the Body is moved, the Shadow follows its Motion; ſo in like manner, when we have God, who is over all, favourable unto us, it follows, that we ſhall have all his Friends, both Angels, and Souls, and Spirits favourable unto us alſo. For they have a Fellow-feeling with them, that are thought worthy to find Favour from God. Neither are they only favourable to ſuch as are thus worthy, but they labour with them alſo that are willing to worſhip God over all, and are friendly to them, and ſympathize with them, and pray with them. So that we may be bold to ſay, that when Men, who with Reſolution propoſe unto themſelves the beſt Things, do pray unto God, many thouſands of the ſacred Powers pray together with them unſpoken to, ἀκλήτοις, without any Invocation. A like Anſwer is given to the ſame Pretence by the Author under the Name of St. Ambroſe. Men are wont, ſays he [x], when they are aſhamed of their neglecting of God, to uſe this miſerable Excuſe; that by theſe they might go to God, as by Officers we go to the King. To which he anſwers, Is any Man ſo mad, or ſo unmindful of his Salvation, as to give the King's Honour to an Officer; when if any ſhall be found but to treat of ſuch a Matter, they will be juſtly condemned as guilty of High Treaſon? And yet theſe Men think themſelves not guilty, who give the Honour of God's Name to a Creature, and forſaking the Lord adore their Fellow-ſervants; as though there were any Thing more that could be reſerved to God. For therefore Men go to the King by Tribunes or Officers, becauſe the King is but a Man, and knows not with whom he may entruſt the Affairs of the Commonwealth. But to obtain the Favour of God, (from whom nothing is hid, for he knows the Merits of all Men) we have no need of an Advocate or Spokeſ-man, but only a devout Mind. For whereſoever ſuch an one ſhall ſpeak unto him, he will anſwer him. We have heard before out of Irenæus [y], that the Church in his time, though ſhe wrought many Miracles for the Benefit of Men, yet did nothing by Invocation of Angels, but only by Prayer to God and the Lord Jeſus Chriſt. And that thus it continued to be in the time of Athanaſius, appears plainly from his way of diſputing with the Arians, when he proves the Unity of the Father and Son from the Apoſtle's joining them together in Prayer, 1 Theſſ. iii. 11. God himſelf and our Father, and our Lord Jeſus Chriſt direct our way unto you. No Man, ſays he [z], would pray to receive any thing from the Father and the Angels, or from any other of the Creatures: Neither would any Man ſay, God and the Angel give me this. And whereas the Arian might have ſaid, that Jacob joined God and the Angel together in Prayer, Gen. xlviii. 16. Athanaſius obviates this Exception, by ſaying, he did not join one of the created Angels, who are Angels by Nature, with God who was their Creator; neither did he, omitting God that fed him, deſire a Bleſſing from an Angel upon his Children: But in ſaying, The Angel which redeemed me from all Evil, he ſhew'd that it was not any of the created Angels, but the Word of God, whom he joined with the Father and prayed unto him. There had been no Force in this Argument, had the Church uſed Invocation of Angels in her Prayers in the time of Athanaſius: The Arian might eaſily have replied, that his Argument was refuted by Experience in the Church's daily Practice. But that neither Men nor Angels were the Object of religious Adoration in his time, appears farther from another Diſcourſe of his againſt [a] the Arians, where he argues thus: Peter the Apoſtle did forbid Cornelius, when he would have worſhipped him, ſaying, I my ſelf am alſo a Man, Acts x. 26. And the Angel likewiſe did forbid John, when he would have worſhipped him in the Revelations, ſaying, See thou do it not; for I am thy Fellow-ſervant, and of thy Brethren the Prophets, and of them who keep the Sayings of this Book: Worſhip God. Rev. xxii. 9. Wherefore it belongs to God only to be worſhipped. And this the Angels very well know, that though they excel others in Glory, yet they are all but Creatures, and not in the Number of thoſe that are to be worſhipped, but of thoſe that worſhip the Lord. We cannot have clearer Evidences than theſe either of the Church's Doctrine or Practice: Both which are equally atteſted by St. Auſtin in his Book of true Religion: Where he makes it a diſtinguiſhing Character and Property of true Religion to worſhip no ſort of Creature, particularly neither Angels, nor Saints after Death, but the Sovereign Majeſty of God alone. Let not our Religion [b], ſays he, conſiſt in the worſhip of dead Men: Becauſe if they lived piouſly, they are not eſteemed ſuch as would deſire that kind of Honour; but would have Him to be worſhipped by us, by whoſe Illumination they rejoice to have us Partners with them in their Merit. They are therefore to be honoured for Imitation, not to be worſhipped for Religion. A little after he ſays, that which the higheſt Angel worſhips, the ſame is to be worſhipped by the meaneſt Man. And this we are to believe, that the very greateſt of Angels, and moſt excellent Miniſters of God, would have us worſhip one God with them. And therefore we honour Angels with Love, not with religious Service: Neither do we build Temples to them; for they deſire not to be ſo honoured by us; becauſe they know, that we our ſelves, when we are good, are the Temples of the Moſt High God. And therefore it is well recorded, that the Angel forbad the Man to worſhip him, and bid him worſhip God, under whom he was his Fellow-ſervant, Rev. xxii. 9.

'Tis true indeed the Manichees about this time began to charge the Catholicks with worſhipping their Martyrs: Fauſtus objected to them, that they had only exchanged the Heathen Idols for Martyrs, whom they worſhipped with the ſame Devotions, offering Sacrifice of Wine and Meats to the Ghoſts and Shades of dead Men. Had this been a true Charge, tho' it could not have affected the Argument, as drawn from the Practice of the Church in former Ages, yet it would have proved the Corruption of Saint-worſhip to have crept a little earlier into the Church, than will now be allowed. But the truth of the Matter is, it was a mere Calumny of Fauſtus's own inventing; and St. Auſtin rejects it with the utmoſt Scorn and Indignation. Therefore he ſays [c] in anſwer to it, that the Chriſtian People did celebrate the Memories of the Martyrs with religious Solemnity, both to excite themſelves to their Imitation, and to be Partners in their Merits, and to have the Benefit of their Prayers: Yet ſo, as that we never offer any Sacrifice to a Martyr, but to the God of Martyrs, although we erect Altars in the Memories of the Martyrs, meaning Churches called by their Names. For what Prieſt, ſtanding at the Altar in the Places where the holy Bodies lie, ever ſaid, we offer unto thee, Peter, or Paul, or Cyprian? But whatever is offered, is offered unto God that crowned the Martyrs, at the Memories of thoſe whom he crowned, that by the very Admonition of the Places our Affection may riſe higher, to quicken our Love both toward them, whom we may imitate, and toward him who enables us to imitate them. Therefore we worſhip the Martyrs with that worſhip of Love and Society, wherewith we worſhip holy Men of God in this Life, whoſe Heart we perceive to be prepared to ſuffer in like manner for the Goſpel-Truth. But with that Worſhip, which the Greeks call Latria, and the Latins cannot expreſs by one Word, being a Service proper to God, we neither worſhip, nor teach any one to worſhip any other but God alone. And whereas the offering of Sacrifice appertains to this kind of Worſhip, whence it is called Idolatry in thoſe that give it to Idols; we neither offer, nor teach any to offer ſuch Worſhip, either to any Martyr, or any holy Soul, or any Angel; but whoever falls into this Error, is rebuked by ſound Doctrine, either to correct him, or condemn him, or to make him be avoided by others.

It is plain from this Anſwer of St. Auſtin's, that the Charge of giving religious Worſhip to Saints and Angels was falſe, and a mere Calumny upon the Church in thoſe Days; and that the only Perſons then guilty of it, were ſuch as were diſowned and diſcarded by the Church. Which brings me to the third and laſt Conſideration propoſed to confirm this Poſition, That the antient Church did not give religious Worſhip either to Saints or Angels, becauſe ſhe condemned the Practice both in Heathens and Hereticks, and aggravated their Idolatry upon this Account.

SECT. III. Thirdly, From their charging the Practice of it upon Hereticks and Heathens only.

ST. Auſtin in another Place makes a ſevere Remark upon all ſuch as ſought to Angels by Prayer for their Aſſiſtance: He ſays they were diſtracted with ſtrange Curioſities and Illuſions. Take it in his own Words, as he delivers it in a pious Reflection upon his own Happineſs in eſcaping the Snare at his own Converſion, and a thankful Acknowledgment of God's Mercy in delivering him from ſuch a Deluſion. Whom, ſays he, ſhould I have found, that might reconcile me unto thee? Should I have gone unto [d] the Angels? With what Prayer? With what Sacraments? Many endeavouring to return unto thee, and not being able to do it by themſelves, as I hear, have tried theſe Things; and have faln into the deſire of curious Viſions, and were accounted worthy of Illuſions. St. Chryſoſtom has a more ſevere Reflexion on this ſort of Men: For he not only ſays [e], that no Creature is to be worſhipped by Man, neither of Things above, nor Things below, whether Man, or Demons, or Angels, or Archangels, or any other ſupernal Powers, put only God the Lord of all: And that the Apoſtle in the ſecond Chapter of his Epiſtle to the Coloſſians diſcourſes againſt ſuch as taught, that Man was to come to God by Angels, and not by Chriſt; for that was too great for him [f]: But he adds, in purſuance of the ſame Matter, that it was the Devil [g] which introduced this having Recourſe to Angels, whilſt he envyed the Honour of Man. Theſe be the Enchantments of Devils. Tho' it be an Angel, tho' an Archangel, tho' they be Cherubims; endure it not. For neither will theſe Powers themſelves receive it, but reject it, when they ſee their Lord diſhonoured. I have honoured thee, ſaid God, and bid thee call upon me. And doſt thou then diſhonour him? Where we ſee plainly, that Invocation of God and Invocation of Angels are oppoſed to one another; and as the one is made the Character of true Religion, ſo the other is ſaid to be the Doctrine of Devils.

The Perſons here reflected on by Chryſoſtom, were probably the ſame as had been known in the Church, and condemned from the Apoſtles Days as Hereticks, under the Name of Angelici, or Angel-worſhippers. For ſo St. Auſtin [h] deſcribes them, calling them Angelici, from their Inclination to worſhip Angels. And ſo Iſidore [i] after him. Irenæus [k] ſeems to inſinuate that Hereticks were wont to invocate Angels, when he oppoſes the Church's Practice to them, telling them, that many Miracles were wrought in the Church, not by Invocation of Angels, but by Prayer to God and the Lord Jeſus Chriſt. And Tertullian [l] ſays expreſly of the Followers of Simon Magus, That they worſhipped Angels in the exerciſe of their Magical Art, which Idolatry was condemned by St. Peter in their firſt Founder. Now there being ſuch Foot-ſteps of Angel-worſhip in the Practice of ſo many Hereſies; and it being a Thing that ſome were fond of, becauſe it had a ſhew of Humility in it: The Council of Laodicea, to prevent the growing Malady, made a ſevere Canon under the Denunciation of Anathema to reſtrain it. Chriſtians, ſay they [m], ought not to forſake the Church of God, and go aſide, and hold Conventicles, to invocate or call upon the Names of Angels. Which Things are forbidden. If any one therefore be found to exerciſe himſelf in this private Idolatry, Let him be accurſed; becauſe he hath forſaken our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, the Son of God, and gone over to Idolatry. The firſt Publiſhers of this Canon in the Latin Editions, changed the Word Angelos into Angulos, Corners inſtead of Angels: But the Greek admits of no ſuch Corruption, and therefore the Fraud is eaſily diſcovered; and nothing but the ſhame of ſeeing their Practice ſo plainly condemned in this Canon, could have induced any Men to have attempted ſuch a childiſh Corruption. Theodoret in his Comment upon the Epiſtle to the Coloſſians has Occaſion twice to mention this Canon. Where he ſays, That becauſe ſome in the Apoſtles Days commanded Men to worſhip Angels, therefore the Apoſtle enjoined [n] the contrary, that they ſhould adorn their Words and Deeds with the Commemoration of the Lord Chriſt, and ſend up Thankſgiving to God and the Father by him, and not by the Angels. And that the Synod of Laodicea following this Rule, and deſiring to heal that old Diſeaſe, made a Law that Men ſhould not pray to Angels, nor forſake our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. And again [o], This Vice continued in Phrygia and Piſidia for a long time, for which Cauſe alſo the Synod aſſembled in Laodicea, the chief City in Phrygia, made a Law to prohibit praying to Angels. But yet even to this Day among them and their Neighbours there are Oratories of St. Michael to be ſeen. Cardinal Perron uſes a great deal of Art and Sophiſtry to pervert the Senſe of the Apoſtle and this Canon together, which the Reader may find ſufficiently expoſed and refuted by the learned Daille [p], with the falſe Gloſſes of Petavius and others, with which I ſhall not trouble this Diſcourſe. I only obſerve farther, that as the Church condemned Hereticks as guilty of Idolatry for worſhipping of Angels, ſo did ſhe likewiſe for worſhipping of their Leaders and Martyrs. Apollonius, who wrote againſt the Montaniſts, objects it to them, that they worſhipped one Alexander a Martyr among them [q]. And St. Auſtin reckons it among the Errors of Simon Magus, [r] that he left his own Image and the Image of his Harlot Selene to his Disciples, to be worshipped by them. They objected the same to the Heathen, that they worshipped such Gods as were only Men, and dead Men: As may be seen in all the Apologies made by Minucius Felix [s], Tertullian [t], Clemens Alexandrinus [u], Arnobius [x], Cyprian [y], and the rest that wrote against them: Which had been a very weak Argument, and easily retorted, had Christians worshipped their Martyrs, whom they could not deny to be mortal Men. The Heathens farther pretended, that their Demons, or Gods whom they worshipped, were good Angels, and worshipped only as the Ministers of the Supreme God, and Attendants of the Court of Heaven. Notwithstanding which Pretence, they charge them with Idolatry, as giving the Worship of God to the Creature. He that would see this Argument managed to just Advantage, may consult the learned Discourses of Mr. Dalle [z] and Bishop Stillingfleet [a], where he will find the Pretences of the Heathen, and the Answers of the Christians collected and set in their proper Light. I shall only detain my Reader with one Citation out of St. Austin, as a Specimen of all the rest, where he introduces the Heathen making this Apology for themselves; We do not worship wicked Devils, say they; 'tis the Angels you speak of, that we worship [b], the Powers of the great God, the Ministers of the great God. To which St. Austin answers, I wish you would worship them, for they would quickly teach you, that they are not to be worshipped. Hear the Instruction of an Angel. He taught a certain Disciple of Christ, and shewed him many Miracles in the Revelations of St. John. Who having seen a certain Miracle in a Vision, was astonished, and cast himself down at the Feet of the Angel. But the Angel, who sought nothing but the Glory of his Lord, said, Arise, What dost thou? Worship God: For I am thy Fellow-servant, and of thy Brethren. How is it then, my Brethren? Let no one say, I fear lest the Angel should be angry at me, if I do not worship him for my God. He is then only angry at thee, when thou art inclined to worship him. For he is good and loves God: And as the Devils are angry, if they be not worshipped; so the Angels are highly displeased, if they be worshipped instead of God. At last he concludes with this Admonition to the Pagans: Let the Pagans learn to adore God. They have a Mind to adore Angels: Let them imitate Angels, and adore him whom the Angels adore [c]. And with these Words I shall conclude this whole Discourse of Religious Worship, knowing no better Admonition that can be given to the Angel-worshippers of the present Age, than to advise them to imitate the Angelical Practice of the Primitive Church, who had God, and only God, for the Object of their Adoration.

Simon

CHAP. IV.

That antiently Divine Service was always performed in the Vulgar Tongue, understood by the People.

SECT. I. This proved 1st from plain Testimonies of the Ancients asserting it.

HAVING thus considered the Nature and Object of Christian Worship, I come now to speak of the Circumstances and Manner of performing Divine Service. And here it will be proper to examine in what Language the Ancients performed their Worship; and to enquire into the Use and Original of what we commonly call Liturgies, or set Forms of Prayer; and to take Notice of the Habits and Modes, and Gestures, and different Rites and Ceremonies observed without any Breach of Faith or Christian Unity in different Churches; together with the solemn Times of Prayer and religious Assemblies, whether weekly or daily, generally observed and set a-part for the Exercise of publick Devotion.

As to the first of these, there is nothing more certain in History, than that the Service of the antient Church was always performed in the vulgar or common Language of every Country, that is, such as was either commonly spoken, or at least commonly understood. And so it continued for above a thousand Years in the Church. And it is even monstrous to think, that in so inquisitive an Age as the present is, there should be any Men of Learning to defend, or whole Nations ſo tamely to ſubmit to, the Impoſition and Tyranny of the contrary Practice; ſo abſurd and unreaſonable in it ſelf; ſo prejudicial to Devotion; ſo contrary to the Uſe of Speech, whoſe End is Edification; ſo reproachful to human Nature, as if Men were Aſſes indeed, as Thomas Aquinas once made the Compariſon; ſo derogatory to the Chriſtians Birth-right; ſo flatly contradictory to the Apoſtle's Reaſoning; and ſo diametrically oppoſite to the univerſal Practice of the Church for ſo many Ages. But I ſhall not think my ſelf obliged to diſpute againſt it upon all theſe Topicks, nor to ſay all that might be ſaid in an hiſtorical Way againſt it. He that pleaſes may ſee that done already in an excellent Book [a] of Biſhop Uſher's, publiſhed by Mr. Wharton. I ſhall content my ſelf to ſuggeſt a few Things agreeable to the Deſign of treating Matters ſuccinctly, which will be ſufficient to ſatisfy any candid Reader as to the Senſe and Practice of the Primitive Church.

And firſt I obſerve, that the Ancients declare unanimouſly, That Divine Service was performed in the vulgar Tongue of every Nation. The Grecians, ſays Origen [b], uſe the Greek Language in their Prayers, and the Romans the Roman, and ſo every one in his own Dialect prays to God, and gives Thanks as he is able: And the God of all Languages hears them that pray in all Dialects, underſtanding their different Languages as well as if they all ſpake with one Tongue. This he ſays in anſwer to an Objection of Celſus, who charged them with uſing of barbarous and unintelligible Names and Words in their Prayers. Juſtin Martyr ſays [c], The Scriptures were firſt read in their Aſſemblies to the People, and then the Preſident made a Diſcourſe to them, exhorting them to obſerve and follow the good Inſtructions they had heard out of the Prophets and Apoſtles. Which had been an abſurd Admonition, had not the Leſſons been read in a Language which they underſtood. St. Jerom tells us [d], That at the Funeral of the famous Lady Paula, the Pſalms were ſung in Syriack, Greek and Latin, becauſe there were Men of each Language preſent at the Solemnity. And for the ſame Reaſon Cæſarius Biſhop of Arles is ſaid [e] to have appointed the People to ſing the Pſalms and Hymns, ſome in Greek, and ſome in Latin: No doubt, that the Divine Service might be underſtood by Men of different Languages then preſent in the Aſſembly. Aurelius Caſſidore writing upon thoſe Words of the Pſalmiſt, She ſhall be brought unto the King in Raiment of divers Colours, ſays, this Variety ſignified [f] that Diverſity of Tongues, wherewith every Nation ſang to God in the Church, according to the Difference of their own Country Language. And it being then the way of the Church, that all Offices ſhould be performed with the Underſtanding and Edification of the People, Juſtinian provided for this in one of his Laws, obliging all Biſhops [g] and Presbyters to repeat the Prayers uſed in the Communion and Baptiſmal Service, not in ſecret, but with an audible Voice, ſo as the Minds of the Hearers might be raiſed to greater Devotion, and ſtirred up to glorifie the Lord God. For ſo the holy Apoſtle directs in the firſt Epiſtle to the Corinthians, ſaying, If thou bleſſeſt only with the Spirit, how ſhall he that occupieth the room of the Unlearned, ſay the holy Amen to God at thy giving of Thanks? For he knoweth not what thou ſayeſt. For thou verily giveſt Thanks well, but the other is not edified. It is plain by this, that Juſtinian thought all Prayers which the People either could not hear, or could not underſtand, were equally blamed by the Apoſtle, as not contributing to Edification; and therefore as he made a Law againſt private Muttering of Prayers, which ought to be publick; ſo he would no doubt have been as ſevere againſt Praying in an unknown Tongue, had there then been any Occaſion (as there was not) for the like Prohibition in the Liturgy of the Church. Which may be collected from another of his Laws, which was made upon Occaſion of a Diſpute, which in his Time aroſe among the Jews. Some of them, who were ſuperſtitiouſly inclined, were for having the Law read only in Hebrew, though not underſtood by the People: Others were for having it read in Greek, or any Language which the People underſtood. The Matter at laſt was brought before Juſtinian, and he determined in Favour of the latter, that it ſhould be read in Greek, or any other Language [h], which the Place where they lived had made more uſeful and known to the People. Hitherto therefore we are aſſured, this Corruption had made no Attempt to gain Admittance in the Service of the Chriſtian Church, ſince it was corrected by the Civil Magiſtrate as ſoon as it was obſerved to be creeping into the Jewiſh Synagogue.

SECONDLY, As a farther Evidence of this Matter, we may obſerve, that all the People antiently were allowed to join in Pſalmody and Prayers, and make their proper Reſponſes. The Learned and Unlearned, nay, even Women, young Virgins, and Children, in thoſe Times, bear a Part in the publick Service of the Church. St. Chryſoſtom [i] and the Author of the Conſtitutions [k], ſpeak of Children praying with the reſt of the Congregation for the Catechumens and the Faithful alſo. And St. Jerom [l] ſpeaks of young Virgins ſinging the Pſalter at Morning and Evening, at the third, and ſixth, and ninth Hours, and at Midnight in their Courſe: And ſays, they were obliged to learn the Pſalms, and ſome Portion of Scripture every Day. St. Baſil [m] and many others (as we ſhall ſee hereafter, when we ſpeak of Pſalmody) ſay, all the People ſung the Pſalms alternately: And Baſil particularly takes notice [n] of Children performing this Office in common with the reſt of the People. And we ſhall meet with the Peoples Prayers and Reſponſes almoſt in every Part of the Liturgy, ſuch as the κύριε ἐλέησον, Lord, have mercy, ſubjoined to every Petition of the Deacon's Prayers; and in thoſe mutual Prayers of Miniſter and People, The Lord be with you, And with thy Spirit: Lift up your Hearts, We lift them up unto the Lord; with abundance more that need not here be mentioned. All which ſuppoſe the Service to be in the vulgar and known Language; elſe it were abſurd to think, that the People ſhould know how and when to make their Reſponſes; or that Children and young Virgins ſhould learn the Pſalms and Scripture by Heart, and joyn in Pſalmody and other parts of the Service of the Church.

SECT. III.
Thirdly, From the frequent Exhortations of the Fathers to the People to hear and read and pray with Underſtanding.

Thirdly, THERE is nothing more common among the Ancients in their Diſcourſes to the People, than to admoniſh and exhort them both to hear, and read, and pray with Underſtanding, Attention, and Fervency of Spirit. Which had been very incongruous Admonitions, obliging them to impracticable Rules, had the Leſſons and Prayers been in an unknown Tongue. St. Baſil thus exhorts his People [o], Thou haſt the Pſalms, thou haſt the Prophets, the Precepts of the Goſpel, the Preachings of the Apoſtles; Let thy Tongue ſing, and thy Mind ſearch the Meaning of what is ſpoken; that thou may'ſt ſing with the Spirit, and ſing with Underſtanding alſo. In another Homily [p] he tells them, that the divine Oracles were God's Gifts to the Church, to be read in every Aſſembly, as the Food which the Spirit afforded us for the Nouriſhment of our Souls. And in another Place [q] putting the Queſtion, How a Man prays with the Spirit, whilſt his Underſtanding is unfruitful? He anſwers, that this was ſpoken of thoſe that prayed in a Tongue unknown to the Hearers. For the Apoſtle ſays, If I pray in an unknown Tongue, my Spirit indeed prayeth, but my Underſtanding is unfruitful. For when the Words of the Prayer are not known to them that are preſent, the Underſtanding of him that prayeth is unfruitful, becauſe his Prayer is of no Uſe or Advantage: But when they that are preſent underſtand the Prayer, which is of Advantage to the Hearers; then he that prays, reaps the Fruit of it, namely, the Edification of thoſe who receive Benefit by it. And we are to conceive in like manner of all Utterance of the Words of God. For it is written, if any be uſeful for Edification in the Faith. By all this it is evident, the Scriptures and Pſalms and Prayers were read in a known Tongue: For otherwiſe it were in vain to exhort Men to give Diligence and Attention to underſtand what they heard, if every Thing was ſpoken in a Language, which they did not, or could not underſtand.

SECT. IV.
Fourthly, From the References made by the Fathers to the Prayers and Leſſons in the Service of the Church.

Fourthly, THE Fathers in their Sermons frequently refer to the Prayers of the Church, and to the Leſſons read before, as things the People were perfectly well acquainted with. They often argue from Matters contained in the Prayers, as Chryſoſtom does commonly from all Parts of the Liturgy: And their Sermons for the moſt part were upon ſuch Portions of Scripture, as had juſt been read before, as I ſhall ſhew, when I come to the Office of Preaching. Now this ſuppoſes, that both the Prayers and Leſſons of Scripture were in a known Tongue; elſe it were abſurd for the Preachers to appeal to their Auditors as well acquainted with them, or draw Arguments from thence, as Motives grounded upon their own Experience, if yet indeed they had no Knowledge of them.

SECT. V.
Fifthly, From the Scriptures being tranſlated into all Languages from the firſt Foundation of Churches.

Fifthly, THIS is evident from that pious Care, which the Church took to have the Bible tranſlated into all Languages: And as ſoon as any Nation was converted, that ſpake an uncommon Tongue, immediately to procure a new Verſion of the Scriptures into their Language. Euſebius [r] ſays, they were tranſlated into all Languages both of Greeks and Barbarians throughout the World, and ſtudied by all Nations as the Oracles of God. Chryſoſtom aſſures us, that the Syrians [s], the Egyptians, the Indians, the Perſians, the Ethiopians, and a Multitude of other Nations tranſlated them into their own Tongues, whereby Barbarians learned to be Philoſophers, and Women and Children with the greateſt eaſe imbibed the Doctrine of the Goſpel. Theodoret [t] ſays the ſame, that every Nation under Heaven had the Scripture in their own Tongue: The Hebrew Books were not only tranſlated into Greek, but into the Roman, Egyptian, Perſian, Indian, Armenian, Scythian and Sauromatick Languages, and in a word into all Tongues uſed by all Nations in his Time. The like is atteſted by St. Jerom [u] and St. Auſtin [x] and many others. Ulphilas is ſaid by all the Hiſtorians [y] to have tranſlated the whole Bible into the Gothick Tongue. St. Jerom tranſlated it into the Dalmatick, as he himſelf [z] ſeems to intimate, when he calls it his own Tongue; as Scaliger and moſt others underſtand him; though Biſhop Uſher [a] thinks he meant the Latin rather by his own Tongue. St. Chryſoſtom [b] ſometimes mentions the Syriack Tranſlation; and he is ſaid by the Author of his Life [c] to have procured, during his Exile at Cucuſus in Armenia, a Tranſlation of the Pſalms and New Teſtament for the Uſe of the Armenian Churches. Not to mention that of Methodius or Cyril into the Slavonian Tongue, or any others of later Ages. Of which the curious Reader may find exact Accounts in Biſhop Uſher [d], Biſhop Walton, [e] Dr. Milles [f], and Hottinger [g] and others upon this peculiar Subject of the Scripture Verſions.

SECT. VI. Sixthly, From the Uſe of the Order of Interpreters in the Church.

As to the antient Practice, it may be evidenced farther and confirmed from the Uſe of Interpreters in the Church; whoſe Office, as has been ſhewed in another Place [*] out of Epiphanius [h] and other Writers, was to render one Language into another, as there was Occaſion, both in reading the Scriptures, and in the Homilies that were made to the People. For it happened ſometimes that there were Men of different Languages in the ſame Church: As in the Churches of Syria and Paleſtine ſome underſtood Syriack only, and others Greek; and in the African Churches, ſome ſpake Latin and others Punick: In which caſes whatever was ſaid in one Language, was immeately render'd into the other by the Interpreter for the Benefit of the People. In confirmation of which Cuſtom, to what has been ſaid before, I ſhall here add the Obſervation of Theodoret [i] upon the Practice of Chryſoſtom, who by the help of ſuch an Interpreter often preached to the Arian Goths in Conſtantinople, whom by that means he reduced to the Catholick Faith.

SECT. VII. Seventhly, From the Cuſtom of having Bibles laid in Churches for the People to read in private.

ANOTHER Cuſtom obſerved in the antient Church, was to have Bibles in the vulgar Tongue laid in a convenient part of the Church, for the People at their Leiſure to employ themſelves, as they were piouſly inclined, in reading of the Scriptures before or after the times of Divine Service. Of which Cuſtom thoſe Verſes of Paulinus [k], which he wrote upon the Wall of the Secretarium of the Church of Nola, are an infallible Proof, which were in theſe Words: Si quem ſancta tenet meditandi in Lege voluntas; Hic poterit reſidens ſacris intendere Libris. If any one is piouſly diſpoſed to meditate in God's Law; here he may ſit, and employ himſelf in reading the holy Books. Thus Conſtantine himſelf, as is obſerved by Euſebius [l], was wont to employ himſelf in the Church, partly by joyning in the publick Prayers with the People, and partly by taking the Books of the Divine Oracles into his Hands, and exerciſing his Mind in the Contemplation of them. And probably for this Reaſon he ordered Euſebius to prepare fifty Copies of the Bible for the Uſe of the Church of Conſtantinople [m], as his Letter to Euſebius witneſſes: For 'tis obſerved and ſpoken to his Praiſe by Euſebius in another Place [n], that by his means innumerable Multitudes both of Men and Women exchanged the Food of their Bodies for that of their Souls, that rational Food which was ſo agreeable to rational Minds, and which they obtained by reading the Holy Scriptures. This muſt neceſſarily relate either to their reading the Scriptures by the Help and Benefit of his Copies in the Church; or elſe will argue that they were encouraged by him to read them at home in their private Houſes; which had been denied them under pain of Baniſhment or Death before, in the preceding Reigns of the perſecuting Princes.

SECT. VIII. Eighthly, From the general Allowance granted to all Men to have and read the Scriptures in their Mother-Tongue. Which Privilege was never infringed by any but the Heathen Perſecutors.

AND this leads us to another plain Evidence of the primitive Practice: Which was the Privilege and Encouragement all Chriſtians had to read the Scriptures at home, for the Exerciſe of themſelves and Families in private Devotion, and better Preparation for the publick. None ever deny'd them this Privilege but thoſe perſecuting Tyrants, who intended to deſtroy the Name and Faith of Chriſtians, together with their Bibles, out of the World: For which Reaſon they made the ſtricteſt Search after them, and uſed all imaginable Art and Force to make them deliver them up to be burnt: Which they who did, were branded by the infamous Name of Traditores,

Traytors,

Traytors, and Betrayers of their Religion. A certain Argument, that then private Chriſtians had the Uſe of the Scriptures; elſe they could not have been impeached for delivering them up to the Enemy. It cannot be pleaded here, That the Scriptures were then only in the Hands of the Biſhops, and Readers, and others of the Clergy: For Baronius himſelf has publiſhed the Acts of ſeveral Martyrs, where not only private Men, but Women confeſs to the Inquiſitors that they had the Holy Scriptures in their Houſes with them. I will give a ſingle Inſtance out of the Acts of Agape and Irene [o] and their Companions. Where the grand Inquiſitor asks this Queſtion of Irene, Who adviſed you to keep thoſe Parchments and Scriptures to this Time? To which Irene anſwered, God Almighty, who has commanded us to love him unto the Death; for which Cauſe we durſt not betray him; but had rather be burnt alive, or ſuffer any other things that may befal us, than treacherouſly deliver up thoſe Writings. 'Tis plain from this, that private Chriſtians, both Men and Women, then enjoy'd the Scriptures as their Birthright, and none pretended to raviſh them from them but only the perſecuting Heathens. The Fathers of the Church were ſo far from doing this, that on the contrary they uſed all manner of Arguments to induce Men to read and ſtudy them; exhorting them not only to hear them with Attention in the Church, but to read them privately at home with their Wives and Families; commending thoſe that ſtudied them, and reproving thoſe that neglected them; making large Encomiums upon the Uſe and Excellency of them, and requiring Men to peruſe them privately, as the beſt Preparation for the publick Service and Inſtruction; anſwering all Objections and Pretences that Men could make to the contrary; as that they were ignorant and unlearned, and that the Scriptures were difficult and hard to be underſtood; that they were only for the uſe of Monks and Religious, and not for ſecular Men, and Men of Buſineſs; aſſuring them that the Scriptures were for the Uſe of all Men, and that it was the Neglect of them that was the Cauſe of all Ignorance, Hereſies, Errors, and Irreligion. Theſe were the general Topicks, upon which the Fathers then preſſed the common People to read the Scriptures, which are diametrically oppoſite to the Arguments uſed in later Ages to diſſuade and deter Men from the Uſe of them. A Man cannot look into the Fathers, but he will ſee ſuch Arguments every where running through their Writings. So that it is needleſs here to inſiſt upon them: The Reader that pleaſes, may ſee them collected together from firſt to laſt by Biſhop Uſher and Mr. Wharton. I ſhall only relate one Paſſage of Chryſoſtom out of his famous Sermons upon Lazarus, where he at once propoſes the ſeveral Arguments, and anſwers the ſeveral Objections I have now mentioned. For this Reaſon, ſays he [p], we often acquaint you many Days before-hand with the Subject of our Diſcourſe, that taking the Bible into your Hands in the mean time, and running over the whole Paſſage, you may have your Minds better prepared to hear what is to be ſpoken. And this is the thing I have always adviſed, and ſhall ſtill continue to exhort you to, that you ſhould not only hear what is ſaid in this Place, but ſpend your Time at home continually in reading the Holy Scriptures. And here let no one uſe thoſe frigid and vain Excuſes, I am a Man engaged in the Buſineſs of the Law, I am taken up with Civil Affairs, I am a Tradeſman, I have a Wife, and Children to breed up, I have the Care of a Family, I am a ſecular Man: It belongs not to me to read the Scriptures, but to thoſe that have bid adieu to the World, and retired into the Mountains, and have nothing elſe to do but to exerciſe themſelves in ſuch a way of living. What ſay'ſt thou, O Man? Is it not thy Buſineſs to read the Scriptures, becauſe thou art diſtracted with a Multitude of other Cares? Yes, certainly, it belongs to thee more than them. For they have not ſo much need of the help of the holy Scriptures, as you have, who are toſſed in the Waves of the Multiplicity of Buſineſs. Then enumerating what Sins and Temptations ſecular Men are expoſed to, he infers, That they have perpetual need of divine Remedies, as well to cure the Wounds they have already received, as to ward off thoſe they are in danger of receiving: To quench the Darts of the Devil, whilſt they are at a diſtance, and drive them away by continual reading of the Holy Scriptures. For it is impoſſible that a Man ſhould attain Salvation without perpetual Exerciſe in reading ſpiritual things. But ſome again will ſay, What if we cannot underſtand the things that are contained therein? Why, ſays he [q], even in that caſe, though you do not underſtand every thing that is contained therein, yet by reading you ſhall obtain much Sanctification. For it is impoſſible that you ſhould be equally ignorant of all things in thoſe Books. For the Grace of the Spirit ſo ordered it, that they ſhould originally be compoſed and written by Publicans, and Fiſhers, and Tentmakers, and Shepherds, and private and illiterate Men, that none of the moſt ignorant and unlearned might have this Excuſe of Difficulty to fly to; that the things there ſpoken, might be eaſy to be looked into by all Men; that the Handycraftſman, the Servant, the Widow, the moſt illiterate and unlearned among Men might reap Benefit and Advantage by hearing them read. The Apoſtles and Prophets, he ſays, wrote not like the Philoſophers of the Gentiles, in obſcure Terms, but made things plain to the Underſtandings of all Men, as being the common Teachers of the World, that every Man by himſelf might learn by reading alone the things that were ſpoken. To whom are not all things in the Goſpel manifeſt and plain? Who is there, that hearing thoſe Sayings, Bleſſed are the Meek, Bleſſed are the Merciful, Bleſſed are the pure in Heart, and the like, would deſire a Teacher, to underſtand the meaning of them? Moreover, the Signs, and Miracles, and Hiſtories, are they not all intelligible and plain to any ordinary Reader? This therefore is only a Pretence, and Excuſe, and Cloak for Idleneſs. Thou doſt not underſtand the things contained in the Scripture. How ſhouldſt thou underſtand them, when thou wilt not ſo much as look into them? Take the Book into thy Hands, read the whole Hiſtory, and remember thoſe things that are intelligible and eaſy; and thoſe things that are more obſcure and dark, read over and over again: And if thou canſt not by frequent reading dive into the meaning of what is ſaid, go to a wiſer Perſon, betake thy ſelf to a Teacher, and confer with him about any ſuch Paſſage; ſhew thy Diligence and Deſire to be informed. And when God ſees thy Willingneſs and Readineſs of Mind, He will not deſpiſe thy Vigilance and Care. But though Man inform thee not in the things about which thou makeſt Enquiry, he himſelf will certainly reveal it unto thee. Remember the Eunuch of the Ethiopian Queen, who though he was a Barbarian, and immerſed in a Multitude of Cares and Buſineſs, and underſtood not what he read, yet he read for all that, ſitting in his Chariot. And if he ſhew'd ſo great Diligence by the way, conſider how he behaved himſelf at home. If he would not omit reading in the time of a Journey, much leſs would he omit it, when he ſat quietly in his own Houſe. If when he underſtood nothing of it, he ſtill continu'd to read; much more would he do it, when he came to underſtand it. Wherefore becauſe he read when he had no Guide, he quickly found a Guide. God knew the Willingneſs of his Mind, and accepted his Diligence, and preſently ſent him a Teacher. But Philip, you'll ſay, does not now ſtand by us. No: But the Spirit that moved Philip, is ſtill by us. Let us not neglect our own Salvation, Beloved. Theſe things were written for our Salvation, upon whom the Ends of the World are come. The reading of the Scriptures is our great Guard againſt Sin. Our Ignorance of them is a dangerous Precipice, and a deep Gulph: It is an abſolute betraying of our Salvation, to know nothing of the divine Law. It is this that has brought forth ſo many Hereſies; this, that has brought ſo much Corruption into our Lives; this, that has turned all things into Confuſion.

One would think St. Chryſoſtom had foreſeen all the little Pleas and Sophiſtry of the Romiſh Church, and was here diſputing and inveighing againſt them. So appoſite is every Word to refute their trifling pretences; That Ignorance is the Mother of Devotion; That the Scriptures are obſcure; That there is need of an infallible Guide on Earth, beſides the Spirit, to underſtand them; That the promiſcuous Uſe of them is the Cauſe of all Errors and Hereſies; That Laymen and ſecular Men are not fit to be entruſted with them: Each of which Poſitions is as plainly combated by St. Chryſoſtom, as if he had been directly diſputing againſt the inſufferable Tyranny and frivolous Pleas of the preſent Church of Rome: And his whole Diſcourſe, with ſome hundreds of the like Paſſages that might be alledged out of him and other Writers, do irrefragably ſhew, That it was as much the Care and Concern of the Primitive Church to have the Service of God and the Scriptures to be underſtood by all, as now it is the Concern of the Roman Church to have them concealed from their Knowledge, and locked up in a Language which the Unlearned do not underſtand.

SECT. IX.

Ninthly, From the Liberty granted to Children and Catechumens to joyn in the publick Payers and read the Scriptures.

FOR it is very obſervable farther, That in the primitive Church not only Men and Women, but Children were encouraged and trained up from their Infancy to the reading of the holy Scriptures: And the Catechumens were not only admitted to ſome of the Prayers of the Church peculiarly appropriated to their Condition, but alſo obliged to learn the Scriptures, as part of their Diſcipline and Inſtruction. Of their Obligation to learn the Scriptures, we have treated before [*] in ſpeaking of the Method of training them up for Baptiſm: And of their Admiſſion to certain Prayers of the Church, we ſhall ſee more hereafter in that part of the Worſhip called The Service [†] of the Catechumens. All then that is farther here to be ſhewed, is, That Children were trained up to the Uſe of the holy Scriptures. And of this we have undoubted Evidence from many eminent Inſtances of their Practice. Euſebius [r] remarks of the great Care of Leonides the Martyr, and Father of Origen, in the Education of his Son, that he made him learn the Scriptures, before he ſet him to the Study of the liberal Arts and polite Learning. And Socrates [s] makes the like Obſervation upon the Education of Euſebius ſirnamed Emiſenus, who was born of noble Parentage at Edeſſa a City of Oſroene in Meſopotamia, that he was firſt taught the holy Scriptures from his Infancy, and then human Learning: And Sozomen [t] in relating the ſame Story, ſays, this was done κατὰ πάτριον ἔθος, according to the Cuſtom of the Country; which ſhews that it was no ſingular Inſtance, but a general Practice to bring Children up from their Infancy to the Uſe of the holy Scriptures. Gregory Nyſſen [u] notes it in the Life of his Sister Macrina, That the first Part of her Instruction in her Infancy was to be taught the easy Portions of Scripture, that were most suitable to her Age: And he says also [x], she did the same for her younger Brother Peter, taking him from his Mother's Breasts, and instructing him in the Scriptures, that he might have no Time to spend upon vain Studies. 'Tis noted by Sozomen [y] and Palladius, of Marcus the Hermit, that he was so expert in the Scriptures when he was but a Youth, that he could repeat all the Old and New Testament without Book. And it is observable, that as there were many Catechetick Schools in those Times for explaining the Scriptures to the Catechumens; so there were also Schools appointed in many Churches to instruct the Youth in the Knowledge of the Scriptures. When Gregory, the Apostle of the Armenians, first converted that Nation, it is said in his Life [z], that he set up Schools in every City, and Masters over them by the King's Command, to teach the Armenian Children to read the Bible. And Theodoret [a] relates a remarkable Story of Protogenes the Scribe, That when Valens the Arian Emperor banish'd him to Antinoe in Thebais, in the utmost Parts of Ægypt, he finding the greatest part of the City to be Heathens, set up a Charity-school among them, and taught them the holy Scriptures; dictating to them in Writing Short-hand David's Psalms, and making them learn such Doctrines of the Apostolical Writings, as were proper for them to understand; by which means he brought many both of the Children and Parents over to the Christian Faith. And it has been observed before [*], that by the Canons of some Councils such sort of Charity-schools were appointed to be set up in Cathedrals and other Churches, where no doubt, according to the Custom of those Days, Children were taught to read the Scriptures [b]. These Rules were renewed in several Councils under Charles the Great and the following Princes. Particularly in the second Council of Chalons [c] An. 813, it was appointed, That according to the Order of Charles the Emperor, Bishops should set up Schools to teach both Grammar and the Knowledge of the Scriptures. And in the Council of Toul or Savonieres [d] in Lorrain, the Decree was renewed, That Schools of the holy Scripture and human Learning should be erected; for as much, as by the Care of the religious Emperors in former Days, by this means both Ecclesiastical Knowledge and human Learning had made a considerable Progress in the World. And Mr. Wharton [e] will furnish the inquisitive Reader with many other Rules and Canons made about the same Time to promote and encourage the Learning of the Scriptures.

I only observe one thing more, that the very Form and Tenour of the Ordination of Readers antiently did manifestly imply, that the Service of the antient Church was always performed in a known Tongue. For they were sometimes ordained with Prayer to God for his Holy Spirit, to qualify them to read his Word to the Instruction and Edification of the People. The Form of their Ordination in the Book of the Constitutions, prays, that God [f] would give the Reader Wisdom, as he did to Esdras, to read his Laws to the People. Now it is well known how Esdras read the Law to them, by causing them to understand the Reading. Neh. viii. 7, 8. They read in the Book, in the Law of God distinctly, and gave the Sense, and caused them to understand the Reading. And if all Readers read as Esdras did, they certainly either read, or interpreted the Reading, in a known Tongue. For he rendred that which was written in the Hebrew Tongue, into the Chaldee or Syriack, which was, after the Captivity, the common Language of the People. Cyprian twice or thrice speaks of the Ordination and Office of Readers, and he plainly intimates, that the People understood what they read out of the Gospel to them. In one Place speaking of Celerinus, the Confessor, whom he had ordained a Reader, he says, It was very fitting he should read the Gospel [g], who had so courageously and faithfully observed it; and that the same Tongue which had confessed the Lord, should be daily heard to repeat what the Lord hath spoken: Since there was nothing wherein a Confessor could more advantage his Brethren, than to have them hear the Gospel read by the Mouth of such a Confessor and Reader, whose Faith was so brave an Example. In another Epistle [h] speaking of Aurelius the Confessor, whom he also ordained a Reader, he says, There was nothing more agreeable, than that that Voice, which had so gloriously confessed the Lord, should sound forth in reading the Lessons of the Lord: And after those lofty Words, whereby he proclaimed the Martyrdom of Christ, he should read the Gospel of Christ, which makes Martyrs. The Gospel was then so read that the Hearers might reap Advantage by it, whilſt they underſtood the Doctrines and Precepts that were read to them out of it. And ſuch was the Advantage which ſome Hearers in thoſe Days reaped from the Benefit of having the Scriptures read in their own Tongue, that it is very remarkable what is related of one or two of them, that being Men of good Memories, they got the Scriptures by Heart, without any Knowledge of Letters, only by hearing them conſtantly read in the Church or elſewhere. St. Auſtin [i] remarks this of St. Antony the famous Egyptian Monk, that without being able to read himſelf, he made ſuch a Proficiency in the Knowledge of the Scriptures, as both by hearing them read, to be able to repeat them, and by his own prudent Meditation to underſtand them. And Gregory the Great [k] gives a like Inſtance in one Servulus, a poor Man at Rome, who though he knew not a Letter in the Book, yet purchaſing a Bible, and entertaining religious Men, he prevailed with them to read it continually to him, by which means he perfectly learned the Holy Scriptures. 'Tis a yet more aſtoniſhing Inſtance, which Euſebius [l] gives in one of the Martyrs of Paleſtine, a blind Man, called John, who had ſo happy a Memory, that he could repeat any Part of the Bible as readily as others could read it. And he ſometimes ſupplied the Office of a Reader in the Church: And he did this to ſo great Perfection, that Euſebius ſays, when he firſt heard him, he was perfectly amazed, and thought he had heard one reading out of a Book, till he came a little more curiouſly to examine him, and found that he did it only by the Eyes of his Underſtanding, having the Scriptures written not in Books or Tables of Stone, but in the fleſhly Tables of his Heart. Theſe and ſuch like Examples, of which there are many [m] in antient Story, are enough to raiſe in a Man another ſort of Aſtoniſhment than that which Euſebius ſpeaks of: I mean it would amaze a Man to think, that there ſhould be a Church in the World pretending to the Height of Purity and Devotion, which yet runs counter to this indiſputable Practice of the antient Church, whoſe publick Readers never once pretended to read any Part of Scripture in an unknown Tongue: That being as much againſt the Deſign of their Ordination, as it is againſt the Deſign of the Scripture it ſelf: For the one was written, and the other ordained to read what was written, for Mens Learning and Inſtruction. Yea, the very Form of ordaining Readers, as it ſtands ſtill in the Roman Pontifical, ſhews as much: For it is much antienter than the Corruption that is now crept into their Service, and only ſtands there as a Monument of their Reproach, who oblige their Readers to act directly contrary to the Deſign of their Office, and the very Inſtructions that are given them in their Ordination. For there the Biſhop ſtill, in conferring the Order of Readers, uſes this Form: Study to pronounce [n] the Word of God, that is, the ſacred Leſſons, diſtinctly and plainly to the Underſtanding and Edification of the Faithful, without any Error or Falſhood; that ye may teach your Hearers both by Word and Example. This was a very proper Form of Exhortation to be given to Readers at their Ordination, while the antient Cuſtom continued of reading in a known Tongue: But now it is no better than Mockery, to tell Men they are obliged by the Vow of their Ordination to read the Scriptures to the Underſtanding, and Inſtruction, and Edification of the People; and at the ſame time tye up their Mouths, that they ſhall not read a Word that may be underſtood, but it muſt all be in an unknown Tongue. This monſtrous Contradiction in their own Practice, one would think, might bring Men to ſee their Error, and (what ſome in their Communion [o] have been ſo long pleading for) oblige them to return to the uſeful and edifying Practice of the Primitive Church.

that

CHAP. V.

Of the Original and Uſe of Liturgies, in ſtated and ſet Forms of Prayer, in the Primitive Church.

SECT. I. Every Biſhop at Liberty in the firſt Ages to order the Form of Divine Service in his own Church.

THE next Enquiry is concerning the antient manner of performing Divine Service: Whether they did it by ſtated Liturgies, which we uſually call ſet Forms of Prayer, or by unlimited Liberty of propheſying and extempore Conceptions? The Queſtion about ſet Forms of Worſhip has more diſturbed the preſent Church than any other: And yet after all there can be no publick Prayer, but it will be a ſet Form, at leaſt to the Congregation. For though we ſuppoſe the Miniſter to pray extempore, and vary the Method, the Form and the Phraſe every time he prays; yet to make it Common Prayer to a Congregation, it will be a Form to them, though a new Form every time, in ſpite of all Contradiction. And I have often wondred, that diſcerning Men ſhould not obſerve this, before they charged all Forms of Prayer as void of the Spirit, or a ſtinting of the Spirit: Since if they were ſo, Extemporary Forms would be as much ſtinting the Spirit of the Congregation as any other: And perhaps in ſome meaſure more ſo; ſince in ſtated Forms, which every one knows beforehand, Men may be ſuppoſed to make them their own hearty Prayers by preceding Meditation; whereas in extemporary Forms every Man muſt wait till he hears what is ſaid, and then join in that Form, or elſe not pray at all, but only privately by himſelf, not in any publick or common Prayer jointly with the reſt of the Congregation For which Reaſon I ſhall not here enquire ſimply, whether the publick Worſhip of the Ancients was by a Form or no: Since it is impoſſible there ſhould be any publick Worſhip of a Congregation, as a Congregation, joining in common Prayer to God, without having a common Form dictated to them ſome way or other for all to join in: But the Queſtion ſhall only be, whether they uſed ſtated Forms of Worſhip, or new extempore Forms in every Church Aſſembly? And here we muſt diſtinguiſh firſt, between Divine Forms, and Forms of Human Inſtitution. 2. Between Ordinary and Extraordinary Occaſions. 3. Between the Times of Extraordinary Gifts of the Spirit, and the Times when thoſe miraculous Gifts abated. Now there is no doubt to be made, but that the Forms of Divine Inſtitution were always uſed in the Church without any Variation. As the Form of Baptiſm, the Lord's Prayer, the ſinging of David's Pſalms, the Forms of Benediction, ſuch as, The Lord be with you, The Grace of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, &c. The conſtant Uſe of the Form of Baptiſm has been demonſtrated [*] already. The Uſe of the Lord's Prayer and the reſt ſhall be ſhewed hereafter [†]. As to Forms of Human Inſtitution, they were added by the Biſhops and Governors of the Church according to their Wiſdom and Diſcretion. And this with relation to the ordinary Service. For ſtill they were at Liberty to compoſe new Forms for extraordinary Emergencies and Occaſions. And whilſt the extraordinary Gifts of the Spirit continued, there is little doubt to be made, but that Prayers and Hymns immediately dictated by the Spirit, made up a Part of the ordinary Service, ſtill retaining ſuch Forms as were antecedently of divine Appointment. When the extraordinary Spirit of Propheſy ceaſed, then the Rulers of the Church ſupplied this Want by proper Forms of their own Compoſition, according to Chriſtian Prudence and Diſcretion. And this ſeems to have been the true Original of Liturgies, or ſtated Forms of Divine Service. But why then have we none of theſe Liturgies remaining entire and perfect to this Day? I anſwer, there may be ſeveral Reaſons aſſigned for this. One is, that the Biſhops at firſt made every one their own Liturgy for the private Uſe, as we may call it, of their own particular Churches. And therefore the Uſe of them not extending farther than the Precincts of their own Dioceſes, there was little Knowledge of them beyond the Bounds of thoſe Churches, and not much Care to preſerve them but only for the Uſe of ſuch Churches, for which they were particularly deſigned. That every Biſhop had at firſt this Power and Privilege to compoſe and order the Form of Divine Service for his own Church, I have ſhewed [‡] in another Place, where I had Occaſion to diſcourſe of the Independency of Biſhops, and their abſolute Power in their own Church: Where among other things, I obſerved, that as they had the Privilege to word their own Creeds, ſo they had the Privilege to frame their own Liturgy; which Privilege they retained for ſeveral Ages. As may be confirmed by this farther and moſt certain Obſervation, that when any new Epiſcopal Church was taken and erected out of another, the new-erected Church was not obliged to follow the Model and Preſcriptions of the old Church, but might frame to herſelf a Form of Divine Service agreeable to her own Circumſtances and Condition. Of which Sozomen [a] gives a clear Evidence in the Inſtance of Maiuma, a City raiſed from a Village in Paleſtine, and once belonging to the Dioceſe of Gaza: For as ſoon as it was erected into a diſtinct Epiſcopal See, it was no longer obliged to obſerve preciſely the Rules and Forms of the Church of Gaza, but had, as he particularly remarks, a Kalendar for the Feſtivals of its own Martyrs, and Commemorations of their own Biſhops and Presbyters that had lived among them. Which is the ſame thing, as to ſay, they had a Liturgy and Service of their own, Independent of the Church out of which they were taken.

SECT. II.

In After-ages the Churches of a whole Province by Conſent conformed to the Liturgy of the Metropolitan.

IN After-ages Biſhops agreed by Conſent to conform their Liturgy to the Model of the Metropolitical Church of the Province to which they belonged. And then it was enacted into a Law by ſeveral Councils, that the ſame Order and Uniformity ſhould be obſerved in all Churches. The Rudiments of this Diſcipline were firſt laid in the French Churches. For in the Council of Agde [b] a Canon was made about the Year 506, that one and the ſame Order ſhould be equally obſerved in all Churches of the Province in all Parts of Divine Service. And in the Council of Epone [c] it is more expreſsly ſaid, that in celebrating Divine Offices, the Provincial Biſhop ſhould obſerve the ſame Order as was obſerved by the Metropolitan. And before theſe, the Council of Vannes in Bretany in the Province of Tours, made a like Order for that whole Province, that one and the ſame [d] Cuſtom in celebrating Divine Service, and the ſame Order for Pſalmody, ſhould be kept in all Churches; that as they held one Faith and Confeſſion of the Holy Trinity, ſo they ſhould keep to one Rule of Divine Offices; leſt if they varied in their Obſervations, that Variation ſhould be interpreted as a Diſagreement in ſome Point or other. And the ſame Rule was made and concerted in the Spaniſh Churches. For in the Council of Girone, An. 517, a like Decree was made for the whole Province of Tarragone or Catalonia, that the ſame [e] Order of Maſs, and Cuſtom in Pſalmody, and other Miniſtrations, ſhould be obſerved in all Churches of the Province, as was obſerved in the Metropolitical Church. The fourth Council of Toledo enlarged the Order for Uniformity in all the Churches of Spain and Gallicia [f], obliging all Prieſts to perform Divine Offices in the ſame manner, that there might be no Diverſity among them, and that ſuch Difference might neither offend the Weak, nor look like a Schiſm in the Church to ignorant and carnal Men. Therefore they appointed, that one Order ſhould be obſerved in Praying and Singing, and the ſame Method be kept in the Morning and Evening Service, becauſe they were all of the ſame Faith, and the ſame Kingdom. And the firſt Council of Braga has four or five Canons to the ſame Purpoſe [g], appointing the ſame Order of Pſalmody, and Leſſons, and Salutations, and the ſame Forms of celebrating Baptiſm and the Euchariſt to be obſerved in all Churches. So that though every Biſhop at firſt had Liberty to frame a Liturgy for the Uſe of his own Church; yet in proceſs of Time they agreed by Conſent to take the Liturgy of the Metropolitical Church as a Standard for the whole Province: And when the Roman Empire began to cantonized and divided into different Kingdoms, then came in the Uſe of National Liturgies, whoſe Uſe was commenſurate to the Bounds and Limits of their reſpective Nations and Kingdoms.

SECT. III. Why none of the antient Liturgies are now remaining, as they were at firſt compoſed for the Uſe of particular Churches? I anſwer, Several Reaſons may be aſſigned for this. 1. The very Liberty which every Biſhop had to frame the Liturgy of his own Church, was one Reaſon why none of theſe are now remaining perfect and entire, as they were at firſt compoſed for the Uſe of ſuch a particular Church. For the Deſign of them being only for the Uſe of ſuch a particular Church, there was no great Reaſon to be very ſollicitous, either to communicate and diffuſe the Knowledge of them to other Churches, or to preſerve them entire to Poſterity, who were not preciſely tyed up to the Uſe of them, but might frame others at their own Diſcretion. 2. It is not improbable, but that as a late learned French Writer [h] has obſerved, the antient Liturgies were for ſome Ages only certain Forms of Worſhip committed to Memory, and known by Practice, rather than committed to Writing, which is the only certain Way of preſerving ſuch ſort of Monuments to late Poſterity. This ſeems very probable, becauſe in the Perſecutions under Diocletian and his Aſſociates, though a ſtrict Enquiry was made after the Books of Scripture, and other Things belonging to the Church, which were often delivered up by the Traditores to be burnt, yet we never read of any Ritual Books, or Books of Divine Service, delivered up among them. Which is an Argument, that their Forms of Worſhip and Adminiſtration of the Sacraments, were not then generally committed to Writing, or at leaſt not compiled in Books diſtinct from the Pſalms or other Books of Scripture: Otherwiſe, it is very probable, that as the Scriptures, with other Utenſils and Treaſures of the Church, were often found by the Heathens, or betrayed by apoſtatizing Chriſtians, and delivered up to be burnt; ſo we ſhould have heard ſomething of their Books of Divine Worſhip undergoing the ſame Fate: Since they who were ſo curious in enquiring after the Cups, and Lamps, and Torches, and Veſtments, and other Utenſils and Veſſels of the Church, (as in ſome of their Kalendars and Breviats we find they were) would hardly have omitted their Books of Worſhip, as being more proper Objects of their Spite and Malice, had they found any ſuch in the Chriſtian Churches. Mr. Daille [i] argues well upon this foot againſt the Uſe of Images in the antient Church, becauſe no ſuch Thing was ever found or betrayed to the Heathen in the times of their moſt furious Inquiſition after any Thing that related to the Chriſtian Church or Religion: And I think the Argument will hold as well againſt having their Liturgies compiled into Books and Volumes, ſince it is ſcarce poſſible that ſuch Things in difficult Times ſhould have wholly eſcaped the Notice and Fury of their Enemies. We are not hence to conclude (as ſome weak Men might perhaps be inclined to do) that therefore they had no Liturgies or ſet Forms of Divine Worſhip in theſe perſecuting Ages of the Church; becauſe there are undeniable Evidences to the contrary, as we ſhall ſee by and by: But we are only to conclude, that they did not ſo generally compile them in Books as in After-ages, but uſed them by Memory, and made them familiar to the People by known and conſtant Practice, as many now uſe Forms of Prayer at this Day without committing them to Writing. And this is another Reaſon, why none of thoſe antient Liturgies are come to our Hands perfect and entire, but only in ſcattered Fragments, as the Fathers had occaſion to mention them incidentally in their Writings. Nor need we wonder at this, ſince even thoſe Liturgies which were moſt certainly compiled in Books in the following Ages, are now in a great meaſure loſt alſo by the Injuries of Time, as the old Gallican, Spaniſh, African, and Roman Liturgies, of which there is nothing but Fragments and diſmembered Parcels now remaining. Which is a third Reaſon, why none of thoſe antient Liturgies are extant at this Day. The fourth and laſt Reaſon, is the Interpolations and Additions made to the antient Liturgies in future Ages. For though thoſe antient Liturgies which go under the Name of St. Chryſoſtom and St. Baſil might originally have ſomething of their Compoſition in them, yet ſo many Additions and Alterations have been made in them by the Greek Church in following Ages, that it is not eaſy to diſcern, after they have paſſed through ſo many Hands, and ſo much new modelling, what was the genuine Compoſition of the firſt Authors. And therefore I have made little Uſe of them in this Work, but rather choſen to collect the Fragments of the antient Liturgy from the ſcattered Remains in the genuine Writings of the Fathers; joining with them ſuch Forms as we find in the antient Book, called The Apoſtolical Conſtitutions: Which though it be not ſo antient as the Title pretends, nor of ſo venerable Authority as Mr. Whiſton contends for, who would have it to be truly Apoſtolical, yet it is owned to be a good Collection of the Liturgy and Rituals of the Church in the third and fourth Centuries, and leſs corrupted than any other Liturgy that bears the Name of an antient Writer: The true Reaſon of which was, becauſe it never being of that Eſteem as to be uſed as a ſtanding Liturgy in any Church, the Book came down to us with leſs Alterations than other Liturgies, which were new modelled, according to the different Taſte and Sentiments of the Ages they paſſed through, as all Things of this kind are commonly reviſed and altered by ſeveral Hands, when they are in conſtant Uſe and Practice. For Proof of which we need go no farther than the Example of our own Liturgy, which has received many Reviews, Alterations and Additions from the Time it was firſt compiled the Days of King Edward. Upon this ſcore thoſe Liturgies, which bear the Names of antient Authors, are not to be depended on, as the genuine, unmixed Liturgies of thoſe Authors, having undergone ſo many Alterations, Interpolations, and Additions by paſſing through various Hands in ſucceeding Ages. For as much therefore as we have now no antient Liturgies perfect and entire, as they were firſt compoſed, we muſt take our Accounts and Eſtimate of them from other Fountains: And by the Providence of God there is ſo much of them remaining in the genuine Writings of the antient Fathers, as both to ſhew us in general that the Church made uſe of ſtated Forms of Worſhip, and alſo what was the particular Order and Method of her Worſhip in the moſt conſiderable Parts of her ſacred Service and Devotions. We will therefore firſt give ſome Account of the Uſe of Liturgies and ſacred Rites in general, and then proceed to explain in Order the ſeveral Parts of the antient Service in the ſame natural Method as we find it was performed, at ſeveral times, either in the Daily or Weekly Aſſemblies for that Purpoſe.

SECT. IV.

What Forms were uſed in the Apoſtles Days. Where of the antient Forms uſed in the Jewiſh Worſhip, and of the new Forms introduced into the Chriſtian Service.

As to the Uſe of Liturgies in general, I ſhall begin with the Apoſtolical Times, and carry the Hiſtory through the four firſt Ages. The Apoſtolical Practice may be conſidered in a double reſpect; firſt in their Compliance with the ſtated Forms ſettled among the Jews, and ſecondly, in the new Forms introduced into the Chriſtian Service. As to the former, there ſeems to be nothing more unconteſted among learned Men, than that the Jews had ſet Forms of Worſhip in all Parts of Divine Service, and that the Apoſtles freely uſed theſe in all Inſtances, in which they thought it neceſſary or becoming to join with them. Their Ordinary Service was of two ſorts, the Service of the Temple, and the Service of the Synagogue. Theſe differed in many reſpects; but both agreed in this, that the publick Prayers in both were offered up in a certain conſtant Form of Words. For their private Prayers, which every Man made particularly by himſelf, (which were like thoſe ſilent Prayers we ſhall hereafter [*] meet with in the Chriſtian Church) a late learned Writer [k] tells us, they had no publick Forms to pray by, nor any publick Miniſters to officiate to them herein; but all prayed in private Conceptions: But their publick Prayers were directed by publick Forms both in the Service of the Temple and the Synagogue. The Temple-Service is very accurately described by Dr. Lightfoot, as it stood in the time of our Saviour: The Sum of his Description is this [l]. First, before the Offering of the Sacrifice, the President called upon them to go to Prayers, which they began with this Form: Thou hast loved us, O Lord our God, with an everlasting Love, with great and abundant Compassion hast thou had Mercy on us, O our Father, our King, for our Fathers Sakes, who trusted in Thee, and Thou taughtest them Statutes of Life. So be gracious to us also, O our Father, O most merciful Father, O Thou Compassionate One, pity us: And put into our Hearts to know, understand, obey, learn, teach, observe, do and perform all the Words of the Doctrine of thy Law in Love, and enlighten our Eyes by thy Law, and cause our Hearts to cleave to thy Commandments, and unite our Hearts to love and to fear thy Name, &c. After this Prayer they rehearsed the Ten Commandments, and after the Ten Commandments they said over their Phylacteries, in Hebrew called Tephillin, which contained four Portions of the Law written in four Parchments. The first out of Exodus xiii. from ver. 3 to 10. The second out of Exodus xiii. from ver. 11 to 16. The third out of Deut. vi. from ver. 4. to 9. The fourth out of Deut. xi. from ver. 13. to 21. After this Prayer and Rehearsal of the Decalogue and of their Phylacteries, at the time of offering Incense, they had three or four Prayers more; the first of which there was in this Form, referring to their Phylacteries: Truth and Stability, and firm and sure, and upright and faithful, and beloved and lovely and delightful, and fair and terrible and glorious, and ordered and acceptable, and good and beautiful is this Word for us for ever and ever. The Truth of the everlasting God our King, the Rock of Jacob, the Shield of our Salvation, for ever and ever. He is sure, and his Name sure, and his Throne settled, and his Kingdom and Truth established for evermore, &c.

[*] See Book XV. Chap. i.

The second Prayer was in this Form: Be pleased, O Lord our God, with thy People Israel, and with their Prayer, and restore the Service to the Oracle of thy House, and accept the Burnt-Offering of Israel, and their Prayer in Love and Complacency; and let the Service of thy People Israel be continually well-pleasing unto Thee. And they concluded thus: We praise Thee, who art the Lord our God, and the God of our Fathers, the God of all Flesh, our Creator and the God of all Creatures: Glory and Praise be to Thy great and holy Name, because thou hast preserved and kept us; so preserve and keep us, and bring back our Captivity to the Courts of thy Holiness, &c.

A third Prayer ran thus: Appoint Peace, Goodness and Blessing, Grace, Mercy and Compassion for us, and for all Israel thy People. Bless us, O our Father, even all of us as one Man, with the Light of thy Countenance; for in the Light of thy Countenance Thou, O Lord our God, hast given us the Law of Life, and Loving-mercy and Righteousness, and Blessing and Compassion, and Life and Peace: Let it please Thee to bless thy People Israel at all Times. Let us and all thy People the House of Israel be remembered and written before Thee in the Book of Life, with Blessing and Peace, &c.

A Fourth Prayer was used on the Sabbath as a Blessing, by the Course that went out of their Service, upon those that came in to do the Service of the following Week, in these Words: He that caused his Name to dwell in this House, cause Love and Brotherhood and Peace and Friendship to dwell among you.

After these Things the Priests lifted up their Hands and blessed the People in that Form of Words, which is in Numb. vi. 24. The Lord bless thee, and keep thee: The Lord make his Face shine upon thee, and be gracious unto thee: The Lord lift up his Countenance upon thee, and give thee Peace. To which the People answered, Blessed be the Lord God, the God of Israel, from Everlasting to Everlasting.

After this Blessing, the Meat-offering, and the Drink-offering was offered, and then began the singing of Psalms and the Musick. The constant and ordinary Psalms which they sung, were these:

On the first Day of the Week, the xxivth Psalm, The Earth is the Lord's, and the Fullness thereof, &c.

On the second Day, Psalm xlviii. Great is the Lord, and greatly to be praised in the City of God, &c.

On the third Day, the lxxxiid Psalm, God standeth in the Congregation of the Mighty, and judgeth among Gods, &c.

On the fourth Day, the xcivth Psalm, O Lord God, to whom Vengeance belongeth, &c.

On the fifth Day, Psalm lxxxi. Sing aloud unto God our Strength, make a joyful Noise unto the God of Jacob.

On the sixth Day, Psalm xciii. The Lord reigneth, He is clothed with Majesty.

On the Sabbath Day they sang Psalm xcii, which bears the Title of A Psalm or Song for the Sabbath Day, both in the Hebrew Bibles, and the Translation of the Septuagint.

These were the known, and constant, and fixed Psalms for the several Days of the Week throughout the Year [m]. But upon some certain Days they had additional Psalms and Hymns. For on the Sabbath, as there was an additional Sacrifice appointed, Numb. xxviii. 9. so at the Time of this additional Sacrifice, the Levites sang the Song of Moses, Deut. xxxii. Hear, O Heavens, and I will speak: Which they divided into six Sabbaths for the Morning Service: and at the Evening Service they sang that other Song of Moses, Exod. xv. I will sing unto the Lord, for he triumphed gloriously: The Horse and his Rider hath he thrown into the Sea, &c. By which Custom of singing the Songs of Moses upon the Sabbath, Dr. Lightfoot observes [n], that that

Passage

Paſſage in Rev. xv. 3. may be illuſtrated, where the Saints are ſaid to ſing the Song of Moſes, the Servant of God: Becauſe they were now come to their everlaſting Sabbath, having gotten the Victory over the Beaſt, and over his Image, and over his Mark, and over the Number of his Name, and having the Harps of God in their Hands. Which Alluſion to the Sabbath Service in the time of St. John, is a good Argument for the Antiquity of the Practice.

Beſides this, there was an additional Sacrifice appointed on the firſt Day of the Year, called the Feaſt of Trumpets, Numb. xxix. 1. and at this time they ſang the eighty firſt Pſalm, Sing aloud unto God our Strength, &c. And at the Evening Service of this Day, the twenty ninth Pſalm, The Voice of the Lord ſhaketh the Wilderneſs, &c.

Alſo at the Paſſover, beſides many other Forms, they were uſed to ſing the Hymn, called, the Egyptian Hallel, becauſe it was ſung in Remembrance of their Delivery out of Egypt: Which conſiſted of the cxiii, cxiv, cxv, cxvi, cxvii, and cxviii Pſalms. And this, as ſome [o] obſerve, was ſung alſo at the Beginning of every Month, and on the Feaſt of Dedication, and the Feaſt of Weeks, and the Feaſt of Tabernacles. And the later Part of it is generally ſuppoſed to be the Hymn which our Saviour ſung with his Diſciples at the Concluſion of his laſt Supper.

This is the Sum of the Jewiſh Temple Service, as it ſtood in our Saviour's Time; with which, notwithſtanding its ſtated Forms, both he and his Diſciples comply'd, whenever they had Occaſion upon any ſuch Solemnities to frequent the Temple.

The Service of the Synagogue was ſomething different from that of the Temple. For here were no Sacrifices, but only theſe three Things: 1. Prayers. 2. Reading of the Scriptures. 3. Preaching and Expounding upon them. Their publick Prayers, like thoſe of the Temple, were all by ſtated Forms. Among theſe the moſt antient and ſolemn were thoſe which are called Shemoneh Eſhreh, that is, the eighteen Prayers, which are ſaid to have been appointed by Ezra, and the great Synagogue from the Time of the Captivity. Theſe have been lately tranſlated and publiſhed by Dr. Prideaux in his Connection of Scripture-Hiſtory [p], which becauſe it is a Work that deſerves to be in every one's Hands, I ſhall not here tranſcribe, but refer the Reader thither for the Knowledge of them. Only whereas he obſerves rightly, that another Prayer, called the nineteenth, was added a little before the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem, againſt the Chriſtians, who are therein meant under the Names of Apoſtates and Hereticks; I ſhall confirm his Obſervation from a Paſſage in Epiphanius [q], who tells us, that the Jews in their Synagogues were uſed to pray againſt the Chriſtians in this Form: καθαράσαι ὁ Θεὸς τὺς ναζαραίυς, O God, curſe the Nazarenes. And the ſame thing is intimated by Juſtin Martyr [r], who ſays, immediately after our Saviour's Reſurrection the Jews ſent forth their choſen Emiſſaries to all the Synagogues in the World, to tell them, that there was a certain impious, lawleſs Sect riſen up under one Jeſus a Galilean Impoſtor, whom they had crucified, but his Diſciples came by Night, and ſtole him away out of the Grave, and deceived Men by ſaying, He was riſen from the Dead, and aſcended into Heaven: And he adds, that after their City was demoliſhed, they repented not, but even dared καθαράσθαι αὐτὸν, to curſe him, and all that believed on him. Which plainly refers to this additional Prayer inſerted into their Liturgy againſt the Chriſtians. But excepting this Prayer, which was of later Date, all the other ſeem to have been in Uſe in the Time of our Saviour and his Apoſtles. And as we are ſure they frequented the Synagogues, ſo there is no doubt to be made, but that they join'd in theſe uſual Forms of Prayer, which were one Part of the Synagogue Service.

The other Parts of this Service, were the Reading of the Law and the Prophets, and expounding of them to the People. Which was alſo done by a certain Rule and Order. For the five Books of Moſes were divided into as many Sections or Leſſons, as there are Weeks in the Year, one of which was read every Sabbath, and half of the ſame every Monday and Thurſday, which were their Days of Aſſembly for the Synagogue Service. At theſe our Saviour was uſually preſent, and ſometimes aſſiſted and officiated in Reading, according to Cuſtom, as a Member of the Synagogue, as is expreſly ſaid of him, Luke iv. 16. and at other Times taught in their Synagogues, Mark i. 39. Luke iv. 15, 44. which is alſo noted of St. Paul, Acts xiii. 15. and xvi. 13. and xvii. 2. and xviii. 4. that it was his Manner on the Sabbath Days to go into the Synagogues, where Prayer was wont to be made, and there, after the Reading of the Law and the Prophets, to preach to the People, and diſpute or reaſon with them. So that notwithſtanding the publick Service of the Synagogue was all performed by Order and Form, yet this was no Reaſon to the Apoſtles to refrain from it, as a Thing ſimply ſinful or unlawful; but they comply'd with it for ſome time, probably to gain upon the Jews the better, and make them lay aſide their Prejudices againſt the Chriſtian Doctrine.

But beſides their Compliance with the ſtated Forms of the Jewiſh Liturgy and Worſhip, they had ſome Forms of their own in conſtant Uſe among themſelves. Among which we may ſafely venture to reckon, 1. The Lord's Prayer, as a Form appointed by Chriſt to be uſed by all his Diſciples; of which the Primitive Chriſtians never made any Diſpute, as we ſhall ſee more fully hereafter. 2. The Form of Baptiſm, conſtantly uſed without any Variation, as has been ſhewed in a former [*] Book. 3. The Forms of profeſſing their Faith in Baptiſm, or the Forms of ſound Words ſettled in every Church. 4. The Forms of Renouncing Satan, and Covenanting with Chriſt in Baptiſm. 5. The Forms of Scripture Hymns and Pſalms, and Glorifications of God. To which the Ancients ſeem to add ſixthly, the Forms of Benediction, ſuch as, The Grace of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, &c. And laſtly, the Repetition of the Hiſtory of Chriſt's Inſtitution of the laſt Supper, as a neceſſary part of Conſecration, which, together with the Uſe of the Lord's Prayer in the Celebration of the Euchariſt, is generally thought to deſcend from Apoſtolical Practice. Theſe Things are ſufficient to ſhew, that even the Apoſtles themſelves, notwithſtanding the extraordinary Gift of inſpired Prayer, whether in Matter, or Method, or Words, or Languages, ſometimes confined themſelves to Forms, without any Reflection on their Gifts, or ſtinting of the Spirit, or want of Edification to their Hearers. If theſe Things be rightly conſidered, ſome of them at leaſt will evince, That the Uſe of well-choſen and well-appointed Forms, are no ways diſagreeable to Apoſtolical Practice, ſince the Apoſtles themſelves both comply'd with the Forms in Uſe in the Jewiſh Temple and Synagogue, and uſed ſome others of Chriſtian Inſtitution. I now proceed to carry this Enquiry through the three or four following Ages of the Church.

And here firſt we may add what Joſephus ſays of the Eſſenes [s], that they were uſed to riſe before the Sun was up, and offer unto God πατρίους τινας εὐχὰς, certain Prayers according to the Cuſtom of their Forefathers, or ſuch as they had received from them: And what Philo ſays [t] of the Therapeutæ of Alexandria, the Aſceticks, whether Jews or Chriſtians, that lived there in his Time, that the Preſident among them, after he had made a Sermon, firſt began to ſing an Hymn to the Praiſe of God, either ſuch as he had compoſed himſelf, or one taken out of the antient Prophets, in the Cloſe of which they all both Men and Women joined in Conſort with him. Again in their Vigils [u] they divided themſelves into two Quires, the one of Men, the other of Women, each of which had their Precentor, and ſo they ſang Hymns to the Glory of God, compoſed in divers ſorts of Metre, ſometimes one Side ſinging and ſometimes the other, in Imitation of the Children of Iſrael, under the Conduct of Moſes and Miriam, their Precentors, at the Red-Sea. This was ſo much a Reſemblance of the antient Chriſtian way of Pſalmody, that Euſebius [x], who tranſcribes a great many Things out of this curious Tract of Philo, was clearly of Opinion, that it was a Deſcription of the Worſhip of ſuch Jews as had embraced the Chriſtian Religion: In which Opinion he is followed not only by St. Jerom [y], but by many learned Writers of this laſt Age alſo. I ſhall not need to determine this Queſtion, whether they were Jews or Chriſtians: It is ſufficient to our preſent Purpoſe, that their Way of Worſhipping God by certain Forms of Praiſe, and thoſe of human Compoſition, was the ſame, or ſo much alike, that it was not eaſy to diſtinguiſh the one from the other.

In the Beginning of the ſecond Century lived Pliny, a Roman Proconſul in Bithynia, who giving Trajan the Emperor an Account of the Chriſtian Way of Worſhip, which he had from the Mouth of ſome Apoſtates, ſays, They were uſed to meet on a certain Day before it was light, and ſing an Hymn alternately to Chriſt as God, binding themſelves by an Oath or Sacrament (not to any wicked Thing, but) that they would not ſteal, nor rob, nor commit Adultery, nor break their Faith, nor with-hold the Pledge [z]. The Word, Carmen dicere, which Pliny uſes, will ſignify a ſolemn Form of Prayer, as well as Praiſes, as Voſſius [a] and Briſſonius [b] have obſerved out of the Roman Writers: And then it will denote, that their whole Divine Service was by a ſtated Form. However in the moſt reſtrained Senſe it implies, that they uſed certain Forms in ſome part of their Service in their alternate Hymnody, which could not otherwiſe be performed but by Compoſition and Preſcription. And that makes it probable, that the reſt of their Service was then of the ſame Nature and Order.

In the Beginning of the ſame Century Ignatius is ſaid by the antient Hiſtorians to have brought in the Way of Alternate Singing [c] into the Church of Antioch; that is, Hymns ſung alternately to the Praiſe of the Holy Trinity. For they ſpeak not of the alternate ſinging of David's Pſalms, as introduced by Ignatius, but of Hymns compoſed by him to ſet forth the Divinity of Chriſt: Which appears to have been a very antient Practice, not only from what has been already obſerved out of the Account given by Pliny, but from what is ſaid by that antient Author in Euſebius [d], who wrote againſt the Hereſy of Artemon in the latter end of the ſecond Century; where among other Arguments which he brings for the Church's conſtant Belief of our Saviour's Divinity, he urges this for one, that from the Beginning there were Pſalms and Hymns compoſed by the Brethren, and written by the faithful, ſetting forth the Praiſes of Chriſt as the Word of God, and declaring the Divinity of his Perſon. Among theſe Hymns we may reckon thoſe of Ignatius, compoſed for the Service of the Church of Antioch, which probably might continue in Uſe till Paulus Samoſatenſis removed them out of the Church, and introduced others in their room, as the Fathers of the

'Tis not improbable likewise, but that Ignatius, as he made Hymns, so might compose a whole Form of Prayers for the Use of his own Church, as was customary for Bishops to do in those Days. To which Custom he seems to refer in his Epistle to the Magnesians, when he bids them do nothing without the Bishops and the Presbyters; nor attempt any thing seemingly agreeable to their private Fancies: But when they met [f] together, to have one Prayer and one Supplication. Which not only forbids them to break out and divide into Schisms and separate Assemblies, but also to conform to the Order of Prayers agreed upon by the Bishop and Presbytery of the Church.

Not long after Ignatius, we meet with the Collateral Evidence of Lucian the Heathen, who had some Knowledge of the Christian Service. For in one of his Dialogues, describing his coming into a religious Assembly, he says, he there heard that Prayer which began with the Father, and ended with the Hymn of many Names [g]. 'Tis more than probable, that by the Prayer beginning with the Father, he means the Lord's Prayer, which was of known and general Use in the Eucharistical Service: But it is not so clear what he means by the Hymn of many Names, that came after it. Bishop Wettenhal [h] takes it for the lesser or common Doxology, Glory be to the Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Ghost: Dr. Smith [i] and others, for the great Doxology, Glory be to God on high; which I think more probable: Though it is not necessary in our present Enquiry, to determine what Hymn it was: It being sufficient to our Purpose, that he speaks of some Prayers and Hymns then of such common and vulgar Use in the Christian Worship, as that they were known to the very Heathens.

Justin Martyr's Authority is commonly alledged on both Sides, both for and against Liturgies. The Defenders of prescribed Forms urge his mentioning κοιναὶς εὐχαὶς, Common Prayers [k]: The Opposers with great Vehemence argue for extempore Prayer, because he says, the Bishop offered Prayers and Thanksgivings ὅση δύναμις, with all his Might and Power [l]. Now to speak freely, I think there is no Demonstration in either of these Expressions: For they are both ambiguous. Common Prayer does not always imply, that the Minister prayed by a prescribed Form: For inspired Prayer was doubtless common Prayer, when offered in a publick Congregation: And though it was then a Form prescribed to the People, yet it was not so to the Minister; but conceived by immediate Inspiration. Therefore we cannot argue barely from the mentioning of common Prayer, that the Minister prayed by a prescribed Form, unless it be added, as usually it is in Chrysostom, that the Congregation prayed μιᾷ φωνῇ, with one Voice, joining vocally in the whole Prayer, or alternately by way of Responses, with the Minister. For that implies, that the People understood beforehand the Words of their common Prayers, before they were uttered by the Minister. On the other hand there is no Solidity in the Argument brought against Liturgies, from Justin's saying, that the Bishop prayed and gave Thanks, ὅση δύναμις, with all his Ability or Power. For this may not at all relate to the Invention of Words, but to the Ardency and Intenseness of Devotion, which may be in the Use of prescribed Forms as well as those of immediate Conception. And so it is plain the very same Phrase is used by Nazianzen, when he exhorts the Christians to sing ὅση δύναμις, with all their Might, that triumphal Hymn [m] upon the Death of Julian, which the Children of Israel sang when the Egyptians were drowned in the Red Sea. Which was not an extempore Hymn, but a Form composed by Moses, and appointed to be sung alternately by the Congregation of Israel, Exod. xv. So that after all the Pains that has been taken by some late Writers to draw an Argument against Liturgies out of this Passage of Justin, there is no Reason for such a Conclusion: And yet this is the only Passage that is brought against them. But it is more material to consider, that Justin lived among the Jews, who certainly used set Forms of Prayer, one of which he condemns, as I have shewed before, as an Execration inserted against the Christians, but says nothing against the other, which yet doubtless he would have done, had he believed the Use of Liturgies to have been only a piece of Jewish Superstition, unbecoming the Spirit of a Christian. But he too well understood the Practice of our Saviour and his Apostles, in complying with the Forms of the Jewish Service, to put any such Mark or Brand of Infamy upon them. And therefore this is of more Weight with me, to persuade that Justin believed the known Forms both of the Jewish and Christian Service to be lawful, than any ambiguous Expressions are to persuade the contrary.

Not long after Justin lived Irenæus, Bishop of Lyons in France. And he takes Notice of a certain Form used in the Christian Worship, so well known to the Valentinian Hereticks, that they made Use of it as an Argument to prove their own fabulous Doctrine of the Æones: For, said they, You your selves of the Church in your Thanksgivings, say, For Ages of Ages, [n] or Æones of Æones; thereby intimating the Æones which we contend for. This plainly refers to ſome Form of Thankſgiving then of known Uſe in the Church. Dr. Comber and ſome others take it for the Gloria Patri, becauſe it ends as that in Irenæus did, with the Words, World without End. Amen. But I rather conceive with Dr. Grabe [o], that it was the Concluſion of the great Thankſgiving in the Euchariſt; where the Glorification of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt, ends with the Words εἰς τὸς αἰῶνας τ῀ αἰώνων, World without End; to which the People always anſwered, Amen, as appears from the Form remaining in the Conſtitutions [p], of which more in its proper Place.

About the ſame time lived Clemens of Alexandria, who ſpeaking of the Church, ſays, It was the Congregation of thoſe who proſtrated themſelves in Prayers, having as it were φωνὴν τὴν κοινὴν, one common voice [q]. Which implies That their Prayers were ſuch as that they could join vocally in them, either by repeating the whole, or at leaſt by alternate Reſponſes. He alſo mentions a Form of Prayer uſed over the Penitents by the Valentinians Impoſition of Hands, in the cloſe of which were theſe Words [r], That they may obtain Angelical Abſolution. Not to mention that common Form of Doxology, which he uſes at the End of his Pædagogue, To whom be Glory both now and for ever, World without End. Amen.

Next after him Tertullian often tells us, That they uſed the Lord's Prayer as a Form enjoyned by divine Command; of which I ſhall ſay more in a following Chapter [*]. He alſo ſays [s], That the Form of Baptiſm was appointed and preſcribed by Chriſt to be always in the Name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghoſt. And not only ſo, but to this the Church added ſeveral other Ceremonies and Obſervations, which were not enjoyned expreſly in ſo many Words by Chriſt. As the Form of renounncing the Devil [t], and his Pomp, and his Angels; the trine Immerſion; the Interrogatories and Reſponſes, which were made in a certain Form to the Articles of the Creed; the giving of Milk and Honey to the newly baptized; the Obligation to abſtain from bathing for a whole Week after. All which Obſervations were only of Eccleſiaſtical Inſtitution and Preſcription. So again their receiving the Euchariſt in their Morning [u] Aſſemblies before Day, which Chriſt inſtituted after Supper; their annual Oblations and Commemorations for the dead, their avoiding Faſting, and refuſing to pray kneeling on the Lord's Day, and the fifty Days between Eaſter and Pentecoſt; their ſigning themſelves with the ſign of the Croſs upon all Occaſions; and their appointing of Occaſional Faſts [x], together with the Faſt of Lent and ſtationary Days. None of which were of expreſs Divine Command, but were inſtituted by the Church, with many other Obſervations of the like nature, for the Edification of her Children, as her Rules of Diſcipline, and Pſalmody, and ſinging a particular Pſalm at the Euchariſt, which is mentioned by our Author [y]. Again he intimates [z] that in all their Aſſemblies they had not only Sermons and Prayers, but alſo the Scriptures read, and Pſalms ſung to the Glory of God. Which muſt be allowed to be Forms of Praiſe and Glorification. Nor would it be material to ſuggeſt, that Tertullian, when he wrote this, was a Montaniſt: For both the Church and Hereticks commonly agreed in ſinging of David's Pſalms, and even vied in Hymns of their own Compoſition and Preſcription. Tertullian indeed does not expreſly ſay, that their Prayers, like their Pſalms, were offered in a certain Form of Words: But he ſays what may incline a Man reaſonably to believe it. For as a Proof of the Chriſtians Loyalty, he ſays, [a] they met together, and as if they were drawn up in a Battle, did jointly ſet upon God with their Prayers, which Violence was acceptable to him. They prayed for the Emperors, for their Officers and Powers, for the State of the World, for the Peace of their Government, and for the Continuance of their Empire. And again he ſays, They prayed conſtantly for all the Emperors, that they might have a long Life and quiet Reign; that their Family might be ſafe, their Armies valiant, their Senate faithful, their People virtuous, and that the whole World might be in Peace. Now theſe, as we ſhall ſee hereafter, were known Parts of the Church's Liturgy; and if they had not been of conſtant Uſe, they had been but poor Arguments of the Chriſtians Loyalty, for which Tertullian here produces them. In another Place he expreſly mentions the ſame Doxology as Irenæus does before him; for ſpeaking againſt Chriſtians frequenting the Roman Theaters, he asks them, with what Face they could go [b] from the Church of God into the Church of the Devil? And with that Mouth, wherewith they had ſaid Amen at the Conſecration or Reception of the Euchariſt, give Teſtimony to a Gladiator? or ſay, World without End, to any beſides God and Chriſt, or to any beſides Chriſt their God? I do not take this, with ſome learned Men, to mean that common Form of Doxology, Glory be to the Father, &c. at the End of the Pſalms, but the Concluſion of the Conſecration-Prayer in the Communion-Service, which, as I noted before, always ended with thoſe Words, εἰς αἰῶνας, World without End, to which the People ſubjoyn'd their Amen. And then it is an evident Proof that the African Churches had a certain Form of Prayer for conſecrating the Euchariſt, the known Words of which Tertullian could alledge to the People, as an Argument to diſſuade them from frequenting the Heathen Theaters. He alſo intimates, that they ſang Pſalms and Hymns alternately in private [c]; for to diſſuade Chriſtian Women from marrying Heathen Husbands, he uſes this Argument, What will ſuch an Husband ſing to his Wife, or the Wife to her Husband? But if they married Chriſtian Husbands, then they would ſing Pſalms and Hymns between themſelves, and mutually provoke one another, and ſtrive [d] who ſhould make the ſweeteſt Melody to their God. And there is no doubt to be made, but that this private Pſalmody was an Imitation of the publick Pſalmody of the Church. So when he ſays, That at their Feaſts of Charity, after the Communion was ended, in the cloſe of all, when they had waſhed their Hands, and brought in Lights [e], every one was excited either to ſing ſomething out of Scripture, or ſome Hymn of his own compoſing: This as plainly argues, that they made uſe of Forms in this Part of their private Devotions. For the Pſalms of Scripture are undoubtedly Forms: And Hymns of private Compoſition are no leſs ſo, unleſs we will ſuppoſe every one that ſings, has Words ſuggeſted to him by immediate Inſpiration; which ſtill will be a Form to the Congregation that hears it, though not to the Perſon who is ſo extraordinarily inſpired by the Holy Ghoſt.

But there is one Expreſſion in Tertullian, which the Oppoſers of Liturgies lay great Streſs upon, becauſe he ſays, The Chriſtians prayed for the Emperor [f] ſine Monitore, quia de Pectore, without any Monitor, becauſe they prayed from their Heart: Which they expound praying Extempore. But if this be interpreted rigidly, it will prove much more than the Objectors deſign. For if they prayed ſimply without any Monitor, then it will exclude even the Miniſter's dictating to them his own Conceptions; becauſe theſe will be an Admonition or Direction to the People: and ſo all publick Prayer muſt ceaſe, and all Devotion be reſolved into the private Prayers of the People. Which is ſuch an Abſurdity, as neither Tertullian ever thought of, nor the Objectors themſelves will allow. Whatever therefore be meant by this Phraſe, Praying from the Heart without a Monitor; it cannot mean, that the People's Prayers were ſimply their own Conceptions. Among the many Interpretations which are put upon theſe Words by learned Men (which may be ſeen in Dr. Faulkner [g] or Dr. Comber) I take theſe two to be the moſt natural; Either firſt, That they prayed Memoriter, ſaying their Prayers by Heart, and needing no Prompter, as the Heathens did; which is the Senſe that Rigaltius [h] and Biſhop Fell [i] put upon it: In which Senſe it is an Argument for Liturgies, and not againſt them: Or ſecondly, That they prayed ſincerely from the Heart, and freely out of the Loyaly of their own Heart without Compulſion, as Hamond Leſtrange and Dr. Comber [k] interpret it. Which ſeems to be the trueſt Senſe: For the Heathens were neither ſincere, nor hearty, nor zealous in their Prayers for the Emperor; but the Chriſtians offered their Prayers with all thoſe due Qualifications, as became the Character of truly pious Votaries, and loyal Subjects. The Senſe of this dark Paſſage being thus cleared, it remains no Argument againſt Liturgies, unleſs a Man will ſay, there can be no ſuch thing as Sincerity and Heartineſs in a Form of Prayer. Which would be to condemn the whole Catholick Church in the time of Tertullian, from whoſe Teſtimonies it is evident, that Forms were generally uſed in moſt Parts of divine Service.

I have nothing farther to add in this Century, but only one or two ſmall Obſervations out of The Acts of St. Perpetua and Felicitas, two African Martyrs, who ſuffered in the latter End of this Age. There it is remarked of Perpetua [l] That ſeeming in a Viſion to receive the Euchariſt into her Hands and eat it, all that ſtood round her ſaid, Amen. Alluding to the Cuſtom of ſaying Amen at the Reception of it from the Hands of the Miniſter in the Church. There is a like Alluſion to the Uſe of the Triſagion, Holy, Holy, Holy [m], which the Angels uſed in Heaven. And a farther Intimation of the ſolemn Cuſtom of giving the Peace, and the Kiſs of Peace in the Communion. For 'tis ſaid [n], That Perpetua and her Brother Saturus ſaluted one another with a Kiſs before they ſuffered, that they might conſummate their Martyrdom by the ſolemn Rites of giving the Peace.

SECT. VI.
What Evidence there is for the Uſe of ſet Forms in the third Century.

IN the Beginning of the third Century, about the Year two hundred twenty, lived Hippolytus the Martyr, and Biſhop of Adana or Portus Romanus in Arabia. Among other learned Works, he wrote a Book called Ἀποστολικὴ παράδοσις περὶ χαρισμάτων, The Apostolical Tradition concerning Ecclesiastical Offices. Which, according to the general Opinion of the most learned Criticks, Dr. Bernard, Dr. Gale and others [o], is no other than the eighth Book of those called The Apostolical Constitutions, which they think were compiled and published at Rome by this Author. And if so, there can be question what his Opinion was about the use of Forms in Divine Service: For that Book is nothing else but a Collection of such Forms, as either were in use, or made in Imitation of those that were then in use in the Church. I will not alledge any of them here, because I do it in every Part of this Work, and it would be very needless and superfluous here to repeat them.

Besides this, Hippolytus wrote a Book of Odes or Hymns upon several Parts of Scripture, some of which most probably were of use in the publick Service. For in another Treatise of the Consummation of the World and Antichrist [p], he commends the use of Doxologies, and Psalms, and spiritual Odes; and makes it one of the Signs of the Reign of Anti-christ, that Liturgy shall be extinguished, Psalmody shall cease, and Reading of the Scriptures shall not be heard. 'Tis true indeed, some Learned Men, Bishop Usher [q], Combefis, and Du Pin, reject this as a spurious Tract, composed by some modern Greeks: But as Learned Criticks, Labbè [r] and Bishop Bull [†], have undertaken to defend it, and answer all the Arguments that are produced against it. I will not enter into this Debate, but only say, that as there is nothing in this Passage now alledged dissonant to the Sense of Hippolytus's other Works, we may be allowed to cite it in this Cause, till some clearer Evidence can be produced against it. Hippolytus wrote also a Book, called, Canon Paschalis, which Scaliger [s] and Gothofred [t] take to be a Kalendar, shewing what Lessons were to be read on several Festivals; as the first of St. Matthew, called Γένεσις, the Generation of Christ, on the Vigil of Christ's Nativity; and the Πάθος, or the History of his Sufferings out of the Gospel of St. Matthew, on the Day of his Crucifixion: And it is certain from many Passages in St. Chrysostom, St. Austin, and others, that such Kalendars were used in the Church, as shall be shewed in another Place [u], when I come to speak of the antient Method of reading the holy Scriptures by a certain Rule and Order in Divine Service. But because Ægidius Bucherius, who has since republished this Paschal Cycle, and Dr. Cave [x] give another Interpretation of it, I will lay no greater Stress upon it than it will bear, contenting my self in so critical a Point to have suggested the Sense of learned Men, and leave the Matter to the farther Disquisition of the curious Reader; having otherwise given sufficient Evidence, that the Church in the time of Hippolytus used stated Forms of Prayer and Praises in her publick Service.

Not long after Hippolitus lived Origen, who was one of his Scholars, and took some of his Opinions from him. Now this Writer in of his Homilies upon Jeremy [y] expresly mentions one of the Prayers of constant Use in the Church: We frequently say in our Prayers, says he, Grant us, O Almighty God, grant us a Part with Thy Prophets; grant us a Part with the Apostles of Thy Christ; Grant that we may be found at the Feet of Thy only Begotten Son. Which is a Testimony so clear, that the Centuriators [z] made no Scruple to conclude hence, that Forms of Prayer were undoubtedly used in the Church in the Time of Origen. He elsewhere [a] says, the Christians used the ordered or prescribed Prayers, as became them continually Night and Day, whereby they were preserved against the Power of Magick and the Devil. For Celsus in his spiteful way had advanced an egregious Calumny against the Christians, pretending that he had seen in the Hands of some of their Presbyters certain barbarous Books, containing the Names of the Devils and their Impostors; hereby insinuating, that the Prayers which the Christian Presbyters had in their Books, were only magical Enchantments: Which Calumny Origen not only rejects with scorn, appealing to the Experience of the World, which knew it to be a Fiction; but also tells his Adversary farther, that the Prayers which they used by Order and Appointment, were such as render'd them invincible and Proof against all the Force of Magick and Power of the Devils. Now considering that the Objection of Celsus lay against the Service Books of the Christian Presbyters, 'tis reasonable to conclude, that Origen's Answer relates to the same: For Origen does not deny that they had any such Books, but only says, their Prayers, which they were ordered to use, were of a different nature from what the Adversary had represented them.

To this we may add what Origen says in his Comments upon Job, that by antient Custom of the Church [b] the Book of Job was always read in Lent, and particularly in the Passion Week, as most properly adapted to that Occasion. The Reader may find this Passage at length hereafter [*], and therefore it is sufficient to hint in this Place, that the Scriptures in his Time were methodized and brought under Rule, being read by some certain Order and Prescription.

Not long after Origen, St. Cyprian teſtifies not only that the Lord's Prayer was uſed as a Form, and as a ſpiritual Form, moſt acceptable to God, as we ſhall ſee hereafter; but alſo mentions ſeveral other Forms of common and noted uſe in Divine Service. As in the Adminiſtration of Baptiſm, every one was to renounce the Devil and the World in a certain Form of Words [c] then vulgarly known in the Church, which Cyprian more than once has occaſion to mention. They were likewiſe to make profeſſion of the ſeveral Articles of the Chriſtian Faith in a certain Form of Words, which every Church had for that purpoſe, and for this particular Uſe collected into a Creed. Cyprian [d] often ſpecifies both the Interrogatories, and the Anſwers that were made upon this Occaſion: And he aſſures us, they were ſo preciſe to a Form, that the Novatians themſelves [e] uſed the very ſame Words in their Queſtions and Reſponſes, as the Catholicks did: They obſerved the ſame Rule as the Church did; they baptized with the ſame Creed; they asked the Party, Whether he believed in Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt? Whether he believed in the Remiſſion of Sins, and eternal Life by the Holy Church? Which were the firſt and laſt Words in the Creed. So they kept cloſe to the ſame Form of Words, though they differed about the Senſe of them in ſome Particulars relating to Remiſſion of Sins, and the Church. Which is ſo clear an Argument for the Obſervation of a Form in Baptiſm, that I ſee not what can reaſonably be reply'd to it.

Then again, for the Prayers in the Adminiſtration of the Euchariſt, nothing can be more evident, than that the People bare a Part in them. I will not inſiſt on thoſe Expreſſions of his, that they had publick and common Prayer [f], becauſe they are capable of an Evaſion: But what he ſays of the People's anſwering to the Prieſt, is not to be evaded. For perſuading the People to uſe Diligence and Attention in their Prayers, he puts them in mind of an uſual Form of Speech, which the whole Church uſed to raiſe their Souls to a ſpiritual and heavenly Temper. The Prieſt, ſays he, before Prayer prepares the Hearts [g] of the Brethren, by premiſing a Preface, and ſaying, Lift up your Hearts: that whilſt the People anſwer, We lift them up unto the Lord, they may be admoniſhed at that Time to think of nothing but the Lord only. What Cyprian ſays here of this Preface coming before the Prayer, is not ſo to be underſtood, as if it came before all the Prayers of the Church, but immediately before the Prayer of Conſecration in the Communion-Service: For, as we ſhall ſee hereafter, there came before this both the Prayers for the Catechumens and Penitents, and the Prayers for the Faithful, or the whole State of Chriſt's Church; but when the ſolemn Prayer of the Oblation was to be made, then it was that the Prieſt called upon the People in this Form, Lift up your Hearts; and they anſwered, We lift them unto the Lord: The Prieſt went on again, and ſaid, Let us give Thanks to our Lord God; and the People anſwered, It is juſt and right ſo to do. Then followed the Euchariſtical or Conſecration Prayer, and the Lord's Prayer; and after that the Salutation, Pax vobis, Peace be with you; to which the People anſwered, And with thy Spirit. After which they gave one another mutually the Kiſs of Peace, and then proceeded to receive the holy Sacrament. This was the Form and Order of the Communion Service in St. Auſtin's Time in the African Church; and it is very probable it might be much the ſame in the Time of Cyprian: But Cyprian had no occaſion to mention any other part of the Prayers, but only that which related to his particular Subject; which one is ſufficient to prove, that ſtated Forms of Prayer were then allowed in the publick Service of the Church of Carthage, and probably in the reſt of the African Churches.

At the ſame time with Cyprian lived Firmilian, Biſhop of Cæſarea in Cappadocia, who having occaſion to ſpeak of a certain Woman, an Impoſtor, who pretended to the Spirit of Prophecy, he ſays, ſhe took upon her [h] to conſecrate the Euchariſt with the venerable Invocation and Ceremony of Predication then commonly uſed in the Church: He means the Commemoration of God's great Bleſſings beſtowed upon Man, and the Repetition of the Hiſtory of the firſt Inſtitution of the Lord's Supper, which by the Ancients is called ἀνάμνησις, & ſolita Prædicatio, a Thing ſeldom or never omitted in the Conſecration of the Euchariſt. He adds alſo, that the ſame Impoſtor baptized many, uſing the common and appointed Interrogatories, that ſhe might not ſeem to vary in any thing from the Rule of the Church. She made them anſwer to every Article of the Creed, the Creed (as he calls it) of the Holy Trinity; ſhe put the uſual Queſtions to them preſcribed by the Church, that is, Whether they renounced the Devil, his Angels, his Pomp, and his Service? And, Whether they made a Covenant with Chriſt? And ſhe did every thing ad Imaginem veritatis, according to the exact Method and Form that was obſerved in the Church. Now, though all this was done by the Devil, ſpeaking in an Impoſtor; yet being done according to the exact Rules of the Church, it argues, that the Church at that Time had a ſtated Rule and Order for adminiſtring both the Sacraments, and that the Forms were ſo well known, that this Woman could imitate them ſo exactly, as in nothing to vary from the uſual Solemnities either of Prayers, or other Ceremonies then obſerved in the Church. And if we conſider, that the Adminiſtration of the two Sacraments was then the moſt conſiderable Part of the Church's Service, this is as clear an Evidence as we can deſire, to prove that preſcribed Forms were now in uſe in the Aſiatick Churches.

Gregory Thaumaturgus, Biſhop of Neocæſarea in Pontus, was Cotemporary with Firmilian, and he was a Man famous for working Miracles by the Spirit, whence he had the Name of Thaumaturgus, the Wonder-worker. There is no doubt but that he prayed alſo by the Spirit, yet he prayed by a Form; which ſhews, that praying by a Form, and praying by the Spirit, are not inconſiſtent. As he was the Founder of his Church (finding but ſeventeen Chriſtians when he came thither, and leaving but ſeventeen Heathens when he was taken from it) ſo he left them a Liturgy or Form of Divine Service, which they were ſo tenacious of, that, as St. Baſil [i] teſtifies of them, they would not ſuffer one Ceremony, or one Word, or one myſtical Form to be added to thoſe which he had left among them. He ſettled the way of ſinging Pſalms, not alternately, but by the common Voice of the People all joining together: And the Clergy of Neocæſarea were ſuch Admirers of this Rule, that when St. Baſil had introduced the Alternate Way into his own Church, they were offended at it, and objected againſt him, that it was not ſo in the Days of Gregory the Great. Upon which, St. Baſil was forced to write an Apologetical Epiſtle to them in Vindication of his Practice, wherein he ſhews, that the Way of Alternate Song was now conformable to the Practice of all the Eaſtern Churches, except that of Neocæſarea; and that however tenacious that Church had formerly been of the Ways and Forms of Gregory, yet in one Particular they had now made an Alteration: For in the Days of Gregory, they [k] had none of that peculiar Form of Prayers, called Litanies, which now in St. Baſil's Time they had admitted into their Service, and were very zealous in the Uſe of it, notwithſtanding that it was neither of St. Gregory's Compoſition, nor uſed at all in his Days. As this ſhews that the Uſe of Litanies was brought into the Church of Neocæſarea ſome Years after the Time of St. Gregory; ſo it as evidently proves that their other Forms were inſtituted by him, and derived their Original from his Compoſition, who was the firſt Founder of the Church.

Not long after this, we find a Complaint made by the Council of Antioch, An. 270, againſt Paulus Samoſatenſis, the heretical Biſhop of that Place, that he had forbidden the Uſe of ſuch [l] Pſalms or Hymns as were uſed to be ſung in the Church to the Honour of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, under Pretence that they were only the Novel Compoſitions of late and modern Authors. I have already produced this Paſſage more at length [*] to prove the Worſhip of our Saviour: And here it ſerves to prove, that they woſhipped him by certain Forms of Praiſe, which the Biſhop caſt out of the Church, upon a Pretence of Novelty: Which was but a mere Pretence; for ſuch Forms of Praiſe had been in Uſe in the Church ἀπαρχῆς, from the Beginning, as the antient Writer againſt the Hereſy of Artemon in Euſebius [m] words it. And about the ſame time Nepos an Egyptian Biſhop, compoſed Hymns of the like Nature for the Service of the Church, for which he is commended by Dionyſius [n] Biſhop of Alexandria, who alſo himſelf uſed a certain Form of Doxology to the whole Trinity, as is reported by St. Baſil [o], who alſo tells us in the ſame place, that Athenogenes the Martyr compoſed Hymns to the Glory of the Holy Ghoſt; and adds, that the Hymn called Hymnus Lucernalis, the Hymn to be ſung at lighting of Candles in the Evening Service, containing a Glorification of the Holy Trinity, was of antient Uſe in the Church, ſo antient, that he knew not who was the Author of it. But I have already alledged theſe more at large [†] in vindicating the Worſhip of our Saviour, and therefore content myſelf barely to hint them as accuſtomed Forms of Praiſe in this Place.

I ſhall only note one Thing more in this Century, out of the Epiſtle of Cornelius Biſhop of Rome, to Fabian Biſhop of Antioch, recorded by Euſebius: Which is, that it was cuſtomary in thoſe Days for the Miniſter to uſe a Form of Words at the Delivery of the Bread and Wine in the Euchariſt, ſaying, The Body of Chriſt, or the Blood of Chriſt, to which the People always anſwered, Amen. For Cornelius [p] ſpeaking of the Wickedneſs of Novatian, ſays, When he delivered the Euchariſt to the People, he obliged them inſtead of ſaying Amen, at the naming of it, to ſwear by the Body and Blood of Chriſt, that they would not deſert his Party, nor return to Cornelius. Which Cuſtom of ſaying Amen, in anſwer to the Miniſter, when he named the Body or Blood of Chriſt, is both an antient and universal Practice. For Tertullian [q], as has been shewed already, mentions it long before; and we find it frequently in the Writers of the next Age, St. Ambrose, St. Cyril, St. Austin, St. Jerom, and the Author of the Constitutions; of which I shall have occasion to speak more in another Place.

IN the beginning of the fourth Century, Arnobius apologizing for the Christian Devotions, tells the Heathens, they might know that they worshipped the Supreme God, and called upon him for what they desired, by the Sound of their Voice [r] which they used in Prayer. He says, they all prostrated themselves before him, adoring him with joint Supplications [s]. And he gives us the general Heads of their Prayers, which are very agreeable to the ancient Forms of the Church, viz. That God would grant [t] Peace and Pardon to all Men, to the Magistrates, to the Armies, and to the Emperors; to their Friends and to their Enemies; to those that were alive, and those that were set at Liberty from the Bonds of the Body. Which Petitions are so conformable to the Method and Order of the ancient Liturgies, that one might have imagined them to be offered by a Form, though Arnobius had said nothing of their joint Prayers, or Vocal Consent in their Devotions.

Lactantius and Eusebius wrote after the great Persecution under Diocletian and his Associates was over: And they both take notice of Forms of Prayer appointed by the first Christian Emperors for their Soldiers to use, in Imitation of those of the Church. Lactantius says expressly, that when Licinius was about to join Battle with Maximinus, Maximinus made a Vow to Jupiter, that if he got the Victory, he would utterly extinguish and blot out the very Name of Christians. Upon which, the Night after an Angel of God came and stood by Licinius as he lay at rest, bidding him rise quickly, and pray to the most high God with all his Army, promising him the Victory if he did so. As soon as he heard this, he thought with himself that he arose and stood with the Angel who gave him this Warning, and who then taught him after what Manner and in what Words they should pray. Therefore awaking out of Sleep, he ordered a Notary to be brought to him, to whom he dictated the Prayer [u] in these very Words, as he had heard them: O Thou most High God, we beseech Thee. O Holy God, we beseech Thee. We commend all the Justice of our Cause to Thee: We commend our Safety unto Thee: We commend our Empire unto Thee. By Thee we live, by Thee we are Victorious and Happy. O most High and Holy God, hear our Prayers. We stretch forth our Arms unto Thee. Hear us, O most High and Holy God. These Words were written in many Books, and sent by the Generals and Tribunes, that they might teach them to their Soldiers. When the Day of Battel came, the Soldiers laid aside their Shields, and put off their Helmets, and lifting up their Hands to Heaven, said the Prayer after the Emperor, their Generals repeating it before them. And this they did so loudly, that the adverse Army ready to be sacrificed heard the Echo of their Prayer. Which when they had repeated three times, they were inspired with Courage, and resuming their Arms, though they were but a few, they without any Loss gained a compleat Victory over their Enemies; whom the most High God, says our Author, delivered up to be slaughtered, as if they had come not to ingage in Battel, but as Men devoted to Death and destined to Destruction.

'Tis not many Years since this little Golden Tract of Lactantius came to light, and therefore probably this Testimony may not very often have fain under the Observation of every ordinary Reader. But as there is no Dispute to be made of the Truth of the Relation upon the Authority of Lactantius, so it is an Illustrious Evidence both of the Opinion of Lactantius and the general Sense of Christians, that they did not think Forms of Prayer unlawful, because they were written in a Book, nor the Repetition of them any Offence, for this Prayer was thrice repeated. If it should be said, that this Prayer was dictated immediately by an Angel; the same and more may be said of the Lord's Prayer, that it was dictated by Christ himself, and the Psalms were written as Forms of Prayer and Praise by an inspired Penman; and yet there are those, who for no other Reason but because they are Forms, despise the Use of them, when inserted into any Liturgy of the Church.

Parallel to this Testimony of Lactantius is that other Relation of Eusebius concerning Constantine, that he ordered all his Soldiers, as many of them as were Heathens, to go forth into the Field on the Lord's Day, and there with Hands and Hearts lift up to Heaven, to offer up to God μεμελετημένῃ εὐχῇ [x], a certain Prayer which they had learned and premeditated before. The Prayer was to be said in the Latin Tongue, which was the vulgar Language, and in this expreſs Form of Words: We acknowledge Thee [y] to be the only God; we profeſs Thee to be our King; we call upon Thee as our Helper. It is from Thee we have our Victories; by Thee we are Superior to our Enemies. We give Thee Thanks for the by-paſt Favours and Benefits we have already received; and we hope in Thee for thoſe that are to come. We are all humble Supplicants unto Thee, beſeeching Thee to preſerve Conſtantine our King, with all his pious Children, and grant him long to Reign over us with Safety and Victory. This was the Prayer which he enjoined the Heathens in his Army to uſe every Lord's Day.

As for thoſe that were Chriſtians, he commanded them to follow his own Example, and attend the Prayers of the Church on the Lord's Day, ſetting them a Pattern in his own Practice. He ordered his own Palace after the manner of a Church, firſt taking the Bible into his Hands, and reading and meditating therein, and then repeating the preſcribed Prayers [z] with all his Royal Family. Which ſhews that Forms of Prayer were then generally uſed in the Church, ſince Conſtantine uſed the preſcribed Prayers in his own Family, and thereby made it to reſemble the Church.

Euſebius highly extols and applauds Conſtantine for all this: Which argues that Euſebius himſelf was no Enemy to preſcribed Forms. And indeed we are beholden to his Hiſtory both for the Knowledge of this of Conſtantine, and many other Forms, which had been loſt, had it not been for his Care and Diligence in preſerving them; of which any Reader may be ſenſible, that conſiders how many things have already been alledged out of his Treaſury, eſpecially the Account which he gives of the Eſſenes, and their way of Worſhip out of Philo Judæus: For as it is evident that they worſhipped God by certain Forms, ſo it is as evident that Euſebius took them for Chriſtians, and their Worſhip for the way of Worſhip ſettled by the firſt Chriſtians at Alexandria [a]. It may not be improper alſo to obſerve, that Euſebius in one of his Letters recorded by Socrates [b] expreſsly ſays, that in the Church of Cæſarea, where he was Biſhop, they always had a Creed in a certain Form of Words (which he there repeats) whereby their Catechumens were to be inſtructed, and their Anſwers in Baptiſm to be made in the Words of it: And that thus it was that he himſelf had been there both catechized and baptized. And if his Church allowed a Form in Baptiſm, there is Reaſon to believe from what has been ſaid, that ſhe was not averſe to it in other Parts of Divine Service. Moreover from the time of the Council of Nice, we are well aſſured, that the Creed compoſed in that Council was uſed in moſt of the Eaſtern Churches as a preciſe Form, by which all Catechumens were to make their Reſponſes in Baptiſm, as I have proved [†] elſewhere upon another Occaſion, though it was not preſently admitted as a Form to be repeated, as now it is, in the ordinary Service of the Church: But its being allowed as a Form in Baptiſm is an Argument, that the Church had then no Exception againſt Forms, ſince ſhe enjoined them in the Adminiſtration of her Sacraments, which are the moſt conſiderable part of Divine Service.

Athanaſius as well as Euſebius was a Member of the Council of Nice, and there are plain Footſteps of a Liturgy in his Writings. In one place he declares, that when he ſaid, Let us pray for the Safety [c] of the moſt religious Emperor Conſtantius, all the People immediately with one Voice anſwered, Chriſt help Conſtantius. Which is exactly agreeable to the antient way of praying for Kings and others in the Prayer for the whole State of Chriſt's Church, where the People were uſed to anſwer to every Petition, κύριε ἐλέησον, or σῶσον, Lord have Mercy upon them, or Lord ſave and help them, as will be ſhewed in its proper place.

Again, ſpeaking of the Communion-Service [d], he ſays, the People offered up their Prayers with one Voice, and without any manner of Diſagreement; and that in that great Multitude there was but one Voice, when they unanimouſly anſwered, Amen. It is evident alſo that in his time Pſalmody was in great Requeſt at Alexandria: For Sozomen [e] takes notice, that it was by the Advantage of this Practice, that Athanaſius, when he was beſet in the Church by his Enemies, eſcaped their Hands, whilſt he got out ſecretly in the Company of thoſe that were ſinging Pſalms. St. Auſtin alſo ſpeaks of it, and tells us [f] that Athanaſius made ſome Regulation in the way of ſinging, and brought in the Cuſtom of plain Song, ordering the Readers of the Pſalms to pronounce their Words with ſo little Inflexion or Variation of the Tone, that it looked more like Reading than Singing. It is farther obſervable out of Ruffinus [g] and the other Hiſtorians, who relate the Story of Athanaſius baptizing the Catechumens whilſt he was but a Youth, that the Queſtions and Anſwers and all other Ceremonies of Baptiſm were then performed by ſuch a certain Rule and Order in the Church, that Athanaſius was able to imitate them exactly, and omit nothing that was uſed to be done, but obſerved every Rite to a Tittle, as Alexander the Biſhop found upon Enquiry, when he came more ſtrictly to examine them. And this ſhews that not only in the time of Athanaſius, but in the days of Alexander his Predeceſſor, ſuch ſort of Forms were of conſtant Uſe in the Church. Athanaſius himſelf alſo not only mentions their Pſalmody, but tells us, that it was ſo ordered, the People might bear a part in it. For though the Antiphonal way of ſinging Verſe for Verſe, by way of alternate Song, was not yet brought into the Church in repeating David's Pſalms, yet it was uſual ſometimes for the People to join in the Cloſe of a Verſe, and repeat it together with the Reader. And this was called ὑπηχεῖν and ὑπακούειν, to come into the Conſort at the Cloſe. Whence Athanaſius, ſpeaking [b] of that great Aſſault made upon his Church, mentioned before by Socrates and Sozomen, ſays, he commanded the Deacon to read a Pſalm, to which the People did ὑπακούειν, that is, not barely hearken, as the unskilful Tranſlator renders it, but repeat in the Cloſe theſe Words, For his Mercy endureth for ever. Of which way of Singing I ſhall ſay more hereafter in its proper place, Book XIV. Chap. i. n. 12. Here I ſhall only Note farther, that Athanaſius deſcribing the great Barbarities and Indignities which the Arians ſhewed to the Matrons and Virgins in the very Church, mentions one Virgin [i] whom they deſpitefully uſed, having her Pſalter in her Hand. Which no doubt ſhe had to join in ſinging David's Pſalms, according to the Cuſtom of the Church. And the Book de Interpretatione Pſalmorum is nothing elſe but a Direction how to uſe the Pſalms as Forms of Prayers and Praiſes upon all particular Occaſions; where, among other Things, he obſerves [k], that the lxii or lxiii Pſalm, O God, my God, early will I ſeek Thee, was always a Pſalm to be uſed at Morning Prayer. And the Author of the Book of Virginity [l] among his Works, ſays the ſame; which is alſo mentioned by St. Chryſoſtom and ſome others about this time, of whom we ſhall have Occaſion to ſpeak more particularly in conſidering the Order and Method of Morning-Service. Book XIII. Chap. x. n. 2.

Athanaſius lived forty ſix Years Biſhop of Alexandria, and continued in being till the Year 371. During which Interval, we have the concurrent Teſtimony of Juvencus and Pachomius, and all the Egyptian Monaſteries; of Flavian Biſhop of Antioch, Cyril Biſhop of Jeruſalem, Hilary Biſhop of Poictiers, Optatus, Epiphanius, Gregory Nazianzen, Ephrem Syrus, St. Baſil and Apollinaris, the ſuppoſed Author of the Books under the Name of Dionyſius the Areopagite, together with the Council of Laodicea. And not long after, St. Ambroſe, St. Jerom, St. Auſtin, and St. Chryſoſtom, with ſeveral African Councils, all within the Compaſs of this fourth Age in which Athanaſius lived.

Juvencus flouriſhed under Conſtantine in Spain, and being a Poet, turned the Hiſtory of the Goſpel into Verſe, and St. Jerom adds, that he wrote a Book [m] in the ſame way, giving an Account of the Order of the Sacraments of the Church. Now if we conſider, what has been obſerved before [*], that in Eccleſiaſtical Style, Ordo Sacramentorum, commonly denotes a Book of Divine Offices, it is moſt probable that this Work of Juvencus was no other but the Offices or Forms of Divine Service turned in Verſe.

Pachomius about the Year 340 brought the Egyptian Monks into Communities, and ſettled them under Rules; one of which was to meet twice a-day, and ſing a certain Number of Pſalms, with Prayers intermixed, as may be ſeen in the Accounts which Caſſian [n], Palladius [o], and St. Jerom [p] give of them. Now it muſt owned, that whatever their Prayers were, their Pſalmody was Matter of Form, whether ſung ſingly or alternately: And though they did not repeat the uſual Doxology, Glory be to the Father, as was uſual in the Weſtern Church at the End of every Pſalm, yet they did it at other times at the end of their Antiphon's, as Caſſian [q], an Eye-witneſs of their Service, informs us.

About the Year 350, lived Flavian, firſt a Presbyter, and then Biſhop of Antioch. Whilſt he was Presbyter, it happened that Leontius, the Arian Biſhop, made an Alteration in the common Doxology, Glory be to the Father, &c. to make it favour his Hereſy. Upon this, Flavian and Diodorus withdrew from his Communion, and aſſembled with the People at the Monuments of the Martyrs; where, dividing the People into two Parts, they taught them to ſing the Pſalms of David [r] alternately; which Cuſtom beginning firſt at Antioch, was from thence propagated all the World over. After this manner Theodoret relates the Story: Where it is eaſy to obſerve, 1ſt, That the Form of Glorification was an antient Thing, and only Leontius made an Innovation in it. 2. That the ſinging of David's Pſalms was antient too, which are Forms both of Prayers and Praiſes; and Flavian was not the Author of that Service, but only of the alternate way of ſinging them. And whereas it is ſaid by Socrates, that Ignatius had introduced the Antiphonal way of ſinging before, that is not to be underſtood of David's Pſalms, but of other Hymns compoſed to the Glory of the Holy Trinity; which, as we have ſeen before, were always in uſe in the Chriſtian Church. And Theodoret adds, 3dly, That this way of Singing was ſo taking to the People of Antioch, that they all deſerted Leontius, and he was forced to beg of Flavian, that he would bring back this λειτουργίαν, this Liturgy or Service, into the Churches.

About the ſame time lived Cyril, Biſhop of Jeruſalem, who in his Catechetical Diſcourſes to the newly Baptized, takes notice of many Forms that had been of ancient Uſe in the Church. In his firſt Catechiſm [s] he tells them the Meaning of the Ceremonies uſed in Baptiſm: Ye were firſt brought in, ſays he, into the Ante-room of the Baptiſtery, and placed towards the Weſt in a ſtanding Poſture, and then commanded to renounce Satan, by ſtretching out your Hands againſt him, as if he had been preſent. A little after he explains the Meaning of their doing this toward the Weſt. The Weſt, ſays he, is the Place of Darkneſs, and Satan is Darkneſs, and his Strength is in Darkneſs. For this Reaſon ye ſymbolically look toward the Weſt, when ye renounce that Prince of Darkneſs and Horror. For what did every one of you then ſay ſtanding? I renounce thee, Satan, and all thy Works, and all thy Pomp, and all thy Worſhip and Service. After this, he tells them [t], they turned from the Weſt to the Eaſt, which is the Region of Light and place of Paradiſe, and then were commanded to ſay, I believe in the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Ghoſt, and in one Baptiſm of Repentance. In his ſecond Diſcourſe, he reminds them of their Unction in the Baptiſtery [u], and their repeated Confeſſion of the Holy Trinity, and their Trine Immerſion. In his third Diſcourſe, he treats of [x] the ſecond Unction with the holy Chriſm, which was then uſed in Confirmation, immediately after they were come out of the Waters of Baptiſm. In his fifth Diſcourſe, he treats of the Ceremonies uſed in the Communion-Service, where firſt he ſpeaks [y] of the Deacons bringing Water to the Biſhop and Presbyters to waſh their Hands, in Token of Mens Obligation to purify themſelves from Sin. Then the Deacon cries out, Embrace and ſalute [z] one another with an holy Kiſs. After this, the Prieſt cries out [a] Lift up your Hearts; and ye anſwer, We lift them up unto the Lord. He ſays again, Let us give Thanks to the Lord; and ye anſwer, It is meet and juſt ſo to do. After this, we make mention of Heaven, and Earth, and Sea, the Sun, Moon, and Stars, and the whole Creation, Rational and Irrational, Viſible and Inviſible, Angels and Archangels, Dignities, Dominions, Principalities and Powers, Thrones and Cherubims, and with them we ſing the Seraphical Hymn, Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord God of Sabbaoth. After which, we beſeech the merciful God, that he would ſend forth his Spirit upon the Elements, and make the Bread the Body of Chriſt, and the Wine the Blood of Chriſt. Then after this ſpiritual and unbloody Sacrifice and Service is performed, we beſeech God for the common Peace of the Church, for the Tranquillity of World, for the Kings and their Armies and Allies, for the Sick and Afflicted; and, in a word, for all that want Aſſiſtance, ſaying, We beſeech Thee for them, and offer this Sacrifice unto Thee. Then we make mention of thoſe that are faln aſleep, firſt Patriarchs, Prophets, Apoſtles and Martyrs, that God through their Prayers and Interceſſions may receive our Prayers; and after we pray for our holy Fathers and Biſhops, and all that are departed this Life before us. Then we ſay that Prayer which our Saviour gave to his Diſciples, calling God by the Name of Father, and ſaying, Our Father which art in Heaven. After which, the Prieſt ſays, Holy Things for thoſe that are holy. And the People anſwer, There is One holy, One Lord Jeſus Chriſt. Then one is appointed to ſing thoſe Words of the xxxiiid Pſalm, O taſte and ſee that the Lord is gracious, as an Excitement to receive the Communion; and every one communicates, ſaying, Amen twice, when firſt he receives the Body of Chriſt into his Hand, and afterward the Cup of his Blood. Finally, when all have communicated, he tells them, they are to wait for Prayer again, and give God Thanks for making them Partakers of ſo great Myſteries.

Now one muſt be blind that cannot ſee the plain Footſteps and Forms of a ſtated Liturgy in all this. And therefore I ſhall make no other Deſcant upon them, but only this, that undoubtedly before St. Cyril wrote thoſe Lectures, there was a preſcribed Liturgy, and Offices in Form for the Adminiſtration both of Baptiſm and the Euchariſt in the Church of Jeruſalem, and thoſe handed down from their Fore-fathers, though it be not poſſible to trace every Thing preciſely to its firſt Original.

Co-temporary with Cyril, was Hilary Biſhop Poictiers, of whom St. Jerom [b] ſays, That he wrote a Book of Hymns and Myſteries, which moſt probably were the Forms of the holy Offices then uſed in the Church. It is certain, his Hymns, together with thoſe of St. Ambroſe, were afterwards in great requeſt in the Church; and when ſome excepted againſt them, as only of human Compoſition, the fourth Council of Toledo ordered [c] them to be retained in the Church's Service, together with the Hymns, Glory be to the Father, and Glory be to the God on high; threatning Excommunication to any who in the Churches of Spain and Gallicia ſhould reject them. Hilary himſelf plainly intimates, that both the Prayers and Hymns were ſuch, as all the People with an audible Voice might joyn in them. Let every prophane Hearer, ſays he [d], be terrified with the Words of our Confeſſion: Let us fight againſt the Devil and his Weapons with the Sound

Let him that ſtands without the Church hear the Voice of the People praying, let him perceive the glorious Sound of our Hymns, and hear the Reſponſes of our devout Confeſſion in the Offices of the Divine Sacraments. He that can make out all this from the Peoples ſilent Conſent in Heart only to the Miniſter's Prayer, without any Vocal joining in Forms of Prayer and Praiſes, may make any Thing out of any Thing, and it were not worth while to produce any manner of Evidence for ſuch a Man's Conviction. I only note farther out of Hilary, that theſe Prayers and Hymns were both for Morning and Evening Service [e]. The Church had her Out-goings both Morning and Evening to praiſe God: She began the Day with Prayers, and ended the Day with Hymns to God.

Chronologers are not exactly agreed about the time of the Council of Laodicea. Labbè and others place it before the Council of Nice, about the Year 319. Biſhop Beverege about the Year 365. But on all Hands it is agreed to be within this Century. Now here are ſeveral Canons, which plainly ſhew the Uſe of preſcribed Forms in the Service of the Church. The ſeventh Canon orders, that ſuch as returned from the Hereſies of the Novatians, the Photinians, and the Quartadecimani, ſhould firſt learn the Creeds of the Church, and be anointed with the holy Chriſm, before they were admitted to the Communion of the holy Myſteries. Which implies, that the Creeds were then in a certain Form, ſince they were obliged to learn them. The fifteenth Canon orders, that none ſhould ſing in the Church except the Canonical Singers, who went up into the Ambo, or Reading-Desk, and ſang from a Book, ἀπὸ διφθέρας. The ſeventeenth Canon forbids the continuing of Pſalms one after another, and orders a Leſſon to be read after every Pſalm. The eighteenth orders the ſame Liturgy of Prayers to be uſed at the Nones, that is, three a Clock in the Afternoon, and at Evening Service. The nineteenth orders the Method of Divine Service, that after the Biſhop's Sermon, ſhould follow the Prayers for the Catechumens; and after they were gone, the Prayers for the Penitents; and when they had been under the Biſhop's Hand, and were retired, then the three Prayers for the Faithful or Communicants: The firſt whereof were to be in Silence, the ſecond and third by way of Bidding Prayer and audible Invocation. Then the Preſbyters were to give the Kiſs of Peace to the Biſhop, and Laymen to one another; after which, the holy Oblation was to be made, thoſe only of the Clergy communicating within the Rails of the Altar. This Canon plainly deſcribes the Order and Method of the antient Service, as it was performed in that Age; and though the ſeveral Forms of Prayer here mentioned are not ſet down, yet we are ſure they were in Uſe at that time, and therefore a brief Reference, ſuch as was ſuitable to the Compſs of a ſhort Canon, is made to them, as ſhall be ſhewed more at large in another Place [*]. The twenty ſecond Canon orders, that the Subdeacon ſhall not wear the Orarium, which was a Scarfe or Tippet belonging to the Deacons, by which they were uſed to give the Signal or Directions to the People in the Performance of the ſeveral Parts of Divine Service. The forty ſixth Canon orders thoſe that are to be baptized, to learn the Creed, and on the Thurſday before Eaſter to rehearſe it to the Biſhop or Presbyters. The forty ſeventh Canon appoints thoſe that were baptized in Sickneſs, afterwards to learn the Creed alſo; which implies, that the Creed was then in a certain Form of Words. The fifty ninth Canon orders, that no Pſalms compoſed by private Men, ſhould be ſung in the Church; which argues, that Hymns compoſed by private Men were only to be diſcarded, but others were allowed that were authentick. And this is full Proof, that Forms of Divine Service were in Uſe at the time of this Council.

About the Year 368, Epiphanius was made Biſhop of Salamis or Conſtantia in Cyprus. And that he approved Forms of Prayer appears from the frequent Teſtimony he gives to the Book called, The Apoſtolical Conſtitutions, the eighth Book of which is nothing but a Collection of ſuch Forms. Cotelerius [f] has compared the ſeveral Places in the Conſtitutions with thoſe that Epiphanius alledges out of them, and ſhewed them to be the ſame in Subſtance: Particularly he obſerves, that Epiphanius in one Place [g] gives the Conſtitutions this Character, that they contain all Canonical Order, and nothing contrary to the Faith, or Confeſſion, or the Adminiſtration and Rules of the Church. Which no Man could ſay, that did not approve of the ſeveral Forms of Worſhip contained therein. And therefore when Epiphanius ſays [h] in another Place, that the Church obſerved her Morning Hymns and Prayers, and her Evening Pſalms and Prayers, it is reaſonable to ſuppoſe that all theſe were according to preſcribed Forms, as it is certain at leaſt the Pſalms and Hymns were. But there is one Place in Epiphanius's Epiſtle to John Biſhop of Jeruſalem, which evidently proves that the Communion-Service was then performed by a preſcribed Office and Form. For Epiphanius having been accuſed to John, as if he had reflected on him in his Prayers, ſaying thus, Lord grant that John may believe aright: To clear himſelf of the Accuſation, he denies that ever he prayed ſo for him in publick (though he did ſo privately in his Heart) and for the Truth of this, he appeals to the Words of the Communion-Offices then in publick Uſe: When we offer up Prayers in the Communion-Office, ſays he [i], we uſe theſe Words for all Biſhops, and for you alſo: Keep him who preacheth the Truth: Or certainly thus, Lord, grant our Requeſts, and keep him that he may preach the Word of Truth, as the Occaſion of the Words requires, and as the Order of the Office for Prayer directs. To underſtand which aright, we are to conſider, that antiently in the Communion-Service there were two Prayers where Biſhops were prayed for; one in the Prayer for the Whole State of Chriſt's Church before the Oblation, and the other in the Prayer immediately after the Oblation, when all States of Men were again ſolemnly commemorated and recommended to God; as we ſhall ſee hereafter. Now in reference to theſe two Prayers, Epiphanius ſays, they prayed either thus or thus, as the Occaſion of the Words required, and the Order of the Office directed. Which is a manifeſt reference to the two Prayers in which theſe Words were contained, and as plain an Argument for preſcribed Forms, as can be required. And indeed the Word Conſequentia, which in Greek no doubt was ἀκολουθία, ſhews as much: For that always ſignified a ſtated Form or preſcribed Order of Prayers. Of which the Reader may find Examples enough in Suicerus Theſaurus, or Meurſius's Gloſſary, which need not here be inſerted.

Optatus Biſhop of Milevis was co-temporary with Epiphanius; and he has a great many plain References to the Forms then uſed in the publick Service. He tells the Donatiſts, that by confining the Church to their own Party, they had fruſtrated the Intent of the Holy Spirit, which had preſignified that the Name of God ſhould be praiſed with Pſalms and Hymns over all the Earth, from the riſing of the Sun to the going down thereof; and that in effect they had defrauded God [k] of his Praiſe: For if they only were the true Church that was to praiſe him, the reſt of the World, from the riſing of the Sun to the going down thereof, muſt be ſilent: They had ſhut the Mouth of Chriſtian Nations, and impoſed ſilence upon all People, however deſirous to praiſe God at the proper Seaſons. Which manifeſtly implies, That Pſalmody was then a Part of the People's Devotions all the World over, and that the Donatiſts were injurious to God, whoſe Principles tended to defraud him of it. Again he ſpeaks of the Prayer for the whole Church in the Time of the Oblation, as a Form ſo firmly eſtabliſhed by Law, that the Donatiſts themſelves would not venture to make any Alteration in it. Who doubts, ſays he [l], but that you continue to uſe that ſettled Form of Words in the Celebration of the Sacrament, and never omit to ſay, That you offer for that one Church which is diffuſed over all the World? He ſays the ſame of the Uſe of the Lord's Prayer [m] in the Communion Service, that the Donatiſts continued to uſe it as well as the Catholicks: For he obſerves, that though they gave Impoſition of Hands and Abſolution to Sinners in ſuch an haughty and ſupercilious Manner, as if they themſelves had had no Sin; yet not long after, when they turned to the Altar, they could not omit the Lord's Prayer, wherein they ſaid, Forgive us our Treſpaſſes and Sins. The Lord's Prayer, he ſays, was of one and the ſame Uſe with them both. He ſays alſo, the common Form of Salutation eſtabliſhed by Law, was likewiſe retained by the Donatiſts: For they could not omit ſaying, Peace be with you [n]; They retained the Name, when they had loſt the Subſtance. He ſays farther, that the Catholicks and Donatiſts uſed the ſame Interrogatories in Baptiſm: They asked the Catechumen [o] whether he renounced the Devil? And whether he believed in God? And he anſwered, I renounce, I believe. Only the Donatiſts did one thing amiſs, in repeating theſe things over again, and Re-baptizing thoſe whom the Catholicks had baptized before. He ſeems alſo to hint ſomething of the antient Form of Exorciſing Catechumens before Baptiſm, when he tells the Donatiſts, that by re-baptizing Catholicks, who were already baptized, and in [p] whom God dwelt, they ſaid in effect to God, Go out thou curſed One. For this was the Phraſe then uſed in Exorciſm, which was a Prayer, as St. Cyril [q] calls it, for expelling Satan out of the Catechumen: And theſe Words of Optatus ſeem plainly to be taken out of the Prayers of Exorciſm then commonly uſed in the Church. There is one thing more very obſervable in Optatus, He ſays a Rumour was once ſpread in Africk, that the Emperor's Officers were to come and make ſtrange Alterations in the Church, by placing Images upon the Altar in time of Divine Service. Which flying Report put the People into great Conſternation and Confuſion. But they were preſently quieted again, when they ſaw thoſe Officers come, and no ſuch Alterations made by them, but the ancient Purity and ſolemn Cuſtom [r] and uſual Rites were ſtill obſerved, and nothing was either changed, or added, or diminiſhed in the Divine Sacrifice. Which ſhews, that the publick Service was then in a certain Form, and not left to every Man's Liberty to make Alterations in it, or lengthen or ſhorten it, by adding or diminiſhing at his Pleaſure.

About the Year 370 St. Baſil was made Biſhop of Cæſarea in Cappadocia, but before he was Biſhop he lived a Presbyter in the ſame Church under Euſebius his Predeceſſor in the See. During which Time, as Nazianzen [s] aſſures us, among other Services done for that Church, he compoſed Forms of Prayer and Orders of Decency for the Communion Service, which by the Conſent and Authority of his Biſhop Euſebius were uſed in the Church. We are not bound to aſſert that any of the Liturgies which now go under his Name, are exactly the ſame with that. It is certain they have received many Additions and Alterations, and in many things differ from one another: And ſome things are alledged by antient Writers out of St. Baſil's genuine Liturgy, which a learned Man [t] aſſures us are not to be found at preſent in any of theſe. As that Prayer which is cited by Petrus Diaconus, who lived about the Year 520, in whoſe Time St. Baſil's Liturgy was uſed almoſt all the Eaſt over. For he ſays [u], among other things they then prayed thus, according to St. Baſil's Liturgy: Grant us, Lord, thy Defence and Protection; we beſeech Thee, make the Evil to become Good, and keep thoſe that are Good in their Goodneſs. For all things are poſſible unto thee, and no one can contradict Thee: When thou pleaſeſt, thou canſt ſave, and there is no one that can reſiſt Thy Will. Some fancy theſe Words are to be found in the preſent Copies, but whether that be ſo or not, we may be pretty well aſſured they were in the Original Liturgy of St. Baſil, whence the Author cites them. And that is an Argument that St. Baſil compoſed a Liturgy, which was then of general Uſe in the Eaſt, and known to the Africans alſo. Proclus Biſhop of Conſtantinople was within half an Age of St. Baſil's Time, and he gives this Account of his compoſing a Liturgy: St. Baſil ſeeing Mens Sloth and Degeneracy made them weary of a long Liturgy, thought there was nothing unneceſſary or tedious in that of St. James, which was uſed before; yet to prevent the wearineſs of Prieſts and People, he delivered a ſhorter Form [x]. And it is alſo cited under St. Baſil's Name by Leontius [y] and the Council of Trullo [z]. So that though many things be inſerted into the preſent Copies of St. Baſil's Liturgy, and others wanting in them; yet theſe are no Arguments againſt the Original Compoſition, of which there is ſuch clear Evidence in the antient Writers.

But St. Baſil not only compoſed a Form for the Communion Service, but often ſpeaks of other Forms as generally uſed upon other Occaſions. In his ſixty third Epiſtle he gives a large Account of the People's joyning in alternate Pſalmody and Prayers, and of their repeating the Pſalm of Confeſſion, that is the Fifty firſt Pſalm, at Morning Prayer. And he there alſo ſpeaks of the Liturgy of Gregory Thaumaturgus with Approbation, and of the Litanies which the Church of Neocæſarea had admitted ſince the Time of Gregory. In his 241ſt Epiſtle he mentions ſeveral Particulars of the uſual Prayer for the whole State of the Church, telling his Friend whom he writes to, that he muſt needs remember them in the Deacon's bidding Prayer, for all that were gone to travel; for the Soldiers; for all that profeſs the Name of Chriſt, &c. Which, as I ſhall ſhew hereafter [*], were the uſual Forms of Supplication in the Prayers for all States of Men in the Church. In his ſixty eighth Epiſtle he mentions other Forms, which were as evidently Parts of the antient Liturgies, We pray that the reſt of our Days may continue in Peace: We deſire that our Death may alſo be in Peace. We have heard him before [†] ſpeak of the Hymns of Athenogenes, and the Evening Hymn to the holy Trinity. And we ſhall hear him hereafter ſpeaking [a] of particular Pſalms appointed for particular Hours of Canonical Prayer. All which are ſuch manifeſt Indications of the Uſe of ſtated Forms, as nothing but Prejudice can incline a Man to except againſt them.

Gregory Nazianzen was St. Baſil's dear Friend, and of him it were enough to ſay, that he commends his Friend for making Forms of Prayer for the Uſe of the Church, as we have heard already. But he alſo ſays his own Father [b] conſecrated the Euchariſt with the ſolemn Words that were wont to be uſed upon that Occaſion. And ſpeaking of Julian the Apoſtate, he ſays, he admired the Church for her Forms [c] of Worſhip, which were antiently delivered and ſtill preſerved among them: And therefore he intended that his Heathen Prieſts ſhould imitate the Chriſtians, and have a Form of Prayers [d] in parts, that is, Prayers ſo compoſed as that the People might make their Reſponſes. Which is alſo taken notice of by Sozomen, who ſays, That Julian admiring the Order of Chriſtian Worſhip, appointed that the Heathen Temples ſhould be adorned after the ſame manner with preſcribed [e] Prayers upon Set-days and Hours. Nazianzen alſo mentions the uſual Form of renouncing the Devil in Baptiſm, and the ſolemn Covenant or Compact made with Chriſt, which he ſays [f] they did καὶ τοῖς σχήμασι καὶ τοῖς ῥήμασι, both by Words and Geſtures, that is, renouncing the Devil with their Faces to the Weſt, and then turning about to the Eaſt, by which they ſignified their turning to Chriſt the Sun of Righteouſneſs. Both which Words and Geſtures were evidently Matter of Form and Eccleſiaſtical Preſcription. As was alſo the Form of profeſſing their Faith, the triple Immerſion, and many other ſuch Rites and Obſervances, which we meet with in Nazianzen and all other Eccleſiaſtical Writers almoſt, that have any Occaſion to ſpeak of the antient Manner of adminiſtring Baptiſm.

There is one Author more which was famous about this Time, before the Death of Athanaſius, which was Ephrem Deacon of Edeſſa, commonly called the Prophet of the Syrians. Theodoret [g] ſays, that he compoſed a great many Hymns, in Oppoſition to thoſe that had been formerly made by Harmonius the Son of Bardeſanes the Heretick, and that they were uſed upon the Feſtivals of the Martyrs. Sozomen [h] mentions his Divine Hymns alſo, as well as thoſe that were made upon the Martyrs. And theſe no doubt were ſome of thoſe famous Writings of his, which St. Jerom [i] ſays were uſed to be rehearſed in the Church after the reading of the Scriptures.

Here it will not be improper alſo to obſerve, That the Practice of Hereticks in endeavouring to corrupt and alter the antient Forms of the Church, is often a manifeſt Evidence and Teſtimony of the Antiquity of them. Thus Theodoret takes notice [k] that in the Beginning of this Century, Arius tranſgreſſing the antient Laws of giving Glory to God, which had been handed down by thoſe who lived and ſerved in the Miniſtry of the Word from the Beginning, introduced a new Form, teaching thoſe whom he deceived, to ſay, Glory be to the Father, by the Son, in the Holy Ghoſt: And that though he did not preſume to alter the Form of Baptizing in the Name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt, yet he forbad to uſe the Glorification according to the Rule of Baptiſm. Does not this prove, that the Form of this Doxology was long before Arius, ſince he preſumed to introduce a new one? So again, when the ſame Theodoret [l] tells us, That Eunomius ſubverted the antient Law of Baptiſm, delivered by Chriſt and his Apoſtles, and brought in a contrary Law, that Men ſhould not be baptized with a triple Immerſion, nor by Invocation of the Trinity, but only by a ſingle Immerſion in the Name of Chriſt: Does not this Innovation as plainly prove, that the Rite of Trine Immerſion was the antient Form and Cuſtom of the Church? As Tertullian [m] and all that ſpeak of it before Eunomius, have conſtantly aſſerted. So that whether we conſider the Teſtimonies of the Catholicks, or the Practices and Innovations made by Hereticks, they both concur to prove, that within this Period of Time, viz. during the Life of Athanaſius, the Church made uſe of Forms in every conſiderable Part of Divine Service, Baptiſm, Pſalmody, and the moſt ſolemn Worſhip at the Lord's Table. And ſo ſhe did alſo in her Funeral Rites, where nothing is more common than to hear of Pſalmody in their ſolemn Proceſſions to any Interment, as may be ſeen in the Writings of Gregory Nazianzen [n] and the Conſtitutions [o], to mention no other at preſent, that come not within the prefixed Term of the Life of Athanaſius.

It was not above three Years after the Death of Athanaſius, that St. Ambroſe was made Biſhop of Milan, an. 374. He was a zealous Defender of the Catholick Faith againſt the Arians, in oppoſition to whom he compoſed ſeveral Hymns in Latin to the Glory of the Holy Trinity, for the People to ſing in the Church. Of which he himſelf gives this Account in his Tract againſt Auxentius: They accuſe me, ſays he, for deceiving [p] and alluring the People with the Poetry of my Hymns. And I do not altogether deny the Charge. For what can be more powerful and alluring than the Confeſſion of the Trinity, which is daily ſung by the Mouth of all the People? They all zealouſly ſtrive to make Profeſſion of the Faith; they all know how to celebrate the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt in verſe. Theſe Hymns are mentioned alſo by Proſper in his Chronicon [q] as the firſt that were ſung in the Church in Latin Meaſures. St. Auſtin frequently ſpeaks of them, and ſays [r], they were ſung as then the Pſalms were, in the alternate way Verſe for Verſe by the People, to alleviate the Tediouſneſs of their Sorrow: And from this Example the Cuſtom of alternate Hymnody and Pſalmody ſpread almoſt all over the We- ſtern Churches. One of theſe is particularly cited [s] by him, as an Evening Hymn, and others are among his Works: And theſe we are ſure in the following Ages continu'd in Uſe: For the [t] Hymns of St. Ambroſe and St. Hilary are mentioned by the Fourth Council of Toledo, An. 633, as Parts of the daily Service in the Spaniſh Churches. St. Ambroſe himſelf alſo ſpeaks of the Uſe of that antient Hymn called the Triſagion, telling us, that in moſt of the Eaſtern and Weſtern Churches [u] when the Sacrifice was offered to God, the Prieſt and People with one Voice ſaid, Holy, Holy, Holy Lord God of Hoſts, all the Earth is full of thy Glory. He mentions alſo the common Form of Salutation, The Peace of God be with you [x]. He ſays the Muſick ſpoken of in the Parable of the prodigal Son (Luke xv.) means the whole Church's ſinging together the Pſalms alternately [y], Men, Women and Children, with different Voices, but all conſpiring, as the Strings of an Inſtrument, in one harmonious Concord. And this was the Symphony which the Apoſtle had Reference to, when he ſaid, I will ſing with the Spirit, and I will ſing with the Underſtanding alſo. His Books de Sacramentis, if we allow them to be his, are ſo full of Forms and Ceremonies relating to the Adminiſtration of Baptiſm, Confirmation, and the Euchariſt, that a Man cannot look into them, but he muſt conclude, he wrote his Accounts of theſe things from the known and ſettled Forms of the Church. For which Reaſon I think it needleſs to recite any of them; but they that pleaſe may ſee them related in Dr. Comber [z]. If any one ſhould except againſt theſe Books, as none of St. Ambroſe's genuine Offspring, it is ſufficient to have evidenced the Uſe of Forms from his undoubted Writings. St. Jerom teſtifies concerning the Uſe of the Pſalms, as Forms of Prayer and Praiſes, that they were uſed both publickly and privately upon all Occaſions. In the Ægyptian Monaſteries, he ſays [a] the ſinging of the Pſalms was a principal Part of their Devotions at every ſolemn Meeting. He directs Ruſticus [b] to learn the Pſalter by heart, and to repeat the Pſalm in his Turn, as the Monks were obliged to do one by one in their Aſſemblies. He ſays of himſelf [c], that he thus learned the Pſalms by heart, when he was young, and ſung them when he was old every Day. He directs Læta, a noble Lady, ſo to accuſtom her Daughter to the ſinging of Pſalms and Hymns at all the Canonical Hours of [d] Prayer, and teach her this by her own Example. And after the ſame manner [e] he writes to Demetrias a Virgin to obſerve the Order of Pſalmody and Prayers at every ſuch ſtated Hour. There may be ſome Diſpute about the Obſervation of Canonical Hours ſeven times a-day in the publick Service of the Church, but there is none about the Uſe of Pſalmody in general: For St. Jerom writing to Sabinianus [f] a Deacon who had been guilty of ſome indecent Behaviour toward a conſecrated Virgin, reminds him of the immodeſt Signs he had made to her even whilſt he ſtood in the Quire of the Singers. And a little before [g] he ſpeaks of the whole Church ſounding forth Hymns to Chriſt their Lord in her nocturnal Vigils; a great part of which, as we ſhall ſee hereafter, was always ſpent in Pſalmody. This was always a part of their Funeral Service: For ſpeaking of the great Concourſe of Biſhops and People at the Funeral of the Lady Paula, he ſays [h], ſome of the Biſhops led up the Quire of Singers, and the People ſounded forth the Pſalms in Order, ſome in Greek, ſome in Latin, ſome in Syriack, according to the different Language of every Nation. He ſays the ſame in his Epitaph of Fabiola [i], that the People made the gilded Roof of the Temple ſhake and echo again with their Pſalms and Allelujah's. It is alſo obſervable that in St. Jerom's Time and long before, the Church had a peculiar Order among her Clergy called Singers, which he himſelf mentions [k], and of which I have given a more particular Account [†] in a former Book. He alſo frequently ſpeaks [l] of the Clergy as miniſtring in a peculiar Habit, a white Garment, in Imitation of the Angels, of which more will be ſaid hereafter. At preſent I only obſerve, that this could not be done without ſome Rule or Order preſcribing the Ceremonies of Decency in Divine Worſhip. He does not ſay much of the other Parts of the Liturgy, yet he frequently mentions the Form of Renunciation uſed in Baptiſm, and the Uſe of the Creed [m], as does alſo Pelagius in his Comments upon the Epiſtles of St. Paul under the Name of St. Jerom [n], and Hilary the Roman Deacon under the Name of St. Ambroſe [o], whoſe Authorities are good in this Caſe, becauſe they were Co-temporaries with theſe Writers. He mentions alſo the Uſe of the Lord's Prayer in the Communion-Office, as given by Chriſt to his Apoſtles, from whom the Church [p] learned to uſe it every Day in the Sacrifice of his Body. He ſpeaks likewiſe of the Triſagion, or Cherubical Hymn, Holy, Holy, Holy, [q] Lord God of Sabbaoth, which they ſung as a Confeſſion of the Holy Trinity. And he mentions a Part of one of the Church's Prayers [r], which was, Lord, grant us Thy Peace, for Thou haſt given us all things. And again [s], Thus ſaith the Church, In Reſt and in Tribulation I have been mindful of Thee: Commenting on that Pſalm, which the Ancients called their Morning Pſalm, My God, my God, early will I ſeek Thee. And on another Pſalm [t], The Church ſays, From the Remembrance of our former Sins, our Hearts are hot within us. Speaking alſo of wicked Prieſts, he ſays [u], They act impiouſly againſt Chriſt, whilſt they think that a good Life is not as neceſſary to the Euchariſt, as the ſolemn Prayer or Words of the Prieſt. Where he ſeems plainly to reflect on thoſe, who truſted to the bare Form of Prayer without moral Qualifications. He alſo mentions the ſolemn Rite of giving each other the Kiſs of Peace in the Euchariſt [x], and the People's known Cuſtom of anſwering Amen, at the Reception of it. All which are plain Indications of the Uſe of certain Forms in Divine Worſhip; though St. Jerom only mentions them incidentally, and had no Occaſion to enlarge much upon them.

St. Auſtin and St. Chryſoſtom, as they are more voluminous Writers, ſo they are more copious and exact upon this Subject. I have given the Reader a Specimen of what may be collected of the Eaſtern Liturgy out of the Writings of St. Chryſoſtom in the following Chapter. And ſome learned Men are of Opinion, that if any one will be as curious in examining St. Auſtin's Works, he may find the whole African Liturgy in his Writings. I will not pretend to be ſo exact in this Collection, but only make ſome ſhort References to what he ſays upon ſome Parts of it. He divides the whole Liturgy or Service of the Church into five Parts [y], viz. Pſalmody, Reading of the Scriptures, Preaching, Prayers of the Biſhop, and the bidding Prayers of the Deacon. All which, except Preaching, were done by certain Forms and Preſcriptions. And firſt for Pſalmody, he ſays, it was the Exerciſe of the People at all times, when no other Part of the Service was a performing. For there was no Time, he ſays, unſeaſonable for the People to ſing holy Pſalms and Hymns in the Church, except when either the Scriptures were read, or the Sermon was preached, or Prayers were made by the Biſhop, or the Common Prayers were dictated by the Voice of the Deacon. We have heard him before ſpeak with Approbation of the Ways of ſinging Pſalms and Hymns introduced by Athanaſius and St. Ambroſe [z]. Which argues not only that he allowed the ſinging of Pſalms and Hymns, that is, Forms of Prayer and Praiſes, in general; but alſo that he liked the ſeveral ways of ſinging then in Uſe, the plain Song, and the ſymphoniacal Conſort at the Concluſion of every Verſe, uſed by Athanaſius, and the new alternate Way introduced by St. Ambroſe. Though he intimates that the plain Way generally was more agreeable to the ſlow Genius [a] of the African People, whoſe ſinging he vindicates from the ſcurrilous Objections which the Donatiſts made againſt their Practice. And he wrote a Book particularly againſt one Hilarius a ſecular Tribune, who pretended to quarrel with the Cuſtom of the Church of Carthage, for ſinging Hymns out of the Book of Pſalms [b] at the Altar, either before the Oblation of the Euchariſt was made, or whilſt it was diſtributed to the People. This Book of St. Auſtin's is now loſt, but he mentions it in his Retractations. He alſo ſpeaks [c] of the Evening Hymns: And of the ſinging of the Halleluia [d] in ſome Churches every Day, and in others only the fifty Days between Eaſter and Pentecoſt. And Poſſidius tells us in his Life [e], That in the great Irruption of the Vandals into Africk a little before his Death, nothing grieved him more than to ſee the Hymns and Praiſes of God deſtroyed out of the Churches, and the Solemnities of God's Worſhip, with the Sacrifice and Sacraments, to fail in the Places where they were uſed to be celebrated. And he adds [f], That in his laſt Sickneſs he ordered ſome of the penitential Pſalms of David to be written for him in large Sheets, and hanged up againſt the Wall, which he read and uſed as Forms proper for penitential Devotion. All which ſhews that St. Auſtin thought the Pſalms of David were not unlawful to be uſed as Forms of Prayers and Praiſes in the Service of God.

Secondly, for the Reading of the Scriptures, he acquaints us in many places, that this was done by a certain Rule and Kalendar, appointing proper Leſſons for particular Occaſions and Seaſons. There were ſome Feſtival Days, he ſays [g], on which they were bound to read certain appropriated Leſſons out of the Goſpel, which were ſo fixed to thoſe anniverſary Solemnities, that no other Leſſons might be read in their Room. Thus he ſays in Eaſter Week they conſtantly read [h] four Days one after another the Hiſtory of Chriſt's Reſurrection out of the four Goſpels, on the firſt Day St. Matthew, on the ſecond St. Mark, on the third St. Luke, and on the fourth St. John. So likewiſe on the Day of Chriſt's Paſſion, he ſays, they read the Hiſtory of his Sufferings [i] out of St. Matthew only, becauſe it was all but one Day: And when he would have had all the four Goſpels read at that time alſo, the People were diſturbed at it, becauſe they had not been accuſtomed to it. In the Time between Eaſter and Pentecoſt, he ſays [k], they always read the Acts of the Apoſtles. St. Chryſoſtom will give us the Reaſon of this hereafter: And we ſhall ſee that this was an univerſal Cuſtom obtaining throughout the whole Church, when we come to conſider this Rule more fully exemplify'd [†] in the Church's general Practice.

Thirdly, For the Prayers made by the Biſhop in the Communion Office, St. Auſtin gives us ſuch a Deſcription of them, as ſhews they muſt needs be made by a certain Order and Form. For he thus deſcribes one part of them, while he inſtructs the newly-baptized in the Method and Meaning of them: Ye underſtand, ſays he, the Sacrament in the Order of its Adminiſtration [l]. Firſt after Prayer (meaning the Prayer for the whole State of the Church, which went before) ye are taught to lift up your Hearts. Therefore when it is ſaid, Lift up your Hearts, ye anſwer, We lift them up unto the Lord. The Biſhop or Presbyter, who officiates, goes on and ſays, Let us give Thanks to our Lord God: And ye give in your Atteſtation, and ſay, It is meet and right ſo to do. Then after the Conſecration of the Sacrifice we ſay the Lord's Prayer. And after that, the Prieſt ſays, Peace be with you, and Chriſtians ſalute one another with an holy Kiſs. Here we have not only the Method of the Communion Service, but the ſeveral Forms of it in Order one after another. And theſe Forms are frequently mentioned by St. Auſtin in other places. The Lord's Prayer, he ſays, [m] was always uſed by the whole Church almoſt, as the Cloſe of the Conſecration Service, and at other times as the daily Prayer [n] of the Faithful, peculiarly belonging to them, and not to the Catechumens, as we ſhall ſhew more fully hereafter [‡]. The Form, Surſum Corda, Lift up your Hearts, &c. he ſays [o] was uſed by all Chriſtians throughout the World, who daily anſwered with one Voice, We lift up our Hearts unto the Lord, as he ſpeaks in his Book of true Religion, and other places. And to this he ſays the Prieſts added that other Form, Let us give Thanks to our Lord God: To which the People anſwered, It is meet and right ſo to do: As he ſpeaks in his Epiſtles [p] to Dardanus and Honoratus, and in his Book of the Gift of Perſeverance againſt the Pelagians, and de Spiritu & Litera, and de Bono Viduitatis, which being all to the ſame purpoſe, need not here be repeated. He alſo mentions in his other Writings the ſolemn Form of the Prieſt's ſaying, Peace be with you, and the People's giving one another thereupon the Kiſs of Peace, which was a Symbol [q] of that Innocency and Peace, which ought to be the Qualification of true Chriſtian Doves. And this Rite, he ſays, was obſerved not only by the Catholicks, but by the Donatiſts alſo [r]. So that here is unqueſtionable Evidence for the Uſe of all theſe Forms in the Writings of St. Auſtin. And though he does not give us the whole Forms of the longer Prayers made by the Biſhop at the Altar, yet he mentions ſome parts of them, and makes ſuch References and Appeals to them both in his Diſcourſes to the Orthodox, and Confutations of Hereticks, as plainly ſhews they were common Forms which they were well acquainted with, and by remembring them might underſtand the Doctrine of the Church. Thus in his Book of Perſeverance [s], he ſays, Thoſe of the Church need not any operoſe Diſputations to convince them of the Neceſſity of God's Grace to perſevere; they need only remember her daily Prayers, how ſhe prays, That Infidels may believe, and that Believers may perſevere. And again [t], he tells them, it is the ſafeſt way for weak Men in this Diſpute, to look upon theſe Prayers which the Church always had, and always will have to the End of the World. For when did not the Church pray for Infidels and her Enemies, That they might believe? Or who ever, when he heard the Prieſt praying over the Faithful, and ſaying, Grant, O Lord, that they may perſevere in Thee unto the End, durſt either in Word or Thought find Fault with him, and not rather, with Faith in his Heart, and Confeſſion in his Mouth, anſwer Amen to ſuch a Benediction? when the Faithful pray no otherwiſe in the Lord's-Prayer, eſpecially when they ſay, Lead us not into Temptation. By all which it appears, that both the larger and the ſhorter Prayers in the Communion-Office of the African Church in St. Auſtin's Time, were offer'd up in ſuch Forms, as the People could eaſily remember, when he referred to them as Evidence in ſome Diſputes, which this was an eaſy Way to determine.

Fourthly, There was one ſort of Prayers more, which St. Auſtin diſtinguiſhes from the former, by the Name of the Common-Prayers dictated or indicted to the People by the Voice of the Deacon. Now theſe Prayers, as I ſhall ſhew more fully hereafter [*], differed from the Biſhop's Prayer in this, That the Biſhop's Prayer was a direct and continu'd Invocation of God, to which the People anſwered only Amen in the Concluſion; But the Deacon's Prayer was a ſort of bidding Prayer, or Direction to the People what Particulars they were to pray for; the Deacon going before them, and repeating every Petition, to which they made Anſwer, Lord hear us, or Lord help us, or Lord have Mercy, or the like. And this ſort of Prayer St. Auſtin expreſly [u] calls Communis Oratio voce Diaconi indicta, Common Prayer dictated by the Voice of the Deacon. And he ſeems in one of his Epiſtles [x] to ſpecify ſome of the particular Petitions contained in that Prayer. For writing to one who was infected with the Pelagian Doctrine (maintaining that Infidels were only to be preached to, and not prayed for, becauſe Faith was not the Work of God's Grace, but the Effect of Man's own Free-will) he urges him with the known Prayers of the Church, which the Man himſelf frequented. Exerciſe, ſays he, your Diſputations againſt the Prayers of the Church, and when you hear Prieſt of God at the Altar exhorting the People of God to pray for Unbelievers, That they may be converted to the Faith; and for Catechumens, That God would inſpire them with a Deſire of Regeneration; and for the Faithful, That by his Gift they may perſevere in that wherein they have begun; mock at theſe pious Words, and ſay, you do not do what you here are exhorted to do. And again, When you hear [y] the Prieſt of God at the Altar exhorting the People to pray to God, or elſe hear him praying with an audible Voice, That God would compel the unbelieving Gentiles to come in to his Faith, do you not anſwer and ſay, Amen? Theſe ſeem to be uſual Parts of the Prayer for the whole State of the World, in which Infidels were prayed for as well as others, to which St. Auſtin refers, as Things well known to all that frequenteed the Prayers of the Church.

Beſides theſe, there were ſome occaſional Offices, ſuch as the Offices of Exorciſm, and the Inſtitution of the Catechumens, and Baptiſm, in which many Forms, and Rites, and Ceremonies were obſerved, agreeable to the Practice then obtaining in the Church: But of theſe I have had Occaſion to ſpeak largely out of St. Auſtin and other Writers in a former Book [†], and therefore think it needleſs to repeat them in this Place. All I ſhall farther add, is two or three Canons of the African Councils held in St. Auſtin's time, at ſome of which he was preſent and aſſiſted. He was a Member of the third Council of Carthage, in one of whoſe Canons there are ſeveral Orders and Directions given concerning the publick Prayers [z], that no one in Prayers ſhould name the Father for the Son, or the Son for the Father. And when they ſtood at the Altar, all Prayers ſhould be directed to the Father. And whatever Prayers any one writ out for himſelf, or from other Books, he ſhould not uſe them before they were examined by his more learned Brethren. This is as plain an Argument for ſet Forms as can be given, and yet ſome, I know not by what Means, make it an Argument againſt them. The Deſign of the Canon was plainly to prevent all Irregularities and Corruptions creeping into the Devotions of the Church: And therefore the Fathers made an Order, that no Biſhop ſhould uſe any Prayers in his Church, but ſuch as were firſt examined and approved by his Fellow-Biſhops in a Council. As another Canon in the African Code explains it [a], that ſuch Prayers ſhould be uſed by all, as had been authorized and confirmed in Synod, whether they were Prefaces, or Commendations, or Impoſitions of Hands, and that no other ſhould be brought in againſt the Faith, but thoſe only be ſaid, which were collected or examined by Men of greater Abilities and Underſtanding. And this is repeated again in the Council of Milevis [b] almoſt in the ſame Words. Theſe African Fathers probably had obſerved, that there were ſome Country Biſhops, who had not ſufficient Abilities to compoſe Orthodox Forms for the Uſe of their own Churches: And therefore they a little reſtrained the antient Liberty which every Biſhop had of compoſing a Form of Prayer for his own Church, and obliged them to uſe ſuch as were compoſed by Men of greater Abilities, or ſuch as had been approved in Synod, that no heretical Opinions might creep into the publick Worſhip, either by their Ignorance or want of Care in their Compoſitions. By all this it appears, that the publick Devotions of the African Church were at this time directed by certain Forms of Worſhip, and thoſe not left to every Biſhop to compoſe for himſelf, but he muſt uſe ſuch Prayers as were firſt approved by his Brethren, or eſtabliſhed and confirmed in Council. And this ſeems to be the firſt beginning of that Cuſtom, which afterward prevailed all over the Church, as has been obſerved before in this Chapter [*], that all Provincial Biſhops ſhould uſe the ſame Form of Prayer that was eſtabliſhed in the Churches of their Metropolitans.

I need not now inſiſt upon theſe ſame Councils, ſpeaking of the ſolemn Interrogatories [c] and Anſwers to be made in Baptiſm; nor of their mentioning the Lord's Prayer, as a Form of ſo neceſſary and general a Uſe [d], that the Pelagians themſelves, who did not like one Petition in it unleſs interpreted to a very perverſe Senſe, durſt not preſume to lay aſide the Uſe of it. For as the firſt of theſe is a known Practice, ſo the ſecond will have a more particular Handling, when we come to conſider the Uſe of the Lord's Prayer in a Chapter by it ſelf. And ſo I put an End to this Chapter concerning the Uſe of Liturgies in the antient Church.

CHAP. VI.

An Extract of the antient Liturgy out of the Genuine Writings of St. Chryſoſtom.

SECT. I. Parts of the Liturgy in the firſt Tome.

IT has often been wiſhed by learned Men, that ſome one would repreſent the antient Liturgy in its ſeveral Parts and Offices, as it may be collected out of the genuine and undoubted Writings of St. Chryſoſtom; foraſmuch as that Liturgy which goes under his Name, cannot be ſo certainly depended on as his genuine Off-ſpring: But there are a great many Parts of antient Liturgy of unqueſtionable Credit which may be gathered up out of his other Diſcourſes. Mr. Hales of Eaton, a diligent Reader of Chryſoſtom, is ſaid to have deſigned ſuch a Collection, but he did not effect it. Therefore till ſome one elſe purſues his Deſign more compleatly, I think it not improper, for its relation to the preſent Subject, to give the Reader in one View a Specimen of ſuch Paſſages as plainly refer to the ſeveral Parts of the antient Liturgy, obſerving the Order of St. Chryſoſtom's Works according to the Paris Edition 1609, and that of the Commelin 1617.

In the firſt Tome, Hom. 1. p. 1. he plainly intimates that the Scriptures were read then in ſome Order by a ſtated Rule of the Church, becauſe his Sermon that Day was upon a Paſſage that had been read in the Courſe of Morning-Service, 1 Tim. v. 23. Drink no longer Water, but uſe a little Wine. In his ſecond Homily, p. 32, he ſays again his Text was taken out of the Epiſtle then read for the Day, which was 2 Tim. vi. 17. Charge them that are Rich in this World, that they be not high-minded. In his third Homily, p. 45, he ſays, the Lord's Prayer was by Appointment of the Church the peculiar Privilege of thoſe only who were baptized. For before their Initiation in the holy Myſteries, they were not allowed to uſe it. In his ſeventh Homily, p. 106, he obſerves, that the Book of Geneſis was always appointed to be read in Lent: And accordingly it was then read for the Day, and he preached upon the firſt Words of it, In the Beginning God created Heaven and Earth. In his fifteenth Homily, p. 191, he ſays the whole City met together, and with one common Voice, τῇ μιᾷ κοινῇ φωνῇ, made their Litany or Supplications to God. And in the ſame Diſcourſe he intimates, that a Portion of the Prophet Zachary v. concerning the flying Roll againſt Swearers, had then been read for the Day, which he accommodated to the Subject of vain Oaths, againſt which he was then diſcourſing. In his eighteenth Homily, p. 226, he ſays, he preached upon the Epiſtle which had been read that Day, Phil. iv. 4. Re- joice in the Lord always, and again I say, Rejoice. And in his sixteenth Homily, p. 234, he notes the same, that the Words upon which he preached out of the Epistle to Philemon, Paul the Prisoner of Jesus Christ, &c. had been read that Day. In his twenty first Homily, p. 266, he takes notice of the Use of the Hymn, called the Trisagion, or Cherubical Hymn, Holy, Holy, Holy, in the Celebration of the Eucharist; arguing to his Hearers in this manner upon it: What an Absurdity is it for a Man, after he has heard that mystical Song that was brought down from Heaven, brought down, I say, by the Cherubims, to pollute his Ears with the Songs of Harlots, and effeminate Musick of the Theatre? In the same Homily he twice takes notice of the Form of Renouncing the Devil in Baptism, p. 267. We are commanded to say, ἀποτάσσομαί σοι Σατανᾶ, I renounce thee, O Satan, that we may never more return to him. And again, p. 273. Remember, says he, those Words which you spake when you were initiated in the Holy Mysteries, I renounce thee, O Satan, and thy Pomp, and thy Worship and Service. In his twenty second Homily upon Anger and Forgiving Enemies, he argues for the Necessity of pardoning Offences from the necessary Obligation that is laid upon all Men to say the Lord's Prayer. For this Reason, says he, p. 287. we are commanded to say, Forgive us our Trespasses, as we forgive them that Trespass against us. And again, p. 288. When you say, Forgive us, as we forgive: If you do not forgive, you ask nothing else of God, but that he would deprive you of all Excuse and Pardon. And whereas some pleaded, that they did not say the whole Prayer, but omitted that Clause, As we forgive them that Trespass against us, he rebukes them for it, and bids them not be so vainly cautious, as to think they were excused by curtailing the Prayer, but advises them to use the whole Prayer, as Christ appointed it to be used, that the Necessity of this Petition might daily terrify them from Revenge, and compel them to grant Pardon to their Neighbours. In his twenty fourth Homily of the Baptism of Christ, p. 317, he again speaks of the Cherubical Hymn in the Communion Service. Do you think, says he, that you have any secular Business at that Hour? Do you then imagine your self to be upon Earth, or conversing among Men? Whose Heart is so stony, as to think, that at that time he stands upon the Earth, and is not rather in a Quire of Angels, with whom you sing that mystical Hymn, with whom you send up that triumphal Song to God? In his twenty eighth Homily (which is the third of the Incomprehensible Nature of God) p. 363, he speaks of the common Prayer, as sent up with one common Voice of the whole Congregation speaking and crying aloud to God with one accord. Some would have excused themselves from these Prayers of the Church, by this frivolous Plea, that they could pray at Home, but they could not hear a Sermon or Discourse of Instruction in their own Houses; and therefore they would come to Sermon, but not to Prayers. To whom he makes this Reply, You deceive your self, O Man: For though you may pray at Home, yet you cannot pray there in that manner as you do in the Church, where there are so many Fathers together, and where the Cry of your Prayers is sent up to God with one Consent. You are not heard so well, when you pray to God by your self alone, as when you pray with your Brethren. For there is something more here, Consent of Mind, and Consent of Voice, and the Bond of Charity, and the Prayers of the Priests together. For the Priests for this very Reason preside in the Church, that the Peoples Prayers, which are weaker of themselves, laying hold on those that are stronger, may together with them mount up to Heaven. This is a plain Description of such common Prayers, wherein both Priests and People joined not only in Heart, but in one common form of Words, whereby they cryed aloud to God together. A little after, p. 365, he describes these Prayers again by the Peoples sending up their tremendous Cry all at once, βοῶσι τὴν φρικωδεστάτην βοήν. And he makes this difference between the manner of the Energumens supplicating to God, and that of the People, that the one spake not a Word, but only supplicated by the Postures of their Bodies, bowing down their Heads, whilst the People, who were allowed to speak audibly in Prayers, spake aloud for those who could not speak for themselves. For this Reason, says he, the Deacon at the time of the Oblation brings forth the Energumens, or those that are possessed with evil Spirits, and bids them bow their Heads only, and signify their Supplications by this bodily Gesture: For they are not permitted to pray with the common Assembly of the Brethren: Therefore he presents them before the Congregation, that you pitying both their Vexation, and their Disability to speak for themselves, might by the Freedom and Liberty of Speech which is allowed you, grant them your Patronage and Assistance. From this it appears that these Prayers for the Energumens were in a certain Form, in which all the People vocally joined together. In his twenty ninth Homily, which is the fourth de Incomprehensibili, p. 374, he repeats the same Account of the Deacon's calling forth the Energumens, and bidding them bow their Heads, and the Peoples praying to God, ὁμοθυμαδὸν καὶ μετὰ σφοδρᾶς βοῆς, with one Consent and with strong Cries, that he would shew Mercy on them. A little after in the same Homily, p. 375, he mentions another Form used by the Deacon, as the Herald of the Church, who was appointed to call upon the People every now and then, and excite them to Fervency in Devotion, by using this Form of Words, ὀρθοὶ σῶμεν καλῶς, Let us elevate our Minds, and attend with Decency to our Devotions. For, as he there explains it, this Admonition did not so much respect the Body, as the Mind. When the Deacon, says he, calls upon us, and says, Let us stand elevated with Decency, it was not without good Reason that this Admonition was by the Rule of the Church appointed, but that we should elevate our Thoughts that lie groveling upon the Ground;

Ground; that casting away the Distraction that arises from secular Affairs, we should be able to present our Souls upright and raised to a spiritual Sense in the presence of God. Let no Man therefore, adds he, join in those sacred and mystical Hymns with Remissness of Mind; let no Man entertain the Thoughts of this Life at that time; but driving away all earthly Concerns, let him translate himself wholly into Heaven, as standing then close by the Throne of Glory, and flying with the Seraphims: And so let him offer up τὸν τρισάγιον ὕμνον, that most holy Hymn (meaning the Trisagion, or else the Hymn called, Glory be to God on high) to the God of Majesty and Glory. It is upon this account that we are called upon at this time, ἑστάναι καλῶς, to compose our selves decently, as it becomes Men who stand in the Presence of God, with fear and trembling, with a vigilant and elevated Soul. In his thirty fourth Homily, which is the first against the Jews, p. 440, he speaks of another Form used by the Deacon, and that frequently, before the Participation of the holy Mysteries: He then cried out ἐπιγινώσκετε ἀλλήλους, Discern and know one another: Which was an Admonition to the People, that they should suffer no Jew, Infidel, Heretick, Catechumen, or Penitent to communicate among them. In his fortieth Homily, upon the Martyrs Juventius and Maximus, p. 500, he says, the Church kept her Vigils all the Night with continual Psalmody, which was nothing but Forms of Prayers and Praises out of the Holy Scriptures. In the forty seventh Homily, upon Julian the Martyr, p. 613, he again mentions the solemn Form of Renunciation in Baptism. You renounced, says he, all this kind of Pomp (Harlots Songs and obscene Words used in the Theatre) and made a Covenant with Christ, in that Day when you were initiated in the holy Mysteries. Remember therefore those Words, and your Covenant, and beware you do not transgress it. In his fifty first Homily, upon Bernice, p. 635, he says, they used Hymns and Prayers and Psalms at the Funerals of Christians; and particularly the Words of the cxvith Psalm, Return unto thy Rest, O my Soul, for the Lord hath dealt bountifully with thee: Implying, That the Death of a Christan was a Kindness and a Rest: For he that is entered into that Rest, hath ceased from his own Works, as God did from his. In his fifty fifth Homily, which is the fifth of Repentance, p. 672, he plainly intimates, that his Discourse was made upon the Epistle that had been read for the Day. 2 Cor. xii. 21. Lest when I come again, I shall bewail many who have sinned, and have not repented. In his sixtieth Homily, which is his Catechetical Instruction to those that were preparing for Baptism, he takes notice of several Forms and Rules made by the Church, relating to that Matter, p. 797. As first, the solemn Words by which every Man entered into Covenant with Christ. For speaking of the Danger and ill Consequents of deferring Baptism to a Sick-bed, he says, when he that is baptized knows none that are about him, when he cannot hear a Word that is spoken, when he cannot utter those Words, wherewith he should make the blessed Covenant with our common Lord, but lies like a Stock or a Stone, differing nothing from a dead Man; what Advantage is it to such an one to be initiated in the holy Mysteries in such a state of Insensibility? This implies, that the Party baptized was to make his Compact with God in a solemn and usual Form of Words, which a Man at the point of Death was not able to utter. After this he goes on to shew, that the Church had appointed the time of Lent chiefly above other times for Exorcism and Baptism; and that the Catechumens, after they were instructed, were remitted over to the Exorcists, to have their Exorcisms or Prayers said over them; and that during this time they were obliged to walk Discalceate, and wear only one Coat: Which were Apointments of the Church, he says, established for good Reasons, and not without their mystical Signification. In his seventy fourth Homily, in which is a Panegyrick upon the Martyrs, p. 900, he speaks again of the Trisagion, or Cherubical Hymn, as used to be sung in the Celebration of the Eucharist. The Martyrs, says he, are now joining in Consort and partaking in the mystical Songs of the heavenly Quire: For if whilst they were in the Body, whenever they communicated in the holy Mysteries, they made Part of that Quire, singing with the Cherubims the Trisagion Hymn, Holy, Holy, Holy; as all ye that are initiated in those Mysteries, very well understand: Much more now, being joined with them, whose Partners they were in the earthly Quire, they do with greater Freedom partake in those solemn Blessings and Glorifications of God in Heaven above.

SECT. II.
Parts of the Liturgy in the second Tome of St. Chrysostom's Works.

THE second Tome of St. Chrysostom's Works, is his Homilies upon Genesis, which were preached in Lent, when that Book was always read in the Church, as appears from his first Homily, p. 10, and from what has been observed before out of his seventh Homily to the People of Antioch in the foregoing Section. In his twenty seventh Homily upon this Book, he plainly intimates, that the Lord's Prayer was always a Part of the Communion-Office. For speaking of the Duty of Forgiving Enemies, he says, p. 358, If we do this, we may then with a pure Conscience come to this holy and tremendous Table, and boldly say the Words that are contained in that Prayer. They who are initiated in the holy Mysteries, know what I mean. He covertly intends that Petition of the Lord's Prayer, Forgive us our Trespasses, as we forgive them that trespass against us. In his thirty third Homily, p. 478, he acquaints us, that though the Book of Genesis was by the Order of the Church read in Lent, yet when they came to the Thursday in the Passion-week, the Day on which our Saviour was betrayed, then they had proper Lessons for that Day, and Good-Friday, and Easter-Day, and all the time between Easter and Pentecost, when it was customary to read the Acts of the Apostles, as a Demonstration of our Saviour's Resurrection.

Reſurrection. In his fifty fourth Homily, p. 731, he ſays, Chriſt commanded the Uſe of the Lord's Prayer, preſcribing us therein the Bounds and Rules of praying for temporal Things, whilſt he enjoins us to ſay thoſe Words, Give us this Day our daily Bread. In his ſecond Homily upon the Prayer of Hannah, in the ſame Volume, p. 965, he ſays, When Chriſt commanded his Diſciples not to pray after the manner of the Heathen, uſing vain Repetitions, he alſo taught us the meaſure of Prayer; meaning the Form which he appointed. He repeats the ſame in the third Homily upon Saul and David, p. 1053. Although, ſays he, you are guilty of a thouſand Crimes, yet if you ſincerely offer up that Prayer, which promiſes, that if you forgive your Enemies, your Father will forgive your Treſpaſſes; you ſhall with great Confidence obtain the Remiſſion of all your Sins.

SECT. III. Parts of the antient Liturgy in the third Tome.

THE third Tome contains St. Chryſoſtom's Commentaries and Homilies on the Pſalms and the Prophet Iſaiah, where he frequently refers to the known Parts of the Liturgy then in Uſe in the Church. In his Comment upon the cxiith Pſalm, he three times mentions the neceſſary Uſe of the Lord's Prayer, p. 369. As Chriſt, ſays he, when he would induce us to Unanimity and Charity in our Prayers, enjoins us to make Common Prayer, and obliges the Whole Church, as if it were but one Perſon, to ſay, Our Father, and Give us this Day our daily Bread; and Forgive us our Treſpaſſes, as we forgive them that Treſpaſs againſt us; and Lead us not into Temptation, but deliver us from Evil; always uſing a Word of the plural Number, and commanding every one, whether he pray alone by himſelf, or in common with others, ſtill to make Prayer for his Brethren: So here the Prophet David calls all Men to a Conſent in Prayer, ſaying, Praiſe the Lord, O ye Servants: Praiſe the Name of the Lord. Again, p. 370, ſpeaking of Glorifying God, he ſays, Chriſt hath commanded us to pray for this, ſaying, whenever we pray, Hallowed be thy Name. And p. 372, Chriſt in his Goſpel hath commanded us to pray, and ſay, Thy Will be done on Earth, as it is in Heaven. In like manner, on the cxivth Pſalm, p. 394, ſpeaking of the Life to come, and how we ought to deſire it, and make all our Actions tend that way; he adds, For this Reaſon we are commanded to ſay in our Prayer, Thy Kingdom come; that we may always have reſpect to that Day. He repeats the ſame Words on the cxixth Pſalm, p. 425. And on the cxxviith Pſalm, p. 465, We are commanded to uſe a Prayer, in which there is but one Petition relating to this Life, Give us this day our daily Bread. Which he repeats again on the cxlth Pſalm, p. 551. On the cxlivth Pſalm, p. 595, he ſays, we are commanded to ſay in our Prayer, Hallowed be thy Name. And on the cxlixth Pſalm, p. 633, he calls it the Prayer which was offered up by all in common, and always in the plural Number, Our Father, &c. On the clth Pſalm, p. 636, he ſays, this Prayer was peculiar in its Uſe to the Sons of God only, who could call God their Father by vertue of their Regeneration and Adoption. Our Prayer, ſays he, is prefaced with this Title: For it belongs to them only to ſay, Our Father, who can give him Thanks for the Gifts which they have received, and ſhew forth them all in that Name. For he that calls God his Father, confeſſes the Adoption of Sons: And he that confeſſes the Adoption of Sons, owns and declares both Juſtification, and Sanctification, and Redemption, and Remiſſion of Sins, and the Gifts of the Holy Spirt. For all theſe muſt go before, that we may thereby enjoy the Adoption of Sons, and be thought worthy to call God our Father. By which Reaſoning of St. Chryſoſtom it appears, that he was ſo far from thinking the Lord's Prayer a carnal Form, not proper to be uſed by ſpiritual Men, becauſe it was a Form, that on the contrary he thought none were truly qualified to uſe it, but ſuch as were regenerate, and adopted, and endowed with the Gifts of the Holy Spirit, who alone had the true Title to call God their Father. And this, I ſhall ſhew in the next Chapter, was the general Senſe of all the antient Writers.

But to return to St. Chryſoſtom. In his Comment on the cxviith Pſalm, p. 406, he takes notice, that the People were uſed in their Reſponſes to return one Verſe of this Pſalm, which was, This is the Day which the Lord hath made, we will rejoice and be glad in it. This kind of Reſponſes, he calls ὑπηχεῖν and συμψάλλειν, becauſe it was the Peoples ſubjoining their Reſponſe to ſomething that the Miniſter had read before out of the ſame Pſalm. And it ſeems to have been appointed for the Service of Eaſter-Day, or Chriſtmas-Day, or the Lord's-Day, becauſe he adds, the People were wont to make this Reſponſe chiefly on that ſpiritual Aſſembly and heavenly Feſtival; plainly referring to ſome eminent Feſtival then well known to the People. And that this Cuſtom was introduced by a Law and Order of the Church, is evident from what follows: For he ſays, their Fore-fathers had appointed the People to ſing this Verſe, ὑπηχεῖν ἐνομοθέτησαν, both becauſe it was ſonorous, and alſo contained a ſublime Doctrine, that for as much as they knew not the whole Pſalm, they might from this one Verſe be perfectly inſtructed in the Myſtery of it. This was the Wiſdom of the antient Church, according to Chryſoſtom, to teach the People the Myſteries of Religion, by obliging them to bear a Part in the uſual Service.

In his Comment on the cxxxviith Pſalm, p. 518, he declares again, that the Pſalmody was performed partly by the Prieſts, and partly by the Peoples joining with them: The Prieſts began, and the People anſwered to them. On the cxlth Pſalm he notes, p. 544, that this Pſalm was conſtantly ſung in the Order of the daily Evening Service, whence it had the Name of the Evening Pſalm; as the lxiid had the Name of the Morning Pſalm, becauſe it was always ſung in the Morning Service. Of which, becauſe I have given given a more particular Account hereafter [*], I ſay no more in this Place. On the cxlivth Pſalm, p. 594, he acquaints us, that this Pſalm was always ſung alternately by the Prieſt and People at the Lord's Table, chiefly upon the account of theſe Words in it, The Eyes of all wait upon Thee, and Thou giveſt them their Meat in due Seaſon. Of which Cuſtom we ſhall have another Occaſion to ſpeak further in its proper Place. See Book XV. Chap. v. n. 10.

In his Sermon on the cxlvth Pſalm, p. 823, he tells us, that Pſalm was uſed to be ſung in the Paſſion-week, Praiſe the Lord, O my Soul, while I live, will I praiſe the Lord, &c. In his firſt Sermon on Iſaiah, p. 834, he ſays, the Triſagion, or Cherubical Hymn, Holy, Holy, Holy, was ſung by the Seraphims in Heaven above, and by Men on Earth beneath. And p. 836, he takes notice of the Angelical Doxology, Glory be to God on High, as uſed in the Church: And the Forms, κύριε ἐλέησον, and σῶσον, Lord have mercy upon us, and Lord ſave us, as uſual Prayers and Reſponſes of the People: And reproving the Peoples Clamours, and Negligence, and indecent Geſticulations in the Church, he reprimands them in this manner: How dare you mix the Devil's Sport with this Doxology of Angels? Why do you not revere the Words, which you your ſelves uſe in that Place, Serve the Lord in Fear, and rejoice unto Him with Reverence? Is this to ſerve him in Fear, when you thus theatrically toſs and ſtretch your Bodies, and know not what you ſay your ſelves for your diſorderly Vociferation? This plainly implies, that the People bare their Part, though ſometimes without a juſt Decorum, in all theſe Doxologies, Prayers and Reſponſes. In his Sermon upon the Seraphims, which is the ſixth upon Iſaiah, p. 890, he gives a large Account again of the Uſe of the ſeraphical Hymn, Holy, Holy, Holy, at the Communion Table: Which, becauſe I ſhall recite at length hereafter, I only juſt barely hint it in this Place. See Book XV.

In his ſecond Homily upon the Obſcurity of the antient Prophecies, p. 946, in anſwer to that vulgar Plea, that Men could pray at Home, he replies in ſuch a manner, as ſhews that the People bare a Part with their own Tongues in the common Prayers of the Church. You may pray at Home, ſays he, but your Prayer is not of that Efficacy and Power, as when the whole Body of the Church, with one Mind, and one Voice, ὁμοθυμαδὸν μιᾷ φωνῇ, ſend up their Prayers together, the Prieſts aſſiſting, and offering up the Prayers of the whole Multitude in common. He there alſo ſpeaks of the Deacon's Form in Bidding Prayer for all Orders of Men in the World, which I ſhall not recite here, becauſe I have done it more fully in its proper Place. Book XV. Chap. i.

THE fourth Volume of St. Chryſoſtom's Works conſiſts chiefly of private Diſcourſes, which have not much relation to the publick Liturgy of the Church: Yet ſome few Paſſages are worthy to be noted among theſe. In his famous Diſcourſe upon Eutropius, p. 554, among other Arguments, whereby he preſſes the People to lay aſide their Anger againſt him, and pardon the Injury he had done them, he urges this: How will you otherwiſe, ſays he, take the Holy Sacrament into your Hands, and uſe the Words of that Prayer, wherein we are commanded to ſay, Forgive us our Treſpaſſes, as we forgive them that Treſpaſs againſt us, if you exact Puniſhment of your Debtor? This ſhews that the Lord's Prayer was uſed then as an uſual Part of the Communion Service. In the third Homily of Repentance, p. 562, he ſpeaks of the Seraphical Hymn under the Title of μυστικὸν μέλος, the Myſtical Song, becauſe it was uſed in the Celebration of the holy Myſteries. And again in his ſecond Epiſtle to Olympias, p. 715, he mentions it under the ſame Title. And in his Sermon after his return from Baniſhment, p. 971, he ſpeaks of the Form εἰρήνη πᾶσι, Peace be to you all, as a ſolemn Form uſed frequently in the Church.

SECT. V. In the Fifth Tome.

THE fifth Volume of his Works affords us many more Examples. Here he no leſs than eight times mentions the Lord's Prayer as a Form in common Uſe by the Commandment of Chriſt. In his ſixth Homily upon Lazarus, p. 107, We are commanded in our Prayer to ſay, Forgive us our Treſpaſſes, that by the continual Uſe of that Prayer we may be put in Mind, that we are liable to Puniſhment. In his eighth Homily on our Saviour's Prayer, Father if it be poſſible, let this Cup paſs from me, p. 134, he ſays, Chriſt prayed, to teach his Diſciples to pray. But they were to learn not only to pray, but after what manner to pray: And therefore he delivered them a Prayer in theſe Words, commanding them and us to ſay, Our Father which art in Heaven, &c. In his tenth Homily, p. 154, he ſays, Chriſt taught us what we are to ſay in Prayer, and in a few Words inſtructed us in all manner of Virtue. In his ſixteenth Homily upon thoſe Words, If thine Enemy hunger, feed him, p. 237, he urges Forgiveneſs of Injuries with this Argument, for this Reaſon we are taught to ſay, Forgive us, as we forgive, that we may learn, that the Meaſure of Forgiveneſs takes its riſe from our ſelves. In his thirty ſixth Homily upon Pentecoſt, p. 552, he ſays, praying by the Lord's Prayer is praying by the Spirit: His Words are theſe, If there was no Holy Ghoſt, we that are Believers could not pray to God: For we ſay, Our Father which art in Heaven. As therefore we could not ſay, that Jeſus was the Lord, ſo neither could we call God our Father, without the Holy Ghoſt. How does that appear? From the ſame Apoſtle, who ſays, becauſe ye are Sons, God hath ſent forth the Spirit of his Son into your Hearts, crying, Abba Father. In his thirty eighth Homily of Repentance and the Euchariſt, p. 570, he thus again argues for forgiving Enemies. When we go into the Church, let us approach God as becomes his Majeſty, leſt if we have Deſigns of Revenge in our Hearts when we pray, we pray againſt our ſelves, ſaying, Forgive us, as we forgive them that Treſpaſs againſt us. Theſe are terrible Words, and the ſame as if one ſaid to God, Lord, I have forgiven my Enemy, Forgive thou me: I have looſed him, Looſe thou me: I have pardoned my Enemy, Pardon me: If I have retained his Sins, Retain thou mine: If I have not looſed my Neighbour, do not thou looſe my Offences: What Meaſure I have meted to him, Meaſure to me again. In his fifty firſt Homily upon the Prayers of Chriſt, p. 691, he ſays, Chriſt taught his Diſciples to pray both in Words and Actions; meaning the Words of the Lord's Prayer, together with his own Example. And in the ſixty ſecond Homily upon the Paralytick, p. 934, he ſays, this Prayer was the peculiar Privilege of the Faithful, and not allowed to any unbaptized Catechumen: For before we have waſhed away our Sins in the Font of the holy Waters, we cannot call God our Father: But when we return from thence, having put off the Burden of our Sins, then we ſay, Our Father which art in Heaven.

Beſides this Account of the various Uſe of the Lord's Prayer, he mentions ſeveral other Parcels of the Liturgy in this Volume. In the ſixteenth Homily, p. 229, he takes notice of the Uſe of the Seraphical Hymn in the Euchariſtical Service. Conſider, ſays he, you that are initiated, what a Myſtical Service you have been employed in, with whom you have ſent up that Myſtical Song, with whom you have cried out, τρισάγιον, Holy, Holy, Holy. In the thirty ſixth Homily upon Pentecoſt and the Holy Spirit, p. 553, he treats at large of that antient Form of Salutation uſed in every Office, Peace be with you, or, The Lord be with you, and the Peoples anſwering always, And with thy Spirit. Our common Father and Teacher, ſays he, meaning the Biſhop, when he goes up into his Throne, ſays, Peace be to you all, and you all make Anſwer with one common Voice, And with thy Spirit. Neither do you make this Anſwer only when he goes into his Throne, or when he preaches to you, or when he prays for you, but when he ſtands by the holy Table: When he is about to offer that Tremendous Sacrifice (they that are initiated know what I ſay) before he touches the Elements lying upon the Table, he prays, The Grace of the Lord be with you, and ye reply, And with thy Spirit: Reminding yourſelves by this Anſwer, that it is not the Miniſter that effects any thing in this Matter, neither is the Conſecration of the Gifts the Work of human Nature, but that it is the Grace of the Spirit then preſent, and deſcending upon the Elements, which conſummates that Myſtical Sacrifice. In the thirty eighth Homily on the Euchariſt and Repentance, p. 569, he takes notice of another known Form in the Communion-Service, where the Prieſt ſays, Let us lift up our Minds and Hearts, and the People anſwer, We lift them up unto the Lord, ἔχομεν πρὸς κύριον. This is the ſame Form as we have ſeen before in Cyprian, Surſum Corda, & Habemus ad Dominum. In the forty ſeventh Homily, p. 632, he ſpeaks again of the Seraphical Hymn, taken out of Iſaiah, under the Name of μυστικὸν μέλος, the Myſtical Song. And Homily the fifty ſecond, in eos qui Paſcha jejunant, p. 713, perſuading Men to Peace and Unity, he argues again from the frequent Uſe of the Form εἰρήνη πᾶσιν, Peace be with you all, in every Office of the Church. There is nothing, ſays he, can be compared with Peace and Concord. Therefore the Biſhop when he firſt enters the Church, before he goes up into his Throne, prays, ſaying, Peace be with you all: And when he riſes up, he does not begin to preach, before he ſays again, Peace be with you all. And the Prieſts, when they are about to ſay any Prayer of Benediction, do not begin the Bleſſing, before they have uſed the ſame Form of Salutation. And the Deacon, when he bids Men pray with others, enjoins them this in their Prayers, that they ſhould pray for the Angel of Peace [*], and that all their Purpoſes may be directed to a peaceable End: And when he diſmiſſes you from this Aſſembly, he prays thus, ſaying, Πορεύεσθε ἐν εἰρήνῃ, Go in Peace: And nothing is ſaid or done without this. So that it ſeems, this was a Form that had its Return in every particular Office, and was ſometimes uſed ſix or ſeven times at one Aſſembly of the Church. In his thirty fifth Homily upon the Aſcenſion, p. 535, he more particularly takes Notice of this Form of the Deacon's bidding Men pray for the Angel of Peace. In his Admonition to thoſe that are ſcandalized at the Evils which befall the Church, cap. 4. p. 863, he has again occaſion to mention the Seraphical Hymn under the foreſaid Title of the Myſtical Song of Sanctification. In his ſixty third Homily, p. 949, he ſhews us, how by the Order of the Church, on the Day of our Saviour's Paſſion, all ſuch Portions of Scripture were read, as had any relation to the Croſs; and on the great Sabbath, or Saturday following, ſuch Scriptures as contained the Hiſtory of his being betrayed, crucified, dead and buried. And he adds, p. 951, That on Eaſter Day they read ſuch Paſſages as gave an Account of his Reſurrection, and on every Feſtival the Things that happened at that Seaſon. Only the Acts of the Apoſtles, which contain the Hiſtory of the Miracles done by the Apoſtles after Pentecoſt, after the Holy Ghoſt was come upon them, were for a particular Reaſon ordered to be read before Pentecoſt, that is, immediately after Eaſter, becauſe the Miracles of the Apoſtles, contained in that Book, were the great Demonſtration of our Saviour's Reſurrection: For which Reaſon the Church appointed the Book of the Acts always to be read in the Time between Eaſter and Whitſontide, immediately after the Reſurrection of Chriſt, to give Men the Evidences and Proofs of that holy Myſtery, which was the Completion of their Redemption. Thus according to Chryſoſtom, the Church in great Wiſdom ordered and methodized her Liturgy by exact Rules, for the better Inſtruction and Edification of the People.

SECT. VI. In the ſixth Tome. THE ſixth Tome is chiefly made up of ſuch Tracts, as do not acknowledge Chryſoſtom for their Author: And therefore among theſe we ſhall not be very curious in ſearching for the Forms of the antient Liturgy. Some of them are ſuppoſed by Learned Men to be written by Severianus Biſhop of Gabala, Co-temporary with Chryſoſtom, and theſe may be reckoned of the ſame Authority as Chryſoſtom's own Writings. Among the Homilies of this ſort is reckoned the thirty ſeventh upon the Parable of the Prodigal Son, where the Author, p. 375, commenting upon thoſe Words, They began to be Merry, thus diſcourſes: Ye know what ſpiritual Mirth is, who have taſted of it, who have been Partakers of the holy Myſteries, and have ſeen the Deacons or Miniſters of Divine Service, imitating the Wings of Angels with their little Veils lying upon their Left Shoulders, and traverſing the Church, and crying, Let no Catechumen be preſent, none of thoſe that may not eat, no Spie, none of thoſe that may not ſee the Feaſt of the fatted Calf, none of thoſe that may not look upon the heavenly Blood ſhed for the Remiſſion of Sins, no one that is unworthy of the living Sacrifice, no one that is yet unbaptized, no one that may not with his polluted Lips touch the Tremendous Myſteries: Ye remember how after this, the Angels from Heaven ſing the Hymns and Praiſes, ſaying, Holy is the Father, who willed the fatted Calf to be ſlain, who knew no Sin, as ſaith the Prophet Iſaiah, who did no Sin, neither was Guile found in his Mouth: Holy is the Son, the Calf that is always willingly ſlain, and always lives: Holy is the Comforter, the Holy Ghoſt, which perfects the Sacrifice. Theſe are plain References and Alluſions to the uſual Forms of the Church, viz. to the Deacons veſted in their proper Habit and Badge, calling to all Non-communicants to withdraw; and to the Seraphical Hymn, Holy, Holy, Holy, which was always ſung in the Communion Service. The ſame Writer a little after, p. 377, as plainly alludes to the Uſe of the Lord's Prayer at the Euchariſt, when he brings in the Father thus ſpeaking to the elder Son: "Son, thou art ever "with me: Thou ſtandeſt by the Altar, and "there crieſt out with Freedom, Our Father, "which art in Heaven, Hallowed be thy Name." In the firſt Homily in this Volume, intituled, De Uno Legiſlatore, p. 10, there is mention made of the Ceremony of laying the Book of the Goſpels upon a Biſhop's Head at his Ordination. For this Reaſon, ſays the Author, when Prieſts are ordained in the Church, the Goſpel of Chriſt is laid upon their Heads, that he that is ordained, may learn that he receives the true Tire or Covering of the Goſpel; and that he may be taught, that though he be the Head of all, yet he is ſubject to thoſe Laws; though he rules over all, he is under the Rule of thoſe Laws; though he gives Laws to all others, he is to be governed by the Law himſelf. The Criticks are not agreed upon the Author of this Diſcourſe. Du Pin [a] rejects it as none of Chryſoſtom's: But Photius quotes it under his Name, and Biſhop Pearſon [b] has a long Diſſertation to vindicate the Authority of it out of Photius and ſeveral other antient Writers before him, where he anſwers all the Objections that Biſhop Uſher and ſome other Learned Men had raiſed againſt it. Without deciding this Controverſy, it is ſufficient for our preſent Purpoſe, that the Homily either acknowledges Chryſoſtom or ſome ſuch other antient Writer for its Author, and the Ceremony here ſpoken of was certainly a Cuſtom obſerved in the Ordination of Biſhops in the Time of Chryſoſtom, as appears not only from other Places in Chryſoſtom, but alſo from the Authors of the Conſtitutions and the Eccleſiaſtical Hierarchy, and the Canon of the fourth Council of Carthage, which I have had an occaſion to produce in a former [*] Book, to which I refer the Reader, and go on with Chryſoſtom in order.

In the fifty ſecond Homily, upon the Circus, in this Volume, p. 491, the Author makes mention of that antient Cuſtom of ſaying, δόξασοι κύριε, Glory be to Thee, O Lord, at the reading of the Goſpel. When we are met together, ſays he, in the Eccleſiaſtical Theatre, as ſoon as the Deacon opens the Book of the Goſpels, we all look upon him with Silence, and when he begins to read, we preſently riſe up, and ſay, Glory be to Thee, O Lord.

SECT. VII. In the ſeventh Tome of his Homilies on St. Matthew.

IN his eleventh Homily on St. Matthew, p. 108, he mentions the Peoples joining in Pſalmody and the accuſtomed Prayers. When ye have born your Part in Singing two or three Pſalms, δύο ψαλμοὺς ἢ τρεῖς ὑπηχήσαντες, and have made your uſual Prayers, τὰς συνήθεις εὐχὰς ποιούμενοι, ye think ye have done enough for your Salvation. In the thirty third Homily, p. 318, he notes the cuſtomary Form of the Miniſter's ſaying, εἰρήνη ὑμῖν, Peace be unto you all, when he firſt enters the Church: And he forms this Exhortation upon it: When I ſay, Peace be unto you; and ye anſwer again, And with thy Spirit; do not ſay this only in Words, but in Mind; not with your Mouth, but with your Heart. For if you ſay here in the Church, Peace be with thy Spirit; but as ſoon as you are gone out, begin to oppugn me, deſpiſe me, accuſe me, and load me with a thouſand Reproaches, What Peace is this? In his ſixty ninth Homily, p. 600, ſpeaking of the Monks, and their Manner of worſhipping God, he ſays, As ſoon as they were out of their Beds, they made a Quire, and ſang Hymns to God, συμφώνως ἅπαντες ὥσπερ ἐξ ἑνὸς στόματος, all together with one Voice, and as it were with one

Mouth:

Mouth: And among these, they particularly addressed that Angelical Hymn to God, Glory be to God on high, on Earth Peace, Good-will towards Men. In his seventy second Homily, p. 624, he speaks of three Prayers, one of which was for the Demoniacks, the second for the Penitents, and the third for the Faithful or Communicants, all conceived in a certain Form of Words; which is evident from this Circumstance, which he there subjoins, That in the last of these Prayers the Children of the Church joined with the rest of the People in crying to God for Mercy. The People prayed alone without the Children, when they prayed for the Demoniacks and Penitents; but when they prayed for themselves, they strengthened their Prayers with the Cries and Intercessions of their Children, whose Innocence and Simplicity they esteemed to be prevailing Motives with God to hear them. By this Account it is plain, these Prayers must be in certain Forms known both to the People and the Children: Otherwise it is impossible to imagine, how they should all join vocally in crying to God for Mercy. In his twentieth Homily, which is upon the Lord's Prayer, he not only mentions the Use of this Form of Prayer, but says, it was the peculiar Privilege of Communicants or baptized Persons to use it. That this Prayer, says he, p. 200, belongs to the Faithful only, is evidenced both from the Laws of the Church, and the first Words of the Prayer it self. For no unbaptized Person can call God his Father. In the same Homily, he takes Notice of the Ceremonies used in the Reception of the Eucharist, particularly the Custom of giving one another the holy Kiss of Peace. And in the seventh Homily, p. 70, he alludes to the Custom of the Priest's saying, ἅγια τοῖς ἁγίοις, in the Celebration of the Eucharist, when he says, Christ gives holy Things to holy Men.

SECT. VIII.
In the eighth Tome on St. John and the Acts of the Apostles.

THE eighth Tome of St. Chrysostom's Works, contains his Homilies on St. John and the Acts of the Apostles. In his Preface to St. John, he mentions the Form of renouncing the Devil, and covenanting with Christ. Ye which are initiated, says he, know what Compact ye made with us, or rather with Christ, when he admitted you to his holy Mystery, what you said to him concerning the Pomp of Satan, how after you had renounced Satan and his Angels, you renounced this also, and promised never to look toward it again.

Hom. forty second, he speaks of the Lord's Prayer, as a Form of spiritual Prayer, which Christ taught his Disciples and all Christians.

Hom. forty fourth, he says, every good Christian used this Prayer daily, saying those holy Words, Thy Kingdom come; implying a Belief of the Resurrection.

Hom. sixty first, he makes mention of Hymns and Psalmody, as the Honour of Christian Funerals.

Hom. seventy seventh, he takes notice of the Kiss of Peace, and the Common Prayers made for the whole State of the World in the Communion-Service. We salute one another, says he, in the holy Mysteries, that being many, we may be made one; and we make common Prayers for those that are unbaptized, and Supplications for the Sick, and for the Fruits of the World both by Sea and Land. Which plainly refers to the known Forms then commonly used in the Church.

In his nineteenth Homily on the Acts of the Apostles, he speaks of several customary Forms observed in the Reading of the Scriptures: The Deacon, the common Minister of the Church, first stood up, and cried with a loud Voice, πρόσχωμεν, Let us give Attention: And this he repeated over and over again. After that, the Reader names the Prophet Esaias, or the like, and before he begins to read, he cries out, τάδε λέγει κύριος, Thus saith the Lord.

Hom. twenty first, he refers to the Bidding Prayer of the Deacon, in which he was used to admonish the People in these Words, among many other Petitions, Let us pray for those that sleep in Christ, and for those that make Commemorations for them, for the Church, for the Priests, for the People, for the Martyrs, &c.

Hom. twenty fourth, he mentions the Hymns that were used by all in common at the Communion Table. Know you not, that you then stand with Angels, and sing with them, and send up Hymns and Praises to God with them? Meaning the Trisagion or Cherubical Hymn, Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord God of Hosts, &c. which was a known Part of the Eucharistical Service.

SECT. IX.
In the ninth Tome on Romans, and first and second to the Corinthians.

THE ninth Tome of his Works contains his Homilies on the Epistle to the Romans, and the first and second to the Corinthians. In his seventh Homily on Romans, p. 68, he speaks of common Prayer sent up to God with one Voice for the Energumens or Persons vexed with evil Spirits. Which was by a certain Form, as we have seen before in his seventy first Homily on St. Matthew, and is evident from the very Manner of expressing it here: For the People could not pray with one Voice, unless a Form of Words was some way or other dictated to them. This dictating of Prayers to be used by the whole Assembly was commonly the Office of the Deacon, as Chrysostom informs us in the fourteenth Homily upon this same Epistle, p. 165, where he shews the different State of the Church in the Apostles Days from that of his own Time. For explaining those Words, The Spirit maketh Intercession for us with groanings that cannot be uttered, he says, This was an obscure Expression, because many of the miraculous Gifts, which were then in being, were since ceased: As the Gift of Prophecy, the Gift of Wisdom, the Gift of healing the Sick, the Gift of raising the Dead, the Gift of Tongues, and among the rest the Gift of Prayer, which was then distinguished by the Name of the Spirit: And he that had this Gift, prayed for the whole Congregation. Upon which account the Apostle gives the Name of the Spirit both to this Gift, and to the Soul that was endowed with it, who made

Intercession

Interceſſion with groanings unto God, asking of God ſuch things as were of general Uſe and Advantage to the whole Congregation: The Image or Symbol of which is now the Deacon, who offers up Prayers for the People. Here, according to Chryſoſtom, the Spirit of praying was an extraordinary Gift, like that of Tongues; and the Difference between the Apoſtolical Age and his own was this, that at firſt both the Matter and Words of their Prayers were inſpired in an extraordinary way, but afterward the Deacons prayed by ordinary Forms without any ſuch immediate Inſpiration.

In his Comments upon the firſt Epiſtle to the Corinthians, (Hom. 24. p. 532,) he rehearſes the Heads of the ſolemn Thankſgiving at the Conſecration of the Euchariſt. We rehearſe, ſays he, over the Cup the ineffable Bleſſings of God, and whatever Benefits we enjoy; and ſo we offer it at the Holy Table, and communicate, giving him Thanks that he hath delivered Mankind from Error; that when we were afar off, he hath made us near; that when we had no Hope, and were without God, he hath made us Brethren and Fellow-heirs with himſelf; for theſe and all the like Bleſſings we give him Thanks, and ſo come to his holy Table. Hom. 35, p. 640, he notes the Words, εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας τῶν αἰώνων, for ever and ever, to be the common Concluſion of their Euchariſtical Thankſgivings, to which a Layman, if they were ſaid in an unknown Tongue, could not anſwer, Amen. In his thirty ſixth Homily, p. 652, he mentions the Form, Peace be with you all, to which the People anſwered, And with thy Spirit; Which he derives from Apoſtolical Practice, when both Miniſter and People were uſed to ſpeak by immediate Inſpiration of the Holy Ghoſt. He farther obſerves, p. 653, that they all ſang in common, both in the Apoſtles Days and in his own Time: And that the Biſhop at the Entrance into the Church, ſaid always, Peace be to you all, as a proper Salutation when he came into his Father's Houſe; though he laments, that whilſt they retained the Name of Peace, they had loſt the Thing. Again, p. 655, he takes Notice, that when a ſingle Reader ſung the Pſalms, all the People, as it were with one Mouth, did ὑπηχεῖν, return their Anſwer to him, that is, either by ſinging the Verſes alternately, or by joining in the Cloſe of every Verſe; of which more in the next Book, Chap. i. Hom. 40, p. 688, he obſerves, that every Perſon at his Baptiſm was by the Rule of the Church obliged to make Profeſſion of his Faith in the ſolemn Words of the Creed; and among other Articles particularly ſaid, I believe the Reſurrection of the Dead: By which Form of Profeſſion Chryſoſtom explains that noted Paſſage of St. Paul, Why are they then baptized for the Dead? That is, If the Dead riſe not, why do they profeſs at their Baptiſm, that they believe the Reſurrection of the Dead? Hom. 41, p. 702, he mentions part of the ſolemn Form of Prayer for the Dead, then in uſe in the Church. It is not without Reaſon, ſays he, that he that ſtands at the Altar, when the holy Myſteries are celebrated, ſays, We offer for all thoſe who are dead in Chriſt, and for all thoſe who make Commemorations for them. And a little after, We at that time alſo make Prayers for the whole World, and name the Dead, with Martyrs, and Confeſſors, and Prieſts: For we are all one Body, though ſome Members exceed other Members in Glory.

In his ſecond Homily upon the ſecond Epiſtle to the Corinthians, p. 740, he ſtiles the Lord's Prayer εὐχὴν νενομισμένην, the Prayer which Chriſt brought in, and eſtabliſhed by Law in his Church; and ſays it was the peculiar Privilege of the Faithful to uſe it, for the Catechumens were not allowed ſo great a Favour before Baptiſm. There alſo he mentions ſeveral Forms of the Deacons calling upon the People to pray: As that, σῶμεν καλῶς, σταθῶμεν, Let us ſtand devoutly, and pray: Which, he ſays, was addreſſed not only to the Prieſts, but alſo to the People: And again, Let us pray ardently for the Catechumens: after which Admonition the Deacon recited the particular Petitions they were to make for them, which Chryſoſtom there relates at length in the very Form that was uſed, which I ſhall omit to recite here, becauſe the Reader may find it whole hereafter in the Service of the Catechumens, Book XIV. Chap. v. A little after in this ſame Homily, p. 743, he mentions the uſual Form of Renunciation in Baptiſm: Ye that are initiated, ſays he, know what I ſay: For ye eaſily remember thoſe Words whereby ye renounce the Tyranny of the Devil, falling upon your Knees, and going over to Chriſt your King, and uttering thoſe tremendous Words, whereby we are taught to pay no manner of Obedience to the Tyrant. And, p. 745, he adds, That in the Service of the Faithful, that is, the Communion Service, the Deacon again bid them ſupplicate and addreſs God for Biſhops, for Presbyters, for Kings, for Emperors, for all by Sea and Land, for the Temperature of the Air, and for the whole World. Which are but ſo many hints of the Deacon's Bidding Prayer in the Service of the Faithful, more fully related in the fifteenth Book, Chap. i. Hom. fifth, p. 775, he ſpeaks of the Obligation Men have to uſe the Lord's Prayer. Hom. eighteenth, p. 872, he intimates a Form of Prayer uſed by the People at the time of ordaining Miniſters. The Suffrage of the People, ſays he, is no little Ornament to thoſe who are called to any ſpiritual Dignity. And therefore he that performs the Office of Ordination, then requires their Prayers, and they join their Suffrage, and cry out thoſe Words, which they that are initiated know, for it is not lawful to ſpeak all things before the Unbaptized. A little after, p. 873, he ſays, the People had a conſiderable ſhare in the Prayers of the Church. For common Prayers were made both by Prieſt and People for the Energumens and Penitents, and they all ſay one and the ſame Prayer for them, the Prayer is ſo full of Mercy. Again, when we diſmiſs thoſe who may not participate of the holy Table, another Prayer is to be made, in which we all fall down upon the Ground together, and all riſe together. He means the Prayer for the whole State of Chriſt's Church, which was ſaid jointly by the Prieſt and People together. Again, when the Salutation of Peace is mutually to be given and received, we all in like manner uſe this Salutation. He means either the Kiſs of Peace, or the Form of Salutation uſed between Prieſt and People, The Peace of God be with you, And with thy Spirit. But more probably he means the former, becauſe it immediately follows after, When we come to the tremendous Myſteries, then as the Prieſt prays for the People, ſo the People pray for the Prieſt. For theſe Words, And with thy Spirit, ſignify nothing elſe. Again, that Prayer wherein we give Thanks, is common to both. For not only the Prieſt gives Thanks, but all the People. For he firſt receives their Anſwer, they rejoyning, It is meet and right ſo to do, and then he begins the Thankſgiving. And why ſhould any Man wonder, that the People ſhould ſpeak together with the Prieſt, when they even join with Cherubims and the Powers above to ſend up in common thoſe ſacred Hymns to Heaven? Meaning the Hymns, Holy, Holy, Holy, and Glory be to God on high, which were ſung by all the People in the Communion Service. Chryſoſtom has a good Remark upon all theſe Forms, and the People's Obligation to bear a Part in them, which therefore I may not here omit, becauſe it ſhews us the Reaſon why the antient Church ſo ordered her Service. I have mentioned all theſe Things, ſays he, on purpoſe to excite the Vigilance of thoſe that are in an inferior Station, that we may learn that we are all one Body, and only differ, as one Member may differ from another; and that we ſhould not caſt all upon the Prieſts, but our ſelves be concerned in the Care of the whole Church, as of one common Body.

SECT. X. In the tenth Tome.

THE laſt Volume of St. Chryſoſtom's Works contains his Homilies upon the remaining Epiſtles of St. Paul. In his firſt Homily on the Epheſians, p. 1037, he ſpeaks of the Forms of Profeſſion uſed in Baptiſm: What is more gracious, ſays he, than thoſe Words, by which we renounce the Devil? By which we covenant with Chriſt? What more gracious than that Profeſſion, which we make both before and after Baptiſm? In the third Homily, p. 1051, he tells us the Deacons were wont to uſe this Form of Words to all thoſe that were under the Church's Cenſures, to withdraw from the Lord's Table, Ye that are in the State of Penance, depart. And, p. 1052, when they were gone, they ſaid again to the Communicants, Let us pray in common all together. And there alſo he ſpeaks of the Hymns, that were ſung at the Lord's Table. Hom. fourteenth, p. 1127, he argues from the Uſe of the Lord's Prayer, That Men ſhould not revile thoſe, whom they therein owned to be their Brethren. If he is not thy Brother, how doſt thou ſay, Our Father? For that Word, Our, denotes many Perſons. And farther to ſhew the Indecency of ſuch Contumelious Language, he reminds them of their known Cuſtom in ſinging the ſacred Hymns with Cherubims and Seraphims at the Communion. Conſider with whom you ſtand in the Time of the Holy Myſteries. With Cherubims, with Seraphims. For the Seraphims uſe no Reviling. Their Mouth is continually employed in fulfilling one neceſſary Office, that of glorifying and praiſing God. How then can you ſay with them, Holy, Holy, Holy, who uſe your Mouth to revile your Brethren? He adds, You ſay, Our Father; and what follows that? Which art in Heaven. As ſoon as you ſay, Our Father which art in Heaven, that Word raiſes you up, and gives Wings to your Soul, and ſhews that you have a Father in Heaven. Therefore do nothing, ſay nothing of thoſe Things that are upon Earth. You ſtand in Heaven, and do you uſe Reviling? You converſe with Angels, and do you uſe Reviling? You are honoured with the Kiſs of the Lord, and do you uſe Reviling? God adorns your Mouth ſo many ways with Angelical Hymns, with Meat, not Angelical, but above Angels, with his own Kiſſes and Embraces, and do you ſtill accuſtom your ſelf to Reviling?

Hom. twenty third, p. 1190, he ſays, Jeſus the Son of the living God hath brought down to us the Celeſtial Hymns. For what the Cherubims ſay above, He hath commanded us to ſay, Holy, Holy, Holy.

On the Philippians, Hom. fifteenth, p. 1311, he poſitively aſſerts, That Chriſt delivered the Lord's Prayer as a Form of Prayer, ὅρον εὐχῆς, teaching us to ſay, Give us this Day our daily Bread.

On the Coloſſians, Hom. third, p. 1337, We pray, ſaying, Thy Will be done on Earth as it is in Heaven. We give Thanks, ſaying, Glory be to God on high, on Earth Peace, Good-will towards Men. We petition in our Prayers for the Angel of Peace, and we pray for Peace upon all Occaſions, for nothing can be compared unto it. The Biſhop in the Church gives the Benediction of Peace, ſaying in every Office, in Prayers, in Supplications, in his Homilies, once, twice, thrice, and oftner, Peace be with you all. Again, p. 1338, When the Biſhop enters the Church, he immediately ſays, Peace be with you all: when he preaches, Peace be with you all: when he gives the Bleſſing, Peace be with you all: when he bids you ſalute one another, Peace be with you all: when the Sacrifice is offered, Peace be with you all: And in the Intervals, Grace and Peace be with you. Is it not therefore abſurd, that when we ſo often hear Peace mentioned, we ſhould ſtill be at War among our ſelves? We receive the Salutation of Peace, and return it to him that gives it, and yet are at War with him. You anſwer, And with thy Spirit: Yet as ſoon as you are gone out of the Church, you calumniate and revile him. He adds, p. 1339, That it was not the Biſhop, properly ſpeaking, that gave the Peace, but Chriſt, that vouchſafes to ſpeak by his Mouth.

Hom. ſixth in Coloſ. p. 1358, he compares the Forms of Renunciation in Baptiſm, and covenanting with Chriſt, to an Hand-writing or Bond, ſaying, Let us beware that we be not convicted by it, after we have ſaid thoſe Words, We renounce thee, Satan, and we make a Covenant with Thee, O Chriſt. Again, p. 1359, You are taught to ſay, I renounce thee, and thy Pomp, and thy Worſhip, and thy Angels. He adds, That every new-baptized Perſon, as ſoon as he came up out of the Water, was appointed to ſay, Our Father which art in Heaven, Thy Will be done in Earth, as it is in Heaven.

Hom. ninth in Coloſſ. p. 1380, on thoſe Words, Admoniſhing one another in Pſalms, and Hymns, and ſpiritual Songs, he ſays, The Faithful know, what is the Hymn of the Spirits above; what the Cherubims above ſay; what the Angels ſaid, Glory be to God on high. Meaning that theſe two Hymns were ſung by the Faithful in the Communion Service.

Hom. tenth, p. 1385, he gives the Lord's Prayer the Title of εὐχὴ πιστῶν, The Prayer of the Faithful, becauſe it was their peculiar Privilege to uſe it.

Hom. third in 2 Theſſ. p. 1502, he mentions two uſual Forms relating to the reading of the Leſſons in the Church. When the Reader riſes up, and ſays, Thus ſaith the Lord: And the Deacon ſtanding up, commands all Men to keep ſilence; he does not ſay this to honour the Reader, but God, who ſpeaks to all by him.

Hom. ſixth in 1 Tim. p. 1553, he proves, that Infidels are prayed for as well as others, from the Uſe of the Lord's Prayer. For when he that prays, ſays, Thy Will be done in Earth, as it is in Heaven, the Meaning is, That as there is no Infidel in Heaven, ſo we pray, that there may be none on Earth neither.

Hom. ſecond in 2 Tim. p. 1638, he ſays, The Words whereby the Prieſts conſecrate the Euchariſt, were the ſame that Chriſt ſpake.

Hom. fourth on Hebrews, p. 1785, he intimates, that they had ſet Pſalms in their Funeral Service. Conſider, ſays he, what you ſing at that Time, Turn again unto thy Reſt, O my Soul, for the Lord hath rewarded thee. And again, I will fear no Evil, for thou art with me. And again, Thou art my Refuge from Tribulation, which compaſſes me about. Conſider what thoſe Pſalms mean. You ſay, Turn again unto thy Reſt, O my Soul: And do you ſtill weep? Is not this mere Pageantry and Hypocriſy? If you believe the Things to be true, which you ſay, it is ſuperfluous to lament.

Hom. fourteenth, p. 1852, ſpeaking of the Hymns ſung at the Euchariſt, he ſays, Do not we ſing the ſame Celeſtial Hymns, which the Quires of Incorporeal Powers ſing above?

Hom. ſeventeenth, p. 1870, he mentions a part of the Oblation Prayer, In the Oblation we offer, or bear and confeſs our Sins, and ſay, Forgive us our Tranſgreſſions, whether voluntary or involuntary; that is, We firſt remember them, and then ask Pardon. There alſo, p. 1872, he mentions the Deacon's ſolemn Form of Words, admoniſhing the People to come holy to the Holy Sacrament: For this reaſon the Deacon cries out and calls upon the Saints, and by theſe Words prompts all Men to conſider their Offences, that no one come unprepared.

Hom. twenty ſecond, p. 1898, he tacitly refers to the Form, Surſum corda, Let us lift up our Hearts. For having mentioned thoſe Words of the Pſalmiſt, Let the lifting up of my Hands be an Evening Sacrifice, he adds, With our Hands let us alſo lift up our Hearts. Ye which are initiated know what I ſay, you perhaps underſtand what is ſpoken, and perceive what I have obſcurely hinted. Let us lift up our Souls on high.

Beſide theſe Paſſages collected out of Chryſoſtom's Works, publiſhed by Fronto Ducæus, there are ſeveral others in thoſe Homilies which Sir Henry Savil ſet forth in Greek, and others in the Latin Editions only. Neither of which I have had Opportunity perfectly to examine, and therefore I ſhall leave them to the more diligent Enquiry of the curious Reader: Only noting, That in the ſixth Homily of Repentance [c], he obſerves this Difference between David's Pſalms and the reſt of the Scriptures, that the others were read only twice a Week in publick, but the Pſalms were uſed by all ſorts of Men, in all Places, and upon all Occaſions. In Eccleſiis pernoctantibus primus & medius, & noviſſimus eſt David. When they held their Vigils all Night in the Church, David's Pſalms were in the Beginning, and Middle, and End of all their Service. The ſame was obſerved in their Morning Prayer; in their Funeral Obſequies; by Virgins at their Needle; by the Illiterate and Unlearned, who could not read a Letter in the Book, yet could repeat David's Pſalms by Heart. David was always in their Mouths, not only in the Cities and Churches, but in the Courts, in the Monaſteries, in the Deſarts and the Wilderneſs. He turned Earth into Heaven, and Men into Angels, being adapted to all Orders, and all Capacities, Children, young Men, Virgins, old Men, and Sinners. In the Beginning of the ſame Homily, he ſays the Book of Geneſis was by Appointment of the Church read only once a Year at a certain Seaſon, which was the Time of Lent, as we have heard before in ſeveral places of this Author, and as we ſhall ſee more fully demonſtrated from other Writers in the next Book.

Among thoſe publiſhed in Greek by Sir H. Savil, the hundred and twenty third Homily, (T. 5. p. 809.) ſpeaks of the Prieſts uſing this Form of Admonition to all Communicants in the Time when the holy Myſteries were celebrated, ἅγια τοῖς ἁγίοις, Holy Things are only for holy Men. And whoever will beſtow the Pains to peruſe the reſt of the Homilies which are in that Edition, may doubtleſs find many other ſuch Fragments of the antient Liturgy, which, as appears from this Collection, ſo much abound in this celebrated Writer.

CHAP. VII.

Of the Uſe of the Lord's Prayer in the Liturgy of the Antient Church.

SECT. I. The Lord's Prayer by all the Ancients eſteemed a Form, given by Chriſt to be uſed by his Diſciples.

IF there were no other Argument to prove the Lawfulneſs of ſet Forms of Prayer in the Judgment of the Ancients, the Opinion which they had of the Lord's Prayer, and their Practice purſuant to that Opinion, would ſufficiently do it. And therefore though ſeveral Things have been occaſionally hinted already about this Matter, yet it will not be amiſs to give it a diſtinct handling in this Chapter. And firſt of all I obſerve, that the Ancients did not only eſteem it as a Rule and Pattern to conform our Prayers to, but looked upon it as a particular Form of Prayer, which Chriſt enjoined all his Diſciples to uſe in the ſame Words that he delivered it. Tertullian [a] ſays, Our Lord preſcribed a new Form of Prayer for his new Diſciples of the New Teſtament: And that tho' John had taught his Diſciples a Form of Prayer, yet all that he did was only as a Fore-runner of Chriſt; when Chriſt was increaſed (as John had foretold, He muſt increaſe, but I muſt decreaſe) then the whole Work of the Servant paſſed over to the Lord. And therefore it is not ſo much as extant now in what Words John taught his Diſciples to pray, becauſe earthly Things were to give way to heavenly. So again, The Religion of Prayer was ordained by Chriſt himſelf, and this Prayer being animated by his Spirit from the Time that it came out of his heavenly Mouth, aſcends up to Heaven with a Privilege, commending to the Father what the Son taught. But becauſe our Lord, who foreſaw the Neceſſities of Man, after he had given this Rule of praying, ſaid alſo, Ask, and ye ſhall receive; and there are many Things which Mens particular Circumſtances oblige overy one to ask; therefore we have a Right to make Additional Requeſts, and build other Prayers upon this, always premiſing this appointed and ordinary Prayer as the Foundation. So that according to Tertullian [b] it was not only a Rule preſcribing the Method and Matter of Prayer, but a Form to be uſed in the Words in which Chriſt delivered it, and to be added to all other Prayers as the Foundation of a Superſtructure. After the ſame Manner St. Cyprian ſays, That Chriſt among other wholeſome Admonitions and divine Precepts, by which he provided for the Salvation of his People, has given us alſo a Form [c] of Prayer, teaching and admoniſhing us what we are to pray for. And a little after [d], We are to learn from our Lord's Information, what we are to pray for: For he ſaid, pray thus: Our Father, which art in Heaven, Hallowed be thy Name, &c. St. Auſtin aſſures us, that as the Church always uſed this Prayer, ſo ſhe uſed it by the Command [e] of Chriſt. He ſaid, Pray thus: He ſaid to his Diſciples, Pray thus: He ſaid to his Diſciples, he ſaid to his Apoſtles, and to us who are the Lambs he ſaid, and to the Rams of his Flock he ſaid, Pray thus. In another place, This Prayer [f] is neceſſary for all, which the Lord gave to the Rams of his Flock, that is, to his Apoſtles, that every one of them ſhould ſay, Forgive us our Treſpaſſes, as we forgive them that Treſpaſs againſt us. For if there is any one to whom theſe Words in the Prayer are not neceſſary, he muſt be ſaid to be without Sin. And if Chriſt had foreſeen that there would have been any ſuch, ſo much better than his Apoſtles, he would have taught them another Prayer, in which they ſhould not have asked Forgiveneſs of Sins for themſelves, who had already obtained Remiſſion of all in Baptiſm. Again he ſays, [g] If any one ſay that this Prayer is not neceſſary in this Life for every Saint of God, that knows and does the Will of God, except one, the Holy of Holies, he is in a manifeſt Error, and pleaſes not that God whom he pretends to praiſe. For this Prayer [h] which we uſe, was given as a Rule to the Apoſtles by the heavenly Lawgiver, who ſaid to them, Pray thus. He enjoined the Rams of his Flock, the Leaders of his Sheep, the chief Members of the great Shepherd, to uſe it. And they thence learned to ſay, Forgive us our Treſpaſſes, as we forgive them that Treſpaſs againſt us. In his Retractations [i] he confirms all this, calling it one of Chriſt's Commands to uſe this Prayer, which the whole Church will continue to uſe to the End of the World. St. Chryſoſtom in two Volumes of his Works, the third and fifth, repeats this almoſt twenty times, That the Lord's Prayer was a common Form in Uſe among them by the expreſs Command of Chriſt. And there are many other ſcattered Paſſages throughout his Writings to the ſame Purpoſe, which, becauſe I have produced them at large in the laſt Chapter, I need not here repeat them.

SECT. II. And accordingly it was uſed by the Primitive Church in all her Offices, particularly in the Adminiſtration of Baptiſm.

EVIDENT it is beyond Diſpute, that the whole Primitive Church conſtantly uſed it in all her holy Offices, out of Conſciouſneſs and Regard to Chriſt's Command This, as we have heard Tertullian word it, was laid as the Foundation of all other Prayers [k]. It is the Prayer of the Church: The whole Church ſays, Forgive us our Treſpaſſes, as we have it before in the Teſtimony of [l] St. Auſtin. And the Practice was ſo univerſal and well known from the Beginning, that Lucian the Heathen is thought to refer to it in one of his Dialogues [m], where he ſpeaks, in the Perſon of a Chriſtian, of the Prayer which began ἀπὸ τὰ πατρός, with Our Father. But we have more certain Evidence from the Records and Offices of the Church. For there was no conſiderable Divine Office, in the Celebration of which this Prayer did not always make a ſolemn Part. Particularly in Baptiſm, as ſoon as the Perſon baptized came up out of the Water, he was enjoyned to ſay, Our Father which art in Heaven. Immediately after this, ſays the Author of the Conſtitutions [n], Let him ſtand and pray the Prayer which the Lord hath taught us. And ſo Chryſoſtom [o], As ſoon as he riſes out of the Water, he ſays thoſe Words, Our Father which art in Heaven, &c.

SECT. III. And in the Celebration of the Euchariſt.

IN like manner in the Celebration of the other Sacrament of Chriſt's Body and Blood, it was commonly uſed at the Cloſe of the Conſecration Prayer. So it is expreſly more than once noted by St. Auſtin: After the Sanctification of the Sacrifice [p] we ſay the Lord's Prayer: And again [q], The whole Church almoſt concludes the Prayer of Benediction and Sanctification with the Lord's Prayer. Upon this Account he tells his Hearers, that all who were Communicants [r] heard this Prayer ſaid daily at the Altar. And he expreſly makes this Difference between the Lord's Prayer and the Creed, that Men might remember the former by hearing it daily repeated at the Altar; but the Creed was not ſo, for as yet it was never publickly uſed, but only in the Occaſional Service of Baptiſm; whereas the Lord's Prayer was of conſtant Uſe by being a daily Part of the Communion-Service. Cyril, in his Myſtagogical Catechiſm to the illuminated [s], gives the ſame Account of it. After the Oblation Prayer we ſay that Prayer which our Saviour delivered to his Diſciples, calling God our Father with a pure Conſcience, and ſaying, Our Father which art in Heaven. And St. Jerom [t], though he do not ſo preciſely note what Part of the Communion-Office it was uſed in, yet in general he ſays Chriſt taught his Apoſtles this Prayer, that Believers might every Day in the Sacrifice of his Body have boldneſs to ſay, Our Father which art in Heaven. And St. Chryſoſtom [u] in a covert way intimates the ſame, when he tells his Hearers, that if they forgive their Enemies, they may come with a pure Conſcience to the holy and tremendous Table, and boldly ſay the Words that are contained in the Prayer. The initiated know what I mean. He means that Petition of the Lord's Prayer, Forgive us our Treſpaſſes, as we forgive them that Treſpaſs againſt us. Which he expreſſes thus covertly, becauſe of Non-communicants, Catechumens or Infidels, that might be preſent at a popular Diſcourſe in a general Aſſembly. He ſpeaks more plainly in his Sermon upon Eutropius [x], where preſſing the People to forgive the Injury which that great States-man had done the Church, he uſes this Argument to them: How otherwiſe will you take the holy Sacrament into your Hands, and uſe the Words of that Prayer, wherein we are commanded to ſay, Forgive us our Treſpaſſes, as we forgive them that Treſpaſs againſt us. This plainly ſhews, that the Lord's Prayer was then uſed as an ordinary and conſtant Part of the Communion Service. Only with this Difference, that in the Greek Church and the Gallican Church it was ſaid by the Prieſt and all the People together, as Mabillon [y] proves out of Gregory of Tours, and Leontius in the Life of Joannes Eleemoſynarius Biſhop of Alexandria, and the Epiſtles of Gregory the Great, who expreſly notes the Difference between the Greek and La- tin Church in this particular: Among the Greeks, the Lord's Prayer [z] is said by all the People, but with us by the Priest alone. And in this the Gallican Church chose to follow the way of the Greek Church, as we now follow the Gallican Church, and not the Roman. The manner of the Mosarabick Liturgy in Spain is noted also by Mabillon to be different from both these: For there the Priest repeated every Petition by itself, and the People answered to each Petition separately, Amen. But these Differences in the Manner of using it, only serve to confirm the Use of it in general, and shew us that it was never omitted by any Church in the publick Service of the Altar, at least from the beginning of the fourth Century, when Cyril of Jerusalem lived, whose mystical Catechisms are a clear Evidence for it.

SECT. IV. And in their Morning and Evening Prayers.

IT also made a part in their daily Morning and Evening Prayers, distinct from the Communion Office. Of which we have Instances in the Canons of the Councils of Girone [a] and Toledo [b], which shall be recited hereafter, when we come to consider more exactly the several Parts of the Morning and Evening Service.

SECT. V. And in their private Devotions.

THEY used it also in their private Devotions. As is evident from that Passage in St. Chrysostom upon the cxiith Psalm, where he says [c], That Christ, to induce us to Unanimity and Charity, enjoyns us to make Common Prayer, and obliges the whole Church, as if it were but one Person, to say, Our Father; and Give us this Day our daily Bread; and forgive us our Trespasses, as we forgive them that trespass against us; and lead us not into Temptation, but deliver us from Evil; always using a Word of the plural Number, and commanding every one, whether he pray alone by himself, or in common with others, still to make Prayer for his Brethren. This implies, that in their private Devotions, as well as publick, they thought themselves obliged by the Command of Christ to use the Lord's Prayer. In another place he gives us an Instance in the Practice of an holy Man, who to the Form of his private Devotions (which he also there recites) always added the Lord's Prayer, or the Prayer of the Faithful [d], as he styles it, for a particular Reason, of which more by and by; making it both the Conclusion and uniting Tye of all his other Prayers for all Men. In compliance with this general Practice it is, that the Author of the Constitutions [e] orders every one to use the Lord's Prayer three times a-day. And this Cotelerius thinks was done in Honour of the Holy Trinity [f], citing Theodoret and Isidore for his Opinion. St. Ambrose also writing Instructions to Virgins [g], directs them to sing Psalms in Bed, and say the Lord's Prayer between every Psalm. And the fourth Council of Toledo makes it Deprivation for any Clergyman to omit [h] using the Lord's Prayer daily, either in his publick or private Offices of Devotion, censuring him as a proud Contemner of the Lord's Injunction.

SECT. VI. Whence it had the Name of Oratio Quotidiana, the Christian's daily Prayer.

NOW this being the constant Use that was daily made of the Lord's Prayer, it hence took the Name of Oratio Quotidiana, the daily Prayer, as is observed in the foresaid Canon of that Council. And so we find it styled in Cyprian, who thought that Petition in the Lord's Prayer, Give us this Day our daily Bread, might be taken in a spiritual, as well as a literal Sense, and refer to the Eucharist, or the Body and Blood of Christ, the celestial Bread [i] which they then desired to receive every Day. And the Council of Toledo cites St. Hilary to the same purpose [k]: Give us this Day our daily Bread. God desires nothing so much as that Christ may dwell in us daily, who is the Bread of Life, and the Bread that comes from Heaven. And because this is our daily Prayer, we therefore pray daily, that this Bread may be given us. St. Austin also [l] means the Lord's Prayer, when he says, that the Christians daily Prayer makes Satisfaction for those lesser and daily Failings, without which no Man lives. Upon which account he says in another place [m], that this daily Prayer is a sort of daily Baptism, because in the pious Use of it Men obtain daily Remission of Sins, as they did at first in Baptism. Possidius also [n] makes this Remark in his Life, upon his Practice and that of St. Ambrose, that they both trusted more in God's Mercy than their own Merits, being used to pray in the Words of our Lord's daily Prayer,

Forgive

Forgive us our Treſpaſſes, as we forgive them that Treſpaſs againſt us. From all which, and much more that might be alledged upon this Head, it appears, that this Prayer, in the very Words which Chriſt delivered it in, was not only an allowed Form, but a Prayer of daily Uſe both in their publick and private Devotions.

SECT. VII. And was uſed by all Hereticks and Schiſmaticks as well as Catholicks.

NEITHER were there any Sects or Hereſies, that pretended in thoſe Times to object the leaſt Thing againſt the Uſe of it. The Donatiſts broke off from the Church, and ſet up Conventicles of their own, but they did not alter the Way of Worſhip: They ſtill thought themſelves obliged, as Optatus ſays, to uſe the Lord's Prayer at the Altar [o]. The Pelagians could not reliſh well one Petition in it: Forgive us our Treſpaſſes: For they proudly thought the Saints were without Sin, and had nothing to ask Forgiveneſs of: Yet they alſo continued to uſe it, and accounted for their Practice, by putting this falſe Gloſs upon it, that they then prayed not for their own Sins, but the Sins of others. We find this often objected to them in the African Councils [p], but never any Charge brought againſt them, as if they omitted the Lord's Prayer in whole, or even this ſingle Petition in it. St. Auſtin indeed often ſays, that their impious Tenets and Diſputations tended [q] to take away the Uſe of the Lord's Prayer; but then he explains himſelf to mean, not that they laid aſide the Uſe of it, but that they taught that a Man might come to ſuch Perfection in Righteouſneſs in this Life, by obſerving all the Commands, and that by his own Free-will, without the Help of the Grace of Chriſt, that he needed not to ſay, Forgive us our Treſpaſſes, for himſelf, but only for others. They owned [r], that the Apoſtles uſed the Lord's Prayer; but then they ſaid, they were ſo holy and perfect without all manner of Sin, that they did not ſay for themſelves, Forgive us our Treſpaſſes, but only for other Sinners that were yet imperfect. St. Chryſoſtom mentions another ſort of Men, who were alſo offended at this Petition, becauſe of the Condition that was in it, Forgive us, as we forgive others; and therefore they curtailed the Prayer, by dropping this Petition when they ſaid it: But he rebukes them [s] for this, and bids them not be ſo vainly cautious, as to think they were excuſed by curtailing the Prayer, but adviſes them to uſe the whole Prayer, as Chriſt appointed it to be uſed, that the Neceſſity of this Petition might daily terrify them from Revenge, and compel them to grant Pardon to their Neighbours. So that though there were ſome Hereticks and other ill Men, who did not like this one Petition for different Reaſons, yet they all continued to uſe the Prayer either in Whole or in Part, and there is no Inſtance of any that totally rejected it.

SECT. VIII. That it was eſteemed a divine and ſpiritual Form of Prayer.

THERE was no Objection againſt it in thoſe Days, that it was a Form, or that it was not a ſpiritual Prayer, becauſe it was uſed in the very Words in which Chriſt had delivered it: But on the contrary, it was recommended as the moſt ſpiritual and prevalent Prayer that could be uſed, becauſe of the Dignity of its Author. St. Cyprian thus argues for the Uſe of it: Chriſt, ſays he, had foretold that the Hour was coming, when the true Worſhippers ſhould worſhip the Father in Spirit and in Truth: And he fulfilled what he had promiſed before, that we who had received the Spirit and Truth by his Sanctification, might worſhip in Spirit and Truth by his Tradition, or the Prayer which he delivered to us. For what Prayer can be more ſpiritual, than that which is given us [t] by Chriſt, by whom the Holy Spirit is ſent to us? What can be eſteemed a truer Prayer with the Father, than that which came out of the Mouth of his Son, who is Truth it ſelf? So that to pray otherwiſe than he has taught us, is not only Ignorance but a Crime, ſince he has laid it down, and ſaid, Ye reject the Commandment of God, to eſtabliſh your own Tradition. Let us therefore, my dearly beloved Brethren, pray as our God and Maſter taught us. It is a friendly and familiar way of Praying, to beſeech God in his own Words, to let the Prayer of his Son come up to his Ears. Let the Father hear and acknowledge the Words of his Son: when we make our Prayers, let him that dwells in our Heart, be alſo in our Voice. And for as much as we have him our Advocate with the Father for our Sins, when we Sinners pray for the Pardon of our Sins, let us bring forth the Words of our Advocate. For ſince he has ſaid, that Whatever we ask the Father in his Name, he will give it us: How much more efficaciouſly ſhall we obtain what we ask in the Name of Chriſt, if we ask it in his Prayer? He introduces all this Diſcourſe with theſe Words: He that made us live, taught us to pray, by the ſame Kindneſs that he confers all other Things upon us; that whilſt we ſpeak to the Father in the Prayer and Oraiſon which the Son taught us, we ſhould more eaſily be heard. So far was this holy Man from thinking the Lord's Prayer a dead Form, that could not be offered with the true Spirit of Prayer, that on the contrary he labours with all his Might to convince Men, that no Prayer could be more juſtly ſtiled Worſhipping God in Spirit and in Truth, or with greater Efficacy and Advantages be preſented to the Father. St. Chryſoſtom was of the ſame Mind, that praying by the Lord's Prayer, might juſtly be termed Praying by the Spirit: For he uſes this as an Argument for the Holy Spirit's Operation upon us. If there were [u] no Holy Ghoſt, ſays he, we that are Believers could not pray to God: For we ſay, Our Father which art in Heaven. As therefore we could not ſay, that Jeſus was the Lord, ſo neither could we call God our Father without the Holy Ghoſt. How does that appear? From the ſame Apoſtle, who ſays, Becauſe ye are Sons, God hath ſent forth the Spirit of his Son into your Hearts: crying, Abba Father. And St. Auſtin [x] expounding thoſe Words of the Apoſtle, Rom. viii. 26. We know not what to pray for as we ought: but the Spirit helpeth our Infirmities; concludes, that the Spirit's helping and teaching them to pray as they ought, could not mean his helping them to new Words and Expreſſions; for both the Apoſtle, and they to whom he wrote, were well acquainted already with the Lord's Prayer; ſo that there could be no want of the Spirit's Aſſiſtance in that reſpect; but the Want was this; Men are commonly ignorant of the real Benefit of temporal Tribulation and Affliction, which tends either to cure the Tumor of Pride, or exerciſe and try Men's Patience, and crown it with a greater Reward, or elſe to chaſtiſe and aboliſh ſuch other Sins as they are ſubject to: Men being ignorant of theſe Advantages, are uſually moſt inclined to ask a perfect Freedom and Immunity from temporal Affliction: But the Spirit corrects this Ignorance, and helps this Infirmity, and teaches Men rather to ask Patience of God, and Submiſſion to his Will, that they may not think themſelves neglected of God, though he do not remove ſuch Afflictions, but with a devout and pious Patience hope for greater Good ariſing from them. This is St. Auſtin's Expoſition of that famous Paſſage of the Apoſtle, concerning the Aſſiſtance of the Spirit in Prayer: By which he is ſo far from derogating from the Lord's Prayer, as void of the Spirit, that he ſuppoſes the very Knowledge of it to be antecedently a Work of the Spirit: And he ſays farther [y], that when Men believe, and hope, and deſire, and conſider the Things they ask of God in the Lord's Prayer, they are then qualified with thoſe Graces of the Spirit, Faith, Hope and Charity, which are neceſſary to bring a pious Votary unto God. Men that ſay ſuch Things as theſe of the Lord's Prayer, could not conceive any mean Thing about it, derogatory to the Spirit of Prayer; but muſt be preſumed to entertain the moſt high and venerable Notions of it, of any that can poſſibly be imagined.

SECT. IX.

And the Uſe of it a peculiar Privilege allowed only to Communicants and perfect Chriſtians.

AND that they did ſo, is evident from one Thing farther, very obſervable in the antient Diſcipline and Practice: That is, that then the Uſe of the Lord's Prayer was not a Mark of Infamy or Reproach, but an honorary Privilege, allowed to none but Communicants, or compleat and perfect Chriſtians. For, as I have had Occaſion to remark once or twice [*] in former Parts of this Work, all Catechumens or Perſons unbaptized were abſolutely debarred from the Uſe of this Prayer; They were not allowed to call God Our Father, till they were regenerated and made Sons by the Waters of Baptiſm. I have noted ſeveral Paſſages out of St. Auſtin, St. Chryſoſtom, and Theodoret to this Purpoſe, which need not here be repeated. To theſe I ſhall only add one Paſſage out of Chryſoſtom [z], in his Homily upon the Paralytick, where ſpeaking of Baptiſm, he ſays, Before we have waſhed away our Sins in the Font of the holy Waters, we cannot call God Our Father: But when we return from thence, having put off the Load of our Sins, then we ſay, Our Father which art in Heaven. And upon this Account, as has been alſo noted before, this Prayer was peculiarly called, εὐχὴ πιστῶν, The Prayer of Communicants or Believers, becauſe none had a Right to uſe this Prayer, but only ſuch as had a Right to communicate at the Altar, and there hear it daily repeated.

CHAP. VIII.

Of the Use of Habits, and Gesture, and other Rites and Ceremonies in the Service of the antient Church.

SECT. I.
No certain Evidence for the Use of distinct Habits in the Apostolical Age, or the two following.

THE next Things to be spoken of, are the Circumstances and Ceremonies of Habits, Gestures, and Times appropriated to Divine Service. Of all these it may be said in general, that as they are Matters of indifferent Usage in their own Nature, so the Church used her Liberty in the Appointment and Observation of them. The Writers of the Romish Church, Baronius, Du Saussay, and Bona, who will have every Ceremony to be Apostolical, pretend that the Apostles themselves wore a distinct Habit in all their sacred Ministrations. Bona is very confident [a] that St. Paul's Cloak which he left at Troas, was a sacerdotal Vestment. And others speak of St. Peter's Planeta, which is said to be sent from Antioch to Paris, and kept there as a sacred Relick in the Temple of St. Genouefa. And others mention St. John's, which is said to be sent to Gregory the Great. But Bona himself will not undertake to vouch for these, because of the Silence of all antient Writers about them [b]. Yet he is very angry with Nicholas Alemannius, for saying, that neither the Apostles nor Apostolical Men used any sacred Vestments [c], and that the Opinion which maintains it, is to be exploded as ridiculous, and as what is rejected by learned Men. Vicecomes was a diligent Enquirer into Antiquity, and yet he could find no Ground for this Assertion, but has some Arguments against it, which Bona is put to answer. And till some better Arguments can be produced to support it, I think it most prudent to leave uncertain Tradition to shift for it self, and proceed to an Age, wherein we have more Light and Certainty in the Matter.

SECT. II.
What Evidence there is for them in the fourth Century.

IN the Beginning then of the fourth Age, when the Church was quietly composed by Constantine, and settled in Peace, we are sure a Distinction was made in the Habits and Vestments of Divine Service. For Constantine himself is said [d] to have given a rich Vestment embroidered with Gold to Macarius Bishop of Jerusalem, to be worn by him when he celebrated the Service of Baptism. And it was one of the Accusations that the Arians afterward brought against Cyril, that he had sold it. Valesius thinks that it was not indended for an ordinary Habit, whenever the Bishop celebrated the Office of Baptism, but only when he performed the Service of the great Day of our Lord's Baptism, which was the Festival of Epiphany, held in great Veneration at Jerusalem. This is not so likely in my Opinion, but be it as it will, it makes no Alteration in the Case: For still it was a sacred Vestment to be used in the Celebration of the Liturgy or Divine Service, which is enough to the present Purpose. Not long after we find Athanasius accused by his Enemies for laying a Tax upon the Egyptians, to raise a Fund for the Linnen Vestments of the Church. The thing is mentioned both by Athanasius himself [e] and Sozomen [f], the one calling them Linnen Sticharia, and the other Linnen Tunicles, which are the same thing. Where we are to observe, that the Accusation was not that he used such Vestments in the Church, but only that he laid a Tax upon the People to provide them; which supposes them to be in Use, else there had been no Colour or Foundation for such a Charge against him. St. Jerom often mentions this Distinction of Habits as generally observed in his time. I urge not those Words which he has in his Commentary upon Ezekiel, the Religion of God has one Habit in its Ministry [g] and another for the common Uses of Life: Because I think he is there speaking of the Jewish Priests, in Opposition to the Idol-Priests of Isis and Serapis. But what he says in his Book against Pelagius, plainly relates to the Christians: What Harm or Enmity, I pray, is it against God, if I use a more cleanly Garment? If a Bishop, Presbyter, or Deacon, or any other of the Ecclesiastical Order, come forth in a white [h] Vestment, when they administer the Sacraments? He says also in his Epitaph upon Nepotian, that Nepotian for his ordinary wearing used the Pallium, the Cloak that was in common Use among Christian Philosophers: But in his Ministrations he used a Tunicle [i], which he ordered his Uncle Heliodore to send as his Legacy to St. Jerom. St. Chrysostom also intimates that the Deacons wore a peculiar Habit in their Ministrations, when he says, their Honour, Crown and Glory did not consist so much in their walking about the Church [k] in a white and ſhining Garment, as in their Power to repel unworthy Communicants from the Lord's Table. This implies that they had a diſtinct Habit when they miniſtred in Divine Service. And ſo it is remarked by Sozomen [l], when ſpeaking of the Aſſault that was made upon the Church by the Enemies of Chryſoſtom, he ſays, the Prieſts and Deacons were beaten and driven out of the Church, as they were in the Veſtments of their Miniſtration. And there is among St. Chryſoſtom's Works an Homily upon the Prodigal Son, written by Severianus Biſhop of Gabala, Co-temporary with St. Chryſoſtom, who ſpeaking of the Deacons miniſtring in the ſacred Myſteries, ſays, they reſembled [m] the Wings of Angels with their Veils or Tippets on their left Shoulders, running about the Church, and crying out, Let none of the Catechumens be preſent at the Celebration of the Myſteries, &c. In like manner Nazianzen in his Viſion of the Church of Anaſtaſia, repreſents the Deacons ſtanding [n] ἐν ἑ̈μασι παμφανόωσιν, in their bright and ſhining Garments. And in his Will he leaves to his Deacon Evagrius a κάμασον and a σιχάριον, which were then the common Names for theſe Surplices or white Garments uſed in Divine [o] Service. The Council of Laodicea has two Canons concerning the little Habit called the Orarium [p], which was a Scarf or Tippet to be worn upon the Shoulders, and might be uſed by Biſhops, Presbyters, and Deacons, but not by Subdeacons, Singers or Readers, who are expreſsly debarred the Uſe of it in that Council. The fourth Council of Carthage [q] ſpeaks of the Alba or Surplice, which the Deacon is ordered to wear when the Oblation is made, or the Leſſons are read. The Council of Narbo [r] mentions the ſame. The firſt Council of Braga ſpeaks of the Tunica and the Orarium [s] as both belonging to Deacons. And the third Council of Braga [t] orders Prieſts to wear the Orarium on both Shoulders when they miniſtred at the Altar. By which we learn that the Tunica or Surplice was common to all the Clergy, the Orarium on the left Shoulder proper to Deacons, and on both Shoulders the diſtinguiſhing Badge of Prieſts.

The fourth Council of Toledo is moſt particular in theſe Diſtinctions. For in one Canon it ſays, that if a Biſhop, Presbyter or Deacon be unjuſtly degraded, and be found Innocent by a Synod, yet they ſhall not be what they were before, unleſs they receive the Degrees they had loſt from the Hands of the Biſhops before the Altar. If he be a Biſhop, he muſt receive [u] his Orarium, his Ring and his Staff: If a Preſbyter, his Orarium and Planeta: If a Deacon, his Orarium and Alba. And in another Canon [x], that the Deacon ſhall wear but one Orarium; and that upon his left Shoulder, wherewith he is to give the ſignal of Prayers to the People. Where we may obſerve alſo the Reaſon of the Name Orarium in the Eccleſiaſtical Senſe, ab orando, from praying; though in common Acceptation it ſignifies no more than an Handkerchief to wipe the Face, and ſo comes from Ore, in which Signification it is ſometimes uſed by St. Ambroſe [y] and St. Auſtin [z], as well as by the old Roman Authors. But here we take it in the Eccleſiaſtical Senſe, for a ſacred Habit appropriated to Biſhops, Prieſts, and Deacons in the Solemnities of Divine Service, in which Senſe it appears to have been an Habit diſtinct from that of civil and common Uſe, by all the Authorities that have been mentioned. The Author of the Queſtions upon the Old and New Teſtament, under the Name of St. Auſtin, ſpeaks alſo of the Dalmatica [a], as worn both by Biſhops and Deacons: But whether it was then a Garment of ſacred Uſe, is not ſaid by him or any other antient Writer, that I know of; and therefore I content my ſelf with the Proofs already alledged, as ſufficient to ſhew that in the fourth Age a plain Diſtinction of Habits was made in the ſacred Service of the Church.

SECT. III.

Four Poſtures of Devotion allowed of by the Ancients. Firſt ſtanding, which was particularly injoined on the Lord's Day, and all the time between Eaſter and Pentecoſt.

THE next conſiderable Circumſtance in their Worſhip, was the Poſture obſerved in their Addreſſes and Adorations of God: And of this we find four Kinds generally practiſed and allowed, viz. Standing, Kneeling, Bowing, and Proſtration. For Sitting, which ſome add as a fifth Sort, was never allowed by the Ancients as an ordinary Poſture of Devotion. Standing was the general Obſervation of the whole Church on the Lord's Day, and the fifty Days between Eaſter and Pentecoſt, in Memory of our Saviour's Reſurrection. This Cuſtom may be traced as high as Irenæus, who derives it from Apoſtolical Authority. For the Author under the Name of Juſtin Martyr [b] gives this Account of the Uſe of both Poſtures in Prayer: Foraſmuch as we ought to remember both our Fall by Sin, and the Grace of Chriſt, by which we riſe again from our Fall: Therefore we pray kneeling ſix Days, as a Symbol of our Fall by Sin: But our not kneeling on the Lord's Day is a Symbol of the Reſurrection, whereby through the Grace of Chriſt we are delivered from our Sins, and from Death that is mortified thereby. And this Cuſtom took its Original from the times of the Apoſtles, as St. Irenæus ſays in his Book concerning Eaſter, wherein he alſo makes mention of Pentecoſt, during which time we kneel not, becauſe it is of the ſame Nature with the Lord's Day, according to the Reaſon that has been given. Not long after, Tertullian [c] ſpeaks of it, as an Obſervation among many others handed down from antient Tradition. And Cyprian may be ſuppoſed to hint it [d] when he ſpeaks of their ſtanding in Prayer.

It is mentioned alſo by Clemens of Alexandria [e], and Peter Biſhop of Alexandria [f] who died ſome Years before the Council of Nice. He ſays, We keep the Lord's Day as a Day of Joy, becauſe then our Lord roſe from the Dead, and our Tradition is not to kneel on that Day. In the time of the Council of Nice there was ſome Diſagreement about this Practice, and therefore that Council made a Canon to bring all Churches to an Uniformity in this Matter [g]. Becauſe there are ſome who kneel on the Lord's Day, and in the Days of Pentecoſt; that all things may be uniformly performed in every Pariſh or Dioceſe, it ſeems good to the holy Synod, that Prayers be made to God ſtanding. After this St. Hilary [h] ſpeaks of it again as an Apoſtolical Practice, neither to Faſt, nor Worſhip kneeling on the Lord's Day, or the fifty Days between Eaſter and Pentecoſt. Epiphanius [i] ſays, that on the appointed Days they prayed kneeling, but during the whole fifty Days of Pentecoſt they neither faſted nor kneeled. St. Jerom reckons it [k] among the Traditions of the univerſal Church, neither to faſt nor kneel on the Lord's Day or Pentecoſt. St. Auſtin is a little doubtful as to the Practice of the Church univerſal [l], but he aſſures us, that as far as he knew, all Churches in Africk forbore Faſting, and prayed ſtanding, and ſung Hallelujah at the Altar every Lord's Day, and all the Days of Pentecoſt, in Token of our Saviour's Reſurrection. We find the ſame in St. Baſil [m], who derives it from Apoſtolical Practice. And Caſſian [n] teſtifies of the Egyptian Churches, that from Saturday Night to Sunday Night, and all the Days of Pentecoſt, they neither kneeled nor faſted. And in another Place [o] he gives the Reaſon of this, becauſe kneeling was a Sign of deep Repentance and Mourning, which they omitted on thoſe Days out of Reſpect and Reverence to our Saviour's Reſurrection. Hence it was, that the Author of the Conſtitutions [p] makes it one of his Apoſtolical Orders, that all Men ſhould pray three times, or three Prayers, on the Lord's Day ſtanding, in Memory of him who roſe the third Day from the Dead. And from hence came that uſual Form ſo often mentioned by St. Chryſoſtom [q] and others, of the Deacons calling upon the People in Prayer, ὄρθως σῶμεν καλῶς, Let us ſtand upright with Reverence and Decency; alluding to the Poſture then commonly uſed in Prayer on the Lord's Day. How long this Cuſtom continued in the Church, is not eaſy to determine: But we may obſerve it to be mentioned by Martin Bracarenſis [r] in the ſixth Century, and the Council of Trullo [s] in the ſeventh Century, and the third Council of Tours [t] in the time of Charles the Great. Nor do we meet with any Exception to this Rule all this Time, ſave only one relating to the Penitents, or thoſe that were under the Diſcipline of the Church; who being, by their falling into ſcandalous Sins, reduced to a State of Penance, were not allowed this Privilege of ſtanding at Prayers on the Lord's Day, but were obliged in Token of their Humiliation to kneel at all times, not excepting the Days of Relaxation, as the fourth Council of Carthage [u] words it in a Canon made in this Behalf. And ſo we have ſeen the concurrent Teſtimony of all Writers for the Antiquity and Univerſality of this Practice.

SECT. IV. Secondly, Kneeling at all other times, eſpecially on the Stationary Days and other times of Devotion.

AT other times Kneeling was the moſt common and ordinary Poſture of Devotion. This may be concluded from the former Exception of the Lord's Day and Pentecoſt from this Poſture: For that implies, that at other times they uſed a different Poſture in their Addreſſes to God. This was the uſual Poſture of their ordinary Morning and Evening Service on the weekly Days, and on the Stationary or Faſt-Days; which were called Stationary Days, not from their Standing at Prayer, but from their continuing and prolonging the Exerciſe in Imitation of the Military Stations. The only difference between theſe Days and the Lord's Day was, that on the Lord's Day all Prayers were performed Standing, but on other Days ſome were ſaid Standing, ſome Kneeling. In this Senſe we muſt underſtand St. Chryſoſtom [x], when he ſpeaks of the Peoples falling on the Ground when they ſaid the Prayer for the whole State of the Church, and their riſing again at the Biſhop's Invocation. And ſo the Author of the Conſtitutions [y] repreſents them Kneeling at the firſt Prayer, and Standing up at the ſecond. In like manner Caſſian [z] ſays the People performed their private Prayers Kneeling, and then roſe up to the Miniſter's Collect or Prayer, in which all joined Standing. This is to be underſtood of their Prayers on ordinary Days, and not of the Lord's Day, on which (as we have ſeen before) all their Prayers were performed Standing. As to the Poſture of Kneeling upon other Occaſions, it would be endleſs to cite all the Teſtimonies that may be alledged for it. It was ſo common among them, that the Author of The Acts of Thecla [a] gives Prayer the Name of κλίσις γονάτων, Bending the Knees. And Arnobius, when he would deſcribe to the Heathen the manner of Chriſtians performing their Divine Offices to God, does it by ſaying, they all fell down [b] upon the Earth, as their Cuſtom was, and made their common Prayers to him. Euſebius [c] ſpeaking of the great Devotion of St. James Biſhop of Jeruſalem, ſays, he was wont to go into the Temple alone, and there pray aſſiduouſly upon his Knees, making Interceſſion for the Sins of the People, till his Knees were grown as hard and callous as thoſe of Camels, by continual Exerciſe of his Devotions. And ſo again, ſpeaking of the Thundering Legion, (who in the time of Marcus Aurelius procured Rain by their Prayers, to ſave the Roman Army, and Thunder to deſtroy their Enemies) he ſays, they fell upon their Knees, as was the uſual [d] Cuſtom of Chriſtians in their Prayers, and ſo made their Supplications to God at the Head of the Army as it was going forth to Battle. Tertullian had his Eye upon this very Story, when he tells Scapula [e], that the Geniculations, or Prayers on the bended Knee, together with the Faſtings of Chriſtians, were always effectual in driving away Drought and Famine. It were eaſie to give a thouſand other Inſtances [f] of the like Practice out of the antient Writers; but in a Caſe ſo clear and unconteſted, I think it next to Impertinence to trouble my Reader with them. I only note, that though theſe two Poſtures of Prayer were very indifferent in their own Nature, yet it was always eſteemed an Inſtance of great Negligence, or great Perverſeneſs to interchange them unſeaſonably one for the other; that is, to pray Kneeling on the Lord's Day, when the Church required Standing; or Standing on other Days, when the Rules and Cuſtom of the Church required Men to kneel. And therefore as the Canons of Nice and Trullo reflect upon thoſe who were ſuperſtitiouſly bent upon Kneeling on the Lord's Day: So others with equal Severity complain of the Remiſsneſs and Negligence of ſuch, as refuſed to kneel at other times, when the Church appointed it. It is a very indecent and irregular thing, ſays Cæſarius of Arles [g], that when the Deacon cries out, Let us bend the Knee, the People ſhould then ſtand erect as Pillars in the Church. Theſe were but ſmall Obſervations in themſelves, but of great Conſequence, we ſee, when done perverſely to the Scandal and Diſorder of the Church, whoſe great Rule in all ſuch Caſes, is that of the Apoſtle, Let all Things be done decently and in order.

SECT. V. Thirdly, Bowing down the Head.

A third Poſture of Devotion was Bowing down the Head, or an Inclination of the Body between the Poſtures of Standing and Kneeling. This was chiefly uſed in receiving the Biſhop's or Prieſt's Benedictions, in all direct and formal Addreſſes to God for his Mercy and Favour upon the People, whether Catechumens, Penitents or any other. Thus we find in the Conſtitutions [h] the Catechumens are bid to bow the Head, in order to receive the Biſhop's Benediction in a Form of Invocation there appointed to be ſaid over them. So likewiſe the Energumens [i] have the ſame Direction: Bow down your Heads, ye Energumens, and receive the Benediction. In like manner the Candidates of Baptiſm [k] and the Penitents [l] are bid to riſe up, after the Deacon's Prayer, and bow their Heads to receive the Benediction. And this may be confirmed out of Chryſoſtom, who ſays [m], the Deacon in the time of the Oblation presented the Energumens, and bid them bow their Heads only, to indicate at least by the Habit and Gesture of the Body, that they were in a praying Posture. And this he repeats [n] in other places, where he particularly speaks of those that were possessed of evil Spirits.

time

SECT VI. Fourthly, Prostration.

THE last Posture of Devotion was Prostration, or lying along in the humblest manner upon the Ground. This seems to have been the proper Posture for extraordinary Humiliations, when Men had some singular Request more earnestly to recommend to God. We often read of Moses and other Saints falling upon their Faces in Scripture, when they were to make some extraordinary Intercession for the Sins of the People. And in Imitation of them the same Gesture was sometimes used in the Christian Church. Some Lapsers, when they sued for Admission to a State of Penance, did not only fall down upon their Knees, but prostrate themselves before the Faithful, to beg their Prayers as they entered into the Church. Which is particularly noted by Socrates [o] of Ecebolius the Sophist, who having lapsed in the time of Julian, desired Favour under Jovian; and the more to move Compassion, he put himself into the mournfullest Posture, falling upon his Face before the Gate of the Church, and crying out, Calcate me insipidum salem. Tread me under Foot as Salt that has lost its Savour. But this was not the only Case in which they used this mournful Posture, but they also practised it upon other Occasions, whenever any great Necessity urged them with greater Ardency to prefer their Petitions to God. Thus Socrates observes of Alexander Bishop of Constantinople [p], that when he was in a great Strait about the Admission of Arius into the Church, he prostrated himself upon his Face under the Communion Table, and there prayed to God for many Days and Nights together, that God would give some Token to determine which of their Doctrine was true: If the Doctrine of Arius was true, he desired that he himself might not live to see the Day appointed for the Disputation: But if his own were true, then he desired that Arius might suffer the Punishment due to his Impiety. Which he accordingly did, voiding his Entrails as he had occasion to go to Stool, whilst he was going triumphantly to the Church. Theodoret [q] makes a like Remark upon the Behaviour of Theodosius the Great, that when he first entred the Church, after he had been for some time excluded by St. Ambrose, he would neither pray to God standing, nor kneeling, but prostrate with his Face to the Ground; using those Words of the Psalmist, My Soul cleaveth to the Dust, O quicken thou me according thy Word. By which we learn, that this Posture was chiefly appropriated to deep Humiliations, and Expressions of Shame or Sorrow upon some very remarkable Occasion, but scarce ever used as a general Practise of the Church.

SECT. VII. Sitting, no allowed Posture of Devotion.

THERE is one Posture more which some plead for as a Posture of Adoration; but it never had any Allowance in the Practice of the antient Church: That is Sitting, which Cardinal Perron and some others in the Romish Church pretend was the Posture in which the Apostles received the Communion at its first Institution, and that this was then a common Posture of Adoration used among the Heathens. But the learned Mr. Daillè [r] has abundantly exposed this Pretence, and shew'd the falsity of it in every Particular. For neither did the Heathens sit at their Devotions, as the Cardinal imposed upon himself by a false Interpretation of Plutarch and Tertullian; neither did the Apostles communicate Sitting, but Lying along on Beds or Couches, which all Men know to be a different Posture; neither did they worship the Eucharist in any Posture; neither did the primitive Christians ever use, or take Sitting, for a Posture of Devotion. Tertullian indeed says [s], there were some superstitious Persons in his time, Admirers of the Book called Hermes Pastor, who made it a Matter of Conscience to sit down for some time adsignata Oratione, that is, not in time of Prayer, as some falsely render it, but when Prayer was ended, because they found the Example of the Pastor in that Book to that purpose. For as he sat down upon a Bed after Prayer, so they thought themselves obliged to do the same in Compliance with his Example. But this is no Proof of their Sitting at Prayer, but only after Prayer was ended: And that too grounded upon a very weak and superstitious Opinion, that every Circumstance of an Action or Narration, however indifferent in it self, was to be drawn into Example, and to be made Matter of necessary Duty. According to which way of Reasoning, as Tertullian observes, they must have worshipped no where but where there was a Bed, nor sat upon a Chair or Bench, because this would have been a Deviation from their Example. He adds, that the Heathens only were used to sit after Prayer before their Idols, and for that very Reason it was not fit for Christians to imitate [t] their Practice. All which shews, that the Christians then were so far from using Sitting as a Posture of Devotion, that they did not think it proper to sit even after Prayer in the Presence of God, whilst the Angel of Prayer (it is his Phrase) stood by them; and becauſe it looked more like an Heatheniſh than a Chriſtian Practice.

SECT. VIII. Some ſuperſtitious Practices in Devotion noted by Tertullian.

Tertullian in the ſame Book takes Notice of ſome other ſuperſtitious Obſervations, which ſome ran into in their Devotions, in Imitation of the Heathen. Some thought it neceſſary to put off their Cloaks when they went to Prayer, which he condemns as ſymbolizing with Idolaters. For ſo the Heathen [u] were uſed to do in Reverence to their Idols. This was Superſtition, not Religion; and more an Affectation and Curioſity, than any thing of rational and manly Service. Others would not pray without waſhing the whole Body in Water, as if that made them more acceptable to God; whereas the true Purity was that of the Spirit, to lift up holy Hands free from Deceit, Murder, Cruelty, Witchcraft, Idolatry, and other ſuch Corruptions [x] which defile both Fleſh and Spirit. A Man that is free from theſe, is always clean, being once waſhed in the Blood of Chriſt: But he that is inwardly polluted, is unclean, though he waſh every Member of his Body every Day. It is the Superſtition of theſe Practices that Tertullian complains of: For otherwiſe, the Chriſtians themſelves had their Fountains before the Church in many Places, for Men to waſh their Hands, as a Matter of Decency, before they went to worſhip God, as has been ſhewed [*] in another Place. And the Evil of ſuch Practices conſiſts not in the bare Uſe of ſuch Things, but in laying the Opinion of Neceſſity upon them, and affixing Holineſs to the Uſage, and making them become Eſſential Parts of Divine Service.

SUCH Practices therefore as were attended with Superſtition, they diſclaimed: But retained ſuch other Rites and Ceremonies, as were either proper Expreſſions of Decency in their own Nature, or by their Significancy and ſymbolical Uſe might be improved to a ſpiritual Advantage. They prayed with the Head uncovered, according to the Apoſtle's Direction, as eſteeming it a great Indecency to do otherwiſe. So Chryſoſtom in his Comment on the Place. Tertullian adds another Reaſon in his Apology to the Gentiles [y], We pray uncovered, becauſe we are not aſhamed to appear with open Face; making it a ſort of Teſtimony and Symbol of their Innocency in their addreſſing God without Covering. On the other hand, as both Nature and Cuſtom had made it decent for Women to be covered, ſo they were very preciſe in requiring this to be obſerved eſpecially in religious Aſſemblies. Some pleaded an Exemption for Virgins in the caſe, which gave Occaſion to Tertullian to write his Book De Velandis Virginibus, wherein [z] he argues both Virgins and Matrons to be under the ſame Obligation of being veiled or covered in time of Divine Service; and he ſeverely inveighs againſt thoſe who hanged a Fringe or Ribband about their Heads, and pretended to call that a Covering. But ſome learned Perſons [a] think he was too ſevere in this Reflection, and almoſt ſingular in applying it to the caſe of Virgins, who were then allowed a greater Liberty in this Matter above Matrons or married Women, by the general Diſcipline of the African Church.

IT is more unconteſted, what Tertullian obſerves of another Ceremony, that they uſually prayed with their Arms expanded and their Hands lift up [b] to Heaven, and that ſometimes in the Form of a Croſs, to repreſent our Saviour's Paſſion. For this is alſo noted by Minucius [c], when he ſays, they worſhipped God with a pure Mind, and their Hands ſtretched forth in the Form of a Croſs. And by Aſterius Amaſenus, in a Fragment of his Homily concerning Prayer, preſerved in Photius [d], who ſays, The Chriſtian repreſents the Paſſion of the Croſs by his Geſture, whilſt he expands his Arms and lifts them up in the Figure of a Croſs. After this manner Paulinus deſcribes St. Ambroſe [e] in his laſt Minutes praying to God with his Hands expanded in the Form of a Croſs. And Prudentius relating the Paſſion of Fructuoſus a Spaniſh Biſhop and Martyr in the Time of Gallienus, ſays, The Bands which tied his Arms, were firſt burnt off without touching his Skin; for they durſt not reſtrain thoſe Arms which were to be lift up to the Father [f] in the manner of a Croſs. And this probably is St. Chryſoſtom's meaning, when he ſays, the Sign of the Croſs was uſed even by the Emperors upon all Occaſions, on their Purple, on their Diadems, in their [g] Prayers, on their Arms, and at the Holy Table. And in reference to this Geſture it is that Euſebius tells us, that Conſtantine ordered his own Image to be ſtampt on his golden Medals, repreſenting him [b] in the Poſture of a Supplicant, looking up to Heaven, with his Arms ſtretched forth to God. Origen ſays [i], this was to repreſent the lifting up of their Hearts to God in the Heavens. And Chryſoſtom [k] more largely ſets forth the Uſe of it, in explaining thoſe Words of the Pſalmiſt, Let the lifting up of my Hands be an Evening Sacrifice. What means, ſays he, the ſtretching forth our Hands in Prayer? Becauſe they are inſtrumental in many ſorts of Wickedneſs, as Fighting, Murder, Robbery, and rapacious Avarice, therefore we are commanded to lift them up, that the Miniſtry of Prayer may tie them up from Vice, and deliver them from Wickedneſs: That when you are inclined to rob or plunder, or ſmite your Neighbour, you ſhould then remember, that theſe Hands are the Advocates, as it were, which you are to ſend forth to God, and by which you are to offer the ſpiritual Sacrifice of Prayer to him; and therefore you ought not to diſhonour them, and deſtroy their Confidence, by letting them miniſter to wicked Actions; but rather cleanſe them by Almſdeeds and Humanity and Aſſiſtance of thoſe that are in Want, and ſo lift them up to God in Prayer. For if you cannot endure to lift up unwaſhen Hands, how much leſs ſhould you think it meet to defile them with Sin? By all this it appears, that theſe Ceremonies both of waſhing Hands and lifting them up in Prayer, were of ſpiritual Uſe, and deſigned for pious Ends, to put Men in mind of internal Purity by external Symbols, and that this Significancy was the chief Thing that could juſtify and account for the Uſe of them, as Ceremonies in Divine Service.

SECT. XI. But yet were great Enemies to all Theatrical Geſtures.

BUT as they allowed of ſuch decent and ſignificant Ceremonies as thoſe that have been mentioned, ſo they were great Enemies to all light and Theatrical Geſtures. They required a modeſt and grave and well-compoſed Behaviour in all external Deportment, as thinking no other becoming the Majeſty of God, or the Character of thoſe that were to addreſs him. Upon this account Tertullian [l] requires a Modeſty and Humility in his Votaries, even in lifting up their Hands in Prayer, that they ſhould not toſs them up indecently on high, nor appear with a Countenance expreſſing Elation and Boldneſs: Becauſe the Publican's Humility and Dejection was more commendable than the Audaciouſneſs of the Phariſee. He requires alſo a gentle and ſubmiſſive Voice, ſince God did not hear Men for the Sound of their Words, or the Strength of their Lungs or Arteries, but the Fervency of their Hearts: And they that were loud in Prayer, he tells them, did nothing elſe but hinder their Neighbours Devotion. St. Cyprian [m] expreſſes himſelf much after the ſame way, in his Directions about the Manner of praying: Let them that pray, ſays he, do it with an orderly Voice, expreſſing Quietneſs and Modeſty. Let us conſider our ſelves as ſtanding in the Sight of God, and that we are to pleaſe the Divine Eyes both with the Habit or Geſture of our Body, and with the Manner of our Voice. For as it is a Sign of an impudent Man to make a clamorous Noiſe, ſo it becomes a modeſt Man to uſe Modeſty in his Prayers. Therefore when we meet together with our Brethren, and celebrate the Divine Sacrifices with the Prieſt of God, we ought to be mindful of Reverence and Diſcipline; not toſſing out our Prayers with a rude and diſorderly Voice, nor with a tumultuous Loquacity pouring forth thoſe Petitions, which ought to be recommended modeſtly to God. For God is not the Hearer of the Voice, but the Heart: Neither needs he to be reminded by Noiſe and Clamour, who ſees the Thoughts of Men. It appears from theſe Cautions, that Men were apt to run into Diſorders and Exceſſes in the manner of expreſſing the external Part of their Devotions, which needed ſuch Rules and Admonitions to direct them in the pureſt Ages. And it appears yet more from St. Chryſoſtom, who has ſeveral ſharp and ſevere Invectives againſt ſome, who accuſtoming themſelves to ſee the Roman Games and Plays, brought the Manners of the Stage into the Church, and corrupted their Devotions with Theatrical Geſtures. It will be ſufficient to relate a few Words out of a ſingle Paſſage [n] in one of his Homilies to this purpoſe. O unhappy Wretch, ſays he, thou oughteſt with Reverence and Fear to ſend up the Angelical Hymn, and with Trembling make Confeſſion to God, and thereby ask Pardon of thy Offences. Inſtead of this thou bringeſt into the Church the Manners of Mimicks and Dancers, by a diſorderly toſſing up thy Hands, and beating with thy Feet, and Agitation of thy whole Body. Doſt thou not conſider, that the Lord himſelf is preſent, who meaſures every Man's Motions, and examines their Conſciences? Doſt thou not conſider, that the Angels ſtand by this tremendous Table, and ſurround it with Fear? But thou conſidereſt none of theſe things, becauſe thy Mind is blinded with what thou haſt heard and ſeen in the Theatres; and the Things which are done there thou bringeſt into the Rites and Ceremonies of the Church, and with inſignificant Clamours bewrayeſt the diſorder of thy Soul. How canſt thou expect to incline God to Mercy, who offereſt thy Prayer with ſuch Contempt? Thou ſay'ſt, Lord have Mercy on me, whilſt thy Behaviour proclaims it ſelf a Stranger to Mercy: Thou crieſt out, Lord ſave me, whilſt the whole Deportment of thy Body is in Oppoſition to Salvation. For what can thoſe Hands, which are always toſſed up on high, and diſorderly rowled about, contribute toward Prayer? What Uſe can there be in vehement Clamour, and violent Impulſe of Spirit, that has nothing in it but Sound and Noiſe without Signification? Theſe are more the Practices of Strumpets on the Highway, or Actors on the Theater. And how dareſt thou to mingle the Sports of Devils with that Doxology, whereby Angels glorify God? Thus far St. Chryſoſtom in his Warmth and Zeal againſt the Corruptions that were creeping in upon Devotion by abſurd and ridiculous Geſtures. And this ſhews us abundantly, that as the Ancients were no way averſe to any Rites and Ceremonies, Habits or Geſtures, that were decent and ſignificant in their own Nature, and had any real Tendency toward Piety: So they were utter Enemies to ſuch as were inſignificant and trivial, light and theatrical, and diſcountenanced them as the Effects of Superſtition or Vanity, ariſing from Miſapprehenſions of Religion, or evil Cuſtoms of the World, which they laboured to extirpate, but could not always conquer; Men's corrupt Inclinations diſpoſing them to commute the great things of Religion for thoſe that were ſmall in compariſon, and ſometimes for thoſe which were a real Detriment and Diſadvantage to it, as in the Caſes now before us.

BUT to paſs by Irregularities, and proceed with the Obſervations of the Church. This were a proper Place to take Notice of ſeveral other Uſages, whereby they expreſſed their Reverence to God at their firſt Entrance into the Church. But becauſe ſome of theſe have been already conſidered in a former Book [o], where we ſpeak of the Reſpect and Reverence which the Primitive Chriſtians paid to their Churches, I ſhall but juſt name them in this Place. Such was the Ceremony of Reſpect uſed by Kings and Emperors, who laid aſide their Crowns and Arms and Guards, when they enter'd into the Houſe of the King of Kings. Of which I have only this farther to obſerve here, that probably it was done in Imitation of the old Roman Magiſtrates, who, as ſome Authors [p] tell us, were wont to lay aſide their Faſces and other Enſigns of Honour, whenever they went into the Schools of Philoſophy at Athens. Such was that other Cuſtom of Reſpect obſerved by the Monks of Ægypt, who put off their Shoes, when they went into the Houſe of God: But this, I ſhewed, was only a topical Cuſtom peculiar to that Nation, and not a general one reaching the whole Church. I obſerved alſo that there are ſome Reaſons to believe the Ancients uſed the Ceremony of bowing towards the Altar at their firſt Entrance into the Church, though the Arguments amount only to a Probability, not a Demonſtration.

SECT. XIII. That the Biſhop ſaluted the People with Pax vobis, at his Entrance into the Church.

IT is more certain, That the Biſhop ſaluted the People in the uſual Form, Pax vobis, Peace be with you, at his firſt Entrance into the Church. For this is often mentioned by St. Chryſoſtom [q], who derives it from Apoſtolical Practice.

SECT. XIV. And the People gave Alms to the Poor, who ſtood before the Gates of the Church for this Purpoſe.

ST. Chryſoſtom alſo mentions another very laudable Cuſtom, and he uſes all his Rhetorick to promote and encourage the Practice of it: Which was the People's giving Alms to the Poor, at their firſt Entrance into the Church. For this Reaſon, ſays he [r], our Forefathers appointed the Poor to ſtand before the Doors of our Churches, that the Sight of them might provoke the moſt backward and inhuman Soul to Compaſſion. And as by Law and Cuſtom we have Fountains before our Oratories, that they who go in to worſhip God, may firſt waſh their Hands, and ſo lift them up in Prayer: So our Anceſtors, inſtead of Fountains and Ciſterns, placed the Poor before the Doors of the Church; that as we waſh our Hands in Water, ſo we ſhould cleanſe our Souls by Beneficence and Charity firſt, and then go and offer up our Prayers. For Water is not more adapted by Nature to waſh away the Spots of the Body, than the Power of Alms-deeds is to cleanſe the Filth of the Soul. As therefore you dare not go in to pray with unwaſhen Hands, though this be but a ſmall Offence; ſo neither ſhould you without Alms ever enter the Church for Prayer. You many times, when your Hands are clean, will not lift them up to God, before you have waſhed them in Water: So prevalent is the Force of Cuſtom with us: Let us therefore do the ſame with reſpect to Alms-deeds: And though we are not conſcious to our ſelves of any great and heinous Crimes, yet let us by Charity clear our Conſciences of leſſer Spots and Blemiſhes, which we contract in our daily Buſineſs and Converſation. So again in another Place [s] expounding thoſe Words, Thou ſhalt not appear before the Lord empty: Theſe Things, ſays he, were ſpoken to the Jews, and how much more to us? Therefore the Poor ſtand before the Doors of the Church, that no one ſhould go in empty, but enter ſecurely with Charity for his Companion. You go into the Church to obtain Mercy; Firſt ſhew Mercy: Make God your Debtor, and then you may ask of him, and receive with Uſury. We are not heard barely for the lifting up our Hands. Stretch forth your Hands, not only to Heaven, but to the Hands of the Poor: If you ſtretch out your Hands to the Poor, you touch the very Height of Heaven. For he that ſits there, receives your Alms: But if you lift up barren Hands, it profits nothing. He repeats the ſame [t] in other Places, which ſhews, that it was an excellent Cuſtom prevailing among them, and carefully recommended as a juſt Preparation for Prayer, among many other moral Qualifications for this Duty, which being vulgar and commonly known, I need not inſiſt upon them in this Place.

SECT. XV. That they worſhipped toward the East. With the Reaſons for this Practice.

THERE was one Obſervation more, which muſt not be omitted, becauſe it was a Ceremony almoſt of general Uſe and Practice: And that was the Cuſtom of turning their Faces to the Eaſt, in their ſolemn Adorations. The Original of this Cuſtom ſeems to be derived from the Ceremonies of Baptiſm, in which, as has been ſhewed before [*], it was uſual to renounce the Devil with their Faces to the Weſt, and then turn about to the Eaſt, and make their Covenant with Chriſt; from whence, I conceive, it became their common Cuſtom to worſhip God after the ſame way that they had firſt entred into Covenant with him. The Ancients give ſeveral Reaſons for this Cuſtom, but they all ſeem to glance at this one. Some ſay, the Eaſt was the Symbol of Chriſt, who was called the Orient, and Light, and Sun of Righteouſneſs in Scripture: And therefore, ſince they muſt worſhip toward ſome Quarter of the World, they choſe that which led them to Chriſt by ſymbolical Repreſentation. As Tertullian tells us in one place [u], that in Fact they worſhipped toward the Eaſt, which made the Heathen ſuſpect that they worſhipped the riſing Sun; ſo in another place [x] he ſays, the Eaſt was the Figure of Chriſt, and therefore both their Churches and their Prayers were directed that way. Clemens Alexandrinus [y] ſays, They worſhipped toward the Eaſt, becauſe the Eaſt is the Image of our ſpiritual Nativity, and from thence the Light firſt ariſes and ſhines out of Darkneſs, and the Day of true Knowledge, after the manner of the Sun, ariſes upon thoſe who lie buried in Ignorance. And St. Auſtin [z], When we ſtand at our Prayers, we turn to the Eaſt, whence the Heavens, or the Light of Heaven, ariſes: Not as if God was only there, and had forſaken all other Parts of the World, but to put our ſelves in mind of turning to a more excellent Nature, that is, to the Lord. This Reaſon exactly falls in with that which is given for turning to the Eaſt, when they covenanted with Chriſt in the Solemnities of Baptiſm.

2. Another Reaſon given for it by ſome, is That the Eaſt was the place of Paradiſe, our antient Habitation and Country, which we loſt in the firſt Adam by the Fall, and whither we hope to be reſtored again, as to our native Abode and Reſt, in the ſecond Adam, Chriſt our Saviour. This Reaſon is given by Gregory Nyſſen [a] and St. Baſil [b], and by the Author of the Conſtitutions [c], and the Author of the Queſtions and Anſwers to Antiochus among the Works of Athanaſius [d], together with Chryſoſtom, as he is cited by Cotelerius [e], and Gregentius [f], and many others. Now this is the very Reaſon aſſigned by St. Cyril for turning to the Eaſt, when they covenanted with Chriſt, and celebrated the Myſteries of Baptiſm. So that hitherto we find a clear Relation of theſe Ceremonies one to the other, and a perfect Agreement between them.

3. Another Reaſon aſſigned for this Cuſtom, was, That the Eaſt was the moſt honourable Part of the Creation, as being the Seat of Light and Brightneſs. The Author of the Queſtions and Anſwers to the Orthodox [g], gives this Reaſon for it. We ſet apart, ſays he, the moſt honourable things to the Honour of God: And the Eaſt, in the Opinion of Men, is the moſt honourable part of the Creation: We therefore in time of Prayer turn our Faces to the Eaſt; as we ſign thoſe in the Name of Chriſt, that need Conſignation, with the right Hand, becauſe it is deemed more honourable than the left, though it differ only in Poſition, not in Nature. And Lactantius, without taking any particular Notice of this Cuſtom, makes this general Obſervation, That the Eaſt [h] was more peculiarly aſcribed to God, becauſe He was the Fountain of Light, and Illuminator of all things, and becauſe he makes us riſe to eternal Life. But the Weſt was aſcribed to that wicked and depraved Spirit the Devil, becauſe he hides the Light, and induces Darkneſs always upon Men, and makes them fall and periſh in their Sins. Now this is a Reaſon that equally holds for turning to the Eaſt in Baptiſm, as well as their daily Devotion.

4. THERE is one Reaſon more aſſigned for it, which is, That Chriſt made his Appearance on Earth in the Eaſt, and there aſcended into Heaven, and there will appear again at the laſt Day. This is one of the three Anſwers, which the Author of the Queſtions to Antiochus, under the Name of Athanaſius [i], orders to be given to this Queſtion: If a Chriſtian asks the Queſtion, he is to be told, They looked toward Paradiſe, beſeeching God to reſtore them to their antient

Country

Country and Region, from whence they were expelled. If an Heathen put the Queſtion, the Anſwer ſhould be, Becauſe God is the true Light, for which Reaſon when they looked upon the created Light, they did not worſhip it, but the Creator of it. If the Queſtion was propoſed by a Jew, he ſhould be told, They did it, becauſe the Holy Ghoſt had ſaid by David, We will worſhip toward the Place where thy Feet ſtood, O Lord, Pſal. cxxxii. 7. meaning the Place where Chriſt was born, and lived, and was crucified, and roſe again, and aſcended into Heaven. Which ſeems alſo to be intimated by St. Hilary on thoſe Words of the lxviith Pſalm, according to the Tranſlation of the Septuagint, Sing unto God who aſcended above the Heaven of Heavens in the Eaſt. The Honour of God, ſays he [k], who aſcended above the Heaven of Heavens in the Eaſt, is now reaſonably required: And for that Reaſon toward the Eaſt, becauſe he, according to the Prophet, is the Eaſt or Morning from on high; that He returning to the Place whence he deſcended, might be known to be the Orient Light, who ſhall hereafter be the Author of Mens riſing to the ſame Aſcent of a celeſtial Habitation.

Theſe ſeveral Reaſons have all a peculiar Reference to Chriſt: And therefore as Chriſtians firſt uſed the Ceremony of turning to the Eaſt, when they entred into Covenant with Chriſt in Baptiſm; ſo it is probable, that from thence they derived this Cuſtom of turning to the Eaſt in all their ſolemn Adorations. But whether this were ſo or not, we are ſure there was ſuch a general Cuſtom among them, and that it was founded upon ſome or all the Reaſons that have been mentioned; which is as much as is neceſſary to be ſaid here for the Illuſtration of it.

CHAP. IX.

Of the Times of their Religious Aſſemblies, and the ſeveral Parts of Divine Service performed in them.

SECT. I. No certain Rule for meeting in Publick, except upon the Lord's Day in Times of Perſecution, for the two firſt Ages.

THERE remains one Circumſtance more of Divine Worſhip, which I have purpoſely reſerved for this Place, becauſe the Conſideration of it, will lead us to the ſeveral Parts of the Worſhip it ſelf: That is, the Circumſtance of Time: Concerning which it may be enquired, how often they met in a Week, and how often they met in a Day for Divine Worſhip? Now no general Anſwer can be given to theſe Queſtions, becauſe the Times of their Aſſemblies varied according to the different State and Ages of the Church. At firſt learned Men think they held Aſſemblies every Day in the Apoſtles Time, and whilſt the Jewiſh Temple ſtood: For we read of the Apoſtles going up to the Temple at the ninth Hour, being the Hour of Prayer, Acts iii. 1. And of their continuing daily with one accord in the Temple, and breaking Bread from Houſe to Houſe, or in their Houſe, meaning the Church, or Houſe of Prayer, as others render it, Acts ii. 46. Though their moſt ſolemn Meetings were on the firſt Day of the Week, or the Lord's Day, Acts xx. 7. 1 Cor. xvi. 2. In After-ages, when the Perſecutions grew warm, they are thought to have confined themſelves to the Lord's Day. For the Confeſſion which Pliny [a] took from the Mouths of ſome apoſtatizing Chriſtians, mentions no other: They confeſſed to him, that the Sum of their Crime or Error was, That they were uſed to meet on a certain ſtated Day, before it was Light, and ſing an Hymn to Chriſt, as to their God; and to bind themſelves by a Covenant or Sacrament, not unto any Wickedneſs, but that they would not commit any Theft, or Robbery, or Adultery, or break their Faith, or deny what was committed to their Truſt; after which they were uſed to break up their Aſſembly, and return again to a common Feaſt. Which is a plain Deſcripton of their Worſhip and Communion, and Love-Feaſt, called Agape, on the Lord's Day, but no other. And ſo Juſtin Martyr [b] deſcribing the Chriſtian Worſhip, ſays, That on the Day called Sunday there was a general Meeting of all that lived both in City and Country, when they had the Scriptures read, and a Sermon preached, and Prayers, and the Communion: But he mentions no Aſſembly for publick Worſhip on any other Day: Whence learned Men [c] have concluded, That in his Time the Church obſerved no other Days of ſolemn Aſſemblies, but only the Lord's Day. His Silence as to all others is a Negative Argument againſt them, unleſs perhaps ſome Diſtinction may be made between the general Aſſembly of both City and Country on the Lord's Day, and the particular Aſſemblies of the City-Chriſtians (who had better Opportunities to meet) on other Days: Which Diſtinction we often meet with in the following Ages, when Chriſtianity was come to its Maturity and Perfection.

SECT. II. The Original of the Stationary Days, or Church Aſſemblies on Wedneſdays and Fridays, and what Divine Service was performed on thoſe Days.

HOWEVER it was not long after Juſtin Martyr's Time, before, we are ſure, the Church obſerved the Cuſtom of meeting ſolemnly for Divine Worſhip on Wedneſdays and Fridays, which Days are commonly called ſtationary Days, becauſe they continued their Aſſemblies on theſe Days to a great lenth, till three a-Clock in the Afternoon; for which Reaſon they had alſo the Name of Semi-jejunia, or Half-Faſts, in Oppoſition to the Lent-Faſt, which always held till Evening; and Jejunia Quartæ and Sextæ Feriæ, the Faſts of the fourth and ſixth Days of the Week, that is, Wedneſdays and Fridays. Theſe are firſt mentioned by Tertullian, and Clemens Alexandrinus, and Origen, and after them by moſt other Writers, as Faſt-days generally obſerved by the Church. But I conſider them not here as Faſts (which will be more properly done under another Head, when we come to ſpeak of the Faſts and Feſtivals of the Church) but here only look upon them as Days of Religious Aſſembly, to diſcover what publick Divine Worſhip was performed on them. And for this we are chiefly beholden to Tertullian, who aſſures us, that on theſe Days they always celebrated the Communion, from whence we may infer, that the ſame Service was performed on theſe Days as on the Lord's Day, unleſs perhaps the Sermon was wanting. Some there were, he ſays, who objected againſt receiving the Communion on theſe Days, becauſe they were ſcrupulouſly afraid they ſhould break their Faſt by eating and drinking the Bread and Wine in the Euchariſt; and therefore they choſe [d] rather to abſent themſelves from the Oblation Prayers, than break their Faſt, as they imagined, by receiving the Euchariſt. Whom he undeceives by telling them, that to receive the Euchariſt on ſuch Days would be no Infringement of their Faſt, but bind them cloſer to God: Their Station would be ſo much the more ſolemn for their ſtanding at the Altar of God; they might receive the Body of the Lord, and preſerve their Faſt too; and ſo both would be ſafe, whilſt they both participated of the Sacrifice, and diſcharged their other Obligation. Since therefore they received the Euchariſt on theſe Days, we may conclude they had all the Prayers of the Communion Office, and what other Offices were wont to go before them, as the Pſalmody, and Reading of the Scriptures, and Prayers for the Catechumens and Penitents, which together with the Sermons were the whole Service for the Lord's Day. But becauſe even all this could not take up near ſo much Time, as muſt needs be ſpent in theſe Stations, it ſeems moſt probable, that in two particulars they much enlarged their Service on theſe Days, that is, in their Pſalmody, and private Prayers and Confeſſion of their Sins. The Pſalms, as we ſhall ſee hereafter, were ſometimes lengthened to an indefinite Number, twenty, thirty, forty, fifty, or more, as the Occaſion of a Vigil or a Faſt required, and between every Pſalm they had liberty to meditate and fall to their private Prayers: And by theſe two Exerciſes, ſo lengthened and repeated, it is eaſy to conceive, how the longeſt Station might be employed. Socrates [e] ſays, at Alexandria on theſe Days they had Sermons and all other Service uſed at other Times, except the Communion. But admitting they had the whole Service entire, as on the Lord's Day, yet it was not commenſurate to the Time of their Stations, unleſs we ſuppoſe their Pſalmody and private Devotions in the Church to be enlarged on thoſe Days to a greater Length, than was uſual in ordinary Service.

St. Baſil [f] agrees with Tertullian in making theſe Days not only Faſts, but Communion Days: For reckoning up how many Days in the Week they received the Communion, he makes Wedneſday and Friday to be two of the Number. Yet ſtill it is hard to conceive what Buſineſs they could have to detain them ſo long in the Church: Since their Collects and publick Prayers were but few in compariſon; and therefore it ſeems moſt probable, that a competent Share of this Time was ſpent in Pſalmody, and, as I find a learned Perſon [g] inclined to think, in private Devotions, which always had a Share in their Service, and was generally intermixed with their ſinging of Pſalms, as ſhall be ſhewed in their proper Places. See Book XIV. Chap. i. Book XV. Chap. i. n. 1.

SECT. III. Saturday, or the ſeventh Day, anciently obſerved with great Solemnity, as a Day of publick Devotion.

WE alſo find in antient Writers frequent mention made of religious Aſſemblies on the Saturday, or ſeventh Day of the Week, which was the Jewiſh Sabbath. It is not eaſy to tell either the Original of this Practice, or the Reaſons of it, becauſe the Writers of the firſt Ages are altogether ſilent about it. In the Latin Churches (excepting Milan) it was kept as a Faſt; but in all the Greek Churches as a Feſtival: I conſider it here only as a Day of publick Divine Service, on which, as the Authors who mention it, aſſure us, all the ſame Offices were performed as were uſed to be on the Lord's Day. For Athanaſius [h], who is one of the firſt that mentions it, ſays, they met on the Sabbath, not that they were infected with Judaiſm, but to worſhip Jeſus the Lord of the Sabbath. And Timotheus, one of his Succeſſors in the See of Alexandria, ſays, the Communion was [i] adminiſtred on this Day, as on the Lord's Day. Which were the only Days in the Week that the Communion was received by the Chriſtians of his Time, at Alexandria. Socrates [k] is a little more particular about the Service: For he ſays, In their Aſſemblies on this Day they celebrated the Communion, only the Churches of Egypt and Thebais differed in this from the reſt of the World, and even from their Neighbours at Alexandria, that they had the Communion at Evening Service. In another place, ſpeaking of the Churches of Conſtantinople in the Time of Chryſoſtom, he reckons Saturday [l] and Lord's Day the two great weekly Feſtivals, on which they always held Church Aſſemblies. And Caſſian [m] takes Notice of the Egyptian Churches, that among them the Service of the Lord's Day and the Sabbath was always the ſame: For they had the Leſſons then read out of the New Teſtament only, one out of the Goſpels, and the other out of the Epiſtles or the Acts of the Apoſtles; whereas on other Days they had them partly out of the Old Teſtament, and partly out of the New. In another place he obſerves [n], that in the Monaſteries of Egypt and Thebais, they had no publick Aſſemblies on other Days, beſides Morning and Evening, except upon Saturday and the Lord's Day, when they met at three a-Clock, that is, nine in the Morning, to celebrate the Communion. In the Council of Laodicea there are three Canons to the ſame Purpoſe. One [o] appoints the Goſpels with the other Scriptures to be read upon this Day. Another [p], that the Oblation of the Bread in the Euchariſt ſhall not be made all the Time of Lent, except on the Sabbath and the Lord's Day. Which implies that thoſe were Communion-Days, and kept as Feſtivals, even in Lent itſelf. And for the ſame Reaſon a third Canon [q] orders that no Feſtivals of Martyrs ſhould be kept in Lent, but only Commemorations of the Martyrs be made on the Sabbath and the Lord's Day. The only Difference that was then made between the Sabbath and the Lord's Day, was, that Chriſtians were not obliged to reſt from bodily [r] Labour on the Sabbath, but might work on that Day (ſo far as Divine Service would permit) giving Preference in this Reſpect as to the Lord's Day, whereon they were to reſt as Chriſtians. And if any tranſgreſſed theſe Rules about working on the Sabbath, they were to be deemed Judaizers, and are order'd to be anathematized by another Canon of the ſame Council. By which it appears that Saturday was kept weekly as a Day of publick Worſhip, but not as a Jewiſh Sabbath. Epiphanius [s] mentions it likewiſe as a Day of publick Aſſemblies in ſome Places, but not in all. St. Baſil [t] ſays it was one of the four Days in the Week, on which in his Time they received the Communion. By all which we may perceive that the Author of the Conſtitutions had a plain Regard to the Practice of the Eaſtern Church, when he preſcribed, that on every Sabbath ſave one (that is the Saturday before Eaſter-Day) and on every Lord's Day [u] they ſhould hold religious Aſſemblies, and keep them as the weekly Feſtivals; that is, not only with Pſalmody, and reading the Scriptures, and Common Prayers, which was the ordinary Service of the Morning and Evening of every Day, but with Sermons alſo, or Preaching the Goſpel, and the Offering of the Oblation, and Reception of the Holy Food; as he deſcribes the Service of the Sabbath and Lord's Day in another [x] place.

SECT. IV.

How they obſerved the Vigils of the Sabbath, and Lord's Day, and other incidental Feſtivals of Martyrs.

Now as theſe were the two great Feſtivals of every Week, ſo they were commonly uſhered in by the Attendance of preceding Pernoctations or Vigils, which, as Harbingers, went before to make Preparation for the Solemnities of the following Days. Theſe Vigils were much of the ſame nature as the common nocturnal, or daily Morning Prayer, which was early before it was light: And they only differed from the uſual Antelucan Service in this, that whereas the uſual Morning Service never began till after Midnight towards Cock-crowing in the Morning, theſe Vigils were a longer Service that kept the Congregation at Church the greateſt part of the Night. Theſe the Greeks called παννυχίδας; and the Latins, Pernoctationes & Pervigilia, Watchings all the Night. St. Chryſoſtom often ſpeaks of theſe: Go into the Church, ſays he, and there ſee the Poor continuing from Midnight to break of Day: Go, and ſee the holy Pernoctations [y] joining Day and Night together: Behold the People of Chriſt, fearing neither by Night, nor by Day, the tyranny of Sleep or the Neceſſities of Poverty. In another Place [z] he calls them πάννυχοι καὶ ἀδιανεχεῖς στάσεις, the continued and perfect Night-Stations, in Oppoſition to the Stations by Day, which were but partial and imperfect. By theſe, he adds, you imitate the Station of the Angelical Quire, whilſt you offer up ἀκατάπαυστον ὑμνολογίαν, Pſalmody and Hymnody without ceaſing to your Creator. O the wonderful Gifts of Chriſt! The Armies of Angels ſing Glory to God above: And on Earth Men, keeping their choral Stations in the Church, ſing the ſame Doxology after their Example. The Cherubims above cry aloud, Holy, Holy, Holy, in the Triſagion Hymn: And the Congregation of Men on Earth below ſend up the ſame: And ſo a common general Aſſembly is made of the Inhabiters of Heaven and Earth together. Their Thankſgiving is one and the ſame, their Exultation the ſame, their joyful Choral-Station the very ſame. In which Words he plainly gives us to underſtand, that the Angelical Hymn, Glory be to God on high, and the Cherubical Hymn, or the Triſagion, as it was called from the Cherubims thrice repeating the firſt Words, Holy, Holy, Holy, were Part of their ſacred Service in theſe Night-Stations: Which, as I obſerved before, were but an earlier Oblation of the ordinary Morning-Service, wherein we ſhall find the Angelical Hymn amongſt other Parts of Divine Worſhip always appointed to be uſed.

It were eaſy to make a long Diſcourſe here of the ſeveral ſorts of theſe Night-Stations, or completer Vigils holding all the Night through: For they were ſometimes held upon extraordinary Occaſions of Prayer, upon great Emergencies and Neceſſities of the Church; Inſtances of which the curious Reader may find ſeveral in Chryſoſtom [a] and St. Auſtin [b] and Ruffin [c] and Socrates [d] and Sozomen [e] and Theodoret [f]. Sometimes again they were kept as Anniverſary Vigils to uſher in the greater Feſtivals of the Nativity, Epiphany, Reſurrection, and Aſcenſion of Chriſt, and the Deſcent of the Holy Ghoſt at Pentecoſt; of which Sort there is mention made in Tertullian [g], Lactantius [h], Chryſoſtom [i], Socrates [k], and many others. But the Vigils we are here concerned to ſpeak of, are only ſuch as have ſome Relation to the weekly Service, of which Number we may reckon thoſe Vigils of the Sabbath and Lord's Day the chief, becauſe they returned conſtantly in the weekly Revolution. Concerning which we have not only the forementioned Authority of Chryſoſtom, but ſeveral others. For Socrates [l] giving an Account of Athanaſius's Eſcape out of the Church of Alexandria in the Night, when the Church was beſet with Soldiers to take him, ſays, it was Evening, and the People were keeping their nocturnal Vigils, becauſe the next Day was to be a Synaxis, or Church-Aſſembly. Therefore Athanaſius fearing leſt the People ſhould ſuffer upon his Account, bid the Deacon give the Signal or Call to Prayer, and he commanded a Pſalm to be ſung, and whilſt they were ſinging their Pſalmody, the Soldiers were quiet, and they all mean while went out at one Door of the Church, and Athanaſius in the midſt of the Singers eſcaped untouched and fled to Rome. Athanaſius himſelf [m] has the ſame Story in his Apology for his Flight, where he ſays, ſome of the People were keeping their Night-Vigil, expecting an Aſſembly the next Day. And Socrates in another place ſpeaking of theſe nocturnal Vigils kept both by the Arians, and Catholicks, ſays, they held them againſt the weekly Feſtivals, the Sabbath, and the Lord's Day [n], on which Days there were uſed to be general Aſſemblies of the Church. And becauſe the Arians were allowed no Churches within the Walls, they ſung their Hymns in the Streets and Portico's of the City till the Morning Light, and then went out to their Meeting-places without the Gates. And the Hiſtorian obſerves, that Chryſoſtom fearing the Arians might gain Ground upon the Church by this Practice, and draw away ſome of the more ſimple People, appointed ſome of his own People, who were uſed to nocturnal Hymnody, to meet in the Streets after the ſame manner; and to make the Solemnity more ſplendid, the Empreſs gave them ſilver Croſſes to ſet their Lamps in, appointing one of her own Eunuchs, called Briſon, to be their Protector. Which ſo provoked the Arians, that they fell to Blows about it, and Briſon and ſome others were ſlain in the Engagement: Which occaſioned the Emperor wholly to put down thoſe Arian Meetings, and leave the Catholicks quietly to go on with their Vigils in the Churches, as they had done before. From theſe Accounts we may eaſily collect, both that there were ſuch weekly Vigils frequented by the more zealous and religious ſort of People in all Parts of the Eaſt, and alſo that Pſalms and Hymns and Prayers were the Exerciſes, wherewith they entertained themſelves to the Morning Light. I might add many other Teſtimonies out of Nazianzen [o] and other Greek Writers, but theſe are abundantly ſufficient to ſhew us the Practice of the Oriental Church.

For the Latin Church we have the Authority of St. Jerom, who interpreting the Word, Watcher, in Daniel, ſays, it ſignifies the Angels, who always watch, and are ready to obey the Commands of God: And he adds [p], We alſo by our frequent Pernoctations or Night-Watches imitate the Office of Angels. And it appears from him farther, that Women and Virgins frequented this Service, as well as Men: For he adviſes Læta [q] to inure her Daughter to theſe ſolemn Pernoctations, only cautioning her to keep a Guard upon her, and not let her wander from her Side; for the ſame Reaſon I preſume, for which the Council of Eliberis [r] thought fit wholly to forbid Women the Obſervation of theſe Vigils, becauſe many under Pretence of Prayer were found to commit Wickedneſs. There are many other Paſſages in St. Auſtin, and St. Hilary, and other Latin Writers, which ſpeak of Vigils; but becauſe they may be underſtood either of private Watchings in Prayers at Home, or of the common Vigils of the Ordinary Morning Prayer before Day, I omit them in this Place: Only alledging that of St. Ambroſe [s] where he ſeems to found this Practice upon the Imitation of Chriſt's Example: The Lord Jeſus, ſays he, continued all Night in Prayer, not that he wanted the Help of Prayer, but to ſet thee an Example to copy after: He continued all Night praying for thee, that thou mighteſt learn after what manner to pray for thy ſelf.

But beſides theſe ſtated Vigils of the two weekly Feſtivals, there was another ſort of incidental ones, which came almoſt every Week throughout the Year, or at leaſt were very frequent in ſome parts of it: Thoſe were the Vigils of the Feſtivals or Anniverſaries of the Martyrs. Thoſe Anniverſaries, as we ſhall ſee by and by, were always in great Repute, and obſerved with the ſame Solemnities of Divine Worſhip, as the Sabbath or the Lord's Day; and therefore their Vigils were alſo celebrated with the ſame Ceremony, as the Vigils or Night-Stations of the two great weekly Feſtivals. St. Chryſoſtom [t] is an undoubted Witneſs of this: For in an Homily made upon one of theſe Feſtivals, he takes Notice of the preceding Vigil, that had continued all the Night: Ye have turned, ſays he, the Night into Day, by keeping your holy Stations all the Night: Do not now turn the Day into Night again by Surfeiting and Drunkenneſs and laſcivious Songs. And Sidonius Apollinaris [u] will teſtify the ſame, at leaſt for ſome part of the Weſtern Church: For writing about the Feſtival of Juſtus Biſhop of Lyons, he thus deſcribes both the Obſervation of the Day, and the preceding Vigil: We met, ſays he, at the Grave of St. Juſtus; it was a Morning Proceſſion before Day; it was an anniverſary Solemnity; the Confluence of People of both Sexes was ſo great, that the Church, though very capacious and ſurrounded with Cloyſters, would not contain them. When the Service of the Vigil was ended, which the Monks and Clerical Singers performed with alternate Melody, we ſeparated for ſome time, but went not very far away, as being to meet again at three a Clock, that is, nine in the Morning, when the Prieſts were to perform Divine Service, that is, the Service of the Communion, as on a Feſtival.

SECT. V.

Of the Feſtivals of Martyrs. Their Original, and what Divine Service was performed on them.

AND now that we have mentioned the Feſtivals of Martyrs, as Days of publick religious Worſhip, we muſt take Notice of their Original, to find out how early they became Days of ſolemn Addreſſes to God, and in what Offices of Divine Service their Obſervation conſiſted. Theſe Feſtivals were grown ſo numerous in the Time of Chryſoſtom and Theodoret, that they tell us, it was not once or twice or five Times in a Year that they celebrated their Memorials, but they had oftentimes one or two in the ſame Week [x], which occaſioned frequent Solemnities. The Original of them is at leaſt to be carried as high as the Time of Polycarp, who ſuffered about the Year 168. For the Church of Smyrna (whereof he was Biſhop) in their Epiſtle to the Church of Philomelium, recorded by Euſebius [y], tell them, that they intended, if God would permit, to meet at his Tomb, and celebrate his Birth-day, that is, the Day of his Martyrdom, with Joy and Gladneſs, as well for the Memory of the Sufferer, as for Example to Poſterity. Tertullian ſpeaks of theſe Anniverſary Feſtivals, as obſerved in his Time. We offer, ſays he, Oblations for thoſe that are dead, for their [z] Nativities on their Anniverſary-Day. And Cyprian [a] orders his Clergy to note down the Days of their Deceaſe, that a Commemoration of them might be celebrated amongſt the Memories of the Martyrs. And in another Place [b] he ſays, they offered Sacrifices for them, as often as they celebrated their Paſſions, or Days of Martyrdom by an Anniverſary Commemoration. Theſe Sacrifices were the Sacrifices of Prayer, and Thankſgiving to God for the Examples of the Martyrs, and the Celebration of the Euchariſt on theſe Days, and the Offerings of Alms and Oblations for the Poor, which together with a Panegyrical Oration or Sermon, and reading the Acts or Paſſion of the Martyr, if they had any ſuch recorded, were the Exerciſes and ſpecial Acts of Devotion, in which they ſpent theſe Days. For theſe were always eſteemed high Feſtivals, and therefore the ſame Service that was performed on the Sabbath and Lord's Day, was always performed on them. They never paſſed without a full Aſſembly, nor without a Sermon or a Communion, as appears from ſome of Chryſoſtom's Homilies upon ſuch Occaſions. To diſſuade the People from Intemperance, he bids them conſider how abſurd it was [c] after ſuch a Meeting, after a whole Night's Vigil, after hearing the Holy Scriptures, after participating of the Divine Myſteries, after ſuch a ſpiritual Repaſt, for a Man or a Woman to be found ſpending whole Days in a Tavern. The Foundation of his Argument is built upon this Suppoſition, that they had received the Euchariſt in the Church before, in celebrating the Memorial of a Martyr. And ſo Sidonius Apollinaris repreſents the Matter in the Paſſage juſt now cited from him [d], that after they had kept the Vigil of St. Juſtus the Night preceding, they aſſembled again by Day at nine in the Morning, when the Prieſts did rem divinam facere, offer the Oblation, or conſecrate the Euchariſt, as Savaro [e] rightly interprets it.

But beſides the uſual Solemnities of other Feſtivals, there was one Thing peculiar to theſe Feſtivals of the Martyrs: Which was, that the Hiſtory of their Paſſions, as they were taken by the Notaries, appointed by the Church for this Purpoſe, were commonly read in the Aſſembly upon ſuch Occaſions. It was at leaſt the common Practice of the African Churches. For St. Auſtin [f] ſpeaks of it as an uſual Thing, indulging his People Liberty to ſit, whilſt they heard them read, becauſe they were ſometimes of a conſiderable length. And the third Council of Carthage [g] made a Canon to encourage the Reading of them. Mabillon [h] gives ſeveral other Inſtances out of Alcimus Avitus, Cæſarius Arelatenſis, and Ferreolus, to ſhew that they were read alſo in the French Churches. Only they were forbidden in the Roman Church by the Decree of Pope Gelaſius [i] in his Synod of ſeventy Biſhops, under Pretence that they were written by Anonymous Authors, and ſometimes by ignorant Heathens, and ſometimes by heretical Authors, as the Paſſions of Cyricus, Julitta, and St. George. For which Reaſon they had by antient Cuſtom prohibited the reading of them in the Roman Church. But this Rule it ſeems did not then preſcribe to other Churches.

SECT. VI.

Solemn Aſſemblies for Preaching and other Acts of Divine Worſhip held every Day, during the whole forty Days of Lent, and the Fifty Days between Eaſter and Whitſontide.

IT may be farther obſerved, that during the whole forty Days of Lent, they had continual Aſſemblies not only for Prayers, but Preaching alſo: As is evident from Chryſoſtom's Sermons, many of which were preached by him ſucceſſively one Day after another throughout the greateſt Part of that Seaſon; as his Homilies upon Geneſis, and thoſe famous Diſcourſes called his ἀνδριάντες, preached at Antioch in Lent upon the Occaſion of a Tumult, wherein the Emperor's Statues were demoliſhed. And many other Inſtances may be given of the ſame Practice, of which more hereafter under the Head of Preaching in the next Book [*]. 'Tis true indeed they did not always conſecrate the Euchariſt in Lent, but only upon the Sabbath and Lord's Day, as we learn from the Council of Laodicea [k], which expreſly forbids the Oblation of the Bread in Lent upon any other day beſides the Sabbath and the Lord's Day. The Reaſon of which was, that theſe two Days were obſerved as Feſtivals even in Lent itſelf; and they did not ordinarily conſecrate the Euchariſt upon the ſolemn Faſts in the Time of this Council: But inſtead of the Conſecration Service, they had probably that which in the following Ages is called προηγιασμένων λειτουργία, Miſſa Præſanctificatorum, the Office of the preſanctified Elements, which was a ſhorter Service for Communicating on Faſt-Days in the Elements that were conſecrated before on the Lord's-Day Feſtival, about which there is a particular Direction in the Council of Trullo. Can. 52. So that one way or other they ſeem to have had both a Communion and a Sermon every Day in Lent.

Then again the fifty Days between Eaſter and Whitſontide were a ſort of perpetual Feſtival, and obſerved with great Solemnity, as Days of Joy, from the Time of Tertullian, who mentions it, and triumphs over the Heathen upon it, that beſides the Sunday, which returned once in eight Days, this one continued Feſtival [l] of Pentecoſt was more than all the Feſtivals the Heathen could pretend to reckon up in a whole Year. He does not tell us here indeed with what Solemnity they obſerved this Time, but in another place he aſſures us [m] they had ſolemn Worſhip every Day, and paid the ſame Reſpect to it as they did to the Lord's Day, in that they neither faſted nor prayed kneeling on any Day during this whole Interval, which was the Commemoration of our Saviour's Reſurrection and Aſcenſion. Whence it is no improbable Conjecture, that during this Seaſon they might have the ſame compleat Worſhip every Day, that they had upon the Lord's Day.

Heathen

SECT. VII. Publick Prayer Morning and Evening every Day in the third Century.

AND this Conſideration will lead us to fix the date of the ſetting up Morning and Evening Prayer daily in the Church. For if the Perſecutions would give leave in Tertullian's Time to keep fifty Days together as ſolemn Feſtivals; there is no Reaſon to imagine that they could not as well meet every Day for their ordinary Devotions. And if Wedneſdays and Fridays were then obſerved as ſtationary Days, with more than ordinary Attendance, as we have heard him declare before; there is little Reaſon to queſtion, but that every Day might have an ordinary Vigil or Morning Aſſembly. It was not long after Tertullian's Time, that Cyprian [n] aſſures us, they received the Euchariſt every Day; and he thinks, that Petition in the Lord's Prayer may bear this Senſe, when we ſay, Give us this Day our daily Bread: Which was alſo Tertullian's Senſe of it before him [o]. Now this is Demonſtration then, that they had Aſſemblies for publick Worſhip every Day, ſince they received the Euchariſt every Day, which they did not uſe to conſecrate but in publick Aſſemblies of the Church. From this Time therefore there is no Diſpute about the Church's daily Sacrifice of Prayer in her Morning Aſſemblies: Which in After-ages are commonly called Cœtus Antelucani, & Vigiliæ, & Horæ Nocturnæ, becauſe they were a ſort of ordinary Vigils, or Night Aſſemblies, held before it was light, though not ſo early as thoſe other Sort of Vigils, or Night-Stations before the Sabbath and Lord's Day, which were of longer Duration, as has been noted already of them in its proper Place.

As to Evening Prayer, publick in the Church, Mr. Mede [p] thinks there is no mention made of it in Cyprian or Tertullian, nor in any Writers before the Author of the Conſtitutions and the Council of Laodicea: He thinks the ninth Hour of Prayer mentioned by Cyprian [q], relates only to private Prayer; which is very probable: And that Tertullian's Nocturnæ Convocationes, mean not Evening but Morning Prayers early before Day; which is undoubtedly true: But then he ſeems not to have conſidered, that in Cyprian's Time there was a Cuſtom among ſome of Communicating after Supper: For he plainly mentions it [r], though he did not like the Cuſtom: And this Cuſtom continued among the Egyptians till the Time of Socrates [s], who ſpeaks of it then as ſomething peculiar to thoſe Churches. Now if there was a Cuſtom in Cyprian's Time of Communicating after Supper, there is no doubt to be made of Evening Prayer at the ſame Time. Rigaltius [t] and after him Biſhop Fell [u] and Dr. Cave [x] carry this Cuſtom of communicating after Supper as high as Tertullian: But I think they miſtake his Words: For he does not ſay, that they communicated after Supper [y], but that Chriſt at Supper-time gave the Command for the Sacrament of the Euchariſt to all, though then they communicated in their Morning Aſſemblies, and received it from the Hands of none but their Governors. I lay no Streſs therefore upon this Proof, but think the Proof of Evening Prayer may be rationally deduced from that of Cyprian. After whom the Author of the Conſtitutions not only ſpeaks of it [z], but gives us the Order both of their Morning and Evening Service, with which I ſhall preſent the Reader in the following Chapters. The Council of Laodicea ſpeaks of the Evening Service [a] together with that of the Nones, or three in the Afternoon, and orders the ſame Service to be uſed in both. The Greeks commonly call it λυχναψία, and the Latins Lucernarium, becauſe it commonly began at the Time when the Day went off, and when they lighted Candles for the Night. It is likewiſe frequently ſtyled Sacrificium Veſpertinum, the Evening Sacrifice, and Miſſa Veſpertina, as thoſe Names are uſed to ſignify in general the Service or Prayers of the Church. And theſe two, Evening and Morning, are the moſt celebrated Times of the antient daily Service, which are to be found almoſt in every Eccleſiaſtical Writer; ſo that it is altogether needleſs here to inſiſt any farther upon them.

SECT. VIII.

The Original of the Canonical Hours of Prayer. No notice of them for publick Prayer, but only for private, in the three first Ages.

THERE remains one Question more concerning those Times of Prayer, which are commonly called the Canonical Hours, that is, besides the fore-mentioned Evening and Morning Prayer, those that are called the First, the Third, the Sixth, and the Ninth Hours, with the Completorium or Bed-time. They who have made the most exact Enquiries into the Original of these as fixed Hours of publick Prayer, can find no Footsteps of them in the three first Ages, but conclude they came first into the Church with the Monastick Life. So Mr. Mede [b], and Bishop Pearson [c], who observes that Tertullian mentions the Third, Sixth, and Ninth Hours of Prayer; but then he is disputing as a Montanist [d] against the Catholicks, and urging the Necessity of observing the Rules of the Montanists in all the Heights of their Austerities, and Pretences of Mortification and Devotion above the Church. And he does not intimate, that either the Montanists or the Catholicks observed these Hours for publick Assemblies. Cyprian indeed recommends [e] these Hours of Prayer from the Example of Daniel, and other Arguments, to Christians, in their private Devotions: But he does not so much as once suggest, that the Church had then by any Rule made these the stated Hours of publick Devotion. That which evidently confirms this Opinion is an Observation to be made out of Cassian, who particularly describes the Devotions of these Canonical Hours, and the gradual Rise of them. For they had not all their Original at the same Time. The first Monks of Egypt, who were the Founders of the Monastick Life, he assures us, never observed any other Canonical Hours for publick Devotion, but only Evening and Morning early [f] before Day: All the rest of their Time they spent at work privately, joining private Meditation of the Scriptures, singing of Psalms, and Prayers continually with their Labour. Not long after the Monasteries of Mesopotamia and Palestine set up the Practice of meeting publickly at the third, sixth, and ninth Hours for performing their Psalmody [g] and Devotions. But as yet there was no new Morning Service distinct from that of the old Morning Service before Day. This was first begun in the Monastery of Bethleem [h], and thence propagated into others, but not received in all. And the Completorium or Bed-time Service was utterly unknown to the Ancients, as distinct from the Lucernaris, or Evening Service, as Bona [i] himself proves against Bellarmin. So that these Canonical Hours came gradually into the Church, and are all of them owing to the Rules of the Eastern Monasteries for their Original. Therefore what a Learned Man [k] among ourselves says, must be taken with a little Qualification, else it will not be true: "That the Universal Church "antiently observed certain set Hours of Prayer; "that all Christians thoughout the World might "at the same Time join together to glorify "God: And some of them [l] were of Opini-"on, that the Angelical Host, being acquainted "with those Hours, took that Time to join "their Prayers and Praises with those of the "Church." If this be understood of any Rule or Custom of the Universal Church for Hours of publick Prayer, besides those of Morning and Evening, in the three first Ages, it will not be true: But if it only mean, that there were Directions given for the Encouragement of private Prayer at those set Times, and that Christians generally observed them in private, it may be allowed: Since not only Origen, but Cyprian, as we have heard before, writes in favour of them, and Clemens Alexandrinus [m] says, some alloted set Hours for Prayer, the Third, Sixth, and Ninth. So necessary is it to distinguish between publick and private Devotions, and between the first and the following Ages, when we speak of Canonical Hours of Prayer as appointed by the Church Universal. For even after they were set up in the Monasteries, they were not immediately observed in all the Churches. For Epiphanius [n] speaking of the Customs of the Catholick Church, mentions the Morning Hymns and Prayers, and the Evening Psalms and Prayers, but no other. So Chrysostom often mentions the daily Service in the Church [o] Morning and Evening. And at the most never speaks of above three Times [p] a-day for publick Assemblies. For thus he brings in a secular Man complaining, and saying, How is it possible for me, who am a secular Man, and pinn'd down to the Courts of Law, to run to Church and pray at the three Hours of the Day? In answer to which Chrysostom does not say, that the Church had these three Hours of Prayer for Laymen, and more for others; but he tells the Man of Business, that if he could not come to Church, because he was so fettered to the Court, yet he might pray even as he stood there; since it was the Mind and the Voice, and the Elevation of the Soul, rather than the lifting up of the Hands, that was to be regarded in Prayer. For Hannah's Prayer was not heard for her loud Voice, but because she cry'd aloud inwardly in her Soul. This seems to intimate that the Church then only observed three Hours of Prayer, that is, the Evening and Morning, and as I conceive the Nones, or Three in the Afternoon. For by this Time, in ſome Places, the Church had received that Hour as a ſtated Hour of Prayer, of which more by and by. Yet it was ſome Time after this, before theſe Hours were admitted in the Gallican and Spaniſh Churches. For Mabillon ſhews [q] out of Gregory Turonenſis, that the ſixth and ninth Hours of Prayer were not introduced into the Church of Tours till the Time of Biſhop Injurioſus, which was not till the Year 530. And it appears from one of the Canons of Martin Bracarenſis, that they were not in his Time admitted into the Spaniſh Churches. For he calls only [r] the Morning and Evening Service the daily Sacrifice of Pſalmody, at which all Clerks were obliged to be preſent, under Pain of Depoſition without Amendment. This argues, that as yet the other Hours were not eſtabliſhed in the Churches (but only in the Monaſteries) as Canonical Parts of the daily Service. And it is obſervable farther, that moſt of the Writers of the fourth Age, who ſpeak of ſix or ſeven Hours of Prayer, ſpeak of the Obſervations of the Monks only, and not of the whole Body of the Church. As St. Jerom [s] where he deſcribes the Inſtitutions of the Monaſteries erected by the famous Lady Paula, ſays, they ſung the Pſalter in order, in the Morning, at the third, and ſixth, and ninth Hours, and at Evening, and at Midnight. And giving Directions in another Place [t] to Læta, how to educate her Daughter in the Monaſtick Life, he preſcribes the ſame Hours to be obſerved in Devotion. And the like may be ſeen in St. Baſil, Gregory Nyſſen, Caſſian, Caſſiodore, and moſt other Writers; nay, even St. Chryſoſtom himſelf who ſpeaks but of three ſolemn Hours of Prayer in the Church, when yet he has occaſion to ſpeak of the Monks and their Inſtitutions, he gives in much the ſame Number of Canonical Hours as others do. He tells us [u], they had their Midnight Hymns, their Morning Prayers, their third, and ſixth, and ninth Hours, and laſt of all their Evening Prayers. But I will not deny that by this Time theſe Hours of Prayers might in ſome Places of the Eaſt be admitted into the Churches. For the Author of the Conſtitutions has different Directions upon this Point: In ſome places [x] he ſpeaks only of Morning and Evening Prayer in the Church; but in another he preſcribes this Rule to be obſerved by the Biſhops in the Church: Ye ſhall make Prayers [y] in the Morning, and at the third Hour, and the Sixth, and the Ninth, and at Evening, and at Cock-crowing. In the Morning giving Thanks to the Lord for that he hath enlightened you, removing the Night, and bringing in the Day: At the third Hour, becauſe at that Time the Lord received Sentence of Condemnation from Pilate: At the ſixth Hour, becauſe at that Time, after the Lord was crucified, all Things were ſhaken and moved with Horror and Aſtoniſhment at the audacious Fact of the Impious Jews, deteſting the Affront that was put upon their Lord: At Evening giving Thanks to God, who hath given the Night to be a Reſt from our daily Labours: At Cock-crowing, becauſe that Hour brings the welcome News of the Day, to work the Works of Light. If you cannot go to Church becauſe of the Infidels, you ſhall aſſemble in an Houſe: Or if you can neither aſſemble in an Houſe, nor in the Church, then let every one ſing, read, and pray by himſelf; or two or three together: For where two or three are gather'd together in my Name, there am I in the midſt of them. One may conjecture from this Paſſage, that this Author living in the Time when theſe Canonical Hours began to be in requeſt, in the beginning of the fourth Century, found them to be admitted into the Uſage of ſome Churches, and therefore drew his Scheme of Directions in conformity to their Practice.

SECT. IX.

What Service was allotted to theſe Canonical Hours by the Church.

AND it being allowed, That about this Time they began gradually to take Place in the Church, it will not be amiſs to take a ſhort View of them in particular, and examine what Parts of Divine Service were performed in each of them. Caſſian ſpeaking of the firſt Inſtitution of them in the Monaſteries of Meſopotamia and Paleſtine, where they had their firſt Birth, ſays [z] they were appointed to be celebrated with the ſinging of three Pſalms at every meeting. And theſe intermixed with ſome Prayers were the whole Service. So that theſe were but ſhort Offices in compariſon of the antient Morning and Evening Service. And there is reaſon to believe, that the Church did not preciſely follow theſe Monaſtick Rules, but made proper Offices for herſelf to be uſed upon theſe Occaſions, partly becauſe the Monaſtick Offices were very different from one another, and not always choſen with the greateſt Diſcretion. Of which I need but give one Proof here out of the Council of Braga, which made a Canon to this purpoſe [a], That by common Conſent one and the ſame Order of ſinging ſhould be obſerved in the Morning and Evening Offices, and that the private and different Cuſtoms of the Monaſteries ſhould not be mingled with the Rules of the Church.

The Gallican Church in the Time of the ſecond Council of Tours, it is certain, had a very different Rule from that of the Eaſtern Monaſteries about the Number of Pſalms, Hymns, and Antiphona's to be ſaid at the ſeveral Hours and Times of Prayer. For in one of the Cannons of that Council [b] about the Year 567, a very peculiar Order was made, that the Method of Pſalmody and Number of Hymns ſhould be in proportion to the Number of the Hours or Months in which they were uſed: The new Morning Service was to be performed with ſix Antiphona's and two Pſalms in the height of Summer. In September there were to be ſeven Antiphona's and two Pſalms; in October eight Antiphona's and three Pſalms; in November nine and three Pſalms; in December ten and three Pſalms; and the ſame in January and February until Eaſter. So again at the ſixth Hour there were to be ſix Pſalms and the Alleluia, and at the twelfth Hour twelve Pſalms and the Alleluia. And in the whole Month of Auguſt there ſhould be Manications, that is, as Mabillon [c] explains it out of Aimoinus [d], early Mattins or Morning Service without any Pſalms, becauſe it was Harveſt-time, and Men were in haſte to be gone to their Labour, when they had performed the Solemnity of the Feſtivals, which in that Month were frequent above others. This ſhews, that no certain Rule was at firſt obſerved about theſe Canonical Hours, but that they varied both as to their Number and Service in their firſt Original.

SECT. X.

Of the Matutina, or Prima, called the new Morning Service.

THE firſt of theſe Offices was the Matutina, or Prima, the new Morning Service, ſo call'd in contradiſtinction to the old Morning Service, which was always early before Day; whereas this was after the Day was begun. Caſſian [e] tells us, this was firſt ſet up in the Monaſtery of Bethleem, for till that Time the Morning Service uſed to end with the old nocturnal Pſalms and Prayers and the daily Vigils, after which they uſed to betake themſelves to Reſt till the third Hour, which was the firſt Hour of diurnal Prayer, till this new Office of Morning Prayer was ſet up within Caſſian's Memory, to prevent ſome Inconveniencies, which he there mentions. He often gives it the Name therefore of Novella ſolennitas, the new Solemnity, as being ſo lately invented. And this is the true Reaſon, why in moſt of the Writers before Caſſian, ſuch as St. Jerom, the Author of the Conſtitutions, St. Baſil, and others who ſpeak particularly of the Canonical Hours, there is no mention of this firſt Hour, but they always reckon them up after this manner, The Morning, meaning the Morning Vigil before Day, the Third, the Sixth, the Ninth, without mentioning the Firſt, becauſe it was not in their Time as yet become an accuſtomed Hour of Prayer. But when it was once made a Canonical Hour, to compleat the Number of ſeven times a-day, then there were Pſalms particularly appointed for this Service, which Caſſian [f] ſays were theſe three, the fiftieth, ſixty ſecond, and eighty ninth; which according to our Computation are the fifty firſt, ſixty third, and ninetieth. The firſt of which is that which the Ancients called properly the Pſalm of Confeſſion, or Penitential Pſalm, which begins, Have Mercy upon me, O God, after Thy great Goodneſs: According to the Multitude of Thy Mercies do away mine Offences. This, Caſſian ſays in the ſame place, was uſed by all the Churches of Italy in his Time as the Cloſe of this Morning Service. The ſecond of theſe Pſalms is that which the Ancients called by a peculiar Name, the Morning Pſalm, as we ſhall ſee hereafter, becauſe it begins with thoſe Words, O God, my God, early will I awake unto Thee, or early will I ſeek Thee; and was always uſed in the old Antelucan Service, before this new Service was ſet up. The third of theſe Pſalms, which is the ninetieth, ſeems to be taken into this Service upon the account of thoſe Words in it, ſuiting the State of human Life, In the Morning it is green, and groweth up, but in the Evening it is cut down, dried up and withered: And, So teach us to number our Days, that we may apply our Hearts unto wiſdom.

SECT. XI.

Of the Tertia or Third Hour of Prayer.

NEXT after this, in all ſuch Churches as admitted the Firſt, was the Tertia, or third Hour, that is, nine in the Morning: This is mentioned by all the Writers that ſay any thing of Hours of Prayer; ſome ſaying it was to be obſerved in regard [g] to our Saviour's being condemned by Pilate at that Time; and others, in memory of the Holy Ghoſt's coming upon the Apoſtles [h] at that Hour: That Men might with one Mind worſhip the Holy Spirit, and beg of him the ſame Sanctification, Direction and Protection, imitating David's Prayer, in ſaying, Create in me a clean Heart, O God, and renew a right Spirit within me, Pſal. li. In another Place, Let thy loving Spirit lead me forth into the Land of Righteouſneſs, Pſal. cxliii. This is the Reaſon aſſigned by Caſſian and St. Baſil for this Solemnity. But whether any particular Pſalms were appropriated to this Service we are not told, but only in general Caſſian ſays, three Pſalms together with Prayers were appointed for every Hour. But on all Feſtivals this Service was omitted, becauſe on Sundays the Communion Service was uſed, which always began at this Hour.

SECT. XII. Of the ſixth Hour, or Noon-day Service.

THE next Hour was the ſixth, or Noon-day Service. At which Time St. Baſil ſays [i], they uſed the xc or xci Pſalm, praying for Protection againſt the Incurſions of the Noon-day Devil, δαιμονίς μεσημβρινῆς, for ſo the Septuagint and other Tranſlations render the Words of that Pſalm, Thou ſhalt not be afraid for any Terror by Night, nor for the Arrow that flieth by Day; nor for the Peſtilence that walketh in Darkneſs, nor for the Sickneſs, nor the Devil deſtroying at Noon-day. What other Pſalms they uſed he tells us not, but probably they might be ſome that had relation to the Death of Chriſt, becauſe it is agreed by all, that this Service was appointed in Commemoration of our Saviour's immaculate Sacrifice to the Father at this Hour.

SECT. XIII. Of the ninth Hour, or three in the Afternoon.

THE laſt Hour of Prayer in the Day-time, was the ninth Hour, that is, three in the Afternoon, at which Time our Saviour expired upon the Croſs, and by his Death triumphed over Death and Hell. At this Hour Cornelius was praying, when he was viſited by an Angel: As Peter was at the ſixth Hour, when he had the Viſion of the Sheet let down from Heaven. This was the Hour when Peter and John went up into the Temple, at the ninth Hour, being the Hour of Prayer, and the uſual Time of the Jewiſh Evening Sacrifice. In regard to all which the Church ſeems to have taken this Hour for a ſolemn Time of publick Prayer, before the two laſt mentioned. For the Council of Laodicea [k] expreſsly mentions the ninth Hour of Prayer, and orders that the ſame Service ſhould be uſed in that as was appointed for Evening Prayer. And St. Chryſoſtom ſpeaking of three Hours [l] of publick Prayer in the Day, may moſt reaſonably be underſtood to intend this ninth Hour as the third of them; becauſe in another Place he ſeems [m] to recommend it as ſuch: For ſpeaking of the Apoſtles going into the Temple at the ninth Hour, being the Hour of Prayer, he ſays, they obſerv'd this Hour not without very good Reaſon: For I have often told you concerning this Hour, that it was the Time when Paradiſe was opened, and the Thief enter'd into it; this the Time when the Curſe was taken away, when the Sacrifice of the World was offered, when the Darkneſs was diſſolved, and the Light, as well ſenſible as ſpiritual, ſhone forth. It was at the ninth Hour, when others after Dinner and Drunkenneſs ſleep a deep Sleep, that they then being ſober and vigilant, and fervent in Love, made haſte to Prayer. And if they needed to be ſo exact and aſſiduous in Prayer, who had ſuch Boldneſs, and were conſcious of no Evil; what ſhall we do, who are over-run with Wounds and Sores, and neglect to uſe the Medecine of Prayer? This Character here given of the ninth Hour, makes it probable to me, that this was one of thoſe three famous Hours of Prayer, which in the former Place he exhorts all Men to frequent in publick. We have no particular Account in any Writer, of the Pſalms or Prayers to be uſed at this Hour, but only what we have heard before out of the Council of Laodicea, that it was to be the ſame with the Evening Service: And therefore we muſt draw our Accounts of it from thence. Now becauſe we have a more ample and diſtinct Account of the Morning and Evening daily Service, than of any other ſtated Hours of Prayer in the antient Church, (as being both more antient and more celebrated than the reſt) I ſhall give a more particular and exact Deſcription of the ſeveral Parts, and Method of performing thoſe Offices, from ſuch Records as may be depended on for their Truth and Fidelity: And have therefore reſerved the Conſideration of theſe for the two following Chapters.

CHAP. X.

The Order of their Daily Morning Service.

SECT. I. The Order of Morning Service, as deſcribed in the Conſtitutions. This began with the ſixty third Pſalm.

THE moſt noted and uſual Times of Meeting, beſides thoſe of the Lord's Day, were the Morning and Evening of every Day, which in Times of Peace were conſtantly and regularly obſerved. I will deſcribe the Order of theſe Services, as they are laid down in the Conſtitutions, and compare the ſeveral Parts of them with the Memorials and Accounts that are left us by other antient Writers. The Order for the Morning Service begins with the Appointment of the ὀρθρινὸς ψαλμός, the Morning Psalm, as the Author of the Constitutions [a] terms it. He names not what Psalm it was in this place, but in another place he calls it the sixty second. That is, in our Division, the sixty third. Which (to shew how proper it was to begin their Morning Service with, both in relation to the Night past, and the Day approaching) I think it not improper to recite in this Place, according to our old Version, which comes nearest to the Translation of the Septuagint used in the antient Church.

PSALM LXIII.

1. O GOD, Thou art my God: Early will I seek Thee.
2. My Soul thirsteth for Thee, my Flesh also longeth after Thee, in a barren and dry Land, where no Water is.
3. Thus have I looked for Thee in Holiness; that I might behold Thy Power and Glory.
4. For Thy loving Kindness is better than the Life itself: My Lips shall praise Thee.
5. As long as I live will I magnify Thee on this manner, and lift up my Hands in Thy Name.
6. My Soul shall be satisfied even as it were with Marrow and Fatness, when my Mouth praiseth Thee with joyful Lips.
7. Have I not remembred Thee in my Bed, and thought upon Thee when I was waking?
8. Because Thou hast been my Helper, therefore under the Shadow of Thy Wings will I rejoice.
9. My Soul hangeth upon Thee: Thy right Hand hath upholden me.
10. These also that seek the Hurt of my Soul, they shall go under the Earth.
11. Let them fall (Septuagint, They shall fall) upon the Edge of the Sword, that they may be a Portion for Foxes.
12. But the King shall rejoice in God; all they also that swear by him shall be commended: But the Mouth of them that speak Lies shall be stopped.

SECT. II.
What Notice we have of this Morning Psalm in other Writers.

ST. Chrysostom shews that the Author of the Constitutions does not impose upon us in this Morning Psalm: For he says, [b] the Fathers of the Church appointed it to be said every Morning, as a spiritual Song and Medicine to blot out our Sins; to kindle in us a desire of God; to raise our Souls, and inflame them with a mighty Fire of Devotion; to make us overflow with Goodness and Love, and send us with such Preparation to approach and appear before God. He names not the Psalm, but he repeats the first Words, O God, my God, early will I awake unto Thee. My Soul thirsteth for Thee. And, Thus have I appeared before Thee in Holiness, that I might behold Thy Power and Glory. By which we may know that it is the same Psalm. He says, he had before made an Exposition upon this Psalm; and refers his Reader thither for a larger Account of it: But that by Injury of Time is now lost, and we are beholden to this Passage by the Bye for all the Notice we have of this Morning Psalm out of him, upon the Occasion of his Commenting upon the Evening Psalm; of which more hereafter in its proper Place. Besides Chrysostom, we have the Testimony of Cassian for the Use of this Psalm; For speaking of the several Hours of Prayer, and assigning Reasons out of Scripture for them, he makes this to be one Reason for Morning Prayer, that the Psalm, which was daily sung [c] in that Office, did properly instruct Men about their Obligations to this Duty, saying, O God, my God, early will I seek Thee. And Athanasius also once or twice recommends this Psalm to Virgins and others, as proper to be said privately in their Morning Devotions. Rising early in the Morning, says he to Marcellinus [d], sing the sixty second Psalm. And again [e] to the Virgins, In the Morning sing this Psalm, O God, my God, early will I seek Thee. These were but private Directions indeed, but probably might be suited to the Orders and Measures of publick Worship: It being evident from the forecited Authors, that this Psalm was the usual Introduction to their Morning Devotions.

SECT. III.
Next to the Psalm followed the Prayers for the Catechumens, Energumens, Competentes, and Penitents.

IMMEDIATELY after this Morning Psalm, without mention of any other Psalmody or reading any Lessons out of the Old or New Testament, follow the Prayers for the several Orders of Catechumens, Energumens, Candidates of Baptism, and Penitents, as in the general Service of the Lord's Day, which because I shall recite them at large in that Service [*], I omit to mention any farther in this Place. Only observing, that these Prayers were performed partly by the Deacons προσφώνησις, bidding the People pray, and repeating the several Petitions they were to make for those several Orders of Men; and partly by the Bishop's Invocation or Benediction said over them, as they bowed down to receive the Blessing before their Dismission.

SECT. IV.
Then the Prayers for the Faithful, the Peace of the World, and the whole State of Christ's Church.

WHEN these several Orders were sent away, there followed the Prayers, which on the Lord's Day began the Communion Service, and which upon that Account were usually stiled εὐχαὶ πιστῶν, the Prayers of the Faithful or Communicants, because none but they who had a Right to communicate in the Euchariſt, might be preſent at them. Theſe were the Prayers for the Peace of the World, and all Orders of Men in the Church, which always went before the Conſecration of the Euchariſt. And though there were no Conſecration of the Euchariſt on theſe ordinary Days, yet theſe general Prayers were always uſed in the daily Morning Service. I omit the reciting of them here for the ſame Reaſon as I do the former, becauſe the Reader may find them rehearſed at large hereafter [†] in the Entrance on the Communion Service.

SECT. V.
What Notice we have of theſe Prayers in other Writers.

I only obſerve here, that there is mention made, in other Writers as well as the Conſtitutions, of theſe Prayers for the whole State of the World, and all Orders of Men in the Church. For Chryſoſtom writing upon theſe Words of St. Paul, I exhort therefore that firſt of all, Supplications, Prayers, Interceſſions, and giving of Thanks, be made for all Men; for Kings, and all that are in Authority; ſays, this Word, Firſt of all, relates to the Daily Worſhip; wherein they that were initiated knew what was done every Day, Morning [f] and Evening; how we make Supplication to God for the whole World, for Kings and all that are in Authority. This clearly ſhews that ſuch Prayers were not only made on Communion-Days at the Celebration of the Euchariſt, but every Day, both Morning and Evening alſo, when it is certain there could be no Sacrifice but only that of their Prayers. For the Conſecration of the Euchariſt in that Age was never made at Evening Prayer. In this Senſe we may underſtand many of the antient Apologiſts, when they ſpeak of making Prayers continually for the Roman Government. Thus Dionyſius Biſhop of Alexandria tells Æmylian the Præfect, We worſhip the one God, Maker of all Things, who gave the Empire to Valerian and Gallienus our divine Governors: To him we pray [g] continually for their Kingdom, that it may be preſerved free from Diſturbance and Commotion. And ſo Tertullian [h] acquaints Scapula: We offer Sacrifice for the Emperor's Safety, but to no other God but our God and his; and in that manner as God has appointed, that is to ſay, by Prayer alone without Blood. In like manner Cyprian [i] tells Demetrian: We continually pour forth Supplications and Prayers for driving away your Enemies, and procuring Rain, and either for removing or moderating your Calamities: And we pray inſtantly and inceſſantly Day and Night for your Peace and Safety, appeaſing God and rendring him propitious unto you. Origen alſo [k] anſwering the Objection of Celſus, that the Chriſtians were wanting in their Duty to the Emperor, in that they gave him no Aid in his Wars, and refuſed to fight for him, among other Things tells him, that they gave him the moſt ſeaſonable Aſſiſtance, procuring him the Divine Aid, and defending him with the whole Armour of God. And this they did in Obedience to the Apoſtle's Admonition, I exhort therefore firſt of all, that Supplications, Prayers, Interceſſions, and giving of Thanks, be made for all Men, for Kings, and all that are in Authority. He adds, that keeping their Hands pure, they fought in their Prayers to God for their lawful Sovereign and thoſe that fought lawfully under him, that all Oppoſition and Enemies might fall before them, whilſt they were lawfully employed. They by their Prayers enervated the Power of Devils, the Authors of War, and Confounders of Leagues, and Diſturbers of Peace; and in doing this they did the Emperor more effectual Service, than they that bare Arms for him. Athenagoras tells the Emperors themſelves, in his Addreſs to them [l], that the Chriſtians prayed for their Government and Royal Progeny, that the Son might ſucceed the Father in his Kingdom according to Right, and that their Empire might be extended and enlarged, all Things ſucceeding according to their Deſire: And this they did, both that they might lead a quiet and peaceable Life, and chearfully obſerve all that was commanded them. Now though in all theſe Paſſages there is no expreſs mention made of Morning and Evening Prayer in the Church; yet their continual Prayer, and their praying Day and Night, may reaſonably be preſumed to include theſe, without any Prejudice to other times of publick or private Devotion. I now go on again with the Order of Morning Prayer in the Conſtitutions.

SECT. VI.
After the general Prayer for the whole State of the Church, followed a ſhort Bidding Prayer for Preſervation in the enſuing Day.

AFTER the Prayer for the whole State of the Church was ended, and the Deacon had ſaid, Keep us, O God, and preſerve us by thy Grace; which concludes the former Prayer; he exhorted the People to pray for Peace and Proſperity the Day enſuing and all their Lives, in this manner:

Let us beg of God his Mercies and Compaſſions, that this Morning and this Day, and all the Time of our Pilgrimage may be paſſed by us in Peace and without Sin: Let us beg of God, that he would ſend us the Angel of Peace, and give us a Chriſtian End, and be gracious and merciful unto us. Let us commend our ſelves and one another to the Living God by his Only-begotten Son.

Hom. 6. in 1 Tim. p. 1550. τοῦτο ἴσασιν οἱ μύσαι, πῶς καθ' ἑκάστην ἡμέραν γίνεται καὶ ἐν ἑσπέρᾳ καὶ πρωΐᾳ, πῶς ὑπὲρ παντὸς τοῦ κόσμου, καὶ βασιλέων, καὶ πάντων τῶν ἐν ὑποχῇ ὄντων ποιούμεθα τὴν δέησιν. [k] Orig. cont. Celſ. lib. 8. p. 436. [l] Athenag. Legatio pro Chriſtianis, p. 39.

What is here ſaid concerning the Angel of Peace, is a Petition that came often in the Devotions of the antient Church, both when they prayed for themſelves and others. For we ſhall meet with it again in the Evening Service, and in the Prayer for the Catechumens [*] mentioned by St. Chryſoſtom in ſeveral Places of his Writings, where he often ſpeaks of the Deacons bidding Men pray for the Angel of Peace, and that all their Purpoſes may be directed to a peaceable End. Which agree very well with this Prayer of the Deacon in the Conſtitutions.

SECT. VII. Then the Biſhop's Commendation, or Thankſgiving.

IMMEDIATELY after this common Prayer of the Deacon and People together (the Deacon having bid the People commend themſelves to God) the Biſhop makes this Commendatory Prayer, which is there called, εὐχαριστία ὀρθρινή, the Morning Thankſgiving [m], and is in the following Words.

O God, the God of Spirits and of all Fleſh, with whom no one can compare, whom no one can approach, that giveſt the Sun to govern the Day, and the Moon and the Stars to govern the Night; look down now upon us with the Eyes of thy Favour, and receive our Morning-Thankſgivings, and have Mercy on us. For we have not ſpread forth our Hands to any ſtrange God. For there is not any new God among us, but Thou our Eternal and Immortal God; who haſt given us our Being through Chriſt, and our Well-being through him alſo. Vouchſafe by him to bring us to everlaſting Life, with whom unto Thee be Glory, Honour and Adoration, in the Holy Ghoſt, World without End. Amen.

SECT. VIII. And his Impoſition of Hands or Benediction.

AFTER this the Deacon bids them bow their Heads and receive the Impoſition of Hands, or the Biſhop's Benediction, which follows under the Title of χειροθεσία ὀρθρινή, the Impoſition of Hands in Morning Prayer, in the Form of Words here annexed.

O God, Faithful and True, that ſheweſt Mercy to thouſands and ten thouſands of them that love Thee; who art the Friend of the Humble, and Defender of the Poor, whoſe Aid all Things ſtand in need of, becauſe all Things ſerve Thee: Look down upon this thy People, who bow their Heads unto Thee, and bleſs them with thy ſpiritual Benediction; keep them as the Apple of the Eye; preſerve them in Piety and Righteouſneſs, and vouchſafe to bring them to eternal Life, in Chriſt Jeſus thy beloved Son, with whom unto Thee be Glory, Honour and Adoration, in the Holy Ghoſt, now and for ever, World without End. Amen.

This ſaid, the Deacon diſmiſſes the Congregation with the uſual Form, πορεύεσθε ἐν εἰρήνῃ, Depart in Peace. Which Chryſoſtom takes notice of as the ſolemn Word for diſmiſſing every Church-Aſſembly. For ſpeaking of the frequent Uſe of the Salutation, Pax vobis, Peace be unto you, he obſerves, that it was uſed in the Beginning of every ſacred Action, Prayer, Preaching, Bleſſing, &c. and ſometimes in the middle of Prayers too, ſo particularly at the Biſhop's Entrance into the Church, and the Deacon's final Diſmiſſion of the Aſſembly: The Deacon, ſays he, when he ſends you away [n] from this Meeting, does it with this Prayer, πορεύεσθε ἐν εἰρήνῃ, Go in Peace.

BUT beſides this Order of Morning Prayer laid down in this place by the Author of the Conſtitutions, there is in another place a Prayer or Hymn appointed for the Morning, but whether for publick or private Uſe, is not ſaid: I ſuppoſe he intended it only for private Devotion, becauſe it is placed among many other private Prayers. He gives it the Name of προσευχὴ ἑωθινή, the Morning Prayer. Other Writers call it the Hymn, and the Angelical Hymn, and the great Doxology, from the firſt Words of it, Glory be to God on high, which was the Angels Hymn at our Saviour's Birth. The Form of it in this Author runs in theſe Words [o].

Glory be to God on high, in Earth Peace, Good-will towards Men. We praiſe Thee, we laud Thee, we bleſs Thee, we glorify Thee, we worſhip Thee by the great High-Prieſt, Thee the true God, the only Unbegotten, whom no one can approach, for thy great Glory, O Lord, heavenly King, God the Father Almighty: Lord God, the Father of Chriſt, the Immaculate Lamb, who taketh away the Sin of the World, receive our Prayer, Thou that ſitteſt upon the Cherubims. For Thou only art Holy, Thou only Lord Jeſus, the Chriſt of God, the God of every created Being, and our King. By whom unto Thee be Glory, Honour and Adoration.

This ſame Hymn is mentioned alſo by Athanaſius, in his Book of Virginity, but he gives it only as a Direction to Virgins in their private Devotions: Early in the Morning, ſays he, ſing this Pſalm, O God, my God, early will I awake unto Thee. My Soul thirſteth for Thee. (That is the lxiiid Pſalm.) When it is light, ſay, Bleſs ye the Lord, all ye Works of the Lord. (That is the Song of the three Children.) And [p], Glory be to God on high, on Earth Peace, Good-will towards Men. We laud Thee, we bleſs Thee, we worſhip Thee; and what follows. It is great Pity this Author did not give us the whole Hymn, that we might have compared it with that in the Conſtitutions. It was always uſed in the Communion-Service, though not exactly in the ſame Form, as we ſhall ſee hereafter. But St. Chryſoſtom [q] ſpeaks of it as uſed alſo daily at Morning Prayer. For deſcribing the Devotions of thoſe who led an Aſcetick Life, he ſays, as ſoon as they roſe out of Bed, they met together and made a Quire, and as it were with one Mouth ſang Hymns to God, praiſing him, and giving him Thanks for all his Bleſſings both General and Particular: And among other Things like Angels on Earth, ſinging, Glory be to God on high, and on Earth Peace, Good-will towards Men. And Mabillon [r] obſerves out of the Rules of Cæſarius Arelatenſis and Aurelian in the Beginning of the ſixth Century, that it is there appointed to be ſung at Mattins or Morning Prayer every Lord's Day, and on Eaſter-day, and ſuch other noted Feſtivals. Which ſhews, that at leaſt in ſome Churches it was uſed in other Offices beſide the Communion-Service, and among the Monks as an ordinary Hymn in their daily Morning Service. And ſo it is now uſed among the Modern Greeks, as a learned Searcher of their Rituals [ſ] informs us in his Account of the Greek Church.

SECT. X. Whether the Pſalms and Leſſons were read at the daily Morning Service.

BUT it ſeems a little more difficult to account for another Thing, which is omitted in the Conſtitutions. For there is no Order there either for Pſalms or Leſſons to be read in the Morning Service, beſides that one Pſalm, which was particularly ſtiled the Morning Pſalm. Whereas other Authors, and particularly Caſſian, ſpeaks of three Pſalms read at every Aſſembly thro' all the Canonical Hours of the Day [t]; and he remarks preciſely for the Morning Service the very Pſalms [u] that were uſed, namely, the fiftieth, that is, our fifty firſt, which they commonly called the Penitential Pſalm: Have mercy upon me, O God, after thy great Goodneſs: according to the multitude of thy Mercies do away my Offences: And together with that, the lxiid Pſalm, that is, the lxiiid in our Diviſion, which was commonly called the Morning Pſalm, as we have noted before; and the lxxxixth, that is, our xcth Pſalm, which is appropriated to the Funeral Office, but is as proper for the Service of every Day, and fit to be uſed by all Men whenever they begin a new Day, becauſe of thoſe excellent Petitions in it for God's Protection and Favour, and for Wiſdom to conſider our latter End: So teach us to number our Days, that we may apply our Hearts unto Wiſdom: And for that it ſo familiarly puts us in mind of our Mortality, comparing our Life to a Sleep, which fades away ſuddenly like the Graſs: In the Morning it is green and groweth up, but in the Evening it is cut down, dried up and withered. By which we may judge both of the Wiſdom and Piety of the Ancients in appointing this Pſalm to be uſed conſtantly in the daily Courſe of Morning Service. Caſſian obſerves farther in the ſame Place [u], that in his Time, throughout all the Churches of Italy, their Morning Hymns were concluded with the Penitential Pſalm, that is, the fiftieth according to his Account, but with us the fifty firſt. And St. Baſil [x] remarks the ſame Thing for many of the Churches of the Eaſt, that their Vigils, or Nocturnal Pſalmody, was concluded, when the Morning appeared, with the Pſalm of Confeſſion, by which he means no other but this ſame fifty firſt, or Penitential Pſalm, as I have evidently ſhewn in another [*] Place. What ſhall we ſay then to the Author of the Conſtitutions, who ſpeaks but of one Pſalm in the Morning Service? I anſwer, 1. No doubt there were different Cuſtoms in different Churches, and in nothing did the Practice vary more than in the Rules and Meaſures about Pſalmody, as we ſhall ſee more clearly hereafter. So that both Accounts may be very true, only applying them to the State and Practice of different Churches. 2. I have obſerved before [†], that the Primitive Morning Service, in times of Perſecution eſpecially, was no other but the Concluſion of the Vigils, or Antelucan or Nocturnal Service, which concluded towards break of Day with ſome proper Morning Pſalm, ſuch as the fifty firſt, or ſixty third, or ninetieth, and certain Prayers or Collects proper to the Occaſion; the preceding Part of the Morning having been ſpent in Pſalms and Hymns to a greater Meaſure and Number, ſometimes ten, twelve, eighteen or twenty, and theſe intermingled with Leſſons of Scripture, and publick or private Prayers between them; but when the Morning Service was made a diſtinct Office from the Vigils, as it began to be in the fourth or fifth Century, then ſome other Pſalms were added to the Morning Pſalm, and three Pſalms at leaſt were read in this as well as in all other Offices; and that is the Reaſon why we meet with but one Pſalm in the Order for Morning Service in the Conſtitutions, and three in others, which were of latter Appointment. Caſſian himſelf, who gives the beſt account of theſe Things of any other Writer, plainly favours this Obſervation: For he tells us in one Place [y] that the Egyptians never admitted of any Morning Office diſtinct from their Nocturnal Vigils, nor of any other Times of publick Worſhip beſides the Evening Hours and Nocturnal Aſſemblies, except on the Sabbath and the Lord's Day, when they met alſo at the third Hour, that is, at nine in the Morning, to celebrate the Communion on thoſe Days.

All

All other Times they ſpent in labouring privately in their Cells, joining continual Meditation of the Pſalms and other Scriptures with their Labour, and mingling ſhort Prayers and Ejaculations with them; ſo making the whole Day but one continued Office of Devotion, which others performed by Intervals of Time, and Diſtinction of ſtated Hours of Prayer. In another place [z] he tells us, that they who firſt brought in this new Morning Office, diſtinct from the Nocturnal, did not diminiſh ought of the antient Pſalmody from the Nocturnal Service; for they continued ſtill to conclude their Vigils before break of Day with the ſame Pſalms as they were uſed to do before; that is, with Pſalms cxlviii, cxlix, cl; only they ſet a-part the Pſalms li, lxiii, and xc, for this new Office of Morning Service. From all which it ſeems very probable, that according to the difference of Times and Places, the number of Pſalms for the Morning Service might vary, ſince there were ſuch different Methods in the Obſervation of this Solemnity, and an old and a new Office, that both went by the Name of Morning Service.

SECT. XI. The Original of Antelucan and Night Aſſemblies in Times of Perſecution.

HAVING thus far deſcribed the Order of the old Morning Service, as it lies in the Conſtitutions; and hinted, that the Morning Aſſemblies were originally the very ſame with the Nocturnal or Antelucan Meetings for Divine Service, which we ſo often read of in antient Writers: For the farther Illuſtration of this Part of the Chriſtian Worſhip, it will be proper to enquire a little more narrowly into the Nature and Management of them from their firſt Original; which is known to have had its Riſe from the Severity of the Heathen Perſecutions. For the Chriſtians being afraid to meet publickly on the Lord's Day for Divine Worſhip, were forced to hold their Aſſemblies in the Night, meeting early in the Morning before Day, to avoid the Obſervation of their Enemies. This appears from that early Account of Pliny, which he had from the Mouths of ſome apoſtatizing Chriſtians, who confeſſed to him, [a] that the ſum of their Crime or Error was, that they were uſed to meet tother on a certain Day before it was light, and ſing an Hymn to Chriſt, as to their God. Hence it is, that the Heathen in Minucius more than once [b] objects to them their Night Aſſemblies, and calls them a ſculking Generation, that fled from the Light, being mute in publick, but free in Diſcourſe with one another, when they were got into their private Corners. Celſus [c] ſeems to mean the ſame thing, when he objects to them their holding of clancular Meetings, συνόδους κρύβδην. And Tertullian, to ſhew Chriſtian Women the Inconvenience of marrying Heathens, puts them in mind of theſe Night-Aſſemblies: What Husband, ſays he [d], will be willing to ſuffer his Wife to riſe from his Side, and go to the Night-Aſſemblies? And Prudentius deſcribing the Martyrdom of St. Laurence, introduces the Heathen Judge [e] telling him, that he had heard, how they ſacrificed in Silver, and had their Wax-lights ſet in Gold for the Uſe of their Night-Aſſemblies. And this was the true Original of Lamps, and Oyl, and Tapers for the Uſe of ſuch Meetings in time of Perſecution.

SECT. XII. Theſe continu'd when the Perſecutions were over.

NOW, though it was Neceſſity which firſt gave Riſe to theſe Aſſemblies; yet the Church in After-ages thought fit to continue them (transferring them from the Lord's Day to all other Days) partly to keep up the Spirit of Devotion in the Aſceticks, or ſuch as had betaken themſelves to a ſtricter Life; partly to give Leiſure and Opportunity to Men of a ſecular Life to obſerve a ſeaſonable time of Devotion, which they might do early in the Morning without any Diſtraction; and partly to guard her Children againſt the Temptations and Seduction of the Arian Sect, who with great Zeal endeavoured to promote their Hereſy by their Pſalmody in ſuch Meetings, as appears from what Socrates [f] and Sozomen [g] ſay of them, and what Sidonius Apollinaris particularly notes [h] of Theodorick King of the Goths, that he was ſo eager a Promoter of the Arian Cauſe, that in his Zeal for them he frequented their Morning Aſſemblies before Day, with a ſmall Guard attending him. Now the Catholicks having ſo many Reaſons to keep up theſe Aſſemblies, not only continued them, but with great Zeal encouraged them in their Diſcourſes. St. Chryſoſtom [i] commends the Widows and Virgins for frequenting the Church Night and Day, and ſinging Pſalms in theſe Aſſemblies. He ſays, Men ought [k] to come to the Sanctuary in the Night, and pour out their Prayers there. In another place

ſpeaking of the Excellency of the City of Antioch, he ſays, it conſiſted not in its fine Buildings or Pillars, but in the Morals of the Men. Go into the Church [l], and there ſee the Excellency of the City. Go into the Church, and ſee the Poor continuing there from Midnight to the Morning Light. And it is remarkable what Socrates [m] ſays of him, when he was Biſhop of Conſtantinople, that he made additional Prayers for the nocturnal Hymns, on purpoſe to countermine the Practice of the Arians. But I muſt not ſtand to repeat all that is ſaid of theſe famous Morning-Aſſemblies: For there is ſcarce an Eccleſiaſtical Writer [n] that has not given ſome hint of them, which I need not recite, but rather go on to ſhew what were the chief Exerciſes of theſe Meetings, which uſually began ſoon after Midnight, and continued to the Morning Light.

SECT XIII. The Order of Divine Service which was performed in them, as deſcribed by St. Baſil.

ST. Baſil in one of his Epiſtles gives us a pretty clear Deſcription of them, though but in general Terms, whilſt he makes an Apology for the Practices of his own Church, againſt ſome who charged them with Innovation. His Words are theſe: The Cuſtoms, ſays he, which now prevail among us [o], are conſonant and agreeable to all the Churches of God. For with us the People riſing early whilſt it is Night, come to the Houſe of Prayer, and there with much Labour and Affliction and Contrition and Tears make Confeſſion of their Sins to God. When this is done, they riſe from Prayers, and diſpoſe themſelves to Pſalmody: Sometimes dividing themſelves into two Parts, they anſwer one another in Singing, or ſing alternately, ἀντιψάλλουσιν ἀλλήλοις: After this again they permit one alone to begin the Pſalm, and the reſt join in the Cloſe of every Verſe, ὑπηχοῦσι. And thus with this Variety of Pſalmody they carry on the Night, praying betwixt whiles, or intermingling Prayers with their Pſalms, μεταξὺ προσευχόμενοι. At laſt, when the Day begins to break forth, they all in Common, as with one Mouth and one Heart, offer up to God the Pſalm of Confeſſion, τὸν τῆς ἐξομολογήσεως ψαλμὸν τῷ κυρίῳ ἀναφέρουσι, every one making the Words of this Pſalm to be the Expreſſion of his own Repentance. Here we have the plain Order of theſe Nocturnal or Morning Devotions. 1. Confeſſion of Sins. 2. Pſalms ſung alternately. 3. Pſalms ſung by one alone. 4. Prayers between the Pſalms. 5. Laſtly, The common Pſalm of Confeſſion, or the Penitential Pſalm in the Cloſe of all. Whether the firſt Confeſſion of Sins was a publick or private one, is not very certain: Some learned Perſons [p] take it for a publick Confeſſion, like that in the beginning of our Liturgy: But I rather think it was a private Confeſſion, with which we are ſure their Offices generally began, as appears from a Canon of the Council of Laodicea [q], where it is called the ſilent Prayer, εὐχὴ διὰ σιωπῆς, of which I have given a fuller Account in the Communion Service [*]. The latter Confeſſion was plainly a publick one, made by a certain Form, being no other but the fifty firſt Pſalm, Have Mercy on me, O God, after thy great Goodneſs: According to the Multitude of thy Mercies do away mine Offences. For this Pſalm was particularly noted among the Ancients by the Name of the Pſalm of Confeſſion. Athanaſius gives it [r] this Title, telling us that the fiftieth Pſalm (which is the fifty firſt in our Diviſion) is ψαλμὸς ἐξομολογήσεως, the Pſalm of Confeſſion. And what farther confirms this Interpretation, is, that this very Pſalm by Name is appointed to be uſed in the Cloſe of the Mattins or Morning Service, which the Weſtern Churches introduced as diſtinct from the Nocturnal Service, as Caſſian [s] relates, who was an Eye-witneſs of it. See before, n. 10.

SECT. XIV. The account of them out of Caſſian.

WHAT Number of Pſalms or Prayers was uſed in this Service, is not particularly noted by St. Baſil; nor perhaps was it ſtinted to any certain Number, but according as the length of the Pſalms or Time required. But in the Egyptian Churches they reduced it to the preciſe Number of twelve Pſalms, from whence ſome other Churches afterwards took their Model, as Caſſian informs us [t], who ſays, that in other Regions there were different Rules and Appointments: For ſome recited no leſs than twenty Pſalms, and theſe by way of Antiphonal or alternate Melody; others exceeded this Number; others had eighteen; ſo that there were almoſt as many Ways and Rules, as there were Monaſteries and Cells. Nay in Egypt, before the Rule was ſettled, ſome were for having [u] fifty, ſome ſixty Pſalms: But at laſt upon mature Advice, they fixed upon [x] the certain Number of twelve Pſalms both for their Evening and Morning Service, interpoſing a Prayer between each Pſalm, and adding two Leſſons, one out of the Old Teſtament, and the other out of the New: Which was their Cuſtom on all Days, except Saturdays and Sundays, when they repeated them both out of the New Teſtament, the one out of St. Paul's Epiſtles or the Acts of the Apoſtles, and the other out of the Goſpels, as they did alſo for the whole Term of fifty Days between Eaſter, and Whitſontide. He adds farther, That they did not uſe the Alternate way of Singing in Egypt, but only one amongſt them ſung with a plain and even Voice, the reſt ſitting by, and attending to what was ſaid. Neither did they anſwer, Glory be to the [y] Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Ghoſt, at the End of every Pſalm, but interpoſed a Prayer (which was the Cuſtom of all the Eaſt) and then at the End of the laſt Pſalm, which they called the Allelujah, they ſubjoined the Glorification of the Trinity, which they never uſed but at the End of that Antiphona, as they called the Allelujah in the Eaſtern Church. When the Pſalms were very long, they ſometimes divided them into two or three Parts, and at the End of every Part made a Stop to interpoſe a Prayer [z], thinking it better to uſe frequent and ſhort Prayers to keep up the Fervour of the Devotion. It does not appear, that theſe were publick Prayers, but rather private, at the End of which the chief Miniſter officiating, is ſaid, colligere Precem, to make a Collect or Prayer, recapitulating the Prayers that were made before by the Aſſembly in private; of which I ſhall have Occaſion to give a fuller Account in another place. See Book XV. Chap. i. n. 1. It is noted farther by Caſſian [a] concerning the laſt of their Pſalms, called the Antiphona or Allelujah, that no Pſalm was ever uſed in this place but only one of thoſe which had the Inſcription of Allelujah prefixed in the Title of it, ſuch as the cxlvth, and thoſe that follow, one of which was commonly the concluding Pſalm, repeated by way of Antiphona or Reſponſes. It was ſomething particular in the manner of performing this Pſalmody in thoſe Egyptian Monaſteries, that he that ſung the Pſalms, only ſtood up, but the reſt heard them ſitting: Which Caſſian [b] obſerves to be Matter of Indulgence, in regard to their continual Watchings and hard Labour. And it was no leſs peculiar, that never above four Perſons were allowed to repeat the twelve Pſalms in one Aſſembly, and that by Courſe, every one ſinging three in order after one another. Or if there were but three, then each ſung four Pſalms; and if but two, each of them ſung ſix.

SECT XV. This Morning Service much frequented by the Laity of all ſorts.

AND thus far of the Nocturnal Pſalmody, which was the old Morning Service of the Church. I only add, that though this Service was very early in the Morning, yet it was frequented, not by the Clergy and Monks only, but by the People alſo. For, as we have ſeen before, St. Baſil takes notice, that the People came to Church to celebrate theſe Morning Devotions; and Sidonius has told us alſo, that Theodorick King of the Goths, was a conſtant Obſerver of them: So here it is alſo remarked by Caſſian [c], that this Part of the Church's Devotions was with great Exactneſs obſerved by many ſecular Men, who riſing early before Day, would not engage themſelves in any of their moſt neceſſary and ordinary worldly Buſineſs, before they had conſecrated the Firſt-fruits of all their Actions and Labours to God, by going to Church, and preſenting themſelves in the Divine Preſence. A worthy Example, fit to be recorded in Letters of Gold, to excite the Emulation of the preſent Age, wherein the daily Worſhip of God at religious Aſſemblies is ſo little frequented, and by many ſo much deſpiſed; though the ſame Service with that of the Ancients for Subſtance is ſtill retained, with ſome Improvements, and none of the Corruptions which the Superſtition of darker Ages brought into the Devotions of the Church; as any one may ſatisfy himſelf, that will compare what has been delivered in this Chapter with the daily Service of our Church.

CHAP. XI.

The Order of their Daily Evening Service.

SECT. I. The Evening Service in moſt Things conformed to that of the Morning.

THE Evening Service, which was called the Hora Lucernaris, becauſe it began at the Time of lighting Candles towards the Cloſe of the Day, was in moſt Parts the ſame with that of the Morning, only with ſuch Variation of Pſalms, and Hymns, and Prayers, as were proper to the Occaſion. The Prayers for the Catechumens, Energumens, Candidates of Baptiſm, and Penitents, were all the ſame; ſo were the Prayers for the Faithful or Communicants, called the Prayers for the Peace of the World, and the whole State of the Catholick Church, which are deſcribed at large in the following Books, to which the Reader may have Recourſe.

SECT. II. But they differed, firſt, in that a proper Pſalm was appointed for the Evening, called the Evening Pſalm by the Author of the Conſtitutions.

THE firſt Thing wherein they differed was, the Initial Pſalm: For as the Morning Service began with the lxiiid Pſalm, ſo the Evening Service is appointed to begin with the cxlth Pſalm, which we reckon the cxliſt. Lord, I call upon Thee, haſte Thee unto me, and conſider my Voice when I cry unto Thee. Let my Prayer be ſet forth in thy Sight as the Incenſe, and let the lifting up of my Hands be an Evening Sacrifice, &c. This Pſalm the Author of the Conſtitutions calls Emphatically τὸ ἐπλύχνιον ψαλμὸν [a], the Evening Pſalm, in the place where he deſcribes the Order of this Service. And though he does not in that place either name the Pſalm, or mention any Words in it; yet he infallibly means the Pſalm now ſpoken of, becauſe in another place [b] he expreſly calls it the cxlth Pſalm, requiring it to be uſed in publick Aſſemblies at the daily Evening Service.

SECT. III. This Pſalm mentioned under the ſame Denomination by Chryſoſtom, and other Writers.

AND that which puts the Matter beyond all Diſpute, is, That Chryſoſtom in his Comment upon this Pſalm takes notice of the Uſe of it in the Church upon this particular Occaſion. Hearken diligently, ſays he [c], for it was not without Reaſon that our Fathers appointed this Pſalm to be ſaid every Evening; not barely for the Sake of that ſingle Expreſſion, Let the lifting up of my Hands be an Evening Sacrifice: For other Pſalms have Expreſſions of the ſame nature, as that which ſays, At Evening, and Morning, and Noon-Day, will I ſhew forth thy Praiſe: And again, The Day is thine, and the Night is Thine: And again, Weeping may endure for a Night, but Joy cometh in the Morning: And many other ſuch like Pſalms may one find, that are proper for the Evening Seaſon. Therefore our Fathers did not order this Pſalm to be ſaid upon the Account of this Expreſſion, but they appointed the Reading of it, as a ſort of ſalutary Medicine to cleanſe us from Sin; that whatever Defilement we may have contracted throughout the whole Day, either Abroad, in the Market, or at Home, or in whatſoever Place, when the Evening comes, we might put it all off by this ſpiritual Charm, or Song, which is a Medicine to purge away all ſuch Corruption.

SECT. IV. Secondly, Proper Prayers for Evening Service.

AFTER this Pſalm was ended, there followed the ſame Prayers for the Catechumens, Energumens, Penitents, and Common Prayers for the World and the Church, that there were uſed in the Morning Service: But after them the Deacon bid the People pray in a certain Form proper for the Evening, which the Author of the Conſtitutions [d] ſtiles προσφώνησις ἐπλύχνιος, the Evening Bidding Prayer, and it runs in theſe Words: Let us pray to the Lord for his Mercies and Compaſſions; and intreat him to ſend us the Angel of Peace, and all good Things convenient for us, and that he would grant us to make a Chriſtian End. Let us pray, That this Evening and Night may paſs in Peace, and without Sin, and all the Time of our Life unblameable and without Rebuke. Let us commend our ſelves and one another to the Living God through his Chriſt.

This ſaid, the Biſhop, if preſent, made this Commendatory Collect, which is there ſtiled ἐπλύχνιος εὐχαριστία, the Evening Thankſgiving, and is conceived in the following Words: O God, who art without Beginning, and without End, the Maker and Governour of all Things through Chriſt, the God and Father of Him before all things, the Lord of the Spirit, and King of all Things both Intellectual and Senſible; that haſt made the Day for Works of Light, and the Night to give Reſt to our Weakneſs: For the Day is Thine, and the Night is Thine; Thou haſt prepared the Light and the Sun; Do Thou now, moſt Kind and Gracious Lord, receive this our Evening Thankſgiving. Thou that haſt led us through the Length of the Day, and brought us to the Beginning of the Night, keep and preſerve us by thy Chriſt; Grant that we may paſs this Evening in Peace, and this Night without Sin; and vouchſafe to bring us to eternal Life through Thy Chriſt; by whom be Glory, Honour and Adoration unto Thee in the Holy Spirit, World without End. Amen.

After this, the Deacon bids the People, κλίνατε τῇ χειροθεσίᾳ, bow down to receive the Benediction with Impoſition of Hands, and then

the Biſhop makes this following Prayer: O God of our Fathers, and Lord of Mercy, that haſt created Man by thy Wiſdom a Rational Being, and of all thy Creatures upon Earth deareſt unto Thee, that haſt given him Dominion over the Earth, and haſt made us by thy Pleaſure to be Kings and Prieſts, the one to ſecure our Lives, and the other to preſerve thy lawful Worſhip: Be pleaſed now, O Lord Almighty, to bow down, and ſhew the Light of thy Countenance upon thy People, who bow the Neck of their Heart before Thee; and bleſs them by Chriſt, by whom Thou haſt enlightned us with the Light of Knowledge, and revealed thy ſelf unto us: With whom is due unto Thee and the Holy Ghoſt the Comforter, all worthy Adoration from every rational and holy Nature, World without End. Amen.

There are two Expreſſions in theſe Prayers, which may ſeem a little unuſual to a modern Reader; one, where Prayer is made for the Angel of Peace; and the other, which ſtyles God the Father, Lord of the Spirit: But both theſe occur in the Morning Prayers for the Catechumens hereafter [*], where I ſhew out of Chryſoſtom, That Prayer for the Angel of Peace, was a common Petition in many of the known Forms of the Church: And for that other Expreſſion, which ſtyles the Father, Lord of the Spirit, which is an harſh way of ſpeaking, and looks like Macedonianiſm, as Cotelerius remarks upon it, I have ſhewed out of Biſhop Bull, that it may fairly be interpreted to a ſound and Catholick Senſe, from parallel Expreſſions in Juſtin Martyr. So that we need not condemn this Author as an Arian or Macedonian Heretick, only allowing him the Favour of a candid Interpretation.

To return therefore to the Prayers themſelves: The Deacon, after theſe Collects made by the Biſhop, diſmiſſes the People with the uſual Form, as in the Morning Service, πορεύεσθε ἐν εἰρήνῃ, Depart in Peace. And this is the Concluſion of the Evening Service, according to our Author in this Place.

SECT. V. Of the Evening Hyme.

BUT in another Place [f] he ſpeaks alſo of an Evening Hymn, which he ſtyles εὐχὴ ἑσπερινὸς, an Evening Prayer or Thankſgiving, which is a ſort of Doxology to God, like that uſed before in the Morning Prayer. The Form is in theſe Words: Praiſe the Lord, ye Servants, O praiſe the Name of the Lord. We praiſe Thee, we laud Thee, we bleſs Thee, for thy great Glory, O Lord and King, the Father of Chriſt the unſpotted Lamb, that taketh away the Sin of the World. All Praiſes and Hymns, and Glory, are juſtly rendered unto Thee our God and Father, by thy Son, in the moſt Holy Spirit for all Ages, World without End. Amen. Lord, now letteſt Thou thy Servant depart in Peace, according to thy Word: for mine Eyes have ſeen thy Salvation, which Thou haſt prepared before the Face of all People; to be a Light to lighten the Gentiles, and to be the Glory of thy People Iſrael.

It is not here ſaid, whether this Hymn was for publick or private Uſe. However, that there were ſuch ſort of Hymns in uſe among the Ancients at the firſt bringing in of Candles in the Evening, is evident from St. Baſil, who mentions one Part of ſuch an Hymn, which he ſtiles ἐπιλύχνιον εὐχαριστία, the Thankſgiving at ſetting up Lights. It ſeemed good, ſays he, to our Forefathers [g] not to receive the Gift of the Evening Light altogether with Silence, but to give Thanks immediately upon its Appearance. We cannot certainly tell, who was the firſt Author of that Thankſgiving at ſetting up Lights: But this we are ſure of, that the People have of old uſed this Form of Words (and no one ever charged them with Impiety for ſo doing) Αἰνοῦμεν πατέρα, καὶ υἱὸν καὶ Ἅγιον πνεῦμα Θεοῦ, We praiſe the Father, and the Son and the Holy Spirit of God.

Biſhop Uſher [h] and Dr. Smith [i] have given us an antient Form of this Kind more at large, out of the Alexandrian Manuſcript of the Septuagint, and ſome other antient Copies of the Pſalter in Greek, which it may not be improper to inſert in this Place. It goes in ſome Books under the Title of ὕμνος ἑσπερινὸς, the Evening Hymn; and in others it is call'd ὕμνος ἐπὶ λυχνικοῦ, the Hymn ſaid at ſetting up Lights. We cannot certainly ſay this is the ſame that St. Baſil refers to, but all that St. Baſil mentions out of that antient Hymn, is now found in this; which makes it probable that they are the very ſame. It is as follows: [k] O Jeſus Chriſt, Thou joyful Light of the Sacred Glory of the Immortal, Heavenly, Holy, Bleſſed Father! We now being come to the ſetting of the Sun, and ſeeing the Evening Light, do laud and praiſe the Father, and Son, and Holy Spirit of God. Or, the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt, that is God.) Thou art worthy to have Hymns at all Times ſung unto thee with holy Voices, O Son of God, that giveſt Life. Therefore the World glorifies thee. Biſhop Uſher, by Miſtake, ſays this Hymn was the ſame as the ψαλμὸς ἐπιλύχνιος, the Evening Pſalm mentioned in the Conſtitutions, Lib. 8. cap. 35. Whereas indeed that Evening Pſalm was quite another Thing from this Evening Hymn; that being one of David's Pſalms, as I ſhewed before out of Chryſoſtom and the Conſtitutions themſelves; and this an Hymn of human Compoſition. Neither is it the ſame Form with the Evening Hymn related before out of the Conſtitutions, but ſeems more likely to be that mentioned by St. Baſil, which I conceive was not a Form for publick, but only private Devotion, to be uſed at Home by all Chriſtians, as a pious Ejaculation or Hymn to Christ, the true Light that enlightens every Man that comes into the World. But I only offer this as a Conjecture, because I find not this Hymn mentioned as inserted into the publick Offices, either by the Author of the Constitutions, or St. Basil, or any other.

SECT. VI. Whether there were any Hymns, or Psalms, or Lessons read in the Evening Service besides the cxliſt Psalm.

BUT then it may be asked, Were there no Hymns used in the Evening Service? Were there no Lessons read, nor Psalms, besides that called the Evening Psalm, sung in the Church? I answer, No doubt there were in many Churches: For the Customs of Churches varied in this Matter; and though the Author of the Constitutions mentions them not in the Rituals of the Churches he describes, yet other Accounts do. For Cassian [l] describing the customary Service of the Egyptian Monasteries, says, they sung Twelve Psalms every Morning and Evening in their solemn Meetings, and had two Lessons read, one out of the Old Testament, and the other out of the New, and had Prayers also between the Psalms; and sung the Gloria Patri at the End of the last Psalm. St. Jerom confirms this Account, and adds, that they had a Sermon made by the Abbot (who was always a Presbyter) every Day after Evening Prayer. For thus he describes their Evening Devotions: At nine a-Clock they meet together, then the Psalms are sung, and the Scriptures [m] are read; and Prayers being ended, they all sit down, and one among them, whom they call their Father, begins to discourse to them, whom they hear with the profoundest Silence and Veneration. But it may be said, This perhaps was only the Custom of the Monasteries, and not of the Churches. In answer to which Epiphanius [n] assures us, it was the Custom of the Church to have Psalms and Hymns continually both at Morning and Evening Prayer. St. Austin also mentions Hymns [o] as well as Prayers at Evening Service; which implies, that they had more Psalms than one sung upon that Occasion. St. Hilary upon those Words of the Psalmist, The Out-goings of the Morning and Evening shall praise thee; shews the same, when he says, The Progression of the Church to her Morning and Evening Hymns with Delight, is a great Sign of God's Mercy. The Day [p] is begun with Prayers, and the Day is closed with Hymns to God. St. Hilary himself is said to be the Author of some of those Hymns, and St. Ambrose of others, which were of publick Use in the Church: And though some would have rejected them, because they were only of human Composure, and not to be found in Scripture, yet the fourth Council of Toledo [q] ordered them to be retained in the publick Service of the Church, together with the Hymns, Glory be to the Father, and Glory be to God on High, which were likewise of human Composition. For the Eastern Churches, the like is said by Chrysostom [r], That they had Hymns at Night in their Evening Prayer, as well as Morning. In the Gallican Churches they had, besides their Collects and Prayers, both Hymns and Antiphona's, or Chapters, as they called them, collected out of the Psalms, to be said by way of Responses, as appears from the Council of Agde [s]. And the second Council of Tours orders, That at Evening Prayer, which they call the twelfth Hour of Prayer, Twelve Psalms should [t] be sung, answerable to the Order of Morning Service, which had Twelve Psalms, as the sixth Hour of Prayer had six Psalms, with the additional Psalm called the Allelujah. From all which it is apparent, that a considerable Number of Psalms and Hymns were used together with the Prayers, to make up the daily Course of Evening, as well as Morning Service in many Churches.

SECT. VII. The Lord's Prayer used in some Churches as the Conclusion of the daily, both Morning and Evening Service.

AND in some Churches the Lord's Prayer was always made a Part of the daily Worship both Morning and Evening. For the Council of Girone [u] made a general Decree for the Spanish Churches, That the Lord's Prayer should constantly be used by every Priest at the Close of the Mattins and Vespers in the daily Service. It had always been used before on Sundays in the Communion-Office; but it being in the very Title and Tenour of it, Quotidiana Oratio, a Quotidian or Daily Prayer, they thought it proper to make it a standing Part of their daily Offices. And when some Priests neglected to obey this Order, and still confined the Use of it to the Lord's Day, the fourth Council of Toledo [x] made a Decree, That all ſuch of the Clergy as contumaciouſly refuſed to uſe it daily both in their publick and private Offices, ſhould be degraded.

Toledo

In the French Churches the Practice was the ſame. For by a Canon of the third Council of Orleans [y] the People are obliged to ſtay at Divine Service till the Lord's Prayer was ſaid; and if the Biſhop was preſent, to wait for him to pronounce the Benediction. Which ſhews that it was the Concluſion of the Prayers, ſince nothing came after but the Benediction. 'Tis true, the Word uſed for Divine Service in this Canon, is Miſſa: Which might ſeem to mean the Communion Service, where the Lord's Prayer was always uſed: But it has been ſhewed before, in the firſt Chapter of this Book, that Miſſa is a general Name for any Part of Divine Service; and in this Canon is particularly taken for the Morning and Evening Sacrifice of Prayers. For it immediately follows, that no one ſhould come to the Sacrifice of Morning or Evening Maſs, that is, Morning or Evening Prayers, with his Arms or Weapons, which only appertained to the Uſe of War. Beſides, that in the Communion Service, as we ſhall ſee hereafter, the Lord's Prayer came always in the middle, and not, as here, in the Concluſion of the Service.

This is the Subſtance of what I have obſerved concerning the ſeveral Parts and Order of the daily Morning and Evening Service in the Writings of the Fathers and the Canons of the Councils, which are at preſent the chief Rituals of the antient Church: And I have been the more careful to ſeparate theſe Offices from the great Service of the Lord's Day, becauſe they are too often confounded in the Accounts of modern Authors. I now proceed to the Offices and Service of the Lord's Day, which muſt be the Subject of the two following Books.
